St. Louis' McGee Named NL MVP-Batting champion Willie McGee, the flashy centerfielder of the National League champion St. Louis Cardinals, was named the NL's Most Valuable Player by the Baseball Writers Association of America.

McGee received 14 first place votes from a 24-writer panel and finished with 280 points to edge out Dave Parker of the Cincinnati Reds, who led the league with runs batted in. Pedro Guerrero of Los Angles and Cy Young Award winner Dwight Gooden finshed third and fourth respectivelv.

Gopher's Holtz Headed East?-North Carolina State football sources have contacted University of Minnesota Coach Lou Holtz about the soon-to-be vacant coaching job. Wolfpack alumni are trying to put together a package that would also allow Holtz to be athletic director. Holtz previously coached the Wolfpack to four bowl games in five years when at North Carolina State.

Waltrip Coasts to NASCAR Point Title-As Ricky Rudd crossed the finish line to win Sunday's Winston Western 500, Darrell Waltrip already was celebrating.

Waltrip, who finished seventh, clinched his third NASCAR Grand National driving championship early in the race when Waltrip's closest competitor, Bill Elliott, was knocked out of the race when his car broke down on the sixth lap.

Blue Devil Season Tickets on Sale-Stout 1985-86 season basketball tickets for all regular season home games will be on sale Monday and Tuesday in the fieldhouse and at the first three home games. Ticket prices this year are $6 for Stout students, $20 for adults and $10 for golden age tickets.

but if I have to sit out a whole semester, I will most likely transfer to another school so I can play basketball again.

Hunter expressed an interest in UW-Whitewater, UW-Eau Claire and UW-Stevens Point when mentioning the possibility of transferring.

Whitewater Head Basketball Coach David Vander Meulen said, "I don't know enough about what happened, but I do know Ron has always played well against us."

"I will still respect the team no matter what happens in the future," Hunter said. "I've built a lot of close ties with the team over the last two years."

Hunter's dismissal came just four days before the Blue Devils season opener at the University of Nebraska on Saturday.

Informal action helps sexually harassed

Karen Schubert
News Reporter

It is illegal. It is a violation. It is a form of sexual discrimination. Sexual harassment is all of these, and in the simplest form is any unwanted or unwelcome sexual attention or sexual expression that makes the person who experiences it uncomfortable in the workplace or classroom.

According to Dr. Dave McNaughton, director of the Counseling Center here at UW-Stout, "It is a form of sexual discrimination which makes it illegal and is almost always against the female."

Dr. Virginia Peter of Human Services at Stout agrees with McNaughton in that sexual harassment is a violation against females. "Females are made to look like the weaker sex." Peter says that because of the "weaker sex" label, females will not come forward and admit to being sexually harassed.

McNaughton's role at Stout, in sexual harassment cases, is to clarify what took place with the individual, deal with the victim's feelings, advise the victim what she can do, and most of all, support her emotionally so the victim can move forward.

McNaughton went on to say that victims have unanswered questions in their minds and need to find out the answers to these questions about sexual harassment, if what is happening is defined as sexual harassment, in an informal setting, strictly confidential between the individual and McNaughton.

Victims are devestated, McNaughton said, and need the informal setting to open up and discuss what is going through their minds. Through these informal conversations McNaughton is able to direct victims to go and confront the harasser, to help them prepare a written form of communication (letter) to make the harasser aware, and to go with the victim to meet the harasser. "I act as a supporter when I accompany the vic-

Disabled co-ed wins Presidential citation

Barb Caron
News Reporter

In 1978 actor Mickey Rooney received it for his portrayal of Bill in the award winning movie. In 1983 Jeri Jewel a comedian who has appeared on the television shows Facts of Life and Different Strokes received it. This past October UW-Stout senior Jane Young received it. What is it that all three received? They all received an award presented by the American Academy for Cerebral Palsy and Developmental Medicine (ACPDM). This award is the Presidential Award for contributions to better understanding and acceptance of persons with handicaps.

Jane Young is a senior in Vocational Rehabilitation with a concentration in Guidance and Counseling. Young has had cerebral palsy since birth and has been confined to a wheelchair the majority of her life. Who nominated Young for the award? According to Young it was a Dr. Groover who works in Pediatric Neurology at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minnesota.

"I was surprised at the fact I won this award. When asked if I would like this award by Dr. Groover I said sure, still not knowing what I did to receive it. Dr. Groover told me that one of the reasons was that my positive attitude got me to where I am today. Many people thought that I dealt with my disability well and made others feel comfortable being around a person with a handicap," Young said.

What exactly did Young receive? "I received a plaque and a lot of recognition from the ACPDM. My parents and I were flown to Seattle, Washington where we stayed from the 2nd of October to the 6th. From morning until late afternoon each day presentations were given covering very specific areas and covering different aspects of cerebral palsy," Young said.

"On October 5th I spoke for a bit and then I presented my slide presentation which was basically about receiving the award and how my family and friends have helped me throughout my life," Young said.

Young feels that those around her have helped her in many ways. "My family was a very positive inspiration on me. As far as Stout, my friends, helpers, and roommates this year have been super. I have to give them a lot of credit," Young said.

Young has affected a lot of people here at Stout. Jane Ann Striegel, one of Young's room-

Brinks robbed of $9.5 million

Colombes, France-An armed gang of about 10 men kidnapped two Brinks employees from their homes, forced them to open the company's headquarters Monday, and looted an estimated $9.4 million from safes and strong boxes, police said. It was one of the largest thefts in France in the last decade.

Police reported that gang members armed with rifles and handguns, broke into the employee's homes, tied up members of their families and took the employees to Brinks headquarters in the northwest Paris suburb.

Schultz scolds Nicaraguans

Cartagena, Columbia-Secretary of State George Schultz at the Organization of American States (OAS) foreign administers' conference in Cartagena accused Nicaragua of "undermining the efforts" of those trying to find peace in Central America.

Schultz reportedly argued heatedly with Alejandro Bendana, Nicaraguan foreign Ministry Secretary-General over Nicaraguan support of guerilla groups elsewhere in Latin American. Schultz also said the Reagan adminstration saw no reason to allow Cuba to return to the OAS, from which it was expelled 23 years ago because of its communist ideology.

Nation

NASA chief accused of fraud

Washington, D.C.- James Beggs, adminstrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and a former General Dynamics Corp. executive, was accused by a federal grand jury Monday of conspiring to cheat the government out of millions of dollars on the Army's canceled Sgt. York anti-aircraft gun program.

Three other current or former General Dynamics executives and the corporation itself were indicted along with Beggs on seven counts, each punishable by a maximum five—year prison term and a $10,000 fine, the Justice Dept. said.

Millions quit, lung cancer down

Washington, D.C.-Lung cancer is finally declining among white American men after worsening for more than half a century, the National Cancer Institute reported. It credited the good news to millions of smokers giving up cigarettes.

However, officials said the generally fatal disease is still increasing among women—with females' lung cancer deaths expected to exceed those from breast cancer this year—and is continuing at a high level among black men.

State

Revenue estimates adjusted downward

Madison-Recent softness in the Wisconsin economy may force a downward adjustment in state revenue estimates, State Revenue Secretary Michael Ley said.

Ley also said it would mean cutbacks in state programs, adding that no such decisions have been made by Gov. Anthony Earl and would not be until January revenue figures were available.

Perspective

Communism: Poland's albatross

Compiled by Paul D. Nelson

A beleaguered and reluctant eastern bloc member nation, Poland is still reeling from the Dec. 13, 1981 imposition of martial law by General Wojciech Jaruzelski. Outlawing the Solidarity free labor union on that same day fanned the flames of widespread unrest, contributing to the country's deteriorating political and economic climate.

Jaruzelski has recently granted the holding of previously postponed parliamentary elections, allowed limited amnesty for political prisoners and made presumably substantive changes in his cabinet to gain favor from the World Bank, International Monetary Fund and individual Western nations who have greatly reduced or totally eliminated trade and financial aid.

Many experts believe that the general's moves are little more than window-dressing. Political prisoners remain jailed, Solidarity is still banned by the government and the practicing of religion is vigorously discouraged by the Soviet-installed ruling Communist Party.

Yet the Reagan administration has continued to deny Poland U.S.-backed economic credits and most-favored-nation trading status on the assumption that the government will eventually be compelled to free all political prisoners and resume a meaningful dialogue with the opposition in exchange for economic considerations.

Many believe that the United States has been justified in refusing financial assistance to the stagnant Polish economy because of the exponential increased detention of "noncriminal offenders".

At the end of 1984 there were 25 political prisoners in Poland, yet by November of this year that number had climbed to 363.

The government has also passed legislation toughening the penal code, arrested numerous leaders of the underground press and decreased the limited autonomy that the universities used to enjoy.

Many observers believe that Jaruzelski's recent hard-line stance can be attributed to Mikhail Gorbachev's similar handling of the Russian people.

But all of the obstacles that the Jaruzelski government has erected to suppress the Polish people have not served their intended purpose. Church membership continues to grow and Solidarity's underground press produces and distributes books, films and videocassettes.

And the murder of Father Jerzy Popieluszko, whose death was proven to have happened at the hands of the Polish secret police, has given the people new reason to unite in defiance of the repressive regime which imposes rule upon them.

An advisor close to Jaruzelski, earlier in the year, stated that the murder of Popieluszko was an atrocity that "the party, the Ministry of the Interior and the authorities will be paying a high price for many years to come."

High tech residence halls goal of Brown

Tim Hopkins
News Editor

In 16 years as an administrator for Auxiliary Services, Joe Brown has observed many changes, and he likes the direction his new job responsibility as Telecommunications Project Manager is leading him.

Brown wants to dispel the negative image he believes he has unjustly received as a strict disciplinarian in dealing with students who violate the rules governing life on campus.

"Everybody has a blown out of proportion notion of Joe Brown," Brown commented. "They come in here frightened. They've heard horror stories or whatever."

Brown understands how these "horror stories" get started. "I think my name is used as a threat a lot. Somebody's RA saying,'do that one more time and you're going to see Joe Brown.' So I think maybe 50 students hear about me and I hear about one of them."

Reviewing the change in student attitudes over the past 15 years Brown said, "If there is a trend, it is towards less vandalism, and in effect I guess I would say towards more mature behavior throughout, in terms of students understanding and respecting each other's rights."

Brown said that the disciplinary aspect of his work represented only 10 percent of what he does. "I'm really a lot more involved in telecommunications than I am in discipline," he said. Currently, Brown is investigating what it would take to set up a private telecommunications exchange on campus. "The University sees it as a good opportunity to become our own telephone company," he said.

He is clearly intrigued by the prospect of getting high technology into the residence halls. "I have a lot more interest in the residence halls in terms of getting high technology in the hands of students where they live," he said.

He is working to bring fruition to his plans to get high tech into the residence halls. "I'm busy trying to buy computers, put them in the residence halls. I'd love to cut a deal with some company where I could put a computer in every room."

Brown is also looking "to find a way that students can buy computers themselves and maybe go on a time-lease basis. When they leave Stout they own their own computer and they know how to run the thing."

One cooperative effort awaiting final approval from the Executive Director of Auxiliary Services Helmuth Albrecht involves an innovative method for South Hall to acquire a letter quality printer.

According to Brown, a South Hall resident approached him and said, "We have perceived a need for a true letter quality printer in the residence halls." Brown said this student had done his homework on letter quality printers and had completed a survey in the hall which showed the need for the printer.

The initial proposal from the student was for Auxiliary Services to purchase half the printer while South Hall would pay for the rest. Brown said he told the student, "if their resources are truly that limited we would extend that offer and say they can make up their half in energy savings which would come out of our pocket anyway."

Brown expects the other residence halls will use the South Hall example as a stimulus for similar cooperative efforts between Auxiliary Services and the residence halls . He seemed especially proud of their proposed agreement. "If they can save the equivalent in energy," he said, "then Auxiliary Services doesn't have to pay that. There is no net difference to us but there is to the hall."

It is the first ever such cooperative effort between a residence hall and Auxilary Services to share the cost for acquiring high tech equipment.

Brown laments the fact that students don't do all they can to save energy in the residence halls because they don't understand that the money is coming directly out of their pockets in the form of tuition. "I think what students don't understand is when you talk about Auxilary Services, whether it's residence halls, the Student Center or dining services, they're not tax supported."

To make his point, Brown said "So, whatever energy we use in this building (North Hall), students are paying for directly. That's a point I keep trying to make. It isn't like this isn't coming out of your pocket. It is."

Brown said that IRHC was compiling a list of typical student appliances and the wattage they require. "The point they want to make is they don't want to deny anybody the use of any energy they need to study, relax, whatever. It's just a question of don't waste it."

In conclusion Brown said, "I would like to see expenses held down for students, and that's a place they can do it themselves."

Snow removal budget maintained despite abnormally high snowfall

Rich Langberg
News Editor

With the official start of winter more than two weeks away, Mother Nature reminded us that she doesn't always follow the calendar and left Menomonie reeling from a storm that dumped up to 18 inches on Western Wisconsin. Monday, Dec. 2 marked the second time in 1985 that classes here at UW-Stout were cancelled.

The huge amount of snow made driving and traveling extremely hazardous. The storm put a crimp in the holiday travel plans of many people, including Stout students returning from the their Thanksgiving holiday vacations.

Snowfall for the winter of 1985-86 is well above normal so far, but Menomonie City Manager George Langmack said that there is no danger of the street department running short of funds.

"Man-hours are accumulated as experienced, and credited to the snow removal account," Langmack said. "It is the same with the machines, those costs are credited as we use them."

Langmack stressed that there will be no curtailing of plowing this winter. When the 1985 budget was set up in October of 1984, a $150,000 margin of error was built in since there is no way of determining if the next year will have an unusually high amount of snow.

"The main costs that we incur are related to overtime pay and equipment," Langmack said. "Straight time pay is figured into the budget, we don't hire extra people for plowing."

Even with the abnormally high amount of snow so far this winter, Langmack said that the budget hasn't been exceeded yet.

"We haven't blown the budget yet, but we're getting nervous," Langmack said. "If we do, it's no big deal. Besides the margin of error, we have a contingent fund that we can tap if necessary."

"If this occurs, I would have to go to the Menomonie City Council, they are the only ones that can approve that," Langmack continued. "I can authorize spending within an account, but not from account to account."

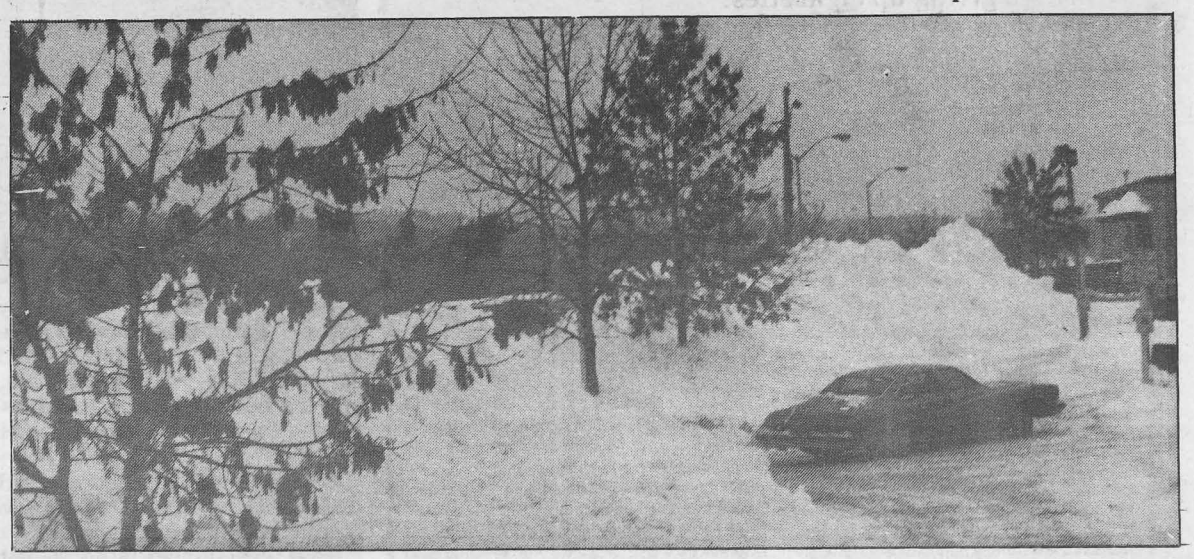
Langmack also said that this winter's snowstorms will not effect next fiscal year's budget, which begins Jan. 1, 1986. For one reason, the budget for 1986 has already been established last October. The city uses a "period of experience" method to determine budgetary needs.

Since there are the funds to continue plowing, what system is used to clear the city? Street Department employee John Miller said that it usually takes 24 hours to clear the streets, but acknowledged that it took longer due to the magnitude of the recent storm.

"We have 17 employees plowing, with the help of three people from the Parks Department," Miller said. "Everyone quit Sunday night at 7, and were back on the job at 2 a.m. Monday morning. They quit again at 3 that afternoon, and returned again at midnight."

The street department uses truck plows, graders and loaders with plows to clear the city streets.

"We try and keep the major arteries open," Miller said. "Main street, Broadway, out to the hospital and to North Menomonie are our main priorities."



Menomonie city crews put in many hours of work cleaning the streets of the more than 15 inches of snow that fell during the past week. For the second time in 1985, Stout cancelled all classes. (Stoutonia photo by Todd A. Nelson)

Opinions

Editorial

Evaluation Week is an unjustified change

Most of the change which we initiate or encounter throughout our lives occurs, for the most part, to correct previous inequalities or further improve an already satisfactory situation.

Yet all of us, at one time or another, have seen and/or felt the effects of a change which gave us or those around us nothing but grief in spite of all the previous good intentions.

In a few short weeks the jury of student opinion will return with a verdict of innocent, guilty or innocent by reason of insanity in regard to the decision to establish an Evaluation Week.

We believe that this "Academic Edsel" will be properly judged as a correction to a problem which never really existed in the first place.

Those who support the exam week concept argue that it will bring more order, fairness and consistency to all those involved in the process of dispensing and taking final exams. Teachers will be able to better prepare for the end of the semester by having the entire week to bring their courses to a smooth conclusion. And students, in a theoretical sense, should not have to experience the intellectual trauma of having three or more exams in a single day.

Yet the embarrassing fact remains that these two most celebrated improvements are an obvious failure weeks before most exams have even been written.

Many teachers are not even having exams during Evaluation Week, but are finishing their classes next week, thereby only requiring the students to make an appearance the last week of school and receive their final grades before going home.

And many students have already experienced the shock of being told that they will once again have to take three or more final exams in one twenty-four hour period.

Although some may still be neutral as to the merit of the scheduled Evaluation Week, this jury has already returned with its verdict.

Innocent by reason of insanity.

Crash and Burn

Water balloon controversy

Matt Kalina

Today as we are forced to climb mountainous snow banks while arctic gales blow an icy breath, it may seem an odd time to reminisce about the zany carnival we call Homecoming, back when the weather was balmy, but I'm going to anyway.

That's because I want to fulfill my promise of unloading the specifics on how I became a Stoutistic when the cops nabbed me during Homecoming weekend.

I intended to confess my hideous crime to you, the progressive reader, after my court appearance, but fortunately I learned that I will not have to appear in court.

Less than two weeks ago I received a formidable-looking letter from the Dunn County Office of District Attorney. Believe me, this is one return address that no one is gung-ho to see on an envelope with their name on it.

I ripped it open, not particularily expecting a birthday card, but anticipating a statement that read something like, "Matthew Kalina, you are hearby summoned to appear in Dunn County Circuit Court on...."

Instead I was relieved to read that the D.A. decided not to file criminal charges against me.

What exactly did I do to get busted?

I was arrested for disorderly conduct for slinging water balloons onto Nelson Field during halftime of the Homecoming football game.

I'll start from the beginning.

The scene of the crime: 5th St. E. on the hill above Nelson Field.

Accomplice of the crime: My 20-year-old lanky, witty, second cousin, Brian "Scarface" Neville, better known as Sluggo. Sluggo had motored into Menomonie from UW-Stevens Point (where he makes a valiant attempt to study) for the sake of getting slammered Stout-style with me during Homecoming.

The device of the crime: A five-quart plastic ice cream bucket with four-foot loops of rubbery surgical tubing attached on two sides, capable of projecting a cantaloupe-sized water balloon the length of a city block.

Attention-starved "anything-for-a-laugh" Sluggo brought the device with him so we could partake in heaps of good clean fun.

We fully intended to scope out the parade at 11 a.m. Saturday, but we found it to be a unanimous thumbs-down mission impossible, considering that we were still mucho frayed from the previous night's heavy-duty, electric axe-handle partying. We both had body aches too numerous to count and sore throats from yelling nonsense whenever we had the chance the night before, but we could not bring it upon ourselves to miss the game against the Platteville Pioneers.

Since we needed three people to operate the slinger, we recruited an addition guy I'll call Choka, for the sake of anonymity.

Choka and I faced each other on the hill above the football field gripping the tubing while Sluggo placed a water balloon the size of the world's largest pear in the bucket and pulled back, streching the elastic tubing to its limits. The first balloon shot high above the tree-line and splattered in mid-field.

We continued to rocket the balloons into the sky, gradually coming closer to our target, a bulls-eye placed on the gridiron for skydivers to land on for half-time entertainment.

The crowd in the stands went wild when we pelted the target with two shots. We were satisfied; it was mission accomplished.

As we drove away in my '77 Pinto, a Menomonie Police squad car flashed its red and blue lights and I pulled over.

The officer confiscated the slinger and smashed the balloons on the street.

Most likely a over-anxious crime-fighting resident with nothing better to do had complained to the police department calling in my license number.

We were not worried, yet.

Then a Protective Services police car arrived at the scene and we were told to get into it. Sluggo

SSA exec. member reflects on education

Guest

Vic Sundvall

In my last year here at Stout, I have taken the time to reflect back and look at the education that Stout has offered me. My only question after this self-reflection is "what's next?" What is life after Stout?

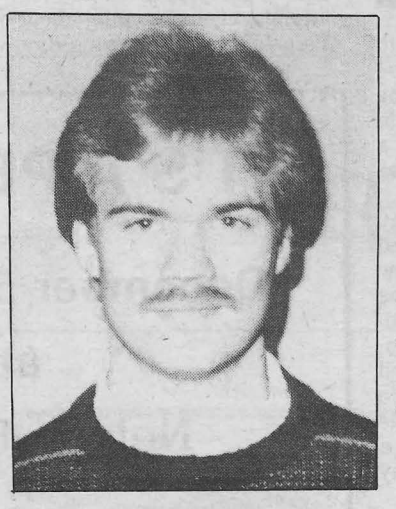
How well does Stout prepare its graduates for life after Stout? As we all know, this university has a good reputation of getting its graduates jobs, but what about some of the other things in life? I'm not sure what services other universities offer, but I think our university has its strong points as well as its weaknesses.

After graduation I think everyone is interested in landing that great job and starting a future, but wait, what about insurance? We've got life, health, dental, renters, etc. Granted if you get a really good job, much of this will be covered in their benefits plan, but is that enough? How will you know?

Now let's say you have all of the needed fringe benefits. What investments will you make with the money you have left over at the end of each month? Will you put it in the bank and settle for 9.25 percent interest? Will you play around in the money market? Will you invest in stock mutual funds, or look at an IRA.

The possibilities are staggering, and you probably won't think about it until you're put in the position where you have to make that decision. These are just a few of the questions that are still unanswered for me, and I realize that these are not easy yes or no questions. I would like to think though that a class could be offered that would address some of these issues.

Now while I will leave this university with certain questions unanswered I am greatful for some of the services Stout does offer. The placement office offers resume writing workshops, along with proper interviewing techniques. The financial aids office now offers a service in which students can talk with a couselor about their debt burden. With general background information about what students will be doing after graduation as far as a job and salary, a counselor can help spot problems and possibly help set up a repayment plan.



Another invaluable service which is offered by the SSA is the landlord tenant service. Through Patty Strassman, the landlord tenant representative, students can not only find out about available housing in Menomonie, but they can also learn about the important things to look for in a lease. Students might also gain insight about the landlord and the facilities they offer.

In talking with past graduates and taking my personal experiences into account, I would have to say that Stout does a good job of preparing its graduates for life after Stout.

My final word

That's all folks!

Rich Langberg

The end is near. Not the end of the world, just the end of my sentence here at UW-Stout. With only three tests to go by the time this is published, I am thinking more and more not about evaluation week, but life after Menomonie.

Before I go, however, there is definitely time for suggestions to improve and/or change things here at Stout. In my four and a half years here, I have done many things and wished I had done more. I never made it to Octoberfest in La Crosse. I never made Halloween in Madison, but I did see the Badgers upset Ohio State last year.

But because of a number of reasons, there are some things that I wasn't able to do here at Stout that I would have liked. Possibly with a few changes, future students will be able to see my thoughts become reality.

At every university, one important way of learning is to go listen to the wide variety of speakers that a university atmosphere attracts. Over the years I have seen a rat (G. Gordon Liddy), a drunk (Hunter S. Thompson), a senator (Christopher Dodd of Connecticut) and a poet (Maya Angelou) to name just a few. The University Speaker Series does a fine job with the resources available to them, but as I near graduation, I think there is one area that they should capitalize on in the future.

Get a speaker for the graduation ceremony. Possibly a political figure who can give his or her view on a current political issue that will affect all the graduates. Even though students here at Stout don't seem to give a damn about politics for the most part, they will soon find out how greatly they will be affected by the issues once they are out of the parent-sponsored atmosphere here at school.

Speaking of graduation, maybe it is time to change the inane policy of having the ceremony before the final week of classes. Graduation is supposed to be the time to receive your diploma and finish your college career, neither of which is accomplished here. There are people working today who have interviewed, received and accepted job offers, gone through the graduation ceremony and not earned their diploma. Hmmmm, that doesn't seem right, but it is just as bad as knowing that you are going to pass your classes and then still having to go to them after the ceremony.

The administration should look hard at bringing back the sale of beer at the Student Union during concerts. There are acceptable ways of making sure that minors don't get served. Other universities use systems such as hospital bands that cannot be removed and reapplied. Ultra-violet hand stamps, only selling one beer per person at a time, and conspicuous posting of signs that state the penalty if caught providing beer to a minor are just a few of the ways. Continuing the policy the way it is now only shows the student body that the administration is too old-fashioned and conservative in their actions.

Finally, did Stout prepare me for my career in Hotel and Restaurant Management. Gosh, I'm just not sure. I think that the fact that the administrators stress gaining a lot of work experience was more beneficial then 90 percent of my classes. The CO-OP program is one that more students should take advantage of. It is a chance to combine work experience while gaining academic credit.

As is probably the case in every major, there are classes that a majority of students feel are unnecessary and/or worthless. There are also teachers who for one reason or another, students feel shouldn't be employed as instructors. Is it my place to name these classes and teachers? I think so. I have always diligently filled out the teacher evaluation forms at the end of every class in hopes that the instructor will take my suggestions to heart. Alas, the following are offenders that I hear about two and three years after I've taken the class.

Front Office Management is a class that has long been plagued by inferior equipment in a major that consistently brags of having nothing but the best, most up-to-date computer technology. This may be alleviated by the Marriott Corporation's recent gift of $20,000, a donation that Habitational Resources administrator Lee Nicholls has promised will be used to stock a new front office lab. Now if they could only get someone to replace Bob Olson. When I can only go to the class a handful of times and still get an "A," it makes me wonder about the value of the class.

Two classes similar to this are Hospitality Housekeeping and Food Service Sanitation. Housekeeping is a freshmen-level class, so the fact that the class informtion seems so trivial can be forgiven. The teacher for Sanitation, George Nelson, knows that nobody will show up for his class except on the day of the exams, and he even jokes about it. A friend of mine only went to the class three

I think it improved relations between the two countries, but I think it was a lot of surface P.R. as far as what they got accomplished.

There really wasn't a lot accomplished. It just helped break the ice. They can get things really going on the second talks. That's when we'll see a lot of action.

It started an understanding. It was at least a chance for the two to get together and meet and see how far each one wants to go in terms of how firmly committed they were to each of the issues.

It was a time for establishing some rapport between the two countries. More than anything else it brought an awareness, a nation-wide rally behind making an advancement toward some sort of peace.

got in the front seat and Choka and I climbed into the back.

It's never my favorite form of amusement to sit in the back of a squad car, and this was no exception. I suddenly became aware of the number of gawkers who were leaving the game staring at us, the campus criminals.

It was an oven in the squad car and the officer was sweating as he wrote down everything from our from our birthdate to the color of our eyes. It was impossible to feel comfortable in the car; the seats were too straight.

The officer decided to release Choka on the grounds of good behavior and his age, but he still detained us.

I thought that this was a good sign, but I assumed incorrectly.

As the officer pulled out his light blue pad, Sluggo and I were now the ones sweating, sensing our sickening slide into deeper trouble.

At worst I thought we would be cited for something minor like littering, but as it turned out, he nailed us good.

I thought, "Disorderly conduct, no way!" My brain did a flip as I snatched the citation the officer handed me.

Sluggo was even more stunned as his voice cracked while reconciling with the officer.

"It was only a Homecoming prank," Sluggo whined.

The officer replied that the football coach was not amused.

But the worst was yet to come.

The officer informed me that since Sluggo was from out of town and had no available funds to pay the deposit, he would have to be confined in jail for a while until he was bailed out.

Panic struck as I thought, "Where am I going to get one-hundred and thirty-five bucks to bail the goon out?"

I didn't have a TYME card at the time and the banks were closed. Then I remembered that luckily I just got paid the previous day, and spare bills were lying around at home.

As I booked home to retrieve the cash, all I could think about was Sluggo incarcerated in Dunn County Jail for tossing water balloons.

Overall the arresting officer was a decent guy. We even got to shake his hand before he took our money.

We were plenty bummed during the rest of the weekend, but that didn't stop us from doing some reserve partying later that night.

Hungover and moping about our misfortanes the following day, we continually envisioned ourselves before a cranky judge begging for mercy.

Today I'll recover the $135 bond that I posted for Slug from the clerk of courts. We will use it wisely when I roadtrip to Point to celebrate with Sluggo. I think we'll keep that slinger out of sight.

Although we can truly say that we participated In the true spirit of the theme of Homecoming 1985, "Take A Chance," but is their a moral to this story? Perhaps.

Maybe the biggest lesson to be learned from this mess is that if two beatneck like me can get busted for tossing water balloons, watch out for yourself because the cops in Menomonie may be willing and able to bust you for something.

Next week: Crash and Burn awards for the year 1985.

times and pulled two perfect scores on the tests. Either my friend already knew the material, but more then likely, the information is obtainable fron other classes and sources, making Sanitation a complete waste of time.

I'm currently taking Maintenance Management, a class where the teacher Jim Runnalls, forces you to be there by docking points for every absence over three. The problem is, he is the consummate overhead teacher, with the entire course already needing no blackboard instruction.

In my opinion, a teacher who doesn't change the class one bit from semester to semester is only asking for plagarism. I'm sure in a couple of semesters, he will even have the stories about his hot tub, 280ZX, trips to France and his son the motel manager on overheads as well.

There, I've gotten in a few barbs where I think they are necessary. I hope that Stout will continue to have the ability to boast of having one of the best Hotel and Restaurant Management, Fashion Merchandising, Industrial Tech and Voc-Rehab programs in the nation. None of these programs can remain static and hope to achieve that goal. They will have to constantly look at what is going on in industry and try to stay up to date. As for students wanting a Liberal Arts education, try another school.

Well, I guess it is time to say good-bye. Good-bye to the bars and the parties. Good-bye to the snow and the cold. Good-bye to the classes and the homework. Good-bye to the exams and the projects. Good-bye to the professors, good and bad. Most of all, good-bye to my friends, friends that have made the last four and a half years a great experience. And that, is my final word.

Shoemaker asks SSA to stay active in Chamber membership

Todd Holman
News Reporter

Along with next year's academic calender, guest speakers dominated the discussion at the SSA meeting this Tuesday night. The two guest speakers were State Representative Richard Schoemaker and Dr. Richard Anderson, dean of counseling services.

Representative Schoemaker attended the meeting to inform the SSA about the seat belt safety bill that had been proposed in the State Legislature. Schoemaker urged SSA to voice their opinion to the state concerning this proposal.

He urged the SSA to maintain their voting membership in the Chamber of Commerce so that they will continue receiving the nationwide publicity they have been getting as Chamber members. The nationwide publicity has resulted basically from the fact that UW-Stout's SSA was the first SSA in the nation to be a voting member of the local Chamber of Commerce.

Dr. Anderson spoke on the Special Populations and Support Program concepts and how these special student needs should be recognized. Groups on campus that are recognized include international students, disabled, non traditional, poor academic preparation, minority, special problems, and low income students. These groups all have support programs which help these students with their individual as well as group needs. One quarter of all the students on campus make up this group.

SSA President Jo Ann Prange was to meet Chancelor Swanson Monday to discuss the calender for the 1986-87 academic year. Due to the blizzard the meeting was postponed indefinitely. The finance committee will announce the budget allocations for next semester at the SSA meeting Tuesday night Dec. 10.

The segregated fee committee has yet to reach a conclusion on the basis segregated fees should be established. They are deciding if the fee should be one set fee for everyone or should be percentaged out by number of credits and/or if a person is living on campus or not.

The Colombia disaster relief fund will run until Dec 10. There will be a collection jar at the front desk of each residential hall. All of the money received will be given to the International Red Cross Colombia Relief.

The need for a UPB wall calendar was expressed and the first such calendar will be out in January. UPB and CMP announced that they were happy with the attendance at the Pawn for Talent Night even though the date for Talent Night was changed with little prior notice.

The University Cinema Commission will be showing the award winning film A Soldier's Story Sunday and Monday evenings at 7:00 and 9:30 p.m. in the Great Hall of the Student Center.

Buy your Christmas gifts for a friend from UPB, they are going to be selling a coupon that will allow a person to see eight movies for five dollars.

A motion was made concerning the attendance of the SSA members that would make unexcused absences of a member a discretionary decision of the SSA president. This motion failed. A motion was passed approving the Dance Club Constitution.

mates, said, "I have learned a lot more about handicapped people, that they are just like anyone else. Now that I live with Jane I see she can do a lot more things than I originally thought she could do and I encourage her to do them. I enjoy living with Jane although it does require some extra work at times," Striegel said.

Young has five attendants along with a couple on reserve who help her in many ways. These helpers assist Jane in getting ready in the morning, eating meals, going to the bathroom, and running errands.

Karen Laffey, another one of Jane's roommates, reiterated what Striegel said. "I've learned a lot about cerebral palsy that I didn t know before. Living with a handicapped person is a big responsibility for me personally, sometimes I have a hard time taking care of myself and taking care of another person can sometimes be stressful. A lot of times I can almost forget she has a disability because she is just like anyone without a handicap," Laffey said.

Young will graduate this spring and hopes to attend graduate school and eventually become a counselor.

Value of seat belt use taught by Convincer

Bonnie Yotter
News Reporter

In the wake of holiday travel, traffic safety awareness is an issue of concern. In connection with the "All-American Buckle Up" held November 24-30, the Department of Transportation made available the Convincer, a Madison based unit. Protective Services and the Physical Plant with the help of Larry Kirby set up the device in the Memorial Student Center. The Convincer simulates an automobile crash impacting at about ten miles per hour. It is designed to persaude the user the importance of wearing safety belts.

If we can save only one life...it will have proved worthwhile.

Dean Sanky
Director of Safety for Protective Services

Many excuses are given for not wearing a seatbelt. Some older car models are not equipped with them for all passengers. Perhaps the drive is only a short one so, "it doesn't pay to bother with them." Perhaps they are too uncomfortable, or you feel you are a good driver and see no need for wearing them. One might feel that buckling up is an insult to the driver. Or maybe it's just a hassle. Others wear them occasionally and simply have not made them a priority or a habit.

While it is not yet required by Wisconsin law for adults to buckle up, it is wise to do so. These facts argue strongly for their use. Traffic crashes are the third largest killer in the United States, according to an article in the West Central Tribune. The article also states that more than 50 percent of deaths and serious injuries from automobile collisions could have been prevented by wearing safety belts.

"If we can save only one life or prevent a serious injury, "commented Dean Sanky, Director of Safety for Protective Services, "it will have proved worthwhile."

Bob Zydowsky, also with Protective Services, was one of the 63 people to take the opportunity to try the Convincer. He has a minor in Driver Traffic Safety and added that it was a good way to get an idea of the forces felt in a crash.

Bill Wiese, a Menomonie resident, had been in a minor traffic accident. He also took the time to try the Convincer. He felt riding the Convincer was something worth taking time out for.

Though some who saw the Convincer were apprehensive, the overall response was positive. No injuries have ever been received riding the Convincer, but countless may have been prevented. The chance of seeing the Convincer return to Stout sometime down the road is also good. Meanwhile, as Christmas brings the peak of yet another holiday traffic season, buckle up!

Desperately seeking tenant's rights

QUESTION: The house or apartment you rented in the summer was charming. There wasn't a flaw in sight.

Suddenly, after a particularly cold night, you find small black pellets in your cupboards.

Ghosts?

ANSWER: Unfortunately, ghosts are not your problem.

You have mice.

Furry critters that have decided to sublet your house without you knowing it. What can you do?

First call your landlord and tell them you have mice. If your problem is infestation, not just a stray field mouse, ask your landlord to have your house professionally exterminated.

Second, you have to start catching them. It is possible that you do have just stray mice compared to "house mice". Either way, they have to be coming in from somewhere. Look around in the room you think you have mice in and seal off all openings around the pipes, etc.

Third, you have to get down to catching the mice. The best way to catch and kill them is by a trap. If you use poison, the mice may eat it and crawl away to an unknown place to die.

If you use a trap, you have the mouse as evidence of your infestation. Traps are easily attainable; two for under a dollar. The traps are usually pre-scented, but it is always a good idea to put a glob of peanut butter on the trap.

Fourth, make sure your kitchen, or wherever you have mice, is kept clean. Put all food away promptly and keep your cupboards and countertops clean.

If you should happen to catch a mouse, as morbid as it souds, keep it. Put it in a jar filled with rubbing alcohol.

The reason you keep the mouse, is in case your landlord does not cooperate with you, you can use it in court for evidence.

If your landlord won't cooperate with you call Menomonie's building inspector, or contact your Landlord Tenant Service here at Stout.

Commencement

Winter commencement at UW-Stout will be held at 10 a.m., Sat., Dec. 14 in the Johnson Fieldhouse. Degrees will be awarded to approximately 650 students including 119 who will receive advanced degrees. A reception will follow in the Great Hall of the Memorial Student Center.

Christmas concert

Stout will present its annual Christmas concert at 7:30 p.m., Sun., Dec. 8 in Johnson Fieldhouse. The Symphonic Singers will present choral works by Johann Sebastian Bach and Paul Manz, as well as numerous Christmas carols. Vocal jazz arrangements of works by George Gershwin and Hoagy Carmichael will be sung by the Chamber Singers.

The Jazz Ensemble will feature John Palof on trumpet in Carmicheal's immortal "Stardust." "High Society," considered one of the greatest dixieland selections ever written, will be performed by the Dixieland Band.

Choral and instrumental groups will join forces at the conclusion of the concert for the traditional "Hallelujah Chorus." The concert is free of charge.

Food drive

Human Relations Class, Section 01, is sponsoring a food drive for the Dunn County Food Pantry. All Stout faculty, staff and students are encouraged to donate food that is storable, paper products and/or health care products to their cause.

Donations will be collected at the Student Services Center, Tues., Dec. 10, Wed., Dec. 11, and Thurs., Dec. 12 from 10 a.m. to 3.p.m each day. Please think of the needy during this holiday period and help make someone else's holiday better.

Dirt cheap auction

The Hotel Sales and Marketing Association's Tenth Annual Dirt Cheap Auction will take place Wed., Dec. 11 from 2 p.m. to 7 p.m. in the Great Hall of the Memorial Student Center. The goal for this year's auction is $10,000. The club will donate half of the money made over $6,000 to a local charity.

Local auctioneer Marvin Smith will run the auction with the help of Stout speech professor Howard Heise. Among the more than 100 packages to be auctioned off will be hotel packages to Chicago, Minneapolis, Milwaukee and Green Bay. There will also be restaurant packages, beer lights and merchandise from local merchants auctioned off.

Student aid

A bill to reauthorize the Higher Education Act (HEA), now before Congress, is the most important legislation affecting colleges, universities and other postsecondary institutions in this decade, Third District Congressman Steve Gunderson said Tuesday.

Gunderson said the legislation will set the direction of postsecondary education through the end of the century for the high tech age. Gunderson said that he introduced legislation earlier this year to update education programs for the adult students is part of the HEA.

The HEA also includes a provision by Gunderson calling upon the Secretary of Education to study the major increases in college tuition rates which far exceed the inflation rate.

Soviet Union tour

Stout's annual two-week tour of the Soviet Union is now open for applications both from the University and the community at large. The tour is affiliated with the entire UW-System. To provide background information about the Soviet Union and its history, a two-credit seminar is offered on campus and required for tour participants.

Departure for the 1986 trip will be March 8, from the Twin Cities airport and return will be on the evening of March 22. Stops on the tour will include Helsinki, Finland, plus Leningrad, Tbilisi (in the Caucasus), Baku (on the Caspian Sea), and Moscow.

Assault

tim," McNaughton said.

If the victim does not want to solve the problem informally, a formal complaint can be filed against the harasser. Faculty should consult the Faculty/Academic Staff/Limited Appointment Handbook, Academic staff should consult Faculty/Academic Staff Limited Appointment Handbook, Classified Staff should consult Handbook for Classified Emoployees and students should consult Student Handbook under "Student Disciplinary Procedures.

> It's hard for me to sleep at night.
> —Anonymous

"The formal statement of complaint is done infrequently," McNaughton said, because of the time factor. "Most desire the informal approach of confronting the harasser or writing a letter to the harasser," McNaughton said.

The written form or communication to the harasser is said to be the latest weapon in the battle against sexual harassment in the workplace and on the college campuses, according to an article in the New York Times.

A typical letter begins with the account or reference to what happened as seen by the victim. The second part of the letter describes how the writer feels about the facts as the writer sees them. For example, "It's hard for me to sleep at night." The letter concludes with a statement of what the writer wants to happen next. For example, "I want our relationship to be purely confidential."

According to McNaughton, the letter is in black and white and defines the problem and solution. Professionals who deal with sexual harrasment say men have been socialized to believe that a women's "no" means "yes." They do not understand that women are serious until they read the words in black and white, the New York Times article said.

The number of campus harassments at Stout has been seven in the past two years. Some may view the figure as "no cause for alarm." McNaughton says just one case is reason for alarm. "One (sexual harassment case) is significant. Sexual harassment is inappropriate to our environment."

The best piece of advice McNaughton can give to persons who fear they are being sexually harassed is to document it. "Write down what happened, where it happened, when it happened, how you felt and who else knows about the incident."

Lacombe, Lucien: A warning

Jef Maynard
Arts Editor

A peasant, a boy, an orderly, a Gestapo agent, a lover, a fool, a fugitive. In four months, Lucien Lacombe is swept out of his tempo and finally hurled against the tidal wave he has become a part of.

In Lacombe, Lucien, the theme is simple. It is all too easy for terrible things to happen, and if you don't pay attention, you may become part of them.

Preview

The Foreign Film Society's final offering for this semester is the 1974 French work Lacombe, Lucien. The title is presented like a file name, such as Einstein, Albert. The film ends with a case study graphic printed on the screen. The film is not presented as a case study however. It is presented as a warning.

It begins with the George Santayana quotation: "Those who are not aware of history are condemned to relive it."

This states why the film was made. The Jews, among others were treated to hell on earth during World War II. Some other select unfortunates could be next and the only way to prevent it was for the soldiers to refuse to cooperate.

The story follows Lucien from his job as an orderly through a feasible series of events to his becoming a member of the German Secret Police, or Gestapo.

Lucien is young, maybe 15, and it is June, in southern France, 1944. He is an average peasant lad living in a larger city; he works in a nursing home. He is growing up on the threshold of hell.

On the bicycle ride to his mother's country home, there is a beautiful film sequence of the French landscape accompanied by the exquisite period jazz music of Stephan Grappelli and Django Reinhart. The scene is sort of like the interlude in Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid where Paul Newman pedals around to some nice music. Music seems to be like the opposite of death.

Lucien arrives at his mother's home and a scene takes place that may sum up much of the unexplained past of the boy. He is on the outside of the house looking in at a family meal, framing in by an open window.

The next scene is Lucien on the outside, seen from the inside. The boy exhibits little emotional or intellectual relationship to anything he contacts. This is his tragic flaw. It is the character feature that leads to his final tragic awakening.

While still in his old village, he asks a school teacher, and French underground leader about joining the underground. "Lt. Voltaire," as he is called, refuses Lucien because they already have too many boys fighting. Even those with little allegiance need to belong.

> Those who are not aware of history are condemned to relive it.
> —George Santayana

When he returns to his city job, he accidently wanders by a hotel and is nabbed outside, accused of spying. After explaining he was not spying, he is given a few drinks. With his tongue and already limited mind loosened, he tells the Gestapo agents headquartered in the hotel, about the underground in his village. Lt. Voltaire is arrested, and brought in, into the room where Lucien slept off his intoxication.

One remarkable feature of Lucien is his lack of facial expression, he sees but he does not seem to register, or be aware of the significance of the events in which he is involved. Later he sees Lt. Voltaire being tortured and even then expresses nothing outwardly.

Like any decent facist police agent, he needs to dress well. Through his boss, Jean-Bernard, he is introduced to Albert Horn, famous European tailor. Horn, his daughter and mother are Jews whose safety depends on his tailoring for Jean-Bernard and blackmail money as well.

While at Horn's hideaway home, Lucien meets Horn's beautiful daughter France. One has to suppose that Lucien is captivated by France even though he does not show it.

Eventually, Lucien makes a series of clumsy power moves on her, based on his Gestapo connections. At first, he makes a fool of himself. In one scene however, he frightens away a menacing landlord with his .45 caliber pistol and some tough looks.

France eventually learns to like this strange young man who invites himself to dinner. His direct, earthy, dumb, peasant ways have a charm that outweighs his fledgling Gestapo bullying.

Albert Horn does his best to tolerate the rudeness due to the fact that ultimately, it is the Gestapo protection that is saving their lives—a very thin thread for a tailor.

After a jealous and drunken scuffle at a farewell party for Jean-Bernard, France teaches him to dance in the hallway. There is another scuffle, which leads to the first scene of Lucien expressing something like emotion.

France is exposed as a Jew and is deeply hurt by insults. She runs to hide alone. Lucien realizes her pain and does what he can to comfort her. They spend the night together in the hotel.

After trying to arrange an escape, Horn is taken by the Gestapo. Eventually, the Gestapo come for France and her grandmother. Lucien is with the soldier in charge. His greatest change comes with the realization of what he has done. He tries to help them escape and that leads to the end of the film.

Their last days together are full of beauty and laughter. It reveals that some aspect of life's flicker may have not shone in Lucien. When it finally came to him, the beauty that was missing lead him to the heroics that makes the tragedy so much more painful.

A strong cast sells Saving Grace

Julie Anne Furst
Arts Reporter

"Saving Grace," a holiday comedy presented by UW-Stout's University Theatre, will open tonight at 8 p.m. in Harvey Hall Auditorium.

The play is directed by University Theatre Director Natalie Bothwell. It features seniors Sarah Jane Harkness, Dave Kiff, Rod Negus, and Kim Steen, and junior Gary Harder.

"Saving Grace", which was written by Jack Sharkey, takes place in Grace's modest New York apartment. It is just after Christmas, and Grace, an insurance secretary, has invited her boss up for a drink after work.

It is the first time Grace has ever entertained a man, and she nervously tries to make small talk about the office. But her boss has more than business on his mind as he makes several romantic advances toward his young assistant.

He then suggests that Grace accompany him to the company's annual insurance convention in Hawaii. In fact, he has bought her a grass skirt for the occasion.

Reluctantly, Grace goes into her bedroom to try the skirt on and her boss dashes out to his car to get a camera.

While Grace is changing, a telephone repairman arrives to fix her phone. Grace then comes out of her room and mistakes the repairman, who is fixing the line from her window, for a prowler.

> ...it has been one of the most mature casts I've ever had.
> Natalie Bothwell
> Director

Grace then notices that the prowler is covered with ice and snow. She offers to dry his clothes in the oven.

Next, Grace's boss returns and finds Grace in the apartment with the nearly-naked repairman. Almost immediately after his return, Grace's straight-laced sister arrives from out of town. She is shocked by the apparent obscenity of the situation. To avoid embarrassment, Grace tells her sister that the repairman is her new husband.

"From here the misunderstandings continue hilariously to the final curtain," Bothwell said in a university press release. "The lines are funny, the characters lovable. It all adds up to an evening that you'll remember for a long time."

Rod Negus, Sarah Jane Harkness, and Kim Steen polish a scene during a dress rehearsal of "Saving Grace." Harkness and Steen, friends for many years, deliver especially fine, cohesive performances in this hilarious comedy. (Stoutonia photo by Jeff Bartels)

"'Saving Grace' is the perfect comedy for this time of year," Bothwell continued. "The cast is a good mix of actors. They have been delightful to work with. With four of them graduating in December, it has been one of the most mature casts I've ever had."

Evening performances of "Saving Grace" are at 8 p.m. Dec. 5, 6, and 7. There is also a 2 p.m. matinee on Dec. 8. Tickets are $3 for general admission and $2 for students or staff with a university ID. Reservations for tickets can be made by calling 232-1468.

Ornithology viewed as a worthwhile pasttime

Beth Reid
Arts Reporter

Humans have always been susceptible to the charm of birds. The beauty of the birds' plumage, the loveliness of their songs, and the grace of their flight have been praised by many poets and writers from the Greeks to the present. Like butterflies, birds are generally creatures of the day, which can be enjoyed by anyone anywhere.

For many people in today's increasingly urban world, birds are a welcome reminder of our ties to nature. Even city parks and suburban gardens support bird life. Throughout much of the United States, birds are a form of entertainment to watch and follow through the seasonal changes. In spring they can be followed through their courtship, nest building and raising of their young. In autumn the flight of the Canadian geese is a joy for many to watch as they honk their way south for the winter.

"Thanks to backyard feeders some birds...have been able to expand their winter ranges northward,
Roger Buck
Naturalist

Winter is an ideal time to begin bird watching. The dropping of the temperature and the falling of snow brings many birds out in search of food. To catch the action of the birds without having to go too far from home, a bird feeder in the backyard is a perfect way to bring the birds to you.

The birds will reward you handsomely for the pleasure of dining in your backyard. The chatter and delightful antics of crowds of colorful feathered visitors dropping by well-stocked feeders will be a form of entertainment all winter long.

"Thanks to backyard feeders some birds, like the brilliant red cardinal have been able to expand their winter ranges northward," naturalist Roger Buck said. "Years ago these birds were rarely seen in the northern states during the cold season. Now they can be seen in many backyards year round."

For some ways to enjoy catering to the birds, Buck offered the following tips:

A plastic feeder installed right on the window allows close-range bird-watching. This nearby feeding station can also be replenished conveniently by opening the window instead of making a chilly trip outdoors. The window feeder may not be accepted immediately, but if it is kept well stocked with sunflower seeds and peanuts, bold birds like chickadees won't be able to resist.

Niger seed, often called "thistle" is the favorite of goldfinches and siskins. Niger seed, which is very tiny, is used in a specially designed tube feeder. Although niger seed is more expensive, its small size makes a little go a long way and a catch tray at the bottom of the tube helps minimize waste.

To attract a wide variety of birds into the yard, a simple way to accommodate those birds which like to feed on the ground is to throw a few handfuls of mixed birdseed onto an area of the ground where the snow is packed down. This will attract junkos, song sparrows, tree sparrows, mourning doves and cardinals. Seeds should be replenished after a new snowfall, or when the supply is gone.

Beef suet served in a wire mesh basket or shaped into a ball is a favorite treat of woodpeckers, flickers and nuthatches. When the suet is combined with peanut butter, honey or scratch feed, the birds will be tempted even more. It is best to attach suet feeders to the side of a tree or hang it from a limb to make the birds more comfortable.

Different species of birds feed at different heights, so it is best to offer food on the ground, against tree trunks, at tabletop level, and from hanging feeders.

To encourage birds to continue returning to the feeder, make sure it is kept full. The birds will begin to make regular visits and will attract other birds to the feeder. The few minutes it takes to replenish the food for the birds is very small in comparison to the amount of enjoyment the birds will bring.

Controversial sweetener

Linda Konkol

What do Kool-Aid, Jell-O, and Coca-Cola have in common? They all make reduced calorie products which contain NutraSweet. This new sweetener has been received with both enthusiasm and criticism, and controversy over its safety continues.

NutraSweet is the brand name of the sweetening ingredient aspartame. It is made of two protein components (amino acids): aspartic acid and phenylalanine. These amino acids are not sweet individually, but in combination yield a sweet taste.

Although this specific combination of the amino acids does not occur in nature, aspartame's components are identical to those in foods like meat, dairy products, and grains.

It is digested as protein and provides 4 kcal/gram. Since aspartame is 180 times sweeter than table sugar, smaller amounts of aspartame are needed to acheive equivalent sweetness.

A researcher at G.D. Searle & Co discovered aspartame in 1965 while looking for an ulcer drug.

In 1981, aspartame was approved by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) for use in foods. In 1983, aspartame was approved for use in carbonated beverages. Now aspartame is used in more than 75 products ranging from cereal to whiskey-sour mix. If the FDA agrees, it will soon be added to orange juice, yogurt, and ice cream.

Aspartame is also sold in packets and tablets under the brand name "Equal." A form of Equal that can be measured spoon-for-spoon like sugar has also been developed by G.D. Searle & Co. This new form will be available following FDA approval.

Since its introduction, aspartame's safety has been continuously questioned. It's been suggested as the cause of brain tumors and brain damage. The FDA conducted more than 100 scientific studies prior to its approval, and found these claims to be unwarranted.

Some theorize that aspartame may not be much of a diet aid saying that when it's consumed along with carbohydrates, aspartame blocks a brain chemical that normally tells the body when it's full. Instead of feeling satisfied, a person craves more starches and sugars.

Some reports by consumers also suggest that aspartame may cause headaches, seizures, and depression. Mary Serdula, M.D. at the Center for Disease Control (CDC) said that a recent study of consumer complaints by the CDC was not able to connect these symptoms to consumption of aspartame.

The study did suggest, however, that some people may be unusually sensitive to aspartame, as is the case with some foods such as milk, eggs, and seafood.

Russ Lemieux, spokesperson for the Calorie Control Council, a trade association of food and beverage manufacturers and suppliers, said, "Any time there's an introduction of a new product into the food supply, people make complaints about it. But nothing has been proven to link the problems with aspartame."

Aspartame does pose a health problem to those with phenylketonuria (PKU), a rare genetic disease detected at birth, that inhibits the ability to metabolize phenylalanine. Since phenylalanine is a constituent of aspartame, phenylketonurics are warned to avoid consumption of this sweetener.

As a sweetener, aspartame has several merits. It can reduce calories in products by as much as 95 percent. It does not promote tooth decay and it enhances and extends flavor perception in fruits and chewing gum.

Aspartame, as Equal, can be used in the home to sweeten hot and cold beverages, fresh fruit, hot and cold cereal, cinnamon toast, and unflavored yogurt.

It is not recommended that Equal be used for recipes that require prolonged exposure to heat. Like other sugar substitutes, Equal does not provide the bulk and structure needed for many recipes. In addition, prolonged exposure of Equal to oven or range heat will result in loss of sweetness. However, Equal can be added to heated recipes after cooking.

This Banana Cake uses Equal as a sweetener. The Equal is used in a glaze poured over the cake after baking. A slice of this frosted banana cake sweetened with Equal contains 249 calories, half of the calories in the traditional 556 calorie slice.

Banana Cake

Cake:
2 cups all-purpose flour
1 tbsp. baking powder
1/2 tsp. salt
1/4 cup vegetable oil
2 eggs
1/2 cup milk
1 tsp. vanilla
1 cup mashed ripe bananas

Glaze:
1/4 tsp. cinnamon
16 packets Equal
3 tbsp. boiling water

Stir together dry ingredients. Blend oil, eggs, milk, and vanilla until smooth. Stir in bananas. Add to dry ingredients, and stir just until flour is thoroughly moistened. Pour batter into a greased 9x13-inch pan. Bake at 350 for 40 to 50 minutes, until a toothpick inserted in center comes out clean. With a fork, prick holes approximately one inch apart on top of cake. Blend glaze ingredients; drizzle over cake. Cool completely. Frost. Makes 12 servings.

Frosting:
1 pkg. (8 oz.) cream cheese, softened
1/2 cup plain lowfat yogurt
14 packets Equal
1 tsp. vanilla

Combine cream cheese and yogurt; blend until smooth. Stir in Equal and vanilla. Chill before using. Makes 2 cups.

This Paradise Quencher makes a great non-alcoholic punch for parties. A range for the amount of Equal needed is given, since everyone has a different perception of sweetness. Start with the fewest number of packets and increase to taste.

Paradise Quencher

1 cup cranapple juice
1 cup unsweetened orange juice
1 cup ginger ale
2 bananas
4-8 packets Equal

Combine all ingredients in blender. Blend on high for 30 seconds or until light and frothy. Makes eight 4-ounce servings.

Division I opponents overpower cagers

Rochelle Buhr
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout men's basketball team began their season with tough losses to Division I powers, the University of Nebraska and Northern Illinois University.

Stout 53 Nebraska 71

Although it appears that the Stout hoopsters were run over by the Cornhuskers, they proved to themselves and the rest of the basketball community that they could play a Division I team.

Head Coach Dwain Mintz's starters were only that, starters, because he utilized all of the players throughout the game to see what everyone could do.

In the first half the Blue Devils played formidable, staying within reach of a possible victory.

They matched the Cornhuskers, rebound for rebound, and managed to stay close in score, ending the first half of play with a score of 31-24 in favor of Nebraska.

John Patterson tossed in seven points, while Brian Ellingson and Tom Gomolak each notched four points for the Blue Devils in the first half of play. For Nebraska, superstar Dave Hoppen could not be controlled. He pumped in 17 big points for the Cornhuskers leading all scorers on both teams in just the first half.

"We were within reach of catching them, but during the second half we had so many turnovers in a row, and then they scored on all our turnovers," Mintz stated.

In fact the second half was littered by turnovers. Stout turned the ball over 21 times while Nebraska turned it over 16 times. This fact, coupled with the Blue Devils' inability to control Nebraska's Hoppen, lead to their eventual loss.

Stout was also plagued with foul trouble. Tom Gomolak and Chuck Dugger each fouled out late in the game.

A bright spot in the game was the play of Blue Devil Ellingson, who grabbed eight rebounds and chipped in 10 points. Luther Forrest also hit double figures, adding an additional 10 points to the Blue Devils' final tally.

Incidentally, Nebraska's Hoppen finished the game with 29 points, and this put him in tenth place on the Big Eight career scoring list.

"Everyone played respectably," Mintz said. "We shot 34 percent and they shot 44 percent. The team really played well together."

Stout 58 Northern Illinois 74

The second foe the Blue Devil basketball team faced over Thanksgiving vacation were the Northern Illinois Huskies.

A big crowd was on hand to witness the contest. Attendance was estimated at 3,750 people.

The first half for the Blue Devils was sloppy. They only connected on 11 of their 37 attempted shots, producing a shooting percentage of .297. However, the Huskies were on a quest for baskets, and they got them, chipping in 18 out of 25 attempts, amassing a healthy .720 shot percentage. Also adding to the Blue Devils' woes were 10 fouls committed, compared to the five committed by the Huskies.

Although the Blue Devil offense was in low gear, the defense was ironlike, for Gomolak and Dugger kept Huskie superstar Kenny Battle to a mere six points in the first half of play.

The second half was characterized by a sudden burst of energy from the Blue Devils. At one point Stout scored 10 straight points, pulling within eight points with five minutes and 30 seconds left in the game.

This spurt was short-lived. Northern Illinois then outscored the Blue Devils 12-1 in the remaining four minutes of the game, crushing all the Blue Devils' hopes for a victory.

For Stout, forward Mark Stevens lead the scoring with 12 points. Center Rick Stephan snatched 10 rebounds and added 10 points to Stout's final score.

Huskie Battle, who had a 20.1 scoring average last season, was successfully held at bay by the Blue Devils, only managing to toss in 15 points.

"We were hopeful when we were brought back within eight points in the third quarter, but then we had violations, and turnovers that produced three baskets in a row," Mintz commented. "Overall there was good balance and mature size that added to our existing teamwork."

Mintz also stated that the starting lineup he used for both of the games would probably be the starting lineup for the season, which is Stephan playing center, Stevens and Gomolak playing at forwards, and Glen Fischer and Ellingson as the guards. Forward Chuck Dugger will be the sixth man, who will be used to come into the game and give the team some flair and momentum.

Regarding the past expulsion of Ron Hunter from the team, Mintz stated that this was a team thing. "Hunter's behavior was detrimental to the team, and we have to respond appropriately as educators."

Because of the adverse weather conditions, the Gustavus Adolphus and Northland College games were cancelled. Commenting on these cancellations Mintz said, "These cancellations will hurt us. We needed to play someone at home."

This Saturday at 7:30 p.m., the number one nationally ranked team in Division III, UW-Whitewater Warhawks, will invade Johnson Fieldhouse to challenge the Blue Devils in their season home opener.

Young wrestling squad suffers hard losses but shows potential

Tina Gorst
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout grapplers opened up the 1985 wrestling season with a loss against UW-La Crosse on Nov. 20, and again losing their home match against UW-Eau Claire on Nov. 22.

The Blue Devils' inexperience really showed in their loss against La Crosse. With a score of 41-5, the team almost suffered a shut out, but a draw by sophomore 177-pounder Wayne Hendrickson and a 10-7 win by sophomore heavyweight Ron Wolf, put some points on the board for Stout.

Head Coach Walt Perkins expressed, "Obviously when you get beat this bad it is not a good feeling. As a team we just weren't mentally there. The reason for this is that there are a lot of new faces. Only three of our returning veterans wrestled from last year, while La Crosse had seven. It really showed."

A fine performance by freshman Brian Olson at 118 lbs. was one highlight of the evening. The match was close and intense at first, but Olson lost control in the end and the match ran away. Perkins said, "My freshmen did a great job. This kind of loss is really staggering for them and right now there's not much confidence there." Olson commented, "The change from high school to college is definitely a big one. Right now we're doing the best we can and we are just hoping for the best. I feel optimistic about the future. Coach Perkins is a working coach. By that I mean he works us hard, and I feel good things will come from that."

Ron Wolf put out an impressive performance also. Coming back from an injury, he really had his work cut out for him. Wolf said, "The team score really didn't bother me because I knew I had to beat my guy, and I just went out and wrestled my best."

Their first home match left the Blue Devils with an improved score. However, they still lost to Eau Claire with a score of 29-18. Individual winners included Brian Olson, a 118-pounder who won by forfeit; Jon Coldwell at 126 lbs. pinned Bruce Burton in 2:39; Chris Everson at 134 lbs. won 8-4; and Wayne Hendrickson (177 lbs.) won his match 9-3.

Perkins commented, "It's very important to win at the 118 and 126 pound weight classes. You need these for that emotional high and push. It is always difficult to come back from those losses."

Heavyweight Ron Wolf commented, "We're a young team right now and our emotions were pretty low from our first loss, but I feel we're really coming around now. Wrestling against Eau Claire really allowed us to get together as a team. I see the team taking a turn for the better."

Perkins feels that it's hard to speculate the team's future performance this early in the season. "Right now I have two very strong leaders, Keith Rusch (118 lbs.) and Dave Witt (hwt.), on the bench due to ineligibility until second semester. Keith will go to nationals for sure this year, and he is a good leader and motivator. Dave Witt is also a good leader, as well as a good, highly-skilled scorer. We need people like that right now to help increase our performance." Wolf added to that, saying ,"I feel Dave Witt will provide a lot of leadership once he returns. A lot of the younger guys will really look up to him and that's just what we need."

Working on improvements for the upcoming home match on Friday against St. Thomas, and the UW-River Falls Open Tournament this Saturday at River Falls, Perkins feels he needs to build intensity. "Lack of aggressiveness is what has been hurting us. Right now our lineup has its leadership from the side-lines, and I have to remind my team members to listen to the bench and get help there. It gives them go, and it really works. The new people need that support so bad when they're tired."

While winning is important for all coaches, Perkins values a good, strong performance over a good score. Wolf said, "He expects you to do the very best you can. A good performance is always a good show for him."

In closing, Perkins said, "I like the bunch I'm working with, and I feel the team is optimistic. I see a lot of blossoming potential, and right now we are just trying to find ourselves because we're young. We're building again."

The Armchair Quarterback

Media & athletics clash

Tom Roth

In today's modern age, the power of the media is becoming more and more evident everyday you pick up a newspaper, watch television or listen to the radio.

One particular area in which the media coverage has grown tremendously over the years is on the athletic scene. With all the changes in athletics and media coverage, many problems have developed, some for the good and some not-so-good.

One of the not-so-good turns is that media coverage and athletics has changed from entertainment and fun into a business and politics. Take the Heisman Trophy race for instance. Is the best college player selected each year for their performance? Usually not as this year's winner will most likely be Auburn's Bo Jackson, who has taken himself out of a couple games this year because of nagging injuries. Real competitors don't take the easy way out.

This year's top college performer is probably Michigan State's Lorenzo White, the nation's leading rusher, but because his school didn't send out thousands of flyers to media people like Bo Jackson and Iowa's Chuck Long he'll finish a distant third in the race.

ABC's gimmick backfired on them last Saturday during the Auburn-Alabama football game on national television when they featured a fan call-in-vote for your Heisman Trophy pick. Long outpolled Jackson by more than 5,000 votes.

ABC had been promoting Jackson all year for their choice of the prestigious award while CBS was promoting Long, having televised Iowa football games all year. But now their pick is Jackson since Auburn will be playing in the Cotton Bowl, which CBS will be covering.

The media might not always be unbiased from the national level all the way down to school newspapers, but that's okay, as long as the other side, a clear bias, is conveyed to the public as an attempt to arouse their interest. ABC gave the public a chance to express their opinions through their call-in poll, recording over 200,000 calls in three hours. The figures probably would have been higher if they would have had more lines as they were constantly busy.

Problems between the media and athletics develop when the athletic administrators, coaches and athletes decide that they should have the final say in what the media covers, doesn't cover and how they should cover an event.

One of the most interesting things I've experienced in being a roving, curious and aggressive reporter is when you try to interview a coach or athlete and they think they are doing the interviewing and should ask all the questions. Athletic representatives should spend more time concentrating on their own game plan instead of the media's strategic attack. If some coaches and athletes used defenses the way they do against some media people, their opponents would probably be scoreless all season.

Why do some coaches and athletes question media people about their knowledge of a sport or event? Maybe journalists should question coaches and athletes about journalism before interviewing them.

Coaches and athletes seem to be always complaining about media coverage being one-sided, but more times than not it is because that coach or athlete would not render their side of a story until they are made a fool of in public. So many times media people are labeled as being "unprofessional," but is being professional getting trashed in a local bar and bad mouthing the press as some athletes do? Not too many athletes would even think of saying half the things they say to reporters if they were sober.

It's too bad that such a sparse group of people can give such a large body of people such a bad reputation.

The point is, coaches and athletes need to stop bitching so much about the media and start worrying about their own problems on the field. If coaches and athletes cooperate with the media, everything would run a lot smoother. Who knows, maybe the fun could be put back into the game on and off the field.

SPORTS BEAT

Sports Quote of the Week-"I just wonder how things could go so bad early and turn around. It's kind of bizarre to me." Minnesota Viking quarterback Wade Wilson on last Sunday's miracle comeback against Philadelphia.

Holtz Not to Coach Gophers in Bowl Game-University of Minnesota athletic officials say Notre Dame bound coach Lou Holtz will not coach the Gophers in the Independence Bowl on Dec. 21 in Shreveport, La. against the Clemson Tigers. Athletic officials had drawn criticism in letting Holtz continue as head coach for the bowl game.

Top Candidates Vie for Gopher Job-Maryland Football Coach Bobby Ross was believed to be in Minneapolis this week to meet with Minnesota Athletic Director Paul Giel about the Gopher head coaching job vacancy. Ross has led Maryland to four straight 8-3 seasons.

Gopher defensive coordinator John Gutekunst confirmed he has applied for the position also.

Fans Pay Tribute to Ex-Flyer Lindbergh-The late Pelle Lindbergh is the leading vote-getter among Wales Conference goaltenders, according to figures released by the NHL.

Lindberg, the Philadelphia Flyers' All-Star goalie, who died after a Nov. 10 automobile accident, had received over 24 percent of the votes through Nov. 17.

McEnroe's Temper Costs $1,250 in Open-Hot tempered John McEnroe was fined $1,250 for an audible obscenity during play at the Australian Open in Melbourne. The fine pushed McEnroe's total for the year over the $7,500 limit and means he will serve a 42-day suspension after the tourney. The suspension could be cut in half if he plays no tennis, including exhibitions.

Miller continues to build strong program

Kelly Cohorst
Sports Reporter

Three years ago, UW-Stout Coach John Miller built a swimming program from scratch. He recruited new swimmers and built Stout into a successful program of competitors. Because it takes a couple of years to build a real strong team, Miller was patient and understanding with the new college swimmers.

Feature

Most schools in the WSUC/WWIAC have been swimming for years. Thus, Miller had quite a challenge ahead of him when he became head coach. But, because of his past experience as an All-American, he knew what it would take to become the best.

Last year Miller coached both the women's and men's team to the national meet where all 14 of the swimmers present received All-American honors. It will be tough for the Blue Devils to repeat, but Coach Miller is confident that this year will prove to be a more successful season than last year. "Last year we did a great job, but this year I know we'll do better," Miller said. Miller has already built up a team that in only three seasons has one of the top five ratings in the conference.

Miller, a native of West Bend, Wis., has been coaching swimming since he attended school at UW-Washington County. Miller first coached at The Hartford Swim Club, with 13-14 year olds. They won all five relay events in the state meet, and all were in the top ten in the state.

During the summer he continued to coach after he transferred to UW-Oshkosh. Miller proved his skills as a swimmer by placing nationally and breaking the school record in the 200-meter individual medley for the Titans. He graduated in 1980 with a degree in Physical Education, and then he returned to West Bend, to coach the swim club there.

Last year we did a great job, but this year I know we'll do better.

John Miller
Swim Coach

The year before he arrived at the West Bend Swim Club, the team finished fifth in the conference. Miller was successful again. In his first year as coach they placed seventh in the state, won the conference title, and for the first time in over ten years the West Bend Swim Club broke into the top ten.

Moving on through his career as a swim coach Miller attended Utah State University but much to his disappointment he soon found out that there was no swim team. Still wanting to coach he transferred to the University of Minnesota, and changed his course of study from Exercise Physiology to Sports Psychology. For two years he was assistant swim coach, part-time student as well as a teacher.

Miller came next to Stout to start their initial swimming program. The Blue Devils have showed steady progress over the past three years as was evident with last year's team which produced 14 All-Americans.

Looking forward to the 1985-86 swim season Miller states, "I feel that this year is going to be better than last year." Miller believes the team has the potential to train well for the heavy competition for the upcoming season. The team lost very few swimmers from last year's national qualifying squad.

The Blue Devils second meet of the season will be at Whitewater on Saturday in the WWIAC/WSUC relays.

New county sales tax approved by Supervisors

Todd Holman
News Reporter

The Dunn County Board of Supervisors approved a new county sales tax and bonding to reduce the $4.1 million tax levy that has been raised practically 23 percent from last year. The Supervisors voted 24-4 in favor of the sales tax. The four supervisors who voted against the sales tax questioned if it was needed at all and wondered if the benefits to the community from the tax outweigh the disadvantages.

The tax will go into affect on April 1, 1986. Ostensibly, the tax was proposed to help lower the 23 percent estimated property tax increase which is the highest increase in the county's history.

The sales tax is expected to bring in revenues of $325,000 in 1986 and $752,000 in 1987. Dunn County is only the third out of 72 counties in Wisconsin to approve the new sales tax plan. The second county to approve such a tax plan was the neighboring Barron County.

Members of the board who opposed the tax were Stan Anderson, Dallas Chryst, Orville Larson and Vern Maves. Their reason for opposing the proposed sales tax was their belief the tax simply would not financially benefit the community enough to make it justifiable.

> We will be deriving more revenue from parties who are not property holders such as University students....

Dallas Chryst said that he opposed the tax because he believed that the Dunn County property taxes were already relatively low for the services received. Since Barron County has already put the tax into affect all the people in the 24 mile stretch between Barron and Dunn Counties are already paying the tax.

The property tax increase would cause a person with a $300,000 farm to pay an additional $300 in property tax. This means that consumers would have to spend $60,000 to be taxed at .005 percent in order to equal the $300 property tax increase.

The fact sheet on the Board of Supervisors meeting on Nov. 21 stated, "We will be deriving more revenue from parties who are not property holders such as university students, renters and guests to our community."

Many students at UW-Stout believe the new tax is aimed primarily at the Stout's student body while failing to affect the community in a positive manner. Brian McElroy, a sophmore at UW-Stout said that he thought although the sales tax is aimed to affect all renters and not just the students that with the property tax going down and the sales tax going into affect the students do not really benefit.

Questions remain about effectiveness of student regent

Tim Hopkins
News Editor

Twenty-four-year-old UW-Madison law student, John Schenian became the first student regent on the Board of Regents the same day that Governor Anthony Earl signed the bill legislating the student regent position into existence.

As Schenian settles into his two-year post on the Board of Regents, assuming his approval by the Wisconsin senate, questions remain about how affective the student regent will be in addressing the urgent needs of UW students. UW-Stout's SSA President Jo Ann Prange questions the fairness involved in Schenian's selection.

Schenian said when he took the post that he will work to ease the burden of tuition on students. A major concern of his is the increase in tuition costs paid by students. He will work to return tuition costs paid by students to 25 percent. He said the percentage had crept up the last few years to 27 or 28 percent due to reductions in state support.

Schenian said the recent decision to delay the start of classes until after Labor Day "was an intrusion into the academic decision-making process." He wants to be involved in a regent committee organized last November to study future enrollment and tuition policies. All regents have been invited to join the panel as voting members.

The first year law student received a B.S. degree in chemical engineering at Madison last year. The Waukesha native was co-president of the Wisconsin Student Association in '84 and was an aide to Rep. David E. Clarenbach (D-Madison) in '83 and '84.

Those who have voiced their displeasure with Schenian's appointment to the Board of Regents point to the fact that Rep. Clarenbach sponsored the bill that established the position of the student regent. Questions have been raised whether Governor Earl afforded all applicants for the student regent post an equally fair opportunity to present themselves as candidates for the job.

SSA President Jo Ann Prange had an interview on the subject of the new student regent last week at which time she expressed surprise at how rapidly the governor made the appointment. "The applications from United Council weren't there that long before he appointed somebody," Prange said.

In apparent disappointment, Prange said of Earl's action appointing Schenian "He didn't have personal interviews for any of the applicants from United Council, which to me would seem a little unfair because I know he did know John Schenian and he didn't know any of the others." Second guessing the governor's action, Prange said, "In order to give them a fair shake at it I would think he would at least want to meet them or call them or something."

SSA had endorsed senior Bryce Tolefree of UW-Oshkosh for the student regent post. Several SSA members expressed their derision at the apparent lack of consideration Tolefree received from Governor Earl.

> I'm sure we'll find out a lot more about what regents are, how to work with them, how to help them help us on certain issues.
> Jo Ann Prange
> SSA President

Prange expressed surprise when it was pointed out to her that Tolefree may not have been selected for the reason that he is about to become a second semester senior and the student regent position is a two-year committment requiring a full-time student. She said she was unsure whether or not Tolefree intended to become a graduate student.

Prange doesn't blame Schenian for doing all that he could to nail down the position. "I don't know if it's unfair John Schenian used the connections that he had available, which I think anyone would do," Prange said, "I would too if I had the connections available."

Stout's SSA president has no doubt that Schenian can do the job. "I think a student from Madison can adequately represent students from around the state," she said.

Prange stressed the major responsibility that now fell to the students Schenian is representing. "We just have to make sure that we bring our concerns to that person, that they do know the issues, that they do know how the cluster schools feel on these issues," Prange said.

Alive after 24 days under mud

Bogota, Colombia-A 75 year-old woman was rescued over the weekend after being trapped in her house for 24 days when the town of Armero was covered by mud triggered by the eruption of the Nevada del Ruiz volcano.

The woman, Maria Rosa Echeverri, survived because she had food stored in the house, but the supply ran out the day she was found. Rescue workers found her because of a plume of smoke from her cooking fire.

Another candidate for the presidency

Manilla, Philippines-Salvador Laurel registered as a candidate for the presidency Monday, rejecting an offer by Corazon Aquino that he join her in a "grand coalition" against President Ferdinand Marcos.

Laurel became the first major candidate to file for the Feb. 7 election which Aquino's supporters had hoped would pit her alone against Marcos, the man she says had her husband, Benigno Aquino, assasinated in 1983.

Violators will do business elsewhere

Washington, D.C.-Wisconsin's refusal to do business with violators of labor laws inflicts economic pain on them but does not constitute a penalty that would interfere with federal labor laws, Charles G. Hoornstra, an assistant state attorney general told the U.S. Supreme court.

Hoornstra delivered oral arguments in a case in which Wisconsin is seeking to preserve a law that requires it to stop making purchases from any company that has violated the National Labor Relations Act.

Shuttle to launch weather satellites

Washington D.C.-The government announced Monday that it has ordered a batch of new generation weather satellites to patrol the skies through the next decade with unprecedented cloud-watching precision.

The new satellites, the first weather eyes to be launched by the space shuttle, will be parked in stationery orbit 22,300 miles high to maintain an around-the-clock watch on cloud formation over one-third of the globe.

Wisconsin's climate just too cold

Madison-The Japanese automaker, Toyota, informed Gov. Anthony Earl that a new $500 million assembly plant would not be built in Wisconsin.

While Toyota officials praised Wisconsin's application for the plant, they (Toyota) said the cold and snowy winter disqualified the state, Earl said. Toyota is expected to announce formally this week that the new auto plant will be built near Georgetown, Ky.

Christmas Eve marks Russian invasion

Compiled by Paul D. Nelson

The Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, initiated on Christmas Eve of 1979, has prompted many to label that military endeavor "Moscow's Vietnam." The six years of fighting has seen 10,000 Soviet troops killed and another 20,000 wounded. Approximately 2.7 billion Soviet defense dollars are spent annually on this particular war effort.

Although the Soviets have replaced the previously weak Communist government with one more cooperative to their regional aims, they have been unable to defeat the Moslem rebellion which caused their initial decision to intervene militarily.

The approximately 120,000 highly trained and equipped Soviet soldiers have been unable to defeat the 200,000 Afghan freedom fighters struggling to regain their independence.

A degree of dissention is emerging in the 2 million man Soviet Army, 400,000 of which have already served in Afghanistan. Although special consideration in regard to battlefield promotions is given to those who serve in Afghanistan, few have volunteered for a tour of duty in what is being increasingly viewed as an inevitable rendezvous with death.

Quoted in the Dec. 16, 1985 issue of U.S. News & World Report, one young Soviet draftee echoed the perception currently held by a growing number of his fellow recruits. "We all know how the Minsk Division was wiped out. In our barracks we figure the chances of being killed are 1 in 4."

And in that same issue, a Soviet mother expressed her concerns about how the war could impact upon her son. "It looks like my son is going to be drafted. I am sick at heart that he may be sent to Afghanistan. I am totally against it. It is one thing when your country is under attack. It is another thing when you are fighting in a foreign land."

To reverse the negative trends which have surfaced among the young men in the Soviet Union, draft regulations are being more earnestly enforced and evaders are prosecuted to the full letter of the law. Those who have deserted their posts in Afghanistan have been made examples of when they returned and have been executed, many experts believe.

On the International front, growing criticism from the Third World prompted a mid-November vote of 122 to 19 approving a Pakistani resolution introduced in the United Nations General Assembly which stated that the Soviets should withdraw their troops from Afghanistan.

Seven of the 122 nations who voted with the majority had not previously supported the concept of a Soviet withdrawal.

Campus safety assessment helpful

Rich Langberg
News Reporter

Even though there has been an apparent drop in the number of sexual assaults at UW-Stout since September, does this mean that the campus is a safer place to be? Dean of Students' Services Samuel Wood made his yearly rounds of the campus last Nov. 13, and came up with 11 areas that could be made safer with improved lighting.

SSA member Cindy Lapidakis, whose interest in the walk dates back at least to her "Safehouse" project, joined Dean Wood on his 90 minute walk around campus. Wood said he benefitted greatly from receiving Lapidakis' student viewpoint.

"I seem to have lost the perspective as a student some time ago," said Wood. "Cindy saw and pointed out things that I would have missed."

In a memo to Assistant Chancellor Wesley Sommers, Wood and Lapidakis came up with these 11 areas that could be made safer in one way or another.

•The pathway that runs up to Sixth Street between Applied Arts and the Tech Wing. In the memo, Wood acknowledged that there is some question as to the ownership of this piece of land. He said the fact that there are steps there that are used by pedestrians leads him to believe that someone should be responsible for improving the area.

•The west side of the Fieldhouse. There is a light on the south wall that Wood and Lapidakis feel should be moved to the west wall.

•The Southeast corner of North Hall bordering on Broadway.

•Wood said serious consideration should be given to placing lights on the upper level of the old Student Center. The memo defines this area as being questionable at best.

•The ramp to the southeast of the new Student Center needs a light to assist people moving in and out of the building.

•The basketball court between Hovlid and Fleming Halls is dark at night due to low lighting and high shrubbery.

•The west side of Jarvis Hall facing the Student Center has areas that are rather dark and not up to the standards of the rest of the campus.

•The lawn on the north side of Jarvis Hall has paths crossing it that are shadowed by trees and shrubbery. Wood recommended that a light be placed high up on the builing to alleviate the problem.

After Assistant Chancellor Dr. Wesley Sommers read the memo, he sent it on to the head of Stout Protective Services, Gerrold Buckley. His employees then toured the areas that Wood and Lapidakis pinpointed, and if they agree, the changes will be instituted.

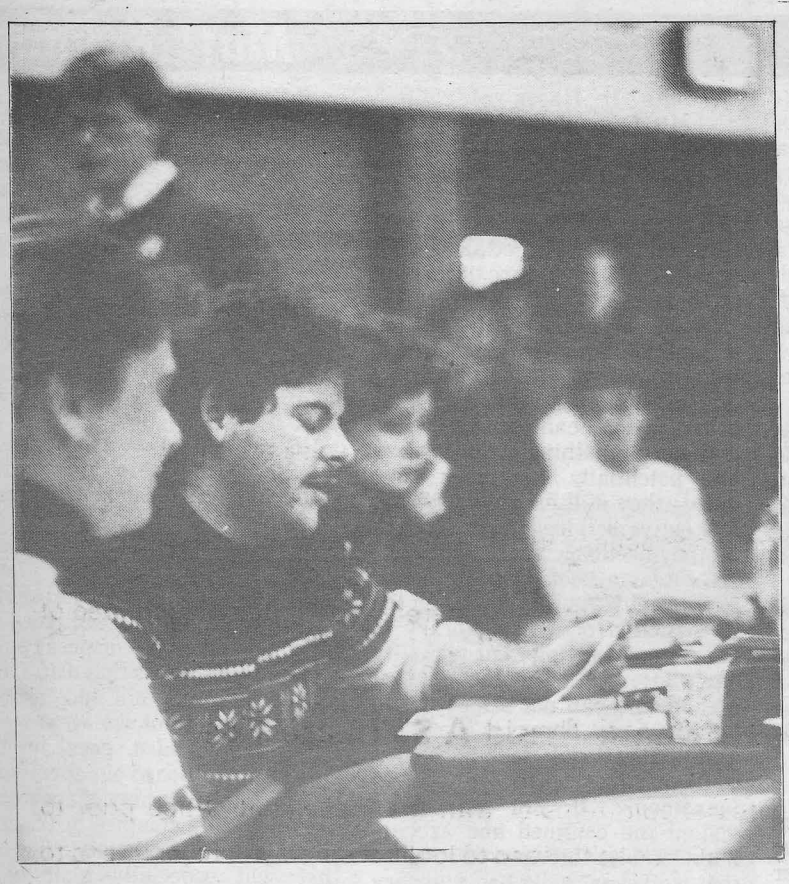
If they disagree, Wood said that he would go back and recheck the disputed areas. "It is a very subjective inspection," said Wood. "It could be a very minor adjustment that makes a difference in improving the safety of an area".

Wood said that the money for the improvements should come from the building and grounds budget. "If they are all tapped out, we would make a request from the Chancellor for some reservce funds. The changes can usually be made without too much difficulty."

Off-Campus areas, which Wood admitted can be very dangerous, don't fall under Stout's jurisdiction. It is up to the residents of an area to ask the city for any lighting improvements.

"Students could be very helpful if they would point things out," Wood said. "I can't see everything. If students would call me, drop me a line or come in and see me with their ideas, it would be greatly appreciated."

This is just one of the many areas Dean of Students Sam Wood visited along with SSA senator Cindy Lapidakis prior to making his recommendation that 11 specific areas deserve special attention in order to be made safer for student use.



SSA Senator Cindy Lapidakis looks on as Lee Michaels discusses the controversial topic of the cooperative programming account. The account sets aside $35,000 to be allocated to campus organizations choosing to cooperate in planning and producing various programs on campus next semester. All campus organizations suffered a budget cut to establish the new account.

Swanson explains new calendar, cooperative funding proposed

Todd Holman
News Reporter

Chancellor Robert Swanson spoke on the topic of the academic calendar for the '86 - '87 school year at the SSA meeting last Tuesday. The budget proposal for the upcoming spring semester was the other major topic of discussion at this meeting which featured an unusually large number of participants.

A new calendar has been discussed for numerous weeks in the past and the proposed calendar has been sent to the Wis. Board of Regents for final approval.

The calendar for the spring semester has already been changed due to the observance of the birthday of Martin Luther King Jr. It has been recognized as a Wis. holiday and all state employees and students will have off on Jan. 20. We will be ending the semester a day later on Saturday, May 17 in order to make up for the lost school day on Monday, Jan. 20.

The calendar for next fall is set so there will be one day of registration on Tuesday, Sept. 2 after Labor Day. The fall calendar concludes with the ending of evaluation week ending on Tuesday, Dec. 23.

Chancellor Swanson said, "To knock any more time out of that first semester is just educationally unsound. As it is, the first semester is about six days shorter in this new calendar than the second semester is and I felt that to move this evaluation week back to stop on Friday, eliminating those two days Monday and Tuesday, pretty soon we really would have a very inadequate school year."

There was a proposal for the new calendar to have two Saturday classes and one day of classes on a Sunday. This proposal was set by the faculty executive board. The Chancellor rejected this unacceptable and that we do not need three days of registration because of the new computerized registration system.

With the new calendar in effect the residence halls would close Dec 23 and all the residence workers would not be able to leave until Christmas Eve.

Off-Campus Senator Wesely Stead said that mast the students object to the late ending of the semester and that he feels that every one should approve of student, faculty, and administration.

The Finance Committee chaired by Tom Schwalbach announced the budget allocaitons being divided between the 23 campus organizations next semester. Budget cuts affected just about every organization on campus. Schwabach explained the budget cuts and why some groups suffered more severe cuts than others.

A motion was made to set up a program to promote cooperative efforts between campus organizations. The cooperative programming account would set aside $35,000 which could only be allocated to organizations wanting the money for special programs involving cooperative planning and production with at least one other group.

An animated discussion took place involving both SSA members and audience members concerned about how the proposed program would affect their planning and budgeting.

Organizations will have until Feb. 25, 1986 to put in their requests from the program if it is approved.

Opinions

Editorial

Cooperative programming should be implemented

One of the major responsibilities of the Stout Student Association (SSA), via their own finance committee, is to distribute the approximately $250,000 in segregated fees to qualified student organizations each year.

Yet the current finance committee, under the guidance of Vice President of Financial Affairs Tom Schwalbach, want to do more than just distribute these monies and then walk away like many of their budget-determining predecessors. They want to insure, long after they have graduated, that these funds are used to positively impact on the greatest number of their peers.

To achieve this philosophically sound goal, the finance committee has recommended that the concept of cooperative programming be implemented into the budget process. SSA funded organizations, who are similar in purpose and have programmed identical events in the past, would be required to coordinate their efforts and submit combined budgets for a portion of their funding.

Those groups affected by the proposal would have until Feb. 25 to communicate with one another as to their mutual financial needs and formulate a combined budgetary request.

Those groups and/or individuals who have voiced opposition to the proposal are against it for what we believe are somewhat dubious reasons. Some dissenters not only maintain that overlapping redundant programming does not exist, but they further argue that the first five weeks of second semester is not enough time to prepare for the proposed deadline.

Yet any funded organization that is currently in such a state of disarray, that they cannot meet with and set mutually agreed upon goals with another like-minded group in a time frame exceeding one month, should perhaps be investigated as to whether they should receive any funds in the first place.

We urge the members of the student senate to approve this measure because redundant programming does exist, thereby limiting the efficient use of our valuable segregated fees. Dissenting groups should put aside their obvious unfounded concerns and unjustified attitudinal differences.

Let us not forget why we get this money in the first place; to benefit all students and not just our respective groups.

Crash and Burn

Freakish awards for the subnormal

Matt Kalina

The grueling grinding routine of a Stout scholar mutates into a short slide of half-panicked study as we round the corner into a land of evaluation week and final exams and head for home, the end of another semester. But before bidding adieu, we should take a look at encounters of the grotesque, the peculiar and the whimsical that we witnessed during the last four months.

We experienced the alien registration process which eased problems and alleviated a myriad of bogus lines, a neon barn-like Student Center and recently a raging snow storm that forced a rare closing of school.

Considering the amount of kickshaw quirks and kinks that occurred in the last semester in the not-to-infallible universe of Stout, I deem it necessary to present the first-ever Crash and Burn Awards for first semester 1985.

Great Echo Award goes to the wacky architect who designed the first floor of the Student Center with enough reverberating materials to virtually project the faintest whisper from the SSA Office to the Pawn. The custodians pushing carts down Cobblestone Court (that's a lie that some unknown made up; it's not cobblestone, it's only brick) sound like the Northwest Express making a surprise side-trip to Stout.

Let's Computerize Everything Award must go to LLC personnel for exterminating the faithful card catalogue. Although it's "outdated" and "rigid" some of us students who don't get along with cranky ALIS still desire the ease of the old card filing system.

Pistol-Packing Award goes out to the Protective Services cowboys for promoting the sprawlingly cracked philosophy that even if an organization can get by fine without something unnecessary and potentially dangerous (like guns), they still crave it anyway. Protective Services got their guns, all they need now are horses.

Go Read a Book Award goes out to those citizens who protested the construction of a new library in Menomonie saying that the City can't afford it. The fact is that Menomonie can not afford not to have it. A new library is one of the best educational jack-in-the-box opportunities to pop up Menomonie. If you have ever visited the confined and archaic Mabel Tainter Library, you realize that we never really had a library from the beginning.

Take Back The Typewriters Award goes to the LCC personnel who eliminated the soda and snack machines in the canteen. Students can no longer relax with a Coke and some chips, but hey, we can go at it on the typewriters.

We Just Play 'Em Award goes out to WVSS for playing terribly untimely public service announcements. An example of how far ahead of the game they aren't is the fact that WVSS deejays still play a taped promo for the Booze Brothers concert that ocurred Nov. 14.

I Can't See Award goes to the University Cinema Commission for projecting their films before moviegoers seated in a sea of chairs on the flat floor of the Great Hall.

Repeat a Beat Award goes to WVSS for their laserdisc technology. Now listeners can continuously hear one single album all night long, over and over, relentlessly, persistently, hour after hour, again, again and again.

Johnny Rotten Award goes to Menomonie's waste disposal plant and its horrid odors that drift from its bowels up the hill into campus and into the downtown area.

Tax-Man Award goes to the Dunn County Board of Supervisors who hold the notoriety of becoming the third of 72 counties in Wisconsin to appprove a county sales tax that will especially slam non-property holders like students, renters and guests against a wall of tax. This new sales tax appropriately goes into effect on All Fool's Day, 1986.

Rude Holiday Award goes to the City of Menomonie for irritating potential shoppers by blaring such sacred Christmas tunes as "Joy to the World" out of scratchy-sounding loudspeakers downtown.

Academic assistance provided by ASPIRE

Many, if not all students can use a little extra assistance, especially in their first semesters in a new school. We've found that the most successful students are the ones who recognize their own support needs and ask for assistanceearly in the semester.

Guest

Project ASPIRE is a federally funded special services program designed to enhance the academic success, retention, career planning and eventual graduation of selected students. ASPIRE has some fine services to offer Stout students. Included are the following:

Assistance is available to improve written communication skills. Students may, but need not be, enrolled in an English class to receive help from the writing consultants in 1:1 and/or small group settings. English Department and ASPIRE cooperatively sponsor the Technical Communications Resource Center (Writing Lab) where personal computers are available for student use.

Volunteer tutors are available through the Academic Skills Center. A coordinator for tutoring works closely with students and tutors to provide effective 1 on 1 assistance in almost any subject area.

Assistance is provided for disabled persons with special individual needs through the Director of Services for students with disabilities. There are many concerns that may arise requiring a solution in order to help the student function in the campus environment. These services may include, but are not limited to, the following: assistance with registration, new student orientation for disabled students, referral to campus and community services, validation for disabled parking,a key for elevators, textbooks on tape and general problem solving.

Individual one-to-one counseling and advisement is provided primarily for those who may be experiencing academic difficulty. Contracts, grade evaluations, along with other supportive techniques are utilized to assist students in attaining full academic potential. In addition, ASPIRE has a very special "follow along" service for those students on academic probation.

Students, faculty and staff who are interested in learning more about Project ASPIRE and/or participating in the program should contact an ASPIRE staff member at 128 Bowman Hall or call on extension 2995 or 2996.

Class insults intelligence

It seldom happens that a group of students, let alone graduate students, unite to form an affirmative action group against the University in regards to a poorly constructed course. However, there is a course entitled "Research Foundations" in which the finest minds on this University have been insulted. This course has demonstrated through its grading structure that they want their graduate students to think on the lowest possible form of learning--recall. This course is a direct contradiction with the standard this University professes to possess. This is demonstrated through the lack of conformity in grading structure, course objectives and methods implemented by the revolving door policy of each professor who has appeared before each class. And this University claims its Masters Degree is a higher form of education.

The lack of commitment of any one person has clearly demonstrated through examples including: an instructor who lectured from another instructor's notes; an instructor who admitted that he was given only a half hour notification before appearing in front of the class; an instructor (the supposingly course coordinator, instructor on record, and dean of the school) who arrives to class 20 minutes late; an instructor who read his entire lecture out of the book and gave page numbers so the class could "read along"; the students who were given the task of correcting an instructor's statistical mistakes and to work on a formula which no longer appears in modern statistic texts; and the students who were lied to in a number of occassions including being told their advisors were asked to attend a class period when in fact some advisors were never contacted.

The organization of "Research Foundations" consists of a hodge podge of information which is out of logical sequence. Can you imagine a course designed to instruct research methodology in which the discussion of topic selection is one of the last items discussed in the course while the data analysis techniques were discussed at the beginning of class in September!

Clearly the University does not consider students' educational growth an important aspect in achieving a higher education. This is demonstrated by the fact that not one administrative body cared to visit the class.

This editorial is the last chance to get our voices heard after going through the "right" chain of commands. The participating indivduals representing the University have bought time, put us on hold, in hopes that the class will end and all will be forgotten. It will never be in the minds and hearts of approximately 100 graduate student who have taken this four credit, 700-level class as a requirement.

When we, the students, must defend the truth and listen to only excuses. We are sickened. This University has demonstrated its incompetence and inability to provide highly academically motivated individuals with the education they paid and deserve. The adminstrative solution is to shuffle this matter under the rug and refuse to recognize its own failure. Instead of academic leadership we have been treated with the Machiavellian approach to indiviual submissiveness and group control.

Lack of respect, dignity demonstrated by Langberg

I'm sorry, but I just cannot let this one pass by! I would like to address this editorial opinion to Rich Langberg's last column, "That's All Folks" of the December 5th issue of the Stoutonia. First of all Rich, congratulations on your graduation. Secondly, I really feel sorry for you in many ways. I guess the thing that really made me cringe in your last editorial column was the lack of appreciation you have shown for Stout as an educational institutional and for your lack of appreciation for the fine instructors here at Stout. I can only hope that you will treat your future employers with more respect and dignity than you have shown for your past instructors. In fact, I pray that you will treat your future employers and peers with the utmost respect so that you don't jeopardize Stout's excellent reputation which so many administrators and past graduates have worked so hard for and maintained.

It also seems obvious that you haven't taken your education very seriouly here at Stout. I would just love to hear how you rationalize spending nearly $14,000 on your education and not attending classes---it makes one wonder about the value you've placed on your total education. It's amazing too that you can only show up a handful of times to class, but always seem to show up to fill out the instructor's evaluation form. How can you truly judge an instructors ability to teach if you've never been to class--except of course a handful of times.

I was always told that what you get out of something is dependent upon how much you put into it. As this is my first semester here at Stout I have gained many valuable things from the courses I have taken, which include Front Office Management and Hospitality Housekeeping. For instance, in Front Office I have been able to identify the components of the hotel front office and have been able to distinguish their relation-

I'm in favor of it because it proves whether or not you have blown off all your classes. It tells what grade you really should have. I think its good also because it provides people with a good opportunity to improve their grade.

Tama Dales,
Sophomore,
Graphic Design

It's a problem because it's keeping me here; instead, I want to go home. I'm an art major so I have only two classes where I have finals. I have to stay till the end of the week to take those, whereas last year I could leave earlier in the beginning of the week.

Ley Tey,
Senior,
Business Administration

Last semester was so very different. We had to go to classes and take final tests which was tough for me. Evaluation week provides time to study for the final tests.

Kathy Dorf,
Junior,
Pyschology

I prefer to have an evaluation week. It gives you more time to study rather than having everything due at the same time. If you have papers due, you're going to school all day long during your regular classes and then they [teachers] throw tests, there's not enough time.

Eric Galles,
Senior,
Applied Math

A lot of my teachers are not doing anything different than they did before. I don't have any teachers that are adding a final this year just because it is evaluation week. I don't think it is a good idea personally because it takes away an extra week.

ship to the guest cycle as well as learning how to perform transactional posting of the front office machines. I could go on with scores of valuable inforamiton which I have retained from only my first semester here at Stout. How can this be worthless?

I, myself, feel priviledged to be able to attend this university and to take advantage of the many opportunities it has to offer its students. I am also working hard to make the most of this opportunity during my educational career as I am sure so are many other students. I am sorry to say, but I just don't believe that you have truly graduated from Stout, Rich.

Well, it's time for me to say good-bye. Good-bye Rich--and that's my final word!
Annlyn Haasch

Langberg waited too long

This article may be considered a rebuttal to the recent column done by Rich Langberg, the happily graduating senior in Hotel and Restaurant Management. I commend Rich on some of his suggestions for improving important campus events like graduation. But any student, especially a senior, can reflect long enough to come up with opinions on possible changes. This question is, what have you done about it Rich? Seniors have had four years to take action on some of these unfavorable situations or "barbs" Rich would call them.

There are many places to go where people will listen and take action to student complaints. Even a senior must not forget that the faculty is here for improving student learning,but they need student input from people like Rich. There may be a valid reason for cutting the sale of beer at the Student Union during concerts. Has anyone stopped in the SSA office lately to find out why? If seniors, like Rich, are so concerned about some Hotel and Restaurant classes, why has it taken them three years to mention the problems? Can those seniors leave Stout knowing that they have sat back for three years and listened to fellow students complain, when they should have taken some action?

As the Dean's Student Advisory Representative for Hotel and Restaurant Management, I have not seen Rich at any meeting with helpful input for the dean or the committee. Rich, how are the teachers to know that they are not doing their job if you don't take some fast action? Students should communicate with their teachers on teaching skills and methods of improvement. I know that the Chancellor, as well as the Dean, feel student feedback on faculty is vital.

Finally, graduating seniors like Rich should have learned through Stout the valuable tool of communication. Our student body is quick to come up with complaints about the system but fails to take actions in making positive imporvements. All students, especially seniors, must communicate with student organizations and faculty on improving classes within the programs and not waste their four years at Stout complaining about them.

And, that is my final word for now.
Sue Guenther

Langberg won't be missed

To Rich Langberg--

I sure hope you pass Maintenance Mgmt. because if you don't, you won't graduate. This is one of my favorite classes because of the overhead. As a student, I find it much easier to follow along and get perfect notes to study from and refer to later in life. I also find the material helpful in life. A few days after talking about contracts, at home in Mpls., I was able to secure a building contractor. I was able to discuss septic problems with the city inspector. Dr. Runal's examples about plumbing in Dunkirk or Japan, and maintenance techniques in Taiwan are interesting.

As for sanitation, I went everyday and learned about microbiology, storage techniques, and city ordinances that were also very useful. For one who believes that attendance isn't very important, you may find out that nobody cares if you're absent at the graduation ceremonies in December.
Elihu B. W. Wear

Langberg deserves credit

In reference to the article Dec. 5, 1985 "That's All Folks". The article points out a number of fine programs on campus that go unnoticed. This includes the University Speaker Series which brings into light national subjects and speakers that would otherwise be blocked for the school and everyone involved. This program keeps the University and Industry in close contact, which is a major philosophy at this university. These programs should continue to grow and hopefully will be taken advantage of by future students.

In regards to the critical part of the article, we would have to agree with Mr. Langberg on these points. We have just completed four years of study in the H & R program and have experienced all of these courses. We know the intentions of these are good, but the end product is weak at best. These courses and methods of instruction have always been a humorous topic among H & R students. We respect an individual who can bring these quiet, supported views to public attention. It is unfortunate that a respected journalist of this quality has to be plagued with obsenities by these a fore'mentioned instructors.

If these statements were not relevant would there be such defensiveness and criticism?

Respectfully, we shall remain anonymous.

Students steal trees; wreak havoc in downtown

I am a Stout alumnus and have been proud of the education I received at Stout. In my occupation as a preschool educator, I hired Stout graduates and students whenever possible. I am now a Menomonie business owner. I loan several hundred dollars of merchandise to students to learn the art of displaying merchandise.

I now find my affectionate and generous feeling toward the University students changing. I am saddened to think I am being forced to recognize that Stout students are not as wonderful as addition to this community as my idealistic self as publicly upheld.

Throughout the Fall I have noted several incidents that demonstrate a lack of respect for the property of Menomonie business. This summer our downtown was made more pleasant and enjoyable by the addition of flower barrels up and down Main Street. The flowers remained beautiful all summer. Within 3 weeks of your return, the flowers were cans. Later this Fall there were 3 windows broken (Lee's Drug, Butterfly Exchange and Goodrich Furniture). Now the Christmas season is upon us. Nearly every business in downtown Menomonie bought a Christmas tree, only 2 or 3 of them will be putting them outside--having learned last year to expect them to be stolen. I decided not to listen to the conventional wisdom, I chose to trust in the goodness of the public.I did take precautions-I spent an entire day adding water to the 2 pots that contained my tree in attempt to freeze it so solidly that it could not be stolen. It did not work. I left the store at 8 p.m. and returned at 11:30 p.m. to discover my tree had already been taken.

I realize that the majority of students are not thieves and vandals; I also realize that you support Menomonie businesses with you purchases. However, you also know the people who walked in the flower pots, broke the windows, and stole the Christmas trees. You are as guilty as they are if you do not attempt to change their behavior by example, peer pressure, and yes, turning them in to the proper authorities when they have committed a crime.

You are guest in this town. The people who live here would appreciate your behaving in a manner that, at the least, reflected common courtesy and respect.

Typers rival Tap triple

It was a Tuesday night, All-Star Wrestling was on the tube, and I had a good deal of homework to wade through. Now there's nothing I enjoy more than watching Rowdy Roddy Piper kick the crap out of somebody, but if I stayed around the house that's exactly what I would end up watching and that's not a very good excuse for flunking a Calculus test. Besides, it's often kind of noisy and distracting in our house anyway. So, in order to let Rolle's Theorem and higher order derivatives really sink in, I decided to go to the library. Specifically, I went to the "canteen" on the second floor, simply because I enjoy a cold can of soda while I'm studying and the caffeine does a nice job of helping me stay alert. But alas, much to my dismay and disappointment, not only had somebody removed the vending machines, but they had replaced them with several typewriters.

Now, don't get me wrong, I think that typewriter availability for students is a great thing, but let's face it, they are awfully loud. In fact, it sounded much more like a Friday edition of triple at the Tap than a library . Maybe I'm wrong, but wouldn't it make more sense to put the typewriters in one of the individual study rooms so the noise wouldn't distract the other students? Then, even if they couldn't replace the vending machines, at least bleary eyed folks like myself could bring our own soda or coffee in to help us through those three or four hour bouts with our most difficult subjects. At least let's give the idea some serious consideration.

Kaufman objects to toxic waste; fears U.S. will reap what she sows

Maria Wagner
News Reporter

Hugh Kaufman of the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) spoke on "The Great Toxic Waste Scandal" in the Crystal Ballroom of the Memorial Student Center Wednesday evening Dec. 4.

The ballroom was filled with interested audience members who were introduced to Kaufman by Dr. Frances Garb of the Biology Department saying, "Every generation leaves the world a little better than they found it and a little worse than they found it. Our generation is certainly no different from any other." Garb referred to the EPA as one of the ways in which our generation will leave the world better than we found it.

Hugh Kaufman

Kaufman joined the EPA in its inception in 1971 and in 1973 helped develop and expand EPA's solid and hazardous waste management program. He was also the agency's chief investigator for hazardous waste contamination cases for five years. Presently, Kaufman is Assistant to the Director of EPA's Hazardous Site Control Division in Washington, D.C.

Kaufman was also instrumental in the writing of the SUPERFUND Act which was designed to discover, investigate and remedy hazardous material catastrophes in the United States. Kaufman told those in attendance that presently there are three clean-up sites in Wisconsin. There are 786 SUPERFUND Sites throughout the U.S.

Within the past year, Kaufman has received national attention for "blowing the whistle" on EPA top management's efforts to sabotage the country's environmental protection laws. Due to this disclosure, several of his superiors were fired. Rita Lavelle was imprisoned six months for a perjury conviction in relation to the case.

Kaufman speech concerned the drastic affect of toxic wastes and hazardous materials on the environment. He presented a 35 minute British film on the issue of hazardous waste in America after which he held a question and answer period.

The film dealt with the comments from people who have been affected or are presently being affected by the problem of hazardous waste in different forms of contamination. Drinking water contamination in New Jersey was the focus of this film.

The film, Poison in the System states that in New Jersey 24 million tons of waste are thrown away every year. The narrator said "Part is industrial waste of which most is foul smelling or poisonous...it's burnt, buried or dumped; quietly, almost invisibly."

Explaining the meaning of these implications, Kaufman states in the film,"It may be possible to manufacture a product a little bit cheaper by throwing toxic waste on someone else's backyard. If done, more money is made so long as the persons whose yard the waste is dumped in can't come back and make the manufacturer pay the full cost of the problems created."

Highlighted in the film were various areas of New Jersey that are being affected by toxic waste contamination. Different personal cases were presented displaying sick children and discussing the different detrimental results of contamination as well as the difficulty of correcting the problems with the company disposing of the materials causing contamination.

During the film, Kaufman explained that the fines against people breaking the toxic waste laws are between1-10%of the amount of money these companies have saved or earned by committing these illegal acts. Illegal acts will continue to be promoted unless the companies are fined at least the amount of money they have saved and earned.

"The United States hasn't yet solved the problem [of toxic waste]," said Kaufman, "but we are moving towards a solution of the problem. SUPERFUND is one of these things that is helping us move in this direction."

Class survey addresses spending of domestic and foreign students

Tim Hopkins
News Editor

After interviewing a cross section of the student population at UW-Stout last November, the fall '85 Marketing and Research class has projected that students spend an excess of $20 million during the nine month school year, excluding tuition.

The survey also established a startling contrast between the spending habits of domestic students and foreign students. The average foreign student spends $7,309 per year excluding tuition while the average American student spends $2,624 excluding tuition.

A stark contrast was brought out in spending habits by the fact that the average foreign student made 93.8 percent or the vast majority of his expenditures in town while the average American student made only 56.7 percent of his expenditures in the Menomonie community.

The remaining expenditures in both cases were made at the Memorial Student Center indicating that the Student Center does a much better job of meeting the needs of American students than those of foreign students.

The survey identified how much students spend for certain items, where they spend it and why. The items of rent and groceries shared the distinction of being the number one and two priority items on American and foreign students' budgets.

Interestingly, the third priority in the foreign student's budget was car purchases. The item of car purchases didn't even show up on the priority spending list belonging to American students.

The third item on the American student's spending list was what they paid in order to eat out. The average American student spends 12 percent of his budget on eating out.

The average American student displayed a definite proclivity for spending a significant part of his budget on drinking with 10 cents of every dollar spent set aside for drinking in bars. For whatever reason, drinking in bars was not a priority item for foreign students.

Friends and relatives of students bring nearly $2.3 million into Menomonie as result of their visiting their student friends. Not surprisingly, two-thirds of the money spent by relatives is spent by the relatives of freshmen and sophomores.

The conclusion can be made from this survey that juniors at Stout are the ones who most need to be visited by friends having loose purse strings. A disproportionately low 12.7 percent of the $2.3 million spent in Menomonie by the friends and relatives visiting Stout students is spent by the friends and relatives of juniors.

Concern for Colombia continues to build

Barb Caron
News Reporter

It has only been two weeks since the volcano known as Nevado del Ruiz errupted near Bogota Colombia killing 25,000 persons. Upon erupting the volcano started a steaming avalanche of mud and grey ash a mile wide. Over 10,000 are still missing with many believed to be dead in the aftermath. The erruption of Nevado del Ruiz was one of the deadliest volcanic erruptions in all of recorded history.

The whole world has been responding to Colombia's plight. In the U.S. public and private disaster relief has reached upwards of one million dollars. These monies will be used to face the many problems rescue workers are dealing with. These problems include not having the right medicine, lack of food, clothing, and the spreading of infection.

On Tuesday December 3rd a motion was made at the UW-Stout Student Senate meeting stating that the Stout Student Association (SSA) sponsor a drive to collect money for the survivors of the volcanic erruption in Colombia.

According to United Council Director, and organizer of the Colombian relief drive, Dave Kester, "We (SSA) got involved with the Colombian relief drive because it was a concern brought to the SSA by the Colombian students here at Stout. After looking into it we felt it was justified so we brought a motion onto the floor at student senate which passed by unanimous consent."

The drive is being sponsored by SSA with the University Programming Board (UPB), and the residence halls also taking part.

"Containers and an information sheet were placed at the front desk of every residence hall. We also had a booth set up in the Cobblestone Court in the Student Center. UPB is also donating half of the money they raise from their pictures with Santa." Kester said.

> People were more than willing to contribute whatever change they had.
> Dave Kestel
> United Council Director

According to Kester a goal of $200.00 was set for the drive which ran from Wed. Dec. 4th to Tues. Dec. 10th. A total of $205.00 was collected by the drive.

"People were more than willing to contribute whatever change they had. It is a worthy cause and it played on peoples emotions. It hit people where it counts." Kester said.

The money raised will be given to the Menomonie Red Cross who will send it to the Red Cross in New York who will then send it to the Red Cross in Colombia where it will be used to help the surviving victims.

HKMC invests time and money toward sponsorship of African child

Tim Hopkins
News Editor

A cooperative effort between HKMC's hall director and hall residents, plus the hall council's support, has resulted in HKMC residents sponsoring a child through the Christian Children's Fund.

The group of interested students, HKMC for Africa, took their inspiration from Hall Director Leo Johnson according to senior Scott Sherman. Sherman is just one of six HKMC for Africa members who have invested both their time and money toward promoting the sponsorship of 11 year-old Aquintoufel Bassoba, Aggie, of Togo.

Rounding out the HKMC for Africa group are freshmen Todd Harvey, Andre Lyon and Jacalyn Tenney, junior Laura Lambourn and seniors Kim Meade and John Smith.

Sherman said, "We sat down with Leo and we went over what we had to do, what was expected of us. Then we went ahead with it and brought it to hall council."

According to Johnson, HKMC for Africa made the following proposal to the hall council. "We'd like to raise the money ourselves. And then, in the case that we would come up short or in a summer month or something, would we have that financial backing? And they said, Sure."

Leo Johnson and HKMC for Africa members agree that the whole experience has been a positive one for the hall. "There's been a lot of enthusiasm about it. Everybody's been involved in it on the floors," Sherman said. He wanted to emphasize that, "It's just not this group that does all the fund raising. It's the whole hall."

Johnson is especially pleased the way the whole project has brought the hall together. "It's bringing a lot of people out who in other times wouldn't be involved," Johnson said. "It's made HKMC much closer together. That's the important thing that we're getting out of it. We hope to continue that," Johnson said.

While unifying hall members on a single project, the sponsorship has helped expand the consciousness of many students about world problems. Lyon expressed the common impact the project is having on everyone. "To us, $18 isn't that much. But, when they explain everything that $18 is going to do for her and her community, it's surprising."

Johnson stressed the way the HKMC in Africa project has helped students expand their interests to include current world crises. Concerning the project's direct affect on HKMC residents, he said "They're actually getting involved and it's making the people conscious of more than just what's going on here on campus. There are some areas where there is strife."

Tenney doesn't see any problem raising the $18 per month required for sponsorship. "The first month we hadn't even started fund raising. Andre (Lyon) and I just wanted to see how much money we could collect off the girls on our floor just to bring into the next meeting. We collected the whole $18."

To help assure that HKMC reaches its $18 goal each month a brother and sister floor have been assigned to raise the money for each month of the academic year. If the floors raise more than is needed for their month the money is placed in a special fund to help pay for sponsorship during the summer months.

To the question of whether HKMC might sponsor another student, Johnson said, "If the interest grows and the funds become available, that would be great. Right now, we're just happy to really help out one individual."

At this point, Johnson wanted to stress that they were concerned with establishing this single sponsorship as a successful tradition at HKMC. HKMC residents eagerly anticipate Aggie's first letter responding to a letter they sent her. They said they will be interested to learn what Aggie thinks of Wisconsin winters.

Sherman reviewed the benefits to everyone involved in the project. He concluded that, "It's rewarding for us and we know that we're doing something that no other organization on campus has done yet." He urged other organizations on campus to become involved in similar projects.

Its finally that time of the year for all you graduates. It's time for packing up and moving out, the latter being of most importance. However, if you plan on attaining your security deposit you'll want to consider taking the time to do a few of the necessary steps.

1. First dig out your lease and reread it. Find out just what you're responsible for. If you have any questions call your landlord. Also, look over the check-in list you retained. If you don't have a copy your landlord should.
NOTE: The security deposit is intended to cover the landlord's losses when the tenant has: A) Damaged the apartment by deliberate or negligent action or omissions; B) Vacated the building still owing utility bills or rent.

The security deposit is not meant to cover normal wear and tear. This is included in part of the landlord's cost. If the tenant has left the building in the same condition as it was upon moving in and owes no rent money, the tenant is due the entire security deposit.

2. After you have packed and removed your belongings, its time to clean.
NOTE: If you are the only one in your house moving out before spring, you still remain responsible for you share of cleaning.

3. When all cleaning is complete and you're ready to leave:
A) Write your name and forwarding address on a slip of paper.
B) Remove you house key from your key ring.
C) Place both of these items in an envelope to give to your landlord.
D) Inform your landlord you would like a check-out inspection (acquire a form at SSA office or from your landlord). Make sure you are along for this check. If your landlord can't make this inspection make it yourself, it is always valuable to have a witness inspect the apartment with you and sign the checkout form. You may even want to take photographs if you feel there might be problems getting your deposit back. Include on the list your forwarding address and a request for your security deposit. Give it to your landlord personally, or mail it certified mail, keeping a copy for yourself.

The landlord then has 21 days to either return your deposit in full or provide the tenant with a written itemized statement explaining the deductions from the deposit. The landlord must return the remainder of the deposit along with the receipt estimates for work done. The 21 day period begins once the tenant has terminated the tenancy by moving out and returning the keys to the landlord. If the landlord has not followed these rules, he or she forfeits all rights to keep any amount of the deposit.

International studies offers opportunities for educational endeavors around the globe

Catherine A. Schneider
News Reporter

Bored with the same old day-to-day routine? Looking for adventure? Or, perhaps, interested in improving your opportunities for an achieving an exciting career?

Then look into the International Studies Program. The program, which is directed by Dr. John B. Stevenson, sends students to Wales, Japan, London, along with a myriad of other international destinations.

There are two major kinds of programs open to students. The first of these is the student exchange program. Students attending the Northeast Wales Institute of Higher Education and the Kansai Gaidai University in Japan are enrolled in this type of program. In a student exchange, the student actually trades places with a student from that school.

The other type of program currently available is to students is the "Study Abroad" program like the one at the Middlesex Polytech University in London.

Stevenson said that any time after the freshman year is a good time to start looking into the programs is that students wait until they are too far into their degrees. Sometimes they will have to extend the time needed to get their degree." He also said that most of the classes taken abroad will fall into the liberal arts or elective categories.

One of the major advantages of the program is the students personal growth and development, commented Stevenson. He felt that the experience was a tremendous asset in one's credentials for seeking employment. He also felt that travel was a big plus, saying "Students are able to see how the rest of the world lives".

Stevenson said that other programs were available for study abroad outside of the International Study Program. The London School of Fashion is one example.

Pat Kohlin, a junior in Industrial Design, will be studying in Wales next semester. He said he "kind of stumbled into the program" after hearing about it from his girlfriend.

He senses that the program will give him a "knowledge of foreign countries and people". He cited travel as his main reason for participating. Kohlin didn't think that the program would set him back much more than a semester.

One of the exciting developments in the program is a new study center in Great Britian. The center has just been approved by the director of international education for the West Central Wisconsin Consortion.

The center, scheduled to open next fall, will be located in Edinburgh, Scotland and will host 80-120 students from UW-Eau Claire, River Falls, La Crosse, and Stout. Approximately 20-30 students will be from Stout. The staff will consist of faculty from the four universities. Course work will center around the universities' curriculums.

The cost of attending this center will be less than $2500 per semester, including tuition, room and board, and airfare. Students will be given the option of attending for a semester or the entire year.

Students interested in attending this center or in other programs should pick up an application or see Dr. Stevenson.

Forensic department sponsors tourney

Chuck Keller
News Reporter

What was all the discussion about at UW-Stout last Friday and Saturday, Dec. 6 and 7? No, it wasn't a political debate, but part of a nation-wide forensic tournament.

Stout's forensic department sponsored a tournament that included colleges from as nearby as Wisconsin and Minnesota and from as far away as Texas and Colorado. Colleges that traveled from far away to participate in the tournament included Texas Southern University, the Air Force Academy, and Hastings College of Nebraska.

More than 200 contestants from 21 colleges made 527 entries in a wide variety of events. A person is allowed to enter in more than one event. Pentathalon participants enter five events, including one which features presentations of original works. Other possible events to choose from include impromptu speaking, informative speaking, prose interpretation, and reader's theater.

Each contestant competes three times against three different groups with three different judges. The top six enter the finals on the next day and are scored again by three different judges. These finalists are ranked 1-6 by the judges and are given quality points from 1-25, 25 being the best.

The top five teams were: first, UW-Madison; second, UW-Eau Claire; third, Mankato State; fourth, University of Minnesota; and fifth, Winona State.

UW-Stout didn't compete in the tournament because the students themselves were in charge of setting up the tournament here at Stout. According Forensics Coach Mike Nicolai, "It wasn't fair for the students to try to concentrate on the events while trying to set up the tournament. It just takes too much time to try to do both."

Nicolai went on to say the team did a "yeoman's job" of preparation. The criteria he used to assess their performance involved how little work he ended up having to do and how few problems there were. In both cases he said the students did an "excellent job."

"Competitively, we are starting with a new squad," stated Nicolai. "Our most veteran competitor is a sophomore, the majority are freshmen. In competitions where we compete against mostly first-year teams we do very well."

Nicolai stresses learning and personal satisfaction instead of winning on this team. He said "trophies are nice, but college is a time for learning. We like throwing our people into the deep end of the pool and letting them splash around for a while. College is the best time to fail, because the stakes are less. College allows us to repeat and correct our mistakes where life doesn't always allow us to."

"Everything ran very smoothly, and considering the size of the tournament that was quite an achievement" exclaimed club president Paul Peltier. "Contestants from other schools complimented us on how well organized things were run. I feel that is a feather in our cap."

Peltier also stated that this is a rebuilding year for the Stout forensic squad. Next semester, he sees the Stout forensic team as one which "will go out there and get some trophies."

Regent

strong membership by the student regent on the Board of Regents offers great rewards according to Prange. She said, "With this formal voice, hopefully we'll have a more active voice too. He can participate on all the issues and they'll be receiving all the information directly from the regents. That will help information flow between the regents and the universities, hopefully."

A greater understanding for what it is the Board of Regents does could very well be one of the dividends resulting from the addition of the a student regent to the Board. Prange said that the United Council hopes to bring Schenian to their meetings so they can be updated on what the regents are doing. "I'm sure we'll find out a lot more about what regents are, how to work with them, how to help them help us on certain issues," Prange concluded.

Obscene caller victimizes women with mind control and persuasion

Catherine A. Schneider
News Reporter

A sincere, professional sounding voice. A knowledge of medical terms. A mind open to manipulation. These are the pieces. The finished puzzle includes mind control, self mutilation, and victimized women.

The piece that remains to be found is the unknown caller. Nicknamed "the mind rapist," the caller has been victimizing women since September of 1984, according to Chief Beety of the Menomonie Police Department. Beety said that since that time 10 more incidents believed to be involving the same caller have been reported to the Menomonie Police. There have also been related incidents in the surrounding area, including the cities of River Falls and Eau Claire.

Dale Admundson, an investigator for the Menomonie Police, said that the caller has been reported as sounding professional. Admundson estimated the age of the caller as being 30 to 35 years old.

In most cases, the caller has identified himself as a doctor. Often, he has claimed to be a blood or breast specialist. He has told his victims that their lives may depend on his instructions--instructions that have included wearing see-through clothing, t-shirts designed to expose one's nipples, and piercing one's nipples with a pin. According to the , at least two cases of women piercing their breasts have been recorded.

In other cases, he has told women that their blood tests have shown that they have a blood deficiency. The cure he offers is acute embarassment. In some instances, he has suggested that they walk in public with their breasts exposed.

His claim to be a doctor and his diagnosis are backed up by what seems to be a knowledge of the woman's medical history. Admundson said that he felt the caller probably doesn't know his victim but that he elicits the information from the victim without their realizing it.

A UW-Stout student who requested anonymity believes that she was called by this man. She received the call in early October. When he called, he asked for her by name. He told her he was a doctor and that he had just received the results of a culture. When she told him that she had not been to the doctor in over a year, he told her that this culture was a slow developing type and it had taken two years to develop. He then named the name of a doctor who sounded familiar to her.

After that, he asked her if she wore a bra every day. When she said yes, he told her that her breasts were not getting enough air. He then suggested that she get a T-shirt, cut it so her nipples would be exposed, and walk down Highway 25 to McDonalds. He told her that a nurse would meet her there.

Throughout the call the victim had the feeling that this was a prank call. However, she said that the man sounded "professional and very much like a real doctor." She said, that except for the nature of his suggestions, he wasn't rude and he remained completely serious through out the call. She said, "He makes you stop and wonder if there might really be something wrong with you."

When asked how she felt about the term "mind-rapist" versus obscene caller, she replied, "He is a rapist in a way. He is doing things to their bodies through his suggestions."

Chief Beety said, "He's an obscene caller who can persuade very normal females to do these acts. But, these acts don't constitute rape."

At the present time, the chances of capturing the caller look grim. The caller has not called a victim more than once, nor has he been tape recorded yet. Beety said, "Our chances depend on eliciting the help of victims and future victims. If someone is called they should try to get as much information from him as is possible. Ask him questions. Try to tape record him if you can."

Personal craft skills improved at center

Beth Reid
Arts Reporter

In this era of accelerating high technology there is an even greater need for personalized experiences in everyone's life. As technology removes society further from the production of goods and services, people need to become more involved in what they do at work and during leisure time. In his book Megatrends, John Naisbitt describes this "high tech-high touch" phenomenon with the statement that "the more high technology around us, the more the need for human touch."

This idea represents the rationale behind the UW-Stout Specialization in Craftsmanship and the Center for Craftsmanship. The Specialization in Craftsmanship is a type of educational minor. It is designed to provide beginning and advanced artisans (craftsmen), in a variety of craft areas, with the opportunity to improve their craft skills, knowledge and aesthetic sensitivity, and business skills. "This type of program provides self-fulfillment," Jim Bjornerud, director of the Center said. "We think of crafts as a highly skilled specialty and a way for people to express themselves freely."

The student's learning experiences are designed to meet their own interests. Students set up an individual program under the guidance of a faculty member and possibly a practicing professional artisan. Extensive coursework in ceramics, textiles, metals and wood is now offered regularly on campus and provide excellent learning facilities for students to enhance their craft skills. Other craft areas can also be served on a selective basis depending on the availability of staff and facilities.

There are alot of highly skilled people out there.
Jim Bjornerud
Director

A few of the specific aims of the program are to allow students to expand their personal craft skills, develop an increased sense of aesthetics and develop a critical understanding of one's abilities.

Coinciding with the Specialization in Craftsmanship is the Center for Craftsmanship. Established in 1984 through a grant from the University of Wisconsin-Stout Foundation, the Center's purpose is to promote high quality craftsmanship and assist regional artisans in their work. "While the Specialization is a sub-major program designed for any Stout students who want a concentration in a craft in addition to their degree," Bjornerud said, "the Center is broader. It emphasizes service to area artisans and promotion of quality craftsmanship."

One of the aims of the Center is to develop a resource file which would include potential funding sources, lists of area craftsmen, a calendar of craft workshops and seminars and indexes of history, practice and techniques of the various crafts. The Center is concerned about the ongoing loss of information, craft techniques and philosophies which were often learned and formulated through years of experience.

A program aimed at recording such information would be invaluable in terms of preserving the American heritage of crafts. "The Center is aimed at serving three vital functions," Bjornerud said, "education, research and service in the crafts. We want to help artisans in any way we can, whether it's helping him refine his skills, develop business expertise or helping him to market his product."

The Center for Craftsmanship could offer a variety of choices and assistance to a number of people. "There are a lot of highly skilled people out there," Bjornerud said, "we want to help them. The main thing they have to have is the interest. We can go from there, no matter what level they are, beginner, advanced, etc." For individuals who are excited about the possibility of working with natural materials and seeing their ideas of a useful product evolve from raw materials, the Center would offer many challenging opportunities.

For more information on the Specialization in Craftsmanship or the Center for Craftsmanship, individuals can contact Jim Bjornerud or Nancy Blake in Room 245 Tech Wing, Jarvis Hall or call 232-1102.

Stout rockers compete in CMP's first Battle of Bands

Jef Maynard
Arts Editor

Contemporary Music Productions pulled off their most challenging concert to date, five bands in less than three hours. Five collections of guitars, amps, mikes, drum kits; five short sets of five songs each had to be juggled.

The first Battle of the Bands took place in the Great Hall last Friday and over 600 rock & roll fans jammed to the front to root for their favorite local band.

Organization for the event began long ago with registration and promotional material being gathered, rules being established and sound systems being considered for hire.

The bands playing were: Blind Rhino, DCver, The Slant, Diversion and High Anxiety. By random drawing, that was the order of performance for the show.

Each band was judged on four categories: showmanship, professionalism, originality, and sound. The judges were told to range their scoring on a 1 to 25 scale in each category. In addition, 5 points was given for bands that stayed within the 20 minutes given for each band.

There were 17 judges. The judges were picked randomly by CMP president Christa Sanicola, "while I was an elf". Sanicola asked people while in the Great Hall as she worked on a Christmas promotion.

"I never knew there were so many bands at Stout. It's like they came out of the woodwork for this show," judge Denise Hoeft said. "I thought it was pretty well organized."

While most people involved agreed that the production was well organized and fun, there were complaints. These will lead to a more refined event next year according to Sanicola.

The main source of complaint was the sound system and the mixing during the performances. Most bands thought the on-stage monitors were not mixed to benefit the players. The singers, in particular had difficulty hearing themselves.

Listening to the live performances, the main speaker mix also did not sound as well as could be expected. The quality of the system was not the problem. It appeared that the tech crew was either unfamiliar or careless with the live mix.

The sound system was from the Eau Claire band Tatters. The sound crew was not a professional sound system team, but make up of tech people from Tatters and others. Several bands pointed out that the attitude of the crew was helpful with the exception of the main sound mix controller, who in the words of one player, "had an attitude, you know?" The sound system and crew also arrived nearly an hour late, which set back sound check times.

The bands were all very enthusiastic about performing especially because of the excellent features of the Great Hall stage and the facilities.

"Everything went well, with the bands being so helpful, and on time. They were all very accomodating and cooperative," Sanicola said. Backstage the various band members met the other players and talked about the sound and the audience.

The bands were all surprisingly good. Blind Rhino, who performed admirably even without their rhythm guitar, Tim Kerkes, lead the first set out with excellent drum and bass solos, by Eric Peterson and Chris Kerkes respectively.

The next band was DCver. This band had performed three previous times on the Great Hall stage. They had the liveliest stage show lead by the antics of guitarist Todd Welsch and lead singer Andy Leverns.

I never knew there were so many bands at Stout.

Denise Hoeft
Judge

The next band was The Slant. This three piece group had the cleanest and tightest sound. Their stage presence was limited, though they appeared comfortable on stage. Scott Watson had a frenzied moment at the end of their last song where he tacked a heavy dose of feedback to the garage-band classic 'Louie, Louie'.

Diversion played fourth. They have been working together since the beginning of the year in their current form. Lead singer Ted Miller appeared to be a capable front man even though this is his first band. They highlighted their set with the popular hit by Bachman-Turner Overdrive "Taking Care of Business." The audience was in overdrive too. There was some serious dancing in the middle of the crowd.

The final act of the night was High Anxiety. This talented band had a popular set chosen with the Doors' freewheeling hit "Roadhouse Blues," U-2's "Bloody Sunday," and the Steppenwolf monster milestone "Born to Wild".

Hoard ceramics

An exhibit of ceramics by Curtis Hoard, a University of Minnesota art professor, is currently on display at UW-Stout's Furlong Art Gallery.

"Hoard's ceramic work is sculptural in form rather than being in the tradition of vessel forms," Ed Wong, gallery curator said. "Hoard brings together gestural drawing, strong color and monumental shape to create work that has strong surface form as well as three-dimensional form."

The show runs through Dec.19.

Satellite communications

This week on SPECTRUM 28 Stanley E. Hubbard II of Hubbard Broadcasting will comment on the evolution of home communications and what he and his company hope to provide in the very near future.

The Direct Broadcast Satellite system (DBS) is being touted as the next major step in the evolution of communications for homes, businesses and schools. DBS uses high technology satellites that will send television and other electronic services directly to the rooftops of those who purchase the relatively inexpensive dish antennas.

Although cable television companies are not immediately threatened at this time by DBS, the day is fast approaching when they will have to reckon with the satellite system's potential for providing a wide range of inexpensive television programming.

The program, produced by the UW-Stout Teleproduction Center, will be broadcast on Friday, Dec. 13 at 9:30 p.m. and repeated Saturday, Dec.14 at 9:30 a.m.

Stout student recounts rewarding experiences in the Peace Corps

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

Have you ever considered moving to an underdeveloped nation? Phyllis Koehler, a UW-Stout student, has done just that through the challenge of the Peace Corps.

Koehler graduated in 1982 with a Bachelor of Science degree in Apparel, Textiles, Design. She has returned to Stout to acquire a Home Economics Education degree. For the past two years Koehler's place of residence was a small village in Tanzania, East Africa.

How does one choose to answer the call of the Peace Corp — "The toughest job you'll ever love?" Koehler said, "All through life I've been really interested in traveling." She looked for an organization that could take care of her traveling needs. She chose the Peace Corps and was "bound and determined" to meet its challenges.

During college Koehler did some traveling. She participated in a Soviet Seminar and an apparel and textile tour of New England.

Entering the Peace Corps, an organization of the United States government, is not easy. According to Koehler the application and selection process can take anywhere from three to six months.

After filling out the thorough application form, eight references are submitted. Medical history is carefully evaluated. Poor health facilities exist in host countries. Volunteers need to be the picture of health in order to fulfill their assignments.

Applicants are interviewed, finger printed and recommended to Washington D.C.. If selected, the organization places its volunteers in categories according to their skills.

Koehler was placed in the home economics, community extension category. Tanzania made a request for a sewing technition and that is where Koehler was placed.

Job descriptions are given to volunteers. Due to many variables, these descriptions are not precise. Each volunteer has to interpret the assignment and appropriately apply it to his or her situation.

An eight week training session is given to volunteers either in the United States or in the host country. During this training, Koehler learned the language, Kiswahili, and learned about the Tanzanian culture.

As a sewing technician Koehler had to teach women in her assigned area the skill of sewing. In Tanzania, clothes are expensive and usually made by tailors. Koehler began teaching the women basic hand sewing techniques. They made simple undershirts and shifts. The women then sewed much needed school shirts for children from a basic pattern.

Koehler met with groups of women once a week in the afternoon. Many times these meetings were cancelled. Women of the country are hard workers and very busy during planting season. When funerals occurred, the classes were also cancelled. The funerals can last two to three weeks.

Another set back to Koehler's mission was eyesight. Many of the women had sight problems and no glasses which could correct their vision.

The biggest frustration to Koehler's work was the lack of materials. Sewing can be difficult without thread.

Koehler had to be resourceful. Remembering her experience through the apparel, textile tour of New England, she wrote to some textile companies. Generously the companies sent her scissors, thread and bias tape. Koehler said, "I think I did accomplish something."

> I think I did accomplish something.
> Phyllis Koehler
> Peace Corps Volunteer

People of the village were receptive to Koehler and her teaching. Because she was assigned to work with the women of the society, they were very protective of her. In this male dominant culture, the men usually worked with volunteers on agricultural projects. The women were honored to have a volunteer of their own.

Tanzania is a country the size of Texas and Oklahoma combined. The terrain is similar to that of the hills of Tennessee and Kentucky. Although Koehler had to contend with invading rats, she was fortunate in her living conditions. She had electricity and lived in a goverment house.

In some parts of the country, water was available but muddy, and there was a lack of nutrition. In Koehler's area food and clean water was at hand.

Koehler ate ugali, a corn dish similar to the consistency of cold mashed potatoes. She ate lots of rice, beans, eggs, fish, nuts and bananas. She learned to stock up on food purchased at the village open market. Koehler was not a meat eater, but if she had wanted to eat chicken she would have had to purchase it live and butcher it herself.

To be a volunteer one has to be adaptable and resourceful because the work does not always go as planned. Koehler found the work attitude to be at a much slower pace than in the United States.

When classes were cancelled she went to individual homes to teach. To travel, Koehler used a motorcycle. She learned the mechanics of it in order to fix it herself. Petrol shortages were also a problem.

Riding a motorcycle is not highly promoted by the Peace Corps. Those who do must wear a helmet. Road conditions are dangerous. Koehler stated that the highest rate of death amoung volunteers is due to cycle accidents. Koehler was in an accident herself. The Peace Corps took care of all medical bills.

While on assignment the volunteers are given a living allowance to cover housing, food and a little spending money. When an assignment is completed the volunteer receives $175 for every month served. This money is for readjustment purposes.

"You have to be a survivor," said Koehler. To be a volunteer one needs certain qualities. Koehler believes these qualities are to be stable minded, sensitive, interested in travel and to have the willingness to share with others.

Gymnasts face major rebuilding task

Tom Roth
Sports Editor

After last year's eighth place finish at the NAIA National Gymnastics Championships, UW-Stout Head Coach John Zuerlein faces a major rebuilding job with this year's team before tomorrow night's season opening meet at UW-River Falls.

Preview

"This is a real rebuilding year with not many veterans returning and half of the team being freshman," Zuerlein said. "It's really tough starting all over after being so competitive on the national level for past few years."

To make things even worse for the Lady Blue Devils is the future status of two-time All-American Pam Fujioka. Fujioka's academic eligibility is uncertain for second semester at this time.

If Fujioka can not compete, school record holder in the floor exercise, Lisa Hille, will be one of the Blue Devils' early strengths in the season. Hille, senior from Fridley, Minn., set the school record in last year's conference championships with a score of 8.7.

"Lisa has assumed the leadership role this year and she is more aware of what needs to be done for her to improve," Zuerlein said.

Zuerlein believes that the floor exercises will be better this year as former Stout gymnast Terri Traczyk is working with the gymnasts in developing new routines.

Three other returning veteran gymnasts who should fill some key spots for the Lady Devils are Senior Cosmas Whitten, Junior Tammy Dennis and Sophomore Nancy Schlener. All three are all-around performers.

To date, Zuerlein sees Schlener as being the Blue Devils' most improved gymnasts even though her scores might not be real high. Another gymnast that Zuerlein has hopes of coming around is Dennis, who changed her whole bar routine.

"Tammy had to change her bar routine because the standards for scoring have changed since last year, so she had to put together a new routine if she wanted to be able to score high," Zuerlein commented. "Once she perfects the routine, it should be a good one."

Stout's new recruits this year include Patti Roenitz, Kim Nelson, Joyce Alger and Carolyn Bjerke. "This year's group of freshman do not have strong gymnastics backgrounds as some of my past freshman, but are making progress through hard work," Zuerlein said.

> I have confidence that our team will come around by the end of the year.
> John Zuerlein
> Head Coach

Zuerlein said he was disappointed that he lost out on some prized recruits from the Minneapolis-St. Paul area but has been impressed with what he has seen of Roenitz.

"If Patti [Roenitz] recovers from her knee injury fully, she could be the best, skill-wise, ever at Stout by the end of her career," Zuerlein said.

As usual, UW-Oshkosh will be favored to win their eighth consecutive WWIAC Championship with UW-La Crosse being the closest competitor.

"I'll be happy if we can finish in the top five at the conference meet," Zuerlein said. "I have confidence that our team will come around by the end of the year."

Zuerlein said he purposely did not schedule any meets early in the season because of the young team he is working with this year. "Some of the women just haven't developed some of the basic skills needed to compete at the college level yet," Zuerlein said.

After tomorrow night's triangular meet with UW-River Falls and UW-Whitewater, the Lady Devils will not be back in action until they face the powerful University of Minnesota on Jan. 14.

The Blue Devils' first home meet will be the Clare Talen Classic on Jan. 17 and 18. Some of the top teams competing in this year's classic will be Winona State, Hamline, La Crosse and River Falls. On Jan. 22 the Blue Devils will host rival UW-Eau Claire.

The Armchair Quarterback

One last look

Tom Roth

In sports terms, you could say I'm playing my last game, being traded or just plain old retiring. Oh yes, can you believe it, no more Tom Roth sports columns griping about every little thing that goes wrong in the sports world.

Unfortuanately I'm not graduating, but just taking a semester off from school to work at Walt Disney World in Orlando, Fla. through the university's co-op program.

In reflecting back over the last year and half I've worked for the Stoutonia, there's been a lot of good things happen and some not so good experiences.

Probably the most memorable story I ever wrote was the one titled "Do Blue Devils need a new football coordinator." For the few people that don't quite recall that article, I suggested that the athletic department replace present Head Football Coach Bob Kamish because of his lack of imagination on offense.

All hell broke lose when the story was released just before the football team's final game of the season as there were negative comments from both coaches and players. But as the old philosophers would say: something positive comes out of everything. I believe the story got the football team fired up as they were 1-9 going into the season finale at the Metrodome versus Northern State. The Blue Devils took their frustration out on Northern to avoid losing the most games ever in a season by a Stout football team as they nipped Northern 24-23.

How mad do people get about intramurals at Stout? They don't get mad, but furious as one intramural worker did when she called me up after I wrote a column about how unorganized intramural softball was and did she ever tell me what to with my life.

The next week I did a story about steroid use in the weight room and after talking to a number of what I thought were good sources, I came to the conclusion that less than ten percent of Stout football players were using steroids. The same day the paper came out I got one of the strangest calls from a football player. He told me that the dosage use I had printed was off and that people had lied to me. He infomed me that roughly 50-60 percent of the football players were using the drug.

I still laugh at the phone calls I got for three straight weeks last winter on Thursday afternoons after the paper came out. It was members of the gymnastics team complaining about why one certain gymnast always got her picture in the paper week after week. I would just tell them I only write the stories, not the pictures.

Earlier this year after two men's basketball recruits were charged with sexual assult of a female student I questioned the athletic departments recruiting ethics only to attract heat from coaches, athletes and instructors. Not long after the story was out, basketball coach Dwain Mintz was in touch with me and letters rolled in from others criticizing the column. But what impressed me about Mintz was that he wanted to rationally talk about the problem and not try to deny anything. He didn't just turn his back on the problems like some coaches do and just think I was another columnist blowing off hot air.

Probably the one group of athletes I have had the best experience talking with is the well mannered track members and I almost directly relate that to their coaches attitude, Steve Terry, who displays plenty of professionalism at all times.

One of the most rewarding parts of the job I've had is gaining the respect of just about every coach in the athletic department and I feel that is very important when you are dealing with the same people almost every day of the school year.

Not only has Athletic Director Warren Bowlus been more than cooperative to work with, as has most of the coaching staff.

At times there are conflicts between reporters and coaches, but with a compromise from both sides, just about everything can be worked out to suit both sides.

The time has finally come to hand the reins over to the new Stoutonia sports editor, Rochelle Buhr, who is a qualified and very creative person that should be able to benefit everyone. It's all yours Rochelle.

Who knows, if you believe in the reincarnation of sports editors, Tom Roth might be back!

Sports Quote of the Week-"They have one apparent weakness, and that's the fact they can only play five players at one time. They have more NBA first-round draft picks than some NBA teams."-Graig Littlepage, Rutgers basketball coach, after his team was beaten 114-71 by No. 1-ranked North Carolina.

Wisconsin Deer Hunting Season Extended-The Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources extended the firearms deer season nine more days in 19 units for hunters with unfilled hunter's choice or antlerless permits. The season has been extended from Saturday through Dec. 22 in 19 units, which range from St. Croix County on the West to Door County on the East.

State figures show 14,000 fewer deer were killed in the 19 areas than what game managers consider necessary to bring deer populations under control.

Terry leaves to obtain phy. ed. doctorate after 6 years of coaching

Tom Roth
Sports Editor

Doctor Steve Terry. That's right. You won't be calling UW-Stout Head Track Coach and Assistant Football Coach Steve Terry "coach" too much longer if he succeeds at obtaining his doctorate in physical education.

Terry, who has been coaching and teaching at Stout for six years, has made a major decision in his life at 28 years old to take a one year leave of absence from the university to obtain his doctorate at the University of New Mexico in Albuquerque.

"I love my job plus it's important to have because it provides financial stability down the road," Terry commented on why he's going back to school. "To advance in today's system, you need to have it."

After spending one summer school session in New Mexico last summer, the University of New Mexico offered Terry a package that is allowing him to be a teaching assistant for a full year and will exempt him from paying out-of-state tuition.

Warm weather isn't the only reason Terry picked New Mexico to obtain his doctorate. "I was really impressed with the quality of the instructors at New Mexico and the package they offered me fit into my plans better than anywhere else," Terry said.

Besides checking out the University of New Mexico's program, Terry looked into programs at the University of Oregon and the University of Tennessee.

Before coming to Stout, Terry received his bachelor degree from UW-La Crosse, where he was also a football standout, and then proceeded to earn his masters at Ball State University.

Terry firmly believes he will be back at Stout in January of 1987, but doesn't shy away from the fact that if an unpassable coaching offer comes across his desk he might not be back.

"A lot of people think I have no reason to come back because there's not much of a chance for advancement, but when I come back I will still need two years of summer school to finish up on my schooling and the job security would be here [Stout]," Terry remarked. "I would still like to win a conference track championship before I leave and the track program is very strong right know."

Stout's track program is one of Terry's major concerns right now. "I'm working very hard with Warren Bowlus to make sure the right person is hired to take over my position, with an emphasis on hiring a strong recruiter," Terry said. "Because I strongly believe I'll be back, I don't want to come back to a weak program after building the team into a conference contender.

"My biggest hurt is leaving the senior track members in their final year," Terry said. "I really enjoy working with the staff at Stout and Warren Bowlus is great to work for."

When talking about long range goals, Terry throws out a lot of different ideas, including coaching at a Division I school if the offer was right, head football coach at Stout or somewhere else, teaching or becoming an athletic director somewhere down the road. But one point that Terry does stress is that when he is 55 years old he does not want to be coaching if he doesn't want to.

"By earning my doctorate now, it wouldn't pay off right away," Terry pointed out. "I just want to prepare a path for the future."

Rochelle Buhr
Sports Reporter

It could have been billed as a contest of the Allies against the Axis powers. But instead it was a battle that pitted the number one nationally ranked Division III UW-Whitewater Warhawks against the non-ranked underdog UW-Stout Blue Devils. Whitewater used all their weapons and defeated Stout 84-70.

The Stout men's basketball team appeared on the court proudly wearing their red, white, and blue school colors, and the Whitewater Warhawks, clad in purple, invaded the Stout home turf to try and capture a win against the Blue Devil cagers.

Each team was properly equipped for the war, lining up an appropriate defense to cripple each other's offense, and honing their best shooters to bomb those balls in the target.

Head Coach for the Whitewater Warhawks was Dave Vander Meulen, who was capable of delivering a continuous staunch military look throughout the whole game. He was looking for revenge. His team was dealt two losses at the hands of those Blue Devil boys last year, and he wasn't about to let that happen again.

In contrast the head coach for Stout, Dwain Mintz, with his grandfatherly appearance, was just looking for a good ballgame that would hopefully end up in a big satisfying victory for his crew of cagers.

A sizeable crowd was on hand to view the contest, filling approximately three-quarters of the Johnson Fieldhouse.

> If we had controlled the tempo of the game, then we would have had a chance to win.
> Dwain Mintz
> Head Coach

After the opening tipoff, the game went fast. The Warhawks, with their tremendous speed and agility, ran over the Blue Devils, outscoring them 10-1 in just the first five minutes of play. They also pressed the Stout backcourt, which isn't surprising, because Mintz said, "Everyone thinks that we have weak guards."

Six minutes into the game, Brian Ellingson finally shot in the first Blue Devil field goal to help spark the Stout offense.

The first half tempo continued to be controlled by the Warhawks, only being interrupted by a nosebleed, and a sleepy shot clock resetter.

First half highlights included a steal by Blue Devil Luther Forrest, who chipped the ball in and produced two points, and a missed over-and-back call on the Blue Devils that had the whole Whitewater bench on their feet.

Mintz said that he didn't even notice that a Blue Devil had committed this violation. "We have tons of lines on the court and it really gets confusing."

All this first half excitement ended with a tally of 42-34, Whitewater.

"We had a rough start," Mintz said. "We were really tight, and we just couldn't freeze the ball."

Second half scoring surges kept the Blue Devils' hopes for a victory alive.

Stout guard, Ellingson, had the hot hand, tossing in four baskets in a row. Also, Forrest, with his Dr. J-ish style aerial tactics racked up the points for the Blue Devils.

These scoring feats by the Blue Devils raised new spirit in the team until Warhawk Duane Vance stole the ball and did an incredible turn around behind the back stuff that had the crowd awestruck and the Stout bench speechless.

The Blue Devils also had their time for stuff glory, only they couldn't quite connect. Ellingson, after an intercepted pass, strode for the basket alone attempting a dunk but couldn't muster enough energy to put it through the cup. "I would have made it if I wasn't so tired." Ellingson said, "I thought I could make it."

John Patterson almost made his attempted stuff, but he hung on the rim because of a foul and went to the free-throw line instead.

The Blue Devil tank happened to be really rolling for awhile, staying within a couple of baskets. Then Whitewater's Vance started throwing up everything and everything was going in.

The last half of the game can be characterized as a free throw shooting spree. The Blue Devils, having played physical the entire game, started to play more physical hoping to spoil the Warhawks' chances for a win.

High scorer for the Blue Devils was Forrest who added 17 points. Ellingson chipped in 16 points and Mark and John Patterson each tossed in 14 points.

For Whitewater, Duane Vance amassed a 29-point tally, and his teammate Gary Ruch tossed in 13 points.

"I was pleased that they gave a good effort, but I was not pleased by the way they played," Mintz stated. "If we had controlled the tempo of the game, then we would have had a chance to win."

On Sunday, the Stout cagers faced St. Johns and lost 52-67. Mintz said, "St. Johns was an effective team. They played just as well as Whitewater."

Last Wednesday, Dec. 4, the Blue Devils grabbed their first win, by defeating Viterbo College 77-67. Although Stout beat them by a 10-point spread, Mintz was disappointed with their play, and had the whole team run line drills in front of the opposing crowd. "We played poorly. We deserved to run," Brain Ellingson said.

The Stout men cagers now possess a record of 1-5. This Saturday they will host UW-Superior at 7:30 p.m. in Johnson Fieldhouse.

Lady cagers overpowered by Whitewater; veterans see improvement in 90-64 defeat

Rochelle Buhr
Sports Reporter

Last Saturday, the UW-Stout women's basketball team was overpowered by UW-Whitewater 90-64.

Although the opening tipoff of the game was controlled by Stout, the Whitewater women steered the game thereafter.

The Lady Devils utilized a man-to-man defense to try and keep the Lady Warhawks from hitting the boards. This strategy was almost fruitless, for the Lady Warhawks piled up the points.

The first half ended with a final score of 50-31, Whitewater.

The second half started out with the Lady Devils doing much of the same sloppy ball handling that was characteristic of their first half of play.

There were Lady Devils scrambling all over the floor trying to pick up missed passes and loose balls. "I tell the women that if there is a loose ball, then it's ours," Lynda Lee, head coach of the Stout women's basketball team, said.

Sharon Koene, who came off the bench, started up a little offensive spark when she started to connect on her outside shots. Also, Renee Kasten, the Lady Devil's center, chipped in a few points under the boards.

> We played alot better than we played against them last year....
> Lynda Lee
> Head Coach

Kasten had recently been injured with a sprained ankle and is now plagued with heat cramps. She is starting to put the points on the board, now that she is regaining her health. "It took me a few games to really start playing to my full ability," Kasten commented. "Overall I was happy with my playing."

Kasten is usually a sure bet to rack up points, so Lee said, "We try and get the ball into her as much as possible."

Kasten was high scorer for the Lady Blue Devils with 22 points. She also had 16 rebounds. Darlene Johnson also hit double figures with 14 points. Sharon Koene, playing with a broken rib, had the hot hand with the outside shots, tossing in 13 points.

"Whitewater was predicted to be number one," Lee said, "and we are predicted to finish in the basement."

"I've introduced a lot of new things to the team, so this was a transition game," Lee said. "We played a lot better than we played against them last year from what the veteran girls have told me."

Last Thursday, the Lady Devils challenged UW-River Falls and lost 64-36.

Johnson was high scorer for the Lady Devils with 12 points. Jeanne Bengston and Kasten both tossed up 8 points apiece. Kasten also hauled down 10 rebounds.

The Lady Devils will host UW-Eau Claire this Friday at 7 p.m. in the Johnson Fieldhouse.

Stout swimmers brace for Florida trip during break

Kelly Cohorst
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout swim team is spending their winter break in Florida again this year. Last year the Blue Devils proved that the Florida trip was worth the work. Both the men's and the women's teams trained extensively for the trip to Florida. They defeated a UW-Oshkosh team which had beaten them in previous conference meets. Stout gained respect with this win, and with the team effort in the meets down South. The swim team was dropping their times and they held on to their title.

This year the team spirit is at an all-time high. They are going into the meets in Florida with a no-lose attitude. The team is at their strongest of the season and they plan on being even stronger at the end of January when they start the conference meets. At this time last year they were progressing ahead of schedule but they peaked at the right time. This is the same kind of attitude that the team has this year.

Last week the swim team went to the WWIAC Relays in Whitewater. Stout women placed third in the 100-meter medley relay, with Cheryl DeBaker, Ann Branson, Wendy Heineke, Jackie Gilbert.

Fortien, DeBaker and Krupke placed fifth in the individual medley relay.

The 50-meter freestyle team of Laurie Potter, Hauskhecht, Branson and DeBaker placed fifth, just behond Oshkosh.

In the 500-meter freestyle relay, Stout's team of Weiss, Krupke and Shlimovtz came in fourth.

Potter, Fortien and Henke took 4th in the butterfly, while DeBaker, Krupke and Heineke placed third in the backstroke, just seconds behind UW-Stevens Point.

The 100-meter breaststroke left Stout in 6th place with swimmers Branson, Fortien, and Gilbert. But the swim team regained their place in the final score by placing third in the last event, the 100-meter freestyle relay, with a team of Weiss, Krupke, Heineke, and Gilbert.

The men's team did almost as well as the women's. Overall they placed fourth, trailing behind Eau Claire, who took first in all but two events. Second place was taken by Stevens Point and third by La Crosse.

Stout's 100-meter medley relay team of Jon Lerbs, Steve Kostrova, Brad Stark and Kurt Siebert started out by placing third.

In the 200-meter freestyle relay Stout took fourth with a team of Stark, Mark Kukuzke, Lerbs and Kostrova.

Stout placed fourth in the 100-meter individual medley just behind their toughest competitors, Eau Claire and Stevens Point, with a team of Kukuzke, Lerbs and Terry O'Reilly.

The 50-meter freestyle relay came in fourth with team members of Siebert, Eric Keimitz, Kostrova and Stark.

Stout also placed first in the 100-meter backstroke and second in the 100-meter freestyle.

SEASON'S Greetings

International youth gala

Barb Caron
News Reporter

Christmas may still be 13 days away but for 50 children it came early this year. This past Sunday in the Crystal Ballroom of the Student Center a Christmas party was given for the children of the international students here at Stout.

The party was a joint effort of two groups. Six members from one of Mike Nicolai's discussion class sections came up with the idea of having this party last September. Everyone in each of Nicolai's sections was put into groups of 5-6 members. Each group was required to do either a community service project or a presentation in class relating to group discussion.

Explained one member, "We agreed to do this Christmas party project back in September so we would have a lot of time to get together and plan this project."

The other group participating was the Menomonie Association for the Education of Young Children (MAEYC). Explained MAEYC member Sheila Lauer, senior in Early Childhood Education, "The theme for the MAEYC this year is to find out more about the international children and the education of them."

"We had been planning to have some sort of Christmas party for the children of international students ourselves and when we heard there was already a party planned we joined up with Nicolai's discussion group to help them out and make it a bigger and better one." Lauer said.

Discussion group member Paul Nelson said, "Respecting the fact that people from other nations may or may not practice different religious beliefs, we felt we could put the party on in such a way so as not to offend anyone."

"We thought it would be nice for them to experience a little bit of our culture and get together and interact. Because many do have families we weren't sure to what extent they would have a celebration of their own." Nelson said.

The party was held from 2 p.m.to 5 p.m. with many different events for the children to participate in. Christmas songs, group games, puppeteers, clowns, and a visit from Santa Claus were some of the festivities the children participated in during the course of the party. Each child received a gift and candy which were donated by area businesses. The majority of the refreshments were provided by the two groups throwing the party with the cost coming out of their own pockets.

Those who participated in the party felt it was a huge success and would like to see this party become an annual event.

"I would like to see this event continue. I personally had a lot of fun and I think the children had a good time. It was nice to show these children how we celebrate Christmas." Lauer said.

"We hope that another group on campus will contact the MAEYC and explore the possibilities of making this an annual event because of the obvious advantages it offers to all people." Nelson said.

Casablanca grows more legendary as time passes and like all legends, it remains inscrutable and certainly inimitable. Tuition increase to hit UW-System

Catherine A. Schneider
News Reporter

If proposed budget cuts requested by Governor Anthony Earl are approved by the state legislature, University of Wisonsin students will be facing hefty tuition increases. At the four year campuses, an additional increase of $66 would be added to the $126 increase which had been previously planned.

The increase in tuition is a result of Governor Earl's plan to cut the state budget by approximately $53 million for the remainder of the current biennium in an attempt to cope with a projected shortfall of revenue. Earl is asking the UW-System to absorb 54.7 percent of those cuts, a total of nearly $27.4 million.

To meet these cuts, the UW-System has proposed to do three things. The first of these is a tuition increase of 9.4 million dollars. This would result in an increase averaging $70 per student, above and beyond yearly tuition increases.

Next, the UW-System has proposed to reduce enrollment. Coupled with this would be a reduction in the number of faculty positions and class offerings. Students would find it harder to obtain needed classes, thereby increasing the already lengthy stay to an average 5 1/2 years.

Finally, the plan proposes a restriction on services, ranging from decreased library hours, slower processing of financial aids, less counseling services, less maintenance of buildings, and other student services.

With the cuts in instruction, library and resources, and student services, as well as an increased tuition, students are being asked to take the brunt of the cuts, totaling nearly $15.7 million. This would represent 57.18 percent of the total UW-System cuts and 29 percent of the state's cuts.

Areas of shared impact, which include research, extension and public services, teaching hospitals, farm operations, auxillary enterprises, physical plants, and utilities, would total 8 million. Cuts for administration would add another $3.6 million.

At UW-Stout, cuts would total $103,000 this year and $546,000 in the 86-87 school year. Chancellor Robert Swanson has said that a reduction of enrollment by nearly 200 students and cuts in support services are also possibilities.

These proposals have already been approved by the UW-System Board of Regents. John Schenian, the student representative, said that he voted for it because he felt it was the only solution.

At Monday's United Council of UW Student Governments press release, President Jo Anna Richards said, "Students are being asked to accept less for more. Two thirds ofthe UW-System cuts and one third of the total budget cuts are being absorbed solely by the students."

Richards felt that increasing the tuition was a poor solution to the state's financial distress. She also noted that studies have shown that lowering tuition increases the number of students going on to college. She stated that access is limited by a higher tuition and that in many cases parents are not able to help the student, as is often assumed.

The United Council offered several suggestions as an alternative to the UW-System's proposals. Consolidation of admissions, better control of mileage and telephone costs, a reduction of faculty sabbaticals, requiring faculty members to teach 1 extra course per year, and even a reduction in heat was among the suggestions. Richards said, "We'd rather stay in school with a sweater on than to not be able to go at all."

Jo Ann Prange, president of the Stout Student Association, felt that the proposals would "drastically affect the students at Stout." She stated, "A majority of the students are lower or middle income. Now they are faced with both a reduction of federal aid and an increase in tuition."

Prange said that concerned students should let their state representatives know how they feel. She said, "It's most important that we let them know that we are upset and that we can't afford the increase." Students wanting information on whom to write should contact the SSA office.

Local governmental change possible

Matt Kalina
Managing Editor

Two binding referendums on the upcoming April 1 ballot regarding changes in city government are creating concern with supporters of a new public library that it will affect construction of the public library on the shore of Lake Menomin.

The City Council voted Jan. 6 to place two binding referendums on the ballot, one proposing a change from the present city manager form of government to a mayor-common council form, and another proposing that the City Council consist of 11 council members, with one elected from each of the city's 11 wards, instead of the present council which is made up of seven members, all elected at large.

Even if the council had not voted in favor of the referendums, both proposals would have become binding referendums on the April 1 ballot because two petitions requesting the changes, which contained more than 1,200 signatures each, were filed in December with the City Clerk.

State statuates require for each petition asking for direct legislation to have at least 597 signatures. If the change in the form of government is approved by Menomonie voters, the president of the City Council automatically would become mayor until one would be officially elected the following April, when the council members would be selected.

Director of University Relations, Charles Buelow, Municipal Library Board President, said that organizers of the drive placing the referendums on the ballot may be out to "torpedo the new library."

> We would like a government that is more accountable to the people.
> —Francis Schaefer

Buelow said that his is a form of "wrecking-ball government" that is out to "tear down" the possibliity of a new public library.

City Manager George Langmack said that it was his general understanding that the antagonism over the construction of the library was the main factor leading to the organization of the petition drive which eventually forced the referendums onto the ballot.

Francis Schaefer, who was the contact person for the petitions admitted that the petitions were indirectly spurred by the construction of the library. Schaefer said that he is not satisfied with the present form of government. He wants a "closer-knit" government with "better contact" with government officials.

"We would like a government that is more accountable to the people which is not offered now." Schaefer said that according to word on the streets of Menomonie, the referendum will have "no trouble passing."

Langmack would not publicly comment about the outcome of the referendum vote.

UW-Stout student Jay Shroeder, considered to be the most vocal City Councilman against the new library, said that "many people were shocked" when the City Council approved construction of the $1.2 million library along Lake Menomin after a non-binding 1982 referendum that resulted in a 2-to-1 margin against the construction of the new library. "The public placed a lot of faith in that referendum," he said.

Europeans sign tunnel agreement

Lille, France-President Francois Mitterand and British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher announced Monday that their countries will be linked by a $6.8 billion twin railroad tunnel under the English Channel.

The privately financed project calls for a 31-mile double bore tunnel for trains and special shuttle trains to carry cars and trucks. The link between the two nations will be the realization of a dream that began in Napoleonic times.

Syrians square off against Christians

Beirut, Lebanon-Military sources say crack Syrian units moved into the mountains to face the militia of President Amin Gemayel, who wrecked Syria's peace plan for Lebanon last week by crushing his Christian rivals.

Lebanese army officers on the front near the Christian president's hometown of Bikfaya said Syrian regulars made hit-and-run attacks on positions held by Christian soldiers loyal to Gemayel.

Highway funds cut back

Madison-Federal cuts under the Gramm-Rudman Act could delay Wisconsin highway projects in 1987 according to Transportation Secretary Lowell Jackson.

Wisconsin will lose $70 million in road-building money for the 1987 construction season, $50 million of that amount results from the Gramm-Rudman Act. The fact that Wisconsin failed to enact a 21-year drinking age will result in the loss $5 million in road-building money.

Professional predictions

Compiled by Paul D. Nelson

U.S. News & World Report recently asked 21 prominent and influential Americans what they believe will transpire over the course of the next twelve months. And while some of these beliefs may be laughable when 1986 draws to a close, most currently reflect the most pressing issues of the day.

The following excerpts are from U.S. News & World Report's combined Dec. 30/Jan. 6 year-end issue.

John Naisbitt, author of the best-selling Megatrends, believes that we should "Get ready for 1986 to start the U.S. on the road to full employment and labor shortages for the rest of the century. This will happen because, one, the record new job creation [7 million in 1983-84] is accelerating and, two, the number of people coming into the work force will drop dramatically as we run out of baby-boomers and start a period of hiring baby-busters."

Alan Greenspan, a former chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisors, stated that "The large budget cuts required by the new deficit-reduction bill [Gramm-Rudman-Hollings] will create a political firestorm next summmer. We may have finally created the type of crisis that seems essential to resolving our intractable deficit problem."

Felix Rohatyn, a widely respected investment banker, feels that "Every economist will predict every possible version of the economy. In the last analysis, very little will change. The only thing I'm sure of is that the Mets will win the World Series and the football Giants will be better next year."

Howard Cosell, a veteran commentator with ABC Sports, predicts that "Professional football will be shaken by events involving the National Football League and the U.S. Football League - by trial of the USFL's anti-trust suit against the NFL or a merger under conditions suitable to the USFL. This will be the major sports-related story of the year and will affect professional football as we know it."

Senator Barry Goldwater (R-Arizona) supports the premise that "IF the U.S. doesn't see a more courageous Congress, this country will go bankrupt in 10 years maximum. Congress has to show guts, leadership and defend the constitution. To hell with defending farmers, railroads or anything else!"

Jerry Falwell, leader and one of the founders of the Moral Majority, believes that "America's spiritual awakening will continue. Our youth will increasingly move to the right. Nineteen eighty-six should be a year of economic stability if not growth. The Strategic Defense Initiative will take strides forward. Millions more conservative Christians will register to vote. Senatorial elections will be cliffhangers. Everything is looking up."

Syndicated humor columnist Art Buchwald predicts that "Rupert Murdoch is going to buy Pravda. Margaret Heckler will defect from Dublin to the United States."

Abortion controversy stirs marchers

Chuck Keller
News Reporter

Members of Pro-Life and Pro-Choice gathered outside the Library Learning Center on 10th Avenue to express their disparate views on the emotionally charged issue concerning the right to have an abortion.

The main reason for the peaceful confrontation at high noon on a clear, cold Wednesday in Menomonie was the 13th anniversary of the Roe vs. Wade decision legalizing abortion.

The main aim for both groups was to make the public clearly aware of their opposing stands on the issue.

January 22, 1973 the Supreme Court of the United States handed down the controversial decision legalizing abortion in America. The ruling (Roe vs. Wade) came about because of a pregnancy resulting from forced sexual intercourse during a rape. Since its inactment, it has affected many lives for many years.

Pro-Life groups including the Crisis Pregnancy Center, Maranatha Christian Fellowship, Campus Crusade for Christ, and Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship, congregated in front of the Library Learning Center at noon to denounce abortion, and to stress to people that there is a life in the womb, not just flesh.

"Abortion is a crime to the unborn baby" exclaimed Dave Fredrickson, a coordinator of the event. Fredrickson is a member of the Maranatha Christian Fellowship whose goal is to see "God's kingdom manifest on earth as it is in heaven".

In coordination with the march, other Pro-Life activities were held during week. These activities included the showing of Silent Scream, a film depicting a fetus and its response to external stimuli, and the Crisis Pregnancy Center information booth in the Cobblestone Court.

The booth contained information pamphlets, counselors, and plastic fetuses to heighten students awareness of a fetus' right to life. Also at this booth was was a petition to be signed demanding the abolishment of legalized abortion.

Pro-Choice representatives were also present to "celebrate choice", as coordinator Tracy Lea Landis explained. This is the second year that this group has celebrated choice. They feel it is important because "it's so great that we have choice", Landis said.

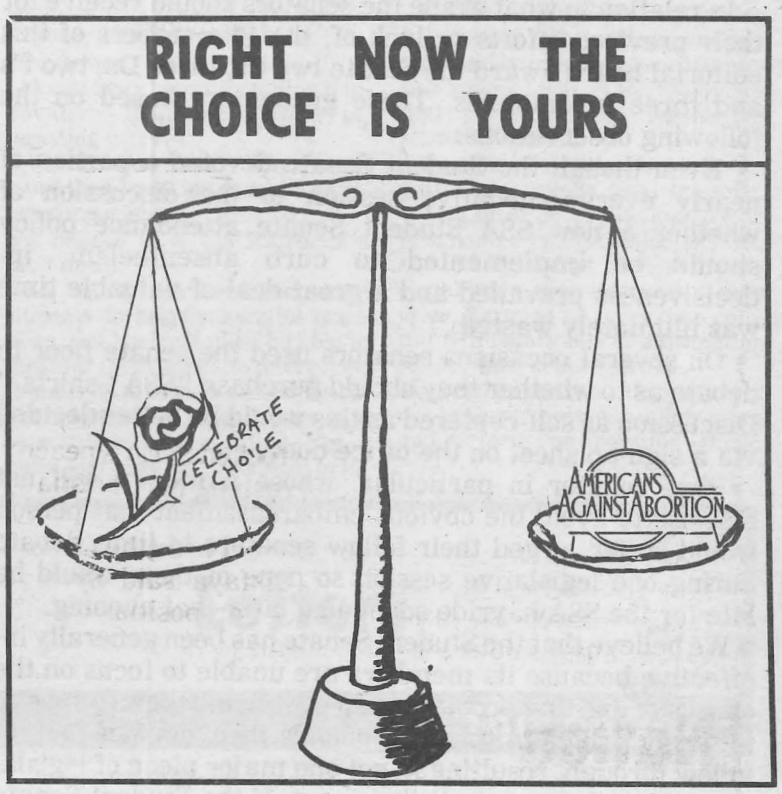
"Abortions are not fun but if they weren't preformed legally they would be done iilegally," Landis said in reference to back alley abortions that occurred prior to Roe vs. Wade.

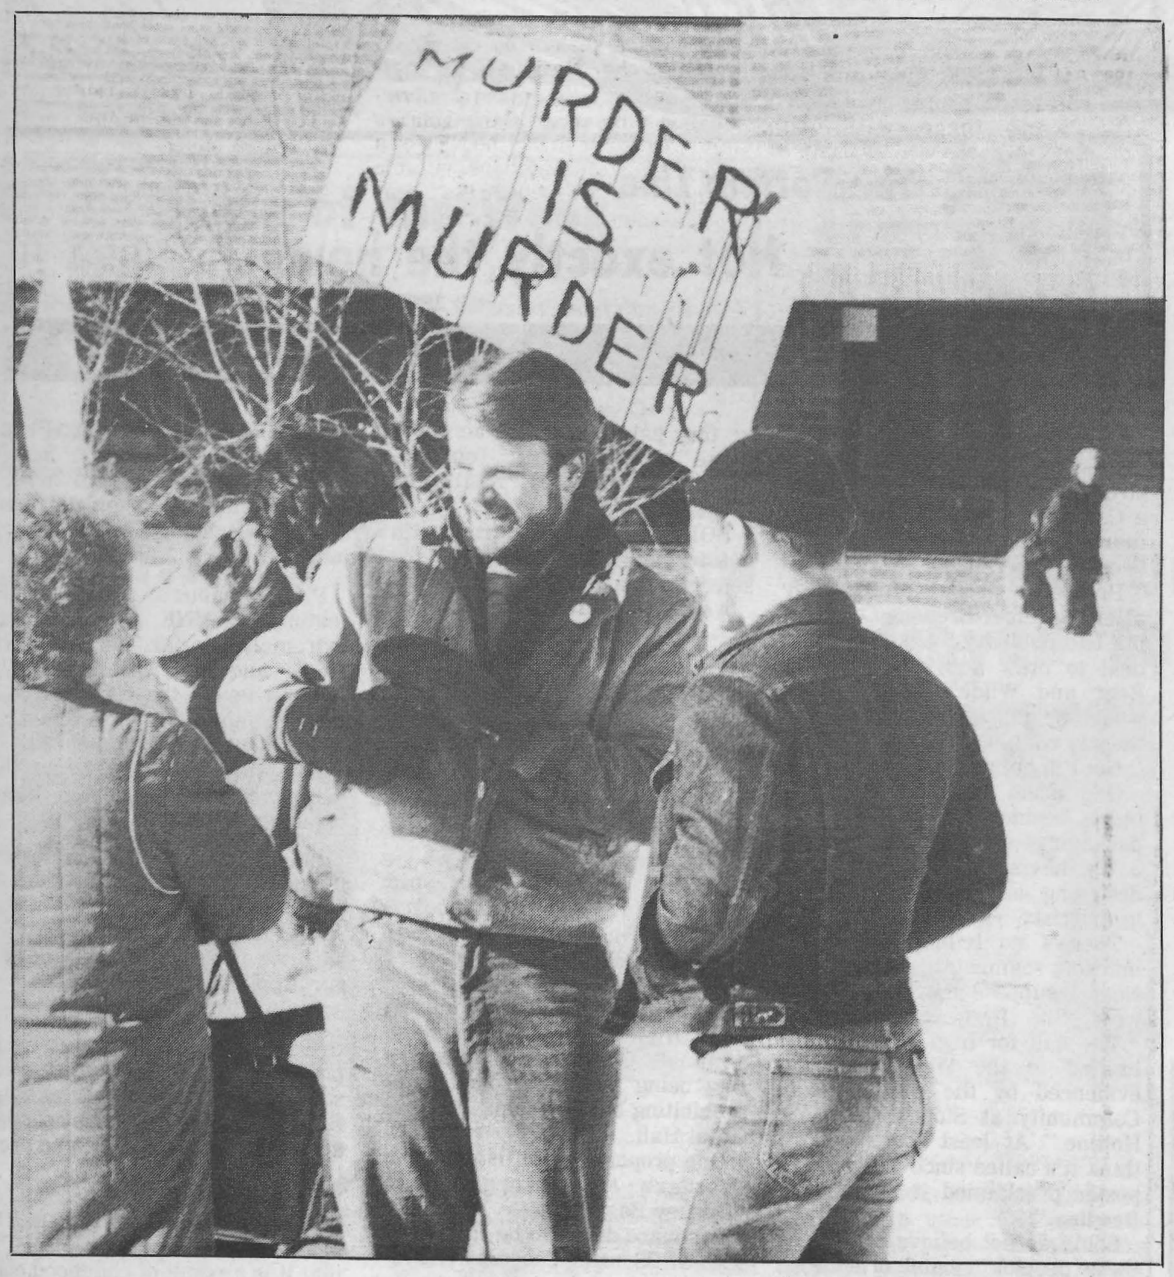
Last year the group gave out keepsake armbands with hand painted roses on it. This year they gave out Pro-Choice cups "with or without apple cider, its your choice."

This group claims not to be "heavy into running other people's lives". They simply believe it's a person's right to choose whether to terminate a pregnancy, or to turn to other alternatives such as carrying to term and placing the infant up for adoption.

Both sides were pleased with the turn outs that they had. The Pro-Choice group handed out over 50 of their cups to interested people. Mary Beth Rudolph, one of the people distributing the cups said her goal was to "see the necessity for abortion to become obsolete."

The Pro-Life group had approximately 50 participaters in there march. "We had a terrific turn out" proclaimed marcher Maria Weinzirl. "I've been marching for eight years now and this is one of the biggest groups we've had yet. What makes this march even more productive is the student involvement that is present." Weinzirl, who has two adopted children as well as two natural, said "nowadays babies aren't as available as they used to be and I think abortions are the reason for this."





Pro-Lifers marched in front of the Library Learning Center to show their displeasure with the Roe vs. Wade decision on its 13th anniversary. Although Pro-Lifers were confronted by Pro-Choicers, the event was a peaceful one. (Stoutonia photo by Eileen O'Neill)

Accuracy of spending survey questioned

Tim Hopkins
News Editor

The question if UW-Stout's marketing and research class from last fall will present their student spending survey to Menomonie's Chamber of Commerce won't be answered for nearly a month.

Memorial Student Center Director Bob Johnson is concerned that Chamber members view the survey as an educational aid in the learning process for the students who completed it.

Johnson praised the students' presentation of the survey which he saw at Stout on Dec. 10. The presentation addressed his concerns about the printed survey. He said he remained concerned that the survey results could be misinterpreted.

He recognized the survey as a valuable learning tool for the students. Johnson hopes people won't make the mistake of using the results from the survey as if they were from a professional survey.

Johnson is concerned about the conclusions people might make from this survey not having attended the class presentation of their results.

The section of the survey reporting that student expenditures on campus were $2.4 million while off campus expenditures were $3.1 million is misleading Johnson said. "That would lead you to believe that of all the money students spend in Menomonie they spend about 40 percent in the Student center."

Johnson said the $2.4 million figure needs to be compared with the $20 million annual spending figure for students. As a result he said, "If the survey's correct I think it's only 14 percent" of student spending that occurs at the Student Center.

"Possibly the survey was skewed heavily toward the Student Center because it was taken there," he said. "That's kind of like going out to K Mart and interviewing people and asking them where they shop."

Johnson said, "Our estimates are very different." An example he gave was that his budget projections on student spending on food at the Student Center "aren't anywhere near" the survey's projection of $1.2 million.

Joe Passer, the student consultant on the survey, said "The amounts may be a little bit skewed but I think the numbers are pretty accurate." Passer said the survey established "the need for more public relations between students and the community, that the students are a viable part of the community."

Opinions

Editorial

SSA abandons priorities

Now that the Stout Student Association's (SSA) Student Senate has completed an entire semester of legislative business, we believe that the time has come for that legislative body to be the recipient of some much needed constructive criticism.

In relation to what grade the senators should receive for their previous efforts or lack of, the 10 members of this editorial board award the senate two Cs, three Ds, two Fs and three Incompletes. These grades are based on the following observations:

• Even though the Student Senate devoted a portion of nearly every legislative session to the discussion of whether a new SSA Student Senate attendance policy should be implemented to curb absenteeism, indecisiveness prevailed and a great deal of valuable time was ultimately wasted.

• On several occasions senators used the senate floor to debate as to whether they should purchase "SSA t-shirts." Discussion as self-centered as this would be better decided via a sign-up sheet on the office door.

• One senator in particular, whose name we will not disclose to avoid the obvious embarrassment that person would suffer, urged their fellow senators to limit debate during one legislative session so none of them would be late for the SSA hayride scheduled later that evening.

• We believe that the Student Senate has been generally ineffective because its members are unable to focus on the causes of existing problems and continually bow to special interests, which in turn compounds their obvious lack of follow through, resulting in not one major piece of legislation which they can call their own. If the Student Senate were a person, he or she would be the prototypical underachiever who gets by on the bare minimum necessary to remain in school.

We believe that the Student Senate can salvage the remainder of their legislative session by adopting the following solutions:

• Senators should dismiss the obsolete belief that committees can solve any and all problems, and instead assign specific tasks to individuals and not groups. It is far easier to hold one person accountable for a lack of results as opposed to a finger-pointing group of five.

• SSA President JoAnn Prange should ask Faculty Senate President Robert Moran, who is skilled in the area of conflict resolution, to make a conflict resolution presentation during the Student Senate's open forum so student constituents can finally be represented in the way that people in a democracy expect.

• At this point in time we see little justification for the $28,000 which the Student Senate is currently budgeted and what they coincidentally feel they also need for the 1986-87 academic year. Because the students of this university have benefitted so little from these monies, perhaps a portion of these Student Senate funds should be redirected to organizations which give students tangible results in exchange for their precious activity fees.

The overriding message is quite simple. The Student Senate must learn to crawl before they can learn to walk.

The Bottom Line

Not exactly the news

Rich Brueckner

Contemporary society is so diversified that its facts are often stranger than fiction. For instance, a California firm is now trying to market "the nations first gay beer" in San Diego.

Problems arose immediately after the Huber Brewing Co., fearing bad publicity, backed out of a deal to brew and bottle Wilde's Beer and Wilde's Light, which would be marketed primarily in the gay community.

No, I'm not making this up.

One could foresee other problems besides publicity. Huber's packaging engineers were probably having a hell of a time designing a non-spill bottle for limp wrists.

There's no telling where this market segmentation will end. Next I suppose they'll come out with "the first gay laxative."

The call for a gay beer is not limited to the West Coast, as evidenced by the Gay, Lesbian Community at Stout's "G.L.C.S. Hotline." At least that's what I think it's called since one defaced poster proclaimed it "The AIDS Bee-line."

Some do not believe in making these peoples' sexual orientation the brunt of jokes. It might be best to just change the subject.

A new group, encouraged by those who have come "out of the closet", is reportedly starting up its own number- "The Beastiality Hotline."

To help give their group notoriety, they have chosen the acronym name of Beastiality (our indigenous nature) Klan, or B.O.I.N.K..

BOINK is expected to submit a constitution to SSA pending the selection of a group advisor.

A spokesman for the group cited one of BOINK's objectives as, "Making access to this particular lifestyle as easy as falling off a horse."

This cliche is particularly fitting since they too plan on marketing their own beer with a commercial depicting BOINK members "pulling a train" with the Budweiser Clydesdales.

BOINK Beer will be sold primarily in 1/8th barrels. The national ad campaign will thus feature the classic Beatles tune "I Dig A Pony."

Despite the hype, initial interest in BOINK is expected to be minimal. Campus activities are now being planned around rules prohibiting barn animals from the Great Hall.

One proposed event is expected to mark the resurgence of "Donkey Basketball." Reports of a square dance to be sponsored with GLCS, using Cooperative Programing funds, are said to be premature at this time. It has yet to be determined if this is because of group membership not necessarily being mutually exclusive.

Questions about health concerns can be addressed by writing to the national BOINK office in San Francisco. "The AIDS scare hasn't really phased us around here," said a recruiter, "though any mention of the swine flu gets us pretty jumpy."

Phil Donahue's recent forum featuring BOINK members was extremely colorful. The New York studio audience was suprisingly tolerant up till the point where a PTA member started a shouting match with, "What they do in private is bad enough; I sure the hell don't want one of them teaching my kids!"

In defense of their unusual tastes, BOINK members like to point out that they were born that way. They respond to people that look down on them that there is no such thing as "normal."

Members follow the doctrine that their freedom of expression is protected by the Constitution. "Not so," says animal rights activist Bob Barker, "Have you ever seen a sheep with colitis? It's not a pretty sight!"

There are several schools of thought as to how some succumb to beastiality. One popular theory is that it is a result of childhood confusion with the fact that Lassie was really a boy dog.

Whatever the reason, the point is that we're all people. The time has come when we should just toss back our favorite beverage and let other people ruffle the feathers.

Crash and Burn

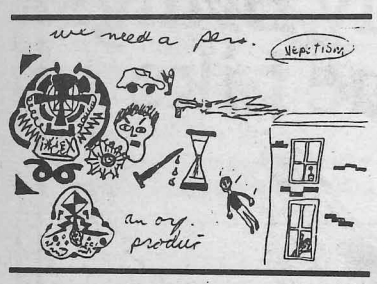
Chronic notetakers jam mindlessly

Matt Kalina

If you are like most students, a new semester usually means junking old, used notebooks and scoring a new set so you can sit in class one more time to take monster-sized amounts of notes.

That's what a notebook is for, right?

In scanning my old notebooks, I found much more than the notes I usually take. In the margins I spotted rough sketches of creatures yet discovered by man, a guy jumping out of a highrise building, renditions of various goon-type humans with goofy grins and screwball eyes and an odd assortment of strange figures, undecipherable symbols and designs that don't mean much of anything. I guess the doodling was a meager form of escape to entertain myself rather than peering aimlessly at the back of somebodys head in front of me.



A review of my ratty notebooks disclosed that I have a habit of writing words that I couldn't understand or ones that are rather decent, ones that I would like to use more frequently, on the top of pages—words like minx, inure, countralpuntal or serendipity.

I espy from my experiences of note-taking that the best system for me is to simply obtain a spiral notebook and a paper folder for each class. They may not last till the end of the semester or even past the first month of school for that matter, without ripping and fraying, but you can perhaps agree that it is a cheap route to follow for organization. I know some Stoutants that don't even bother to arm themselves with a folder. They just cram their trusty spirals with the hand-outs and homework.

That amazes me. I just couldn't handle that. I would probably end up losing half of my papers.

What I hate most are the cumbersome three-ring binders. It always happens--the loose leaf pages tear out of the rings so I resort to using my customary paper folders to store the trashed papers.

I found that some courses like speech only required the use of a few pages of a notebook and others need an entire 70-pager. I remember an Early American History Course that I scrawled two whole notebooks full of notes--on both sides of the page. By the time I dragged myself out of that class I had a life-threatening case of writer's cramp by scratching out a whopping six pages of notes daily.

Many teachers agree that today's students are nodding notetakers, stenographers or worse yet, baaing sheep grazing on every word that an instructor spits out to them.

Teaching doesn't have to be dead, but for the most part it is a one-way streeet; teach rambles and pupils take dictation.

I wouldn't wager a years rations of Silly Putty, but I do presume that most teachers hope to spar intellectually with their students. It only seems that today's students only argue over po i nts on their exams.

Many teachers believe that their students accept the things they say without challenging them. This wasn't the case in the '60s and '70s when nothing an authority figure said was off limits. Today's students need to refute more of what an instructor parlays off as fact. Teachers' opinions should not always be taken at face value.

For some students, sitting passively in class may be the epitome of numbing dullness, if it merely consists of scribbling notes, memorizing these notes and then expectorating this information out during a test.

Anybody can do this can and get an A, but, like, did that student actually grasp the concepts of the course and fully examine them? A student can walk out the door with the false impression that they really have deserved the A or more damaging yet, not give a wet glove if they haven't.

Many times the teacher's view is not questioned. Students should be more critical and actually compare these opinions with their own views or that of other students' thoughts.

I know few teachers who do not offer unlimited opportunity for students to be vocal and argue openly in meaningful discussions.

A class can become exciting if innovative instuctors make interesting courses.

We all know that it takes much more than lecturing to make an interesting course. But I do not believe it is the instructor's fault at all.

All of my teachers encourage students to ask meaningful questions. But students must be able to think for themselves, to interpreet, to analzye, to critique, whether it is world history, or even the dry as a bone subject of accounting. Yes, I know that may be Herculean to ingest, but that's right, even accounting.

Although teachers offer this opportunity to us to shout up and vocalize, they can not force us to argue. It's a free country. Most of us wing it through easy street without meistering a word except for mumbling the occasional, "present or here."

It is up to the student alone to challenge the instructer's views.

Most students are embarrassed to speak up in class because they fear they may ask a stupid question. As the rancid saying goes, "Their are no stupid questions." I disagree. Indeed there can be some real idiotic hoodwinked shallow questions raised, but this should not dissuade anybody from classroom debate.

One of the purposes in gathering ten, twenty or a hundred students together is to have some interaction among them. It seems obvious that more can be learned if students interact.

It is this interaction that is so important to college level learning. We all must be able to analyze an idea from all sides, inside and out, not to only accept the one dimensional view that instructors may offer. We must do more than commit to memory bits of information jotted down in our spirals.

We need to use this information in our brains to open our minds more and perform one operation - think.

Dog shit on walk obnoxious, offending

It is evident that more people are talking about the responsibilities of owning a dog. It does not take a great deal of observation to note this trend, at least along 9th Ave. between 5th and 11th Streets.

There is hard evidence, and still in its original placement during this cold winter season, dog shit on the walkways outside of the residences of dog owners.

Pedestrians will find these obstacle piles most annoying. In pursuit of safety, those on foot should secure refuge by walking in the city street.

One could find it amusing that the other tenants who share the properties have not taken some defensive action to correct the problem. They continue to permit this activity, and one could expect they carry dog shit into their own homes.

What does all this mean when dog owners permit this abuse on their neighbor? Are they uncaring people? Are they ignorant of the messy piles that offend one's senses? Do they view their dog's waste as someone else's problem? Whatever the message dog owners are issuing, the activity is obnoxious, and offending pet owners should have their noses rubbed into it.

CAMPUS SLANT/ How should the United States react to alleged Libyan support of terrorism?

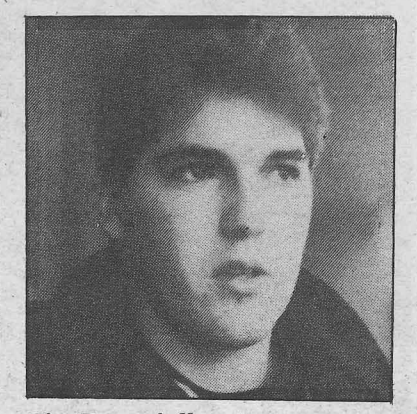
The (United States) have never had any concrete proof (that Libya is responsible for terrorism.) They have no pictures, no evidence. I would say that they should take some kind of military action if they can prove it. I don't think we should send any troops, but if they know (who is responsible for the terrorism) I feel nothing against bombing it.

Kelly Ellenbecker
Sophomore
Industrial Technology

I think Reagan should keep his political views out of it. He is very evasive about (who is responsible for recent terrorist attacks.) I wish he would give more proof, more substancial evidence that Libya was involved. Everything is secret. Economic sanctions have not been shown to be effective and Khadafy will just laugh at it, but military action may be too strong.



Tim Bracegirdle

Relations with Libya should be cut off. I wish other nations would follow that same suit. By doing that we may get our point across. If enough nations do it, then it will be effective.

Desire Rozada
Senior

Economic sanctions are about as far as we can go without having them retaliating. We should avoid having something really rash happening. In the United States, people can get all hyped about something and say we should blast them away, but there is really nothing we can do when we get down to it because nobody wants to go into war. Economic sanctions are the only feasible thing to do.

Brad Steffen
Sophomore
Industrial Technology

I wouldn't take any more action than what has already been done. That's enough. Our economic sanctions will be effective if other countries go along with it. Nothing is ever effective unless everybody goes along with it. That will be the only problem because no one will go along. Everybody is too chicken.

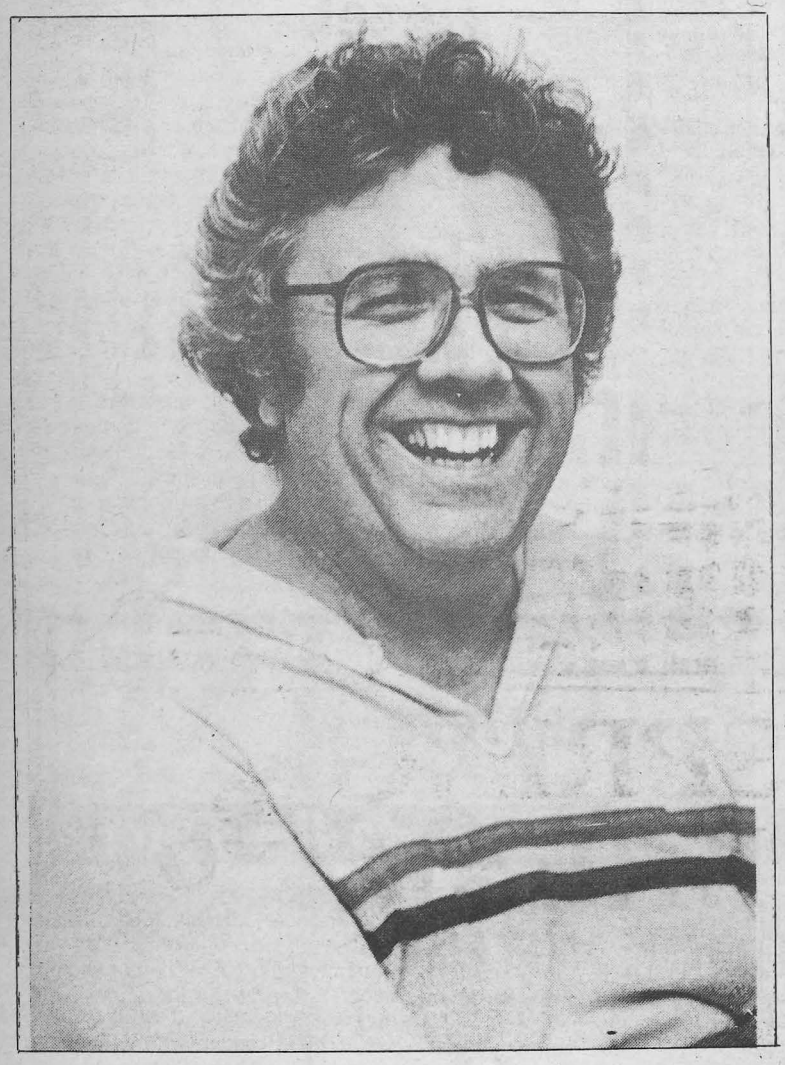
Century II gifts memorialize Bob Ward

Tim Hopkins
News Editor

Gifts are being given to UW-Stout's capital campaign, Toward Century Two, in honor of Bob Ward, 53 year-old assistant professor of media technology who died of a heart attack on January 1.

Both faculty members and students are giving the gifts in recognition of Ward's talent not only for photography but also for working so well with his students.

Dr. Terry Ingram shared the same office with Ward for 15 years. Dr. Ingram clearly remembers "his excitement for teaching and his excitement for young people." Dr. Ingram said Ward was a person who related well to young people.



Bob Ward 1932-1986

In a short time he became Mr. Photography here...he developed wonderful rapport with his students.

—Dr. David Barnard

As an example of Ward's closeness with his students, Ingram mentioned that Ward's widow Sally requested that the scholarship, if it is set up, be called the Bob Ward Scholarship rather than the Robert Ward Scholarship. People will remember him as Bob.

The only real obstacle to establishing the Bob Ward Scholarship is the $5,000 minimum in donations required for a scholarship.

A pair of Stout grads, at one time Ward's students, are writing as many people as they can who enjoyed the experience of being in a class taught by Bob Ward. They will inform these people of the Stout Foundation Toward Century Two which allows you to specify what you want your donation to go towards.

Dr. David Barnard remembers when Ward first arrived at Stout. "In a short time he became Mr. Photography here," Dr.Barnard said. Before Ward came to Stout he was a salesman for Moen Photography Service in La Crosse. "It was there that his contact in selling grew into his wanting to go into media technology," Dr. Barnard said.

Dr. Barnard said of Ward that "he developed wonderful rapport with his students."

Anyone interested in making a donation to the Toward Century Two Foundation in Bob Ward's name can do so by contacting Stout's Alumni Services department.

Cooperative Programming nixxed; budget needs total revampment

Kelly Cohorst
News Reporter

A serious problem was imposed on the Stout Student Association (SSA) Senate Tuesday night as the proposed Student Activities budget for '86-'87 and cooperative programming were voted down. The Student Activities budget must now be totally reworked.

Vice President of Financial Affairs, Tom Schwalbach explained that more than $100,000 needs to be pared from budget allocation requests. The allocation requests for the 23 student organizations totalled more than $325,000 while the budget itself is limited to $225,000.

Schwalbach also explained a serious problem damaging the attempt to properly determine budget allocations. He said the organizations requesting funding refused to attend the committee meetings because they don't agree with the Cooperative Programming.

The budget proposed under Cooperative Programming would involve significant cuts in many organizations' budgets. The budget proposed would, if accepted, have a 50 percent cut in the budget of the Performing Arts Commission.

Everyone likes Cooperative Programming except for when it comes to their organization.
— Bill Siedlecki SSA Adviser

The plan to achieve cooperative programmining had been to set up $35,000 in the program from which various groups could apply for their needed portion if they agreed to work together with atleast one other group. No cooperation between groups would mean no additional funds for any organization.

The proposal would severely hurt some well known organizations that have no other resources to turn to than the Student Activities budget. Prometheus is a group that has existed for 15 years with the majority of its financial aid coming from the SSA. If the SSA cut Prometheus' budget by 68 percent, as was proposed, this unique arts publication at Stout will be unable to publish its work.

The Prometheus is an orgainization that works as a single group. They don't have any type of funding that could work in joint programming. Therefore, the group is especially concerned about the severe cuts that would result in their budget if Cooperative Programming is approved. This organization as well as many others may go under.

At this point, the finance committee must reavaluate the 1986-87 budget again so they can construct one that will satisfy at least two thirds of the voting members of the SSA.

An informal meeting was planned for Wednesday night, Jan. 22 for students to consider possible changes in the Cooperative Programming proposal.

THERE'S AN ARMY OF CHOICES OUT THERE.

It's not easy. Sometimes the number of choices you have seems mind-boggling. But sometimes, when you know what you want, freedom of choice is a great thing. Look at today's Army.

There's the Active Army and the Army Reserve. If you qualify for Active, you serve 2-4 years, choose from over 300 skills to train in, and in over 80 of those skills you could be eligible for up to $25,200 in college money.

If you already have a job or are in school, consider the Army Reserve. All it takes is one weekend a month and two weeks a year. Plus, you'll learn a useful skill and earn over $1,200 a year.

Both choices give you career experience, physical conditioning, new friends, good pay, and a chance to serve your country. It's all up to you. Call your local Army Recruiter.

Correctional institutions find task of 'curing' prison inmates difficult

Kate Kruse Stratton
Contributing Reporter

Most people sent to "correctional institutions' in this country do not get "corrected" according to Stan Karcz, director of the Center for Study of Correctional Education in UW-Stout's School of Education and Human Services.

"People think that because we use the word 'corrections' for prisons that the focus is on rehabilitating people," he said. "But once they get out and haven't been rehabiliated, the public reaction is, 'My God, they've already had one chance to be straightened out and haven't been. What's wrong with these prisoners.'"

Karcz said most people believe that prisoners should only be punished, and despite continuing evidence that education can improve an inmate's chances of successfully rejoining society, the public does not welcome the idea of spending more money on prison educational programs.

There is evidence that people who become part of the prison population either were not or could not be adequately served through the usual public system, Karcz said.

A 1979 study found that 50 percent of adults in state and federal prisons were illiterate. Seventy percent had no vocational training before they were sentenced.

Between 85 and 95 percent of incarcerated adults do not have high school diplomas, and may not have completed elementary school.

"The idea that the door is going to slam shut and the good citizens will never see that person again is a joke," Karcz said. "The public believes that the judge 'throws away the key' for juvenile offenders, yet the average juvenile will be back on the street in five months and the average adult offender in two years."

"We're going to be living with these people sooner than we think. So, we can decide to invest something to help them improve their thinking skills, improve their levels of morality, help them become more assertive in a healthy way and assist them in obtaining gainful employment-- or not. There's too much to lose for each one of us."

Karcz said he believes, based on current research and his experience working with the State of Illinois correctional system, that although all kinds of people end up in prison, there are detectable trends and commonalities that may be used to build an effective educational program.

For example, more than 20 percent of all prison inmates have some form of disability, including emotional, learning and physical disabilities, and mental retardation, Karcz said. Special education programs can and should be provided to these inmates.

Recent studies indicate prison inmates may think differently from the outside population. "They're not thinking correctly. They're not inductive reasoning appropriately. They're not expressing themselves logically," Karcz said. "Their thinking mechanisms or processes aren't working well."

Studies also indicate that inmates have not matured into higher levels of moral functioning, Karcz said.

"If you link the fact that these individuals have impairments in their thinking process ability and in their moral development, I think you're getting at the heart of what the underlying difficulties are," Karcz said. "Many of these individuals are not able to cope as well as you or I am able to cope."

Inmates also often seem unaware that they are experiencing strong emotions, Karcz said. A psychologist working with inmates in groups found that more than 50 percent of them were not aware of the physical symptoms that took place when they were experiencing a feeling. They were simply not in touch with themselves.

"If for example a person was getting angry in a group of people," Karcz said, "that person was not aware of the fact that at the same time he was feeling angry he was clinching his fists, developing a flushed face, all of these other physical symptoms that you or I would normally be aware of that could signal us that we are beginning to get out of control. When they finally blew up, it was as much a surprise to them as to the people they hurt."

An assertiveness training program could address the needs of those inmates, Karcz said. In an assertiveness training program, role playing may be used to help inmates gain empathy for another person's feeling and get in touch with their own feelings. Role playing could help inmates learn to understand the perspective of others.

But that kind of training must also be coupled with programs to improve inmates' academic skills, Karcz said.

Karcz said of the nearly 400,000 adults incarcerated in the United States in 1984, only 30 percent participated in correctional education programs and an estimated 10 percent of inmates with disabilities were adequately served.

The irony is that studies indicate that educational programs may be effective in reforming inmates and helping them return to society, Karcz said.

In a study he conducted, Karcz found that in an Illinois juvenile home, 22 percent of the white residents normally returned to school upon their release. With the addition of a special education instructor, however, 77 percent returned to school.

"So clearly here is an example of a special education position in a juvenile detention facility that worked," he said.

Karcz said the profile of correctional education may be changing, since responsibility for programs within the correctional sytem was transferred from the U.S. Department of Justice to the Department of Education in 1984. What was once a low priority for the Justice Department may now take on more importance, he said.

Stout has become involved in seeking grant funds for correctional educational programs related to its program strengths.

The Correctional Education Association has provided a $50,000 grant to allow Stout to edit and publish the Journal of Correctional Education, the official publication of the association.

The U.S. Department of Education provided a two-year, $155,000 grant to create a liaison position between a Wisconsin juvenile correctional facility and public schools. Under the program, the liaison person will help newly-released juveniles make the transition back into the public school system.

Several Stout faculty have visited the Safer Foundation and are developing programs to provide technical assistance for and evaluation of the correctional educational programs the Foundation provides.

Karcz said he sees those programs as just the beginning of an effort that, in the long run, will improve aspects of society by helping teachers work effectively with the prison inmate population.

"The inmate population, for a minimal investment in supporting correctional education, can provide a maximum impact for our dollar," he said. "As of now, we haven't as a society come to realize the benefits of working with this population."

Special bicycle an example of new technologies in rehabilitation

Beth Reid
News Reporter

A new development in the Vocational Rehabilitation program at UW-Stout and in the field of rehabilitation is the application of technology to assist persons with disabilities. Rehabilitation Technology helps people overcome physical barriers, allowing them to live more independently through the use of "technical aids."

One such technical aid has been developed by Vocational Rehabilitation majors Jim Beran and Jim Newman, along with the assistance of instructor Scott Segner. The product is a three-wheel bicycle, which was created for Cliff Erickson, who, as the result of a car accident, is paralyzed on his left side.

The project originated with the Program for Independent Living (PIL), a branch of the vocational development center, which gives counseling assistance to disabled people in a nine county area and helps them to live more independent lives. Randy Sommerfeld, a specialist with the program, introduced the project to Segner. "Cliff had an adult trike which he had been using," Segner said, "but there were some problems with it. It was difficult for Cliff to pedal and balance on and he wasn't able to use it alone. Our task was to modify and improve the existing bike."

Segner, Beran and Newman began the project by interviewing Erickson to learn what needed to be done to adapt the bike to Erickson's needs. "We decided to make it a more recumbant style," Segner said, "so we lengthened the bike and lowered the seat so that he would ride in a more reclined position."

After these changes had been made, Erickson came back for a preliminary fitting in order to take measurements and make the necessary angle adjustments. The adjustments were made and Erickson came in for a final fitting. "At that time, it was really exciting," Segner said, "because Cliff was actually riding around the shop. We had been working on it and making the changes, but to see it really work was just great."

Additional changes that were made on the original bike included a shoe-type of pedal, which holds the foot on the pedal and keeps it from sliding off the side, and the development of a totally new steering system.

"On the original bike, Cliff had difficulty turning because he had to turn the steering wheel a lot in order to turn a corner," Segner said. "We developed a tie-rod steering system which is much easier for him to operate."

Now that the bike has been completed, they will test it this spring and should it continue performing well, there are several interested clients.

The bike project is just one example of the type of work a Rehabilitation Technology Specialist could do. This relatively new concentration in the Vocational Rehabilitation program at Stout is a unique combination of courses and experiences that do not exist in any other training program in the United States. The "specialist" in rehabilitation technology combines the skills the student establishes from the undergraduate program with technical skills from the industry and technology field.

Persons with this combination of skills will be able to work as specialists doing such things as job modifications or developing adaptive equipment in the rehabilitation departments of hospitals, state vocational rehabilitation agencies and facilities, schools and business and industry. In addition, graduates are trained to do counseling, vocational evaluation and work adjustment. This flexibility can be a key selling point to many employers.

The courses required for the concentration include: Rehabilitation Services (459-560) and Laboratory in Rehabilitation Technology (459-565). For more information on these courses or the Rehbilitation Technology Concentration, students can contact Gretchen Russert, Program Director for Vocational Rehabilitation (x-1309) or Tony Langton, Director of the Rehabilitation Engineering Center (x-2248).

History of Menomonie shown in video cassette made by students

Maria Wagner
News Reporter

Because of a group of UW-Stout students, the Menomonie Area Chamber of Commerce has recently received a video cassette depicting the city of Menomonie and highlighting historical sites. The video was produced last semester by students in the Advanced Public Relations class taught by Dr. Michael D. Ritland.

Cheryl LaFountain, a senior at UW-Stout, acted as the Group Coordinator and was assisted by group members David Fink who wrote the script and Gabe Elegbede who did much of the research. Kathy Hartung, a senior, was hired by the group to assist in the technical coordination.

The video follows the theme "Our Town is Your Town" and highlights many historical sites such as the John Knapp Home, the Mable Tainter Theatre, the Louis Smith Tainter House and the Wilson Museum. Also featured is Lake Menomin, parks in Menomonie, Connells Orchard, the L-Mart, the downtown shopping area, hotels, restaurants, and UW-Stout.

The script, created by Fink and edited by LaFountain, was a journey through Menomonie beginning at I-94 and finishing at Connels Orchard.

The group received funding for the project through the Chamber of Commerce and produced the video for approximately $150.00, according to LaFountain. Ritland felt that the project could have cost between $2500 and $5000 if done professionally.

> "This was definitely a nice community effort from UW-Stout.
> —Duane Bauer
> Chamber of Commerce Director

LaFountain said that the video is not supposed to necessarily be entertaining, but will act as a "teaser" that will help to interest people in the city of Menomonie and its historical sites.

The group did face some difficulties when filming outdoors which has to be done when the weather is cooperating. At one point some footage was lost which they had to then refilm. LaFountain estimates that approximately 100 hours went into all aspects of preparation of the video.

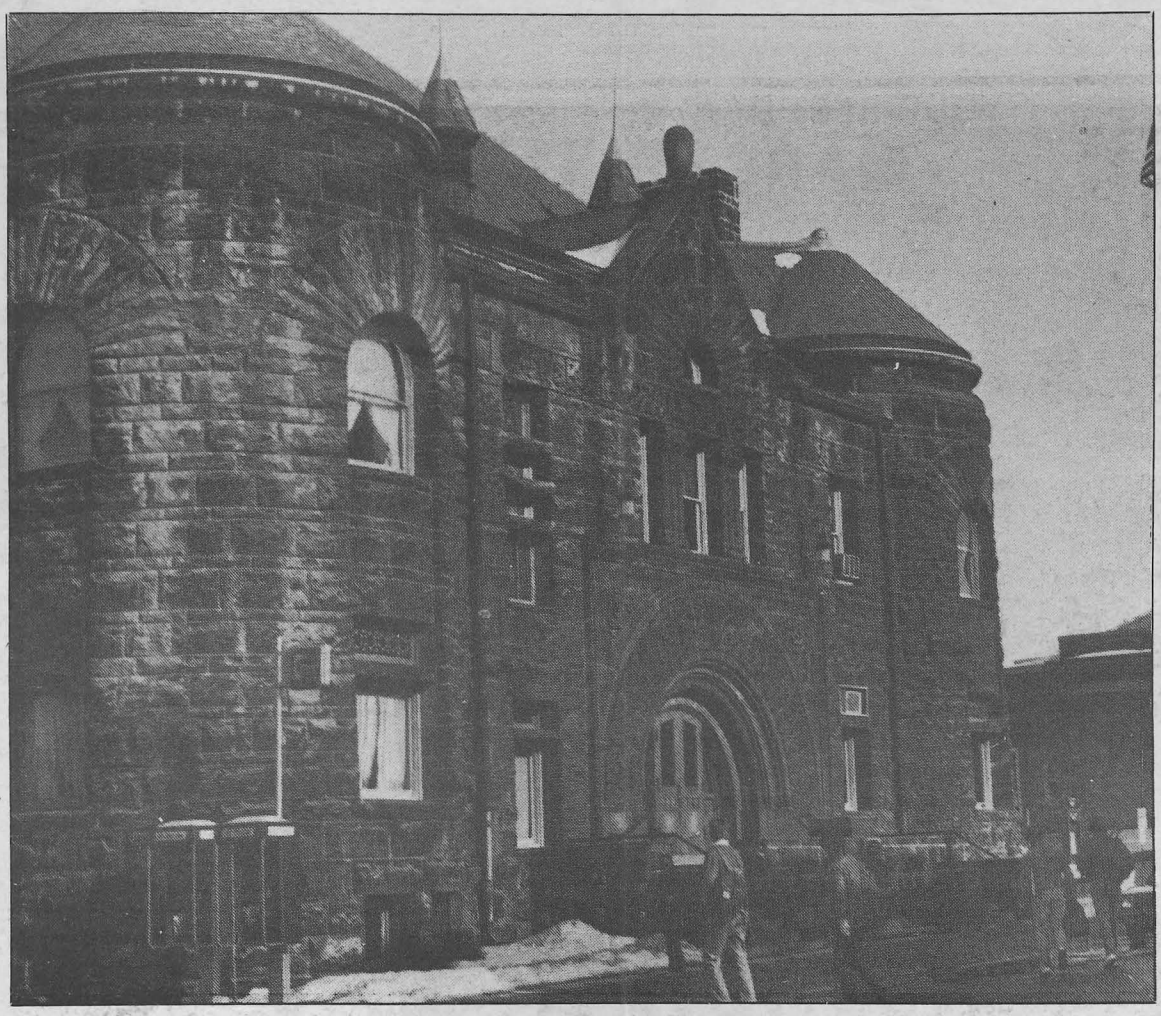
Duane Bauer, the Executive Director of the Chamber of Commerce, was pleased with the outcome of the video. He felt that the cooperation between the Chamber, Ritland and LaFountain was very good. Bauer said "This was definitely a nice community effort from UW-Stout."

Ritland said, "the students did a terrific job." He also said that he had to give only minimal direction.

The Chamber is presently making copies of the 15 minute cassette on Beta and VHS. The cassettes will be distributed mainly to bus tour companies in Minnesota and Wisconsin to interest groups such as Senior Citizen groups and women's groups to visit Menomonie.

Another project done by the Advanced Public Relations class was a brochure on historical sites in Menomonie distributed during Parent's Weekend last year. This project was funded by the Parent's Weekend Committee.

Ritland said that the class is always looking for worthwhile, community-type projects. The projects done in Advanced Public Relations are those that will be genuinely helpful to someone.



Mabel Tainter Theater is only one of the featured aspects promoted by the video created by members of UW-Stout's Advanced Public Relations class.

Police agreement

A written law enforcement services agreement between the City of Menomonie and UW-Stout has been approved.

The agreement, which went into effect Jan. 1, was signed by Menomonie Police Chief Dennis Beety, Garold Buckley, director of Stout's Protective Services, and Wesley Sommers, Assistant Chancellor for Administrative Services.

Provisions in the agreement call for "the assumption of all law enforcement services on the UW-Stout campus by the university's designated police agency (Protective Services)" with four exceptions: "The Menomonie police department will continue to be the primary investigative agency for campus incidents involving sudden death and forgery," the agreement says.

"Off Campus (Menomonie police) shall handle all traffic and related matters and shall be present and assist (any) university police officer with issuance of (a) search warrant."

The agreement further states that if "the university chooses to relinquish jurisdiction in a particular case or investigation, the Menomonie police department will accept primary responsibility and follow it through to its logical conclusion."

Reasons for the university relinquishing jurisdiction might include things such as lack of manpower, resources and expertise, the agreement explained.

Tutor program

Gayle Bock, Coordinator of the Volunteer Tutor Program is initiating a new policy this semester. Students will not be allowed to sign up for a tutor until the week of January 27, two weeks later than students normally begin signing up.

Bock said, "I believe that the first two weeks should be reserved for recruitment of tutors. This will shorten the waiting time for students once they do register. Also students will have attended classes for two weeks and will have a clearer idea of what their tutoring needs will be."

Bock urges the people willing to tutor to PLEASE come in early!

Futuristic course

UW-Stout professor Lee Smalley is teaching a statewide course titled "Futures of Technology" over Wisconsin Public Radio on Monday evenings from 9-10 p.m.

Smalley will lecture or interview guests during the first part of the hour and will accept call-ins from listeners during the remainder of the program.

Two academic credits are available for participants who sign up for the course. Fees are $96 for undergraduates or special students and $162 for graduate students.

The course is designed to provide a framework for a better understanding of the promises and problems of technology. It examines current projections in technology and covers important skills for the professional user and the citizen consumer.

Shroeder said that alternative uses of the new library building, a convention center or a new city hall, could be "looked into" but that the structure could be unalterable.

Shroeder said that building a library on the shore of Lake Menomin is not the best utilization of the lake shore.

Shroeder said that in a recent study he conducted, approximately six percent of Wisconsin cities have a city manager and 94 percent have a mayor. He also found that 10.4 percent of Wisconsin residents live under a city manager form of government and 89.6 live under a mayor form.

Shroeder said that Menomonie's present form of government, city manager and common council, has low accountability and "no direct check or balances."

He said that the new form would offer closer contact to people and the possibility of an elected mayor.

Buelow, who intends to have the library operating by July 1, said that Menomonie is the largest city in the State without a public library. "When we broke ground for this library I thought we were on our way to solving our problems," he said.

Buelow stressed, "This is not totally a library issue. Some people have joined forces (with the movement) and have a real concern about the government."

Langmack said that to say that a different form of government in itself is bad for a community is "quite an assumption." He said, "I don't think that any form or particular structure for conducting an activity is inherently bad or good. It depends upon the people who are in control of the organization what their motives are, what their abilities are as to whether of not you have a good product, in that case government service."

Langmack said that if a group of citizens was serious about affecting the physical project of library construction there are two ways of approach, a hostile takeover "which cuts the head off the object you don't like" or a non-hostile "friendly" takeover. He said a hostile takeover would have the ultimate effect of eliminating the Municipal Library Board by merely repealing the ordinance that created it by initiative legislative action. This would take place through a binding referendum that is createded by a petition and could stop the project and have the funds and the project reverted to the City Council for control.

A non-hostile takeover, he said, would be to seek to work through the library board and persuade them to change the project. "This has never been done by this group," Langmack said. "They have alway treated the library board as an enemy."

Langmack said, "It makes you wonder if the basic motivation is the library project, then why didn't they make these two attempts to affect the library project in a manner that you could directly affect the library?"

"If you believe that a legislative body will agree with your particular position on any given issue, then you got some pretty magical forecasting powers."

Arts

Mural's theme depicts area landscape

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

Artists express themselves in many ways. Art is displayed in many places. Fleet Farm Supply is one of those places"

The next time you go to the Menomonie Fleet Farm, walk down the aisle. You will pass the usual supply of shovels, overalls and household equipment. Suddenly you will be overcome by a delightful 16 by 33 foot mural representative of the landscape of Dunn County, painted by Roger Daleiden.

Daleiden is a UW-Stout student majoring in studio art and concentrating in painting. He was asked by the manager of Fleet Farm, Tom Hase, to paint a scene for the backdrop of the store's model home.

The scene is a cheerful blend of green fields and blue skies. Amongst the rolling hills are red barns and white farm houses. Horses and cattle are out to pasture and a boy sits on a hill in the sunshine. Due to the depth of the scene the observer can feel like he is looking over the countryside for miles.

From start to finish the mural took 260 hours to complete and it consumed eight gallons of paint. During the months of August and September Daleiden went to the country and sketched the scenes of Dunn County.

The artist was left much freedom in his work. The only restrictions were that the mural was to be a landscape set in a generic time of year.

Due to the size of the mural, the usual oil paints could not be used because of the expense. For the first time, Daleiden did his artwork using Latex wall paint with several household brushes and foam spreaders to apply the paint.

With the use of Latex paint came the problem of drying. Within two to three minutes the paint would set and it would dry competely within ten minutes. Daleiden had to work quickly and efficiently to overcome this problem.

Daleiden began with a master drawing. With a scale and grid he put the large scene on the wall. The first day he started painting the sky standing upon ladders and from there he worked down to the floor.

"Every once in a while I would stand back and look at the whole thing to make sure it was developing cohesively," said Daleiden.

> It was exciting and scary at first to do a large work,
> —Roger Daleiden
> Artist

For seven years Daleiden has been painting, but this was his first mural work of such a grand size. He said, "It was exciting and scary at first to do a large work."

Since this was a new artistic experience, this artist was faced with new problems. He had to invent a new technique for each object painted.

Completing this painting while going to school, Daleiden incorpoarated the work in his painting class for college credit. Clive King, an art instructor on an exchange from England, looked at Daleiden's final drawing and periodically checked his progress. Daleiden said he basically did all the work on his own.

Some days Daleiden had to drag himself to the store in order to paint. Other days it was different. He said, "I'd be sitting in school in anticipation to go the Fleet Farm and paint." Friends and colleagues began to point at him and say "There's the farm painter."

This artist is pleased with his work. Daleiden said, "I think of it as a world in itself. It is relatively realistic but it is also stylized. It is the artist's job to make that world believable. I think the painting really does work in that way."

The mural is a public art work. Daleiden has the good fortune of many people observing it. He recommends this experience to

New ceramics teacher encourages students to try different techniques

Beth Reid
Arts Reporter

Students taking ceramics this semester may be surprised by a new face in the studio. Gary Erickson, who recently graduated with his masters degree in ceramics from the New York College of Ceramics, will be teaching three sections of ceramics in place of Associate Professor John Perri.

Erickson taught liberal arts pottery at the New York College for two and one-half years, but this semester will be his first "real teaching job" and he is looking forward to it.

Erickson got started in ceramics when he was a junior in college at Hamline University in St. Paul. "When I was a junior, I went on an interim trip to Greece," Erickson said, "and I got a chance to go into the National Museum in Athens. It was filled with Greek urns and I walked around and looked at every one of them. I think it was this link to history for me and the idea that I could go back to St. Paul and work the same materials that these people did in fourth century B.C."

Although he has done some drawing in the past, he feels that "the three dimensional is more suited to my needs and tastes." The type of work he does now is all hand-built with coils, and this is what he considers to be his strongest point. "I've done wheel work as an undergraduate," Erickson said, "but I've always been sort of frustrated with making something round. Even when I did something on the wheel, I would have to distort it somehow and make it oval. Even then, I wasn't completely satisfied, so I started concentrating more on working with coils."

> In hiring me, they knew my background and strong points,...
> —Gary Erickson
> Ceramics Instructor

Erickson has been thinking about the classes he will be teaching and the curriculum he will be following. "In hiring me, they knew my background and my strong points," Erickson said, "and I feel obligated to convey my sensibilities and ideas to the students and give them a different background and outlook than what they would get from the other instructors." Erickson will be encouraging students to try handbuilding, because he feels that they will be able to get more out of him in that area.

The beginning ceramic classes will be a comprehensive and a basic introduction to throwing and handbuilding. The advanced students will have the option to choose.

Fine Line

Prometheus keeps head above water

Jef Maynard

Something tragic was avoided, or maybe merely postponed during the SSA meeting Tuesday night. Prometheus, Stout's annual arts and literature publication, was almost the victim of a devastating blunder due to the well-intended, but overzealous meddling of the Finance Committee.

The debate centered around an old issue in the world of art: art costs money to produce and usually doesn't generate a return that you can take to the bank. That comes as little surprise.

The current misguided approach to budgeting comes as a result of the new Cooperative Program concept. If it can be explained, it boils down to using a general fund for events that would be co-sponsored by two groups with a similar intention. For example, the Pawn could co-sponsor a poetry reading with the Speakers Series group.

Whatever the difficulties or benefits that this proposed budget would bring about, the net result for Prometheus would probably be extinction.

The Vice President for Financial Affairs, Tom Schwalbach, seems to be the guiding, or should I say blinding light behind the Prometheus rankle. It appears Schwalbach feels that cutting Prometheus' budget will encourage the group to produce more than "one small thing in the year." On the surface, that seems like a contradiction. Of course, he has further intentions — Cooperative Programming.

Schwalbach feels that Prometheus is "too limited," and does not make effective use of the money it receives. I cannot imagine where Schwalbach gets his ideas.

He feels also, that Prometheus is there to promote the liberal arts, (like cheer leaders rallying the crowds in front of a poet). Schwalbach seems to think that Prometheus should be co-sponsoring art shows with the Fine Arts Association using the entries and co-sponsoring poetry readings with the Pawn. And any other similar nonsense that fits in well with the Cooperative Program theme.

So what if these ideas have absolutely nothing to do with Prometheus' sole, and constitutionally stated objective: produce an annual arts and literature publication. Prometheus exists as an organization to publish the annual magazine, Prometheus. What could be simpler?

The success of Cooperative Programming is based on overlap of interests and events. Not many other groups on campus produce an annual arts magazine. It appears that Schwalbach is creating a foot to fit the shoe.

Former Prometheus editor, Rick Hutter, explained the error clearly. Hutter said "The error is this: the purpose of Prometheus is to promote the arts. That's wrong. The truth is that the purpose of Prometheus is to produce the magazine." The magazine promotes the arts. It is the arts.

The Speakers Series handles poetry readings as well as can be expected in spite of a bare-bones budget. They could do more with a larger budget. The seperately funded poetry reading series was a previous budget victim.

The Fine Arts Association promotes the liberal arts. Schwalbach was not entirely familiar with the purpose of the FAA, but seemed to think Prometheus could do that too.

There are senior art student shows, there is an annual student art exhibition, and current exhibitions running continuously in Furlong Gallery. Schwalbach seemed to think Prometheus could do that too. "Maybe they could still publish the book if they want to," Schwalbach told me. Well fine.

A few interesting figures based on the proposed budget for next year: Cuts: Soutonia — 12 percent

Fine Arts Association — 23 percent

Performing Arts Commission — 50 percent

Prometheus — 68 percent No Change: SSA

Increase: Intermurals — 73 percent.

One of the most important things to keep in mind is that the budget cuts are not final. Actually the budget failed to pass the vote, so everything's up in the air at this point. There is always reallocation in the fall.

The trouble with reallocation and Prometheus is that it is extremely difficult to start production of a submission format magazine without a guaranteed minimum budget. Prometheus' proposed budget includes only printing costs, prize money for top entries, and entry form posters. That seems like highly efficient use of money to me.

During the Cooperative Budget presentation at the SSA meeting, Schwalbach stated, "We are not trying to force anyone to do anything." When I asked Schwalbach the day before, whether the Finance Committee realized that they were forcing Prometheus to change their constitution, their objective and their structure, he said, "Yes."

Prometheus produces an admirable publication. It costs around 60 cents per copy. It is the only publication of its kind on campus. Every campus I am familiar with produces a compilation of arts and literature. It is an art form that is durable, and rewarding to be selected into.

I suggest that Prometheus' budget be established at their proposed level and that anyone concerned contact VP Schwalbach or their SSA representative and support Prometheus.

semester here is working with the advanced students. "A lot of people have come to me to ask about taking an independent study," Erickson said, "I think they want to take advantage of having somebody new here. Those students who have worked for a number of semesters can be really exciting to work with and to discuss current topics in ceramics."

He is also looking forward to working in the studio, along side the students. He has what he considers to be an "open door policy" and is willing to help and work right along with the students.

One thing Erickson has planned for the advanced classes is a 24 hour studio session at least one time during the semester. The students will come in at 2:00 on Friday afternoon and go until 2:00 on Saturday. "The way classes are set up where you come in for two hours a day allows the students to learn clay only to a limited degree," Erickson said, "by coming in and working on a piece for six hours, they'll be able to learn things that they couldn't in a two hour session."

Erickson is going to be a part of the faculty show which will be running in the Ray Hall Gallery. He will have two large pieces in the show and he wants students to be aware that they can see his work.

For those about to rock

In the soul

David Chase

1985 may be in the past, but the music lives on. It was a year of great success for thousands of musicians and producers. Through the use of videos, charity concerts, and donations from record sales, rock & roll has established a good guy reputation. This was a breath of fresh air for me, I got sick of hearing rock & roll being referred to as "satan music."

Rock music has become so prominent in today's society, a politician is better off out-singing and jamming his opponent rather than discussing the issues. But a question comes to mind, how do you know what you're hearing is rock & roll? How can you really be sure it's rock & roll?

Let us suppose you were born in Iowa, raised in a small town with a population of 27, and the only music you have listened to is the Beer Barrel Polka. One day you decide to leave your small town to live in the big city, of course I am referring to Menomonie.

You hear about this rock & roll music from a friend in town and decide to look into it. You boogie your way on over to the local K-Mart to pick yourself up some albums listed under the rock & roll section. After asking for suggestions from several different people on what to purchase, you select six albums and buy them.

You get home and pull out your Close-and- Play record player and toss on the first album - the Stray Cats. So this is rock & roll. Then you play the second album - Led Zeppelin. Then the third album -Lionel Ritchie. Then it's the Ramones, Herbie Hancock, and finally the Temptations.

I think you can see what I'm getting at, do any one of these groups represent rock & roll? Perhaps they all represent rock & roll. I myself have a few ways of distinguishing rock & roll from other types of music, here they are:

1) Does it make you want to dance?
2) Does it make you want to sing?
3) Do you find yourself jamming on an air guitar?
4) Does it simply make you feel good?

I believe this list represents rock & roll. The term rock & roll is not a label, it's a feeling. I suggest to you that rock & roll is in the soul, not on the vinyl.

These are my top picks of 1985:

Best LP's
1. Stop Making Sense --- Talking Heads
2. Brothers In Arms --- Dire Straits
3. Born In The USA --- Bruce Springsteen

Best Songs
1. Money For Nothing --- Dire Straits
2. Would I Lie To You --- Eurythmics
3. Bang A Gong --- Power Station

Best Video
1. Don't Come Around Here No More --- Tom Petty
2. Would I Lie To You ---Eurythmics
3. Walk Of Life ---Dire Straits

Best Artist
1. Dire Straits
2. Talking Heads
3. Bruce Springsteen

Best New Artist
1. The Firm 2. Power Station

Event Of The Year
1. The reforming of Led Zeppelin at Band Aid concert (Phil Collins replacing John Bonham).

Best 10 Year Anniversary LP
1. Frampton Comes Alive ---Peter Frampton

I would like to say as my final comment that I did leave out some excellent artists, but then I also left out some trash. I look forward to the rock & roll of 1986.

Mystery of Mayalands

Mysterious Mayalands is the title of the next installment of UW-Stout's travel and adventure film series to be held at 7:30 p.m., Thurs., Jan. 23 in the Memorial Student Center's Crystal Ballroom.

Guatemala and Yucatan regions will be covered in the presentation, which has an admission fee of $4 for the general public and $3 for students.

Making the presentation will be Romain Wilhelmsen, a resident of Lansing, Mich., who has traveled to many wild parts of the world, including Mexico, Central and South America, and Africa. He has extensively studied lost cities, ancient treasures and remote civilizations.

Guatemala and Yucatan are two of the most photogenic lands on earth. They are focal points of the great Mayan civilization which flourished over a period of 800 years from 300 to 1100 A.D.

Primitive villages and agricultural areas contrast with such modern cities as Merida, Guatemala City and the resorts of Lake Atitlan. Atitlan is itself considered one of the world's most beautiful high altitude lakes and the "Riviera" of Yucatan.

other students. "If you're an art student there is always the element of doubt until you get out into the world. It can do a lot of good as far as your confidence level goes," said Daleiden.

At Fleet Farm the observer can literally "get into " the painting. While walking through the house the observer can look out the window and enjoy the scenery. When the observer walks out the patio door he can get close enough to the painting to see the craftsmanship and technical aspects of the mural.

Since the scene represents the surrounding area, Daleiden feels it is a work the public can readily grasp and understand. He said, "A farmer can recognize landscape and feel good that they have been represented. I did the painting with that in mind."

Unfortunately, the mural has sustained damage. Due to the settling of the building, the dry wall has cracked. Daleiden will be back at Fleet Farm to repair it and start his next project.

The model home will not only have a lovely backdrop but an illusionary garage door too. This door will be the subject of a "fool the eye" painting.

Short-handed wrestlers fall to 0-10 mark

Paul Wehking
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout grapplers dropped their dual meet record to 0-10 with losses to both St. Olaf College and UW-Superior last week.

On Thursday, Jan. 16, the Stout matmen met up with the St. Olaf Olies at Johnson Fieldhouse. The Olies took advantage of the thin Stout squad and took away a 41-8 victory. The Blue Devils had to forfeit four of the ten individual matches because, due to lack of numbers, they could not fill every weight class.

Right now we are just concentrating on our own records for seeding in the conference tournament.
—Kevin Burbach

Of the six matches that were wrestled, Stout managed two wins and one tie. Freshman Chris Iverson, 126 lbs., defeated his Olaf opponent in a 7-2 decision and Sophomore 167-pounder Wayne Hendrickson won 5-3 in a close battle. Heavyweight Dave Witt managed to stage an exciting comeback in the final seconds of his match to tie Olaf's Rolf Carlson, 5-5.

Head coach for Stout, Walt Perkins, felt that numbers weren't the only advantage that St. Olaf had. Perkins said, "St. Olaf was mentally tougher throughout the match and we just weren't as tough."

On Saturday, Jan. 18, Stout traveled to Superior where they were defeated 42-15. Iverson, 126 lbs., added another win to his record with an 11-5 win over his Superior opponent. "It was a very tough match until the end, then I took over," Iverson said. The other point scorer for the Blue Devils was Witt who collected a forfeit at heavyweight.

Over the semester break, the Stout grapplers were on the road. They traveled to Florida for four dual meets and then back to Minnesota for a tournament at Concordia College.

In Florida, the team went 1-3 with losses from two Division 1 schools, Central Florida and Stuttsen College. Their one win came against Davidson College out of Virginia. Coach Perkins likes the Florida trip because not only do they wrestle tough opponents, but as Perkins said, "It's just a different and very fun experience for the wrestlers."

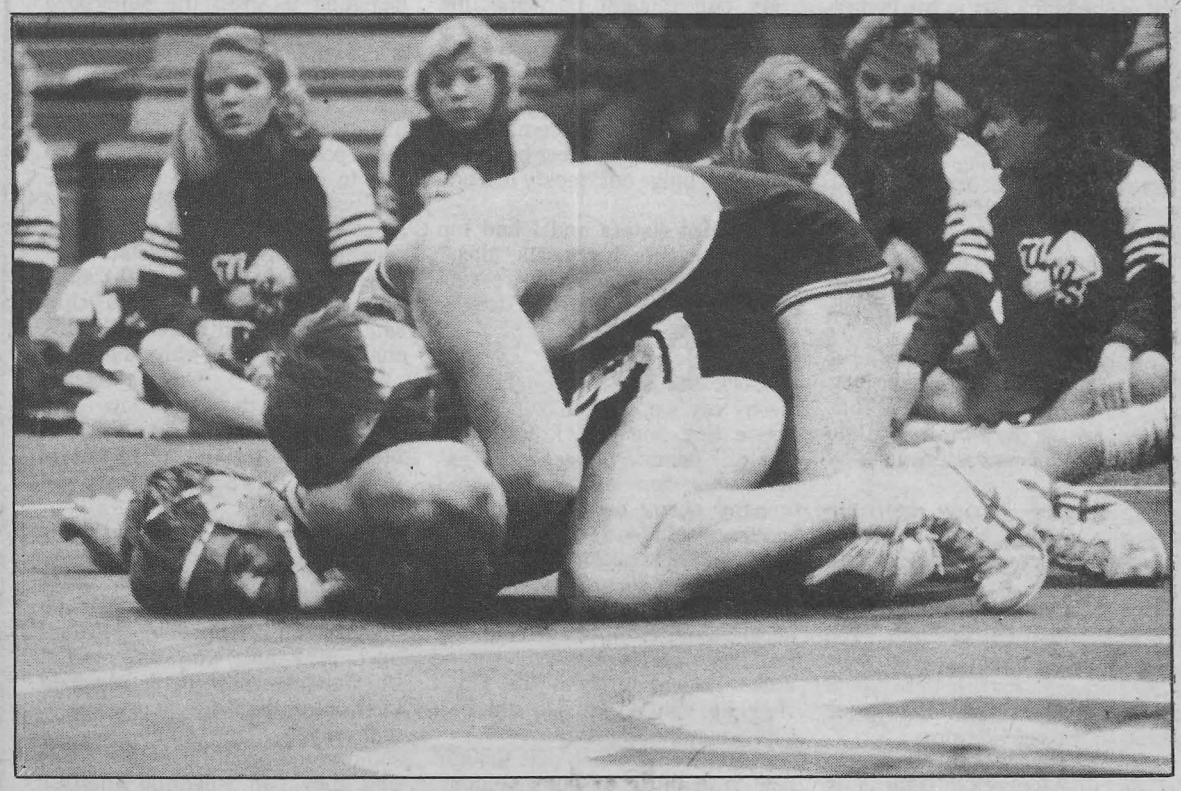
After their Southern trek the Stout team traveled northward to Concordia College in Minnesota for a tournament. There, the team posted a seventh place finish out of the eleven teams that competed.

Witt, who started his season during the Florida trip, compiled an admirable 6-1 record on the road. His best performance came in the Concordia tourney where he wrestled to a first place finish. Coach Perkins said, "Dave wrestled excellent for us over the break." Witt, who is coming off a year layoff due to a knee injury said, "The matches over break just built up my record, but the upcoming conference matches will have more bearing on how I'm seeded at the conference tournament."

When asked about his constant, almost no-win situation Perkins stated, "It's really tough without the people to work out with but numbers are something that I have no control over." Chris Iverson had a little different viewpoint on the team's size. "As a team we are very close-knit and with less people we get more time to work on things in practice."

With the wrestling season nearing its end, 142-pounder Kevin Burbach commented, "Right now we are just concentrating on our own records for seeding in the conference tournament. We aren't thinking about winning dual meets with so few wrestlers."

The Blue Devils take on the Stevens Point Pointers this Thursday, Jan. 23, at 7 p.m. in Johnson Fieldhouse.



Stout heavyweight, Dave Witt had the advantage over St. Olaf's Ron Carlson here, but the match eventually ended in a 5-5 draw.

Head Football Coach Bob Kamish resigns post after 6 years at helm

Rochelle Buhr
Sports Editor

Bob Kamish, head football coach of the UW-Stout Blue Devils has resigned.

Kamish, head coach at Stout since 1980, will receive a new assignment.

While head coach for the Blue Devils, Kamish compiled a 28-36-1 record overall, and a 20-28 record in conference play. This past season, Kamish compiled a 3-7-1 record, placing eighth in the WSUC.

Kamish has more total football wins than any other coach in Stout's history. He also possesses the record of most total wins in a single season.

Kamish succeeded Lyle Eidsness as head coach in 1980 after 12 years as an assistant coach on the squad. As defensive coordinator under Eidsness, Kamish fostered one of the most effective defensive units in the country. Consequently, in 1980 the Blue Devils were first in defense in the conference and seventh nationally among NAIA schools.

Bob Kamish

Kamish's third season was his best, finishing 8-3 in the WSUC.

Before coming to Stout, Kamish coached football and track in Bird Island, Minn. He also coached at Turtle Lake and Stanley-Boyd High Schools.

Kamish came to Stout in 1968, serving two years as offensive line coach under Max Sparger and then under Sten Pierce. He became defensive coordinator in 1977 under Eidsness.

Also, Kamish has been head track coach at Stout. His 1972 squad was WSUC co-champion. He was named District 14 and area coach of the year that same year.

"Coach Kamish developed an extremely good relationship with his players. Although this was not a winning season, I never sensed a letdown on the part of Bob or the team," UW-Stout Athletic Director Warren Bowlus said.

Presently, a replacement is being sought to fill the vacant gridiron head coaching job.

Champagne on hold

Rochelle Buhr

Over Christmas vacation, I, like a lot of Americans, settled down in front of the black box in my comfy chair and watched the bowl games.

Being from Pennsylvania, I was particularily interested in the Orange Bowl because Penn State was vying for the national championship.

My family and I were prepared for the victory celebration complete with popcorn, kippered snacks, and a token bottle of orange champagne to toast the Penn State boys when they would have clinched the big one.

They looked good in the first quarter, and then started playing lousy. Dad and I then decided that we would drink the bottle of orange champagne during halftime if they were winning.

Disappointed during halftime because of the Nittany Lions' scrappy first half play, and because they were behind in points, I decided to go to bed, and dad fell asleep in his chair. The next morning I found out that Penn State had lost, and thought about that bottle of orange champagne sitting in the refrigerator.

It's still there. Maybe next year dad and I will uncork it. If they lose again, we could still wallow in orange bubbles.

Why didn't we think of doing that this year?

I had to name my column. This is something that caused me to bug my family members and creative friends to please give me some ideas.

My dad thought up "Shooting from the Hip." I had to do some slick public relations with my dad to nicely tell him that I thought that idea stunk. I think I am among company with most females in wanting their hips to just be there, and not to bulge out weekly in a column.

My dorm sisters and I had fun thinking up "Roch's Sports Clips." Unfortunately, this idea was scrapped because of it's strong druggy connotations.

"Cock and Bull," was handed to me by my sister Nicole. I had to refuse this one too. I have had enough prank phone call experiences for one year, and thought about how this column heading could lead to a few more.

After some deep thought and a couple of sleepless nights, I decided to name it what is seen above. Dad had a fit. He changed his mind about "Shooting from the Hip." Now he wanted me to name it "Between the Lines."

I didn't care what dad thought now. I wanted to be rebellious. Also, I thought that idea stunk too.

The Superbowl is this Sunday. Think about how much hoopla and money really goes into this game.

Recently I read in Time that the Timex watch people had developed a special commercial that is designed to grab the superbowl watcher in the first few seconds it is shown.

I wonder if the American public really wants to be possessed and mesmerized by a giant watch. Can those people on Madison Avenue do this to us? How dare they try to capture our attention by putting on a big-time football game, and then sneaking in a few products in between, selling them with slick attention-grabbing visuals that cause the football fan to sit in his chair and forget the chips and dip!

I suppose the Superbowl just isn't a game anymore. It is big business at its finest, trying to make the extra buck. It is the American way.

The match-up of teams this year in the Superbowl is really quite hilarious. We have the red, white and blue New England Patriots underdogging themselves into football nirvana, and the black Chicago Bears making chopped liver out of their opponents, and of themselves. (How could they let some video people convince them that they can sing and shuffle? Fools!)

Even though I can't digest cocky football players who make ridiculous music videos, and Jim McMahon makes me gag, I think that the Bears will beat the Patriots by 12. It really hurts me to admit this.

Coaches Corner

Clock limits

Dwain Mintz

I hope that we keep Cicero in mind as we finish out the WSUC basketball season playing some of the nation's best on the road.

After playing tough in a home loss to Eau Claire, we ran into a couple of "buzz saws" this weekend at Oshkosh and Platteville.

This was very rough on our players after experiencing six straight wins and then a big emotional drop from the Eau Claire loss.

I have been requested by several to write an article on the 45 second shot clock rule which was introduced for the first time on the college level.

These two road games at Oshkosh and Platteville provide an opportunity to show how a time restriction, such as 45 seconds, can limit the possibilities for a team to stay in a game of streaks.

For instance, Platteville had devoured La Crosse on Friday and was on a high when we hit town Saturday. They hit their first seven shots, causing a big adrenaline surge for them and completely demoralizing us. The only action we could change realistically was our defense.

In past years we could have moved the ball offensively with a special play pattern wearing the opponent down until they lost their "adrenaline high."

We used this tactic last season at Platteville, and it most likely played a role in our win.

The underdog, or the team who has a shortage of good shooters in colleges across the nation will find it more difficult to compete.

The college game is a far cry from the pros where they have greater individual equity among the teams. Therefore, the one-on-one game is less a factor as compared to colleges who have maybe only one or two players with one-on-one ability.

Over a period of time the shot clock is likely to force more one-on-one play. Consequently, this may be the formula for success in future years.

In any case, we now must rebound from these losses and play extra tough against non-conference opponent Marian College away on Friday and Northland home Sunday at 1:30 p.m. We meet our next WSUC opponent, La Crosse, at home on Wednesday at 7:30 p.m.

Our teams over the years have traditionally finished strong. Come down to the Johnson Fieldhouse and help us gain momentum on the upswing. (The players, cheerleaders and band appreciated the fine crowd at the Eau Claire game — keep it up!)

Tommy Kramer to visit Stout

Tommy Kramer, quarterback for the Minnesota Vikings, will make a presentation to area high school athletes, coaches and the general public at 3 p.m., Monday Jan. 27 in room 208 of the Home Economics building.

Kramer will be addressing goal setting, career planning, sports and nutrition. There will be a question and answer period, as well as an autographing session. Admission is free.

Marquette loses to North Carolina

The Marquette Warriors lost 64-62 to the North Carolina Tar Heels, the number one ranked team in Division I.

North Carolina trailed by nine points with a little more than four minutes remaining in the game, before their pressure defense crunched the Warriors chances to upset the Tar Heels.

NCAA Schools OK drug testing

The National Collegiate Athletic Association said yes to drug testing. Athletes who test positive on a long list of "street drugs," as well as performance-enhancing substances, will lose their eligibilty for a minimum of 90 days.

Brent Tischer to coach for Blue Devils

Brent Tischer has been appointed head track coach and assistant football coach at UW-Stout.

Tischer will serve as a temporary replacement for Steve Terry who is on leave to complete his doctorate degree.

Headband Mania

Jim McMahon, quarterback for the Superbowl-bound Chicago Bears, has popularized "Rozelle" headbands that are now selling for 5 dollars each in the Super Bowl City, New Orleans.

"I'd like to get a cut of that," said McMahon, who wore a similar headband after NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle fined him 5,000 dollars for wearing an "adidas" headband.

Stout hosts Clare Talen Classic; La Crosse gymnasts place first

Suzanne Schroeter
Sports Reporter

The second annual Clare Talen Classic, sponsored by First Bank and Trust of Menomonie, was held this weekend in the Johnson Fieldhouse.

The competition was a two-day event. Friday night was the team competition, and Saturday was the individual finals. Eight teams consisting of many talented gymnasts participated, with the UW-Stout women's gymnastics team acting as hosts.

UW-La Crosse and Hamline University took first and second consecutively to beat out much-favored Winona State, who placed third overall. UW-River Falls took fourth, just ahead of Valley City. Manitoba finished sixth while UW-Stout placed seventh and the University of North Dakota took eighth place.

"Everyone was pleased with how well the meet turned out," Stout coach John Zuerlein commented. There was a lot of competition and many surprises.

Although Stout placed seventh, Zuerlein said he was very proud of his team. He felt they went into the meet with a very confident and positive attitude. "The mistakes they made were mechanical, not mental," Zuerlein said.

Individually two of the team members placed and went on to the finals which were held Saturday.

Lisa Hille placed on the vault with an 8.20. In the finals Lisa also earned an 8.20 and placed seventh out of ten.

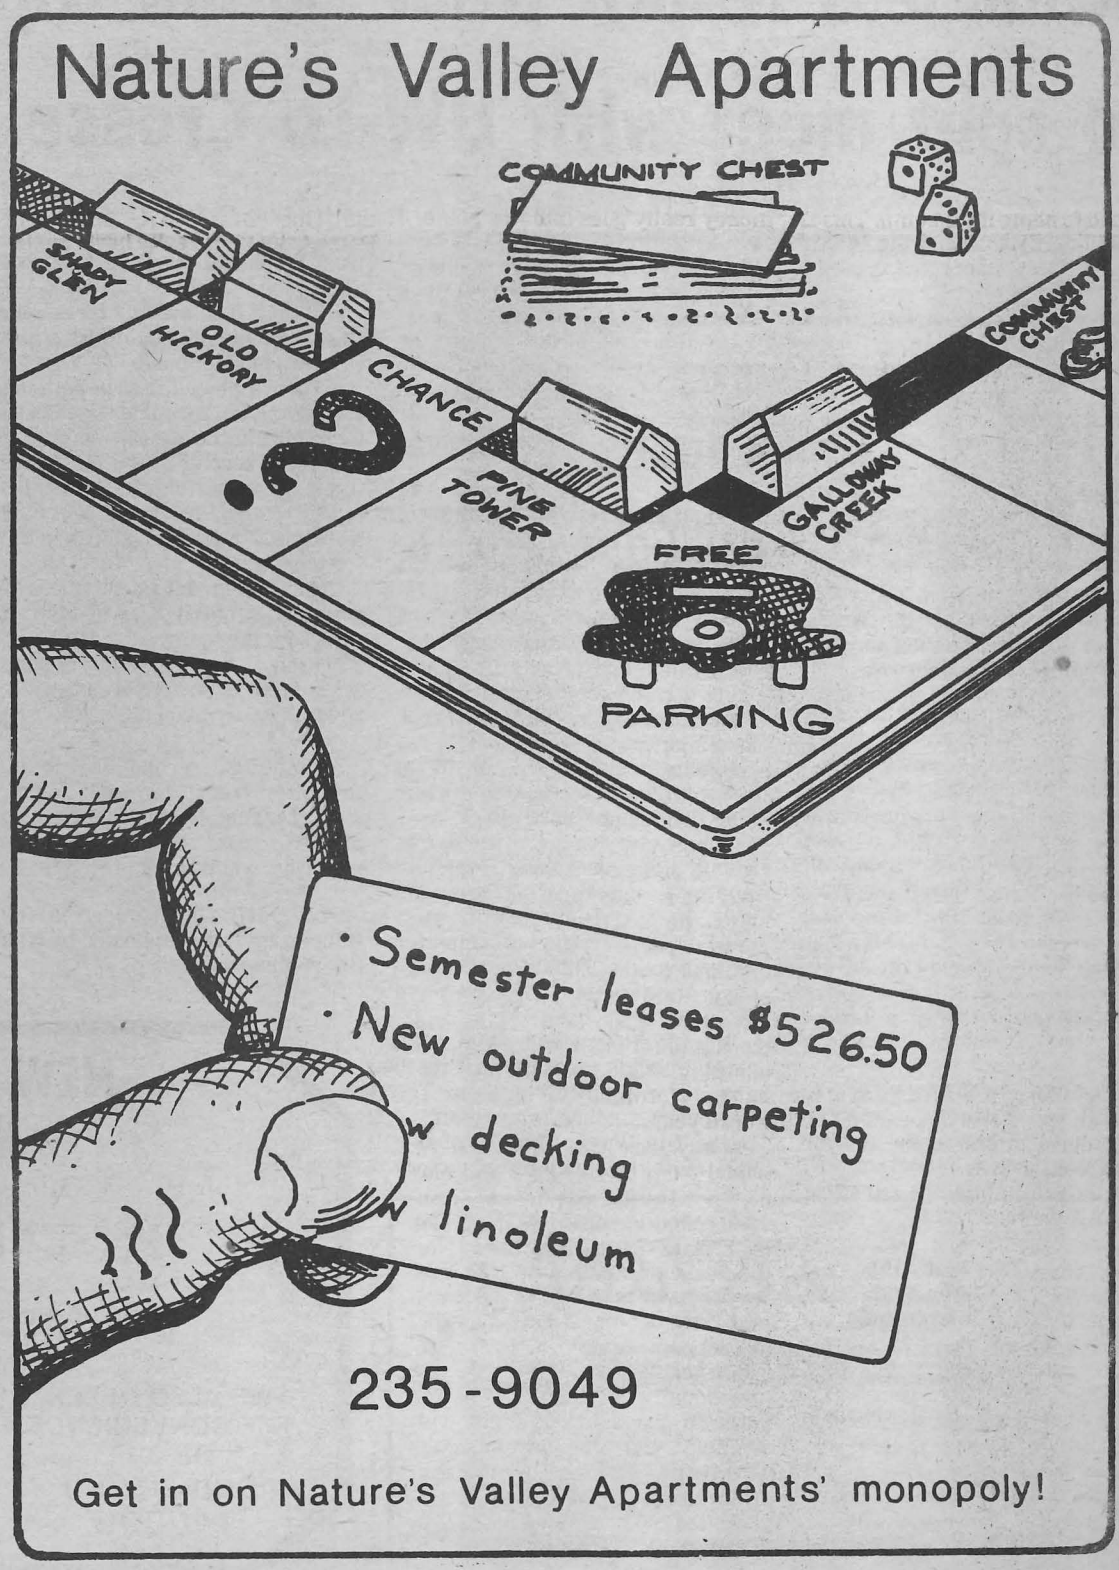
Lisa said that she felt she hit her routines OK. "I was disappointed with the scores, but the scores were low all around," Hille commented. Her goal for the upcoming meets is to work on her connecting moves to make her routines flow better.

Patti Roenitz also made it into the finals by placing on the uneven bars with an 8.05. In finals she took tenth place. "She hit it in prelims but just didn't hit it in finals," Zuerlein said.

"Everything felt good except for the beam," Roenitz said. She felt her strongest area was the bars but she seeks improvement on the vault. "I want to get back to where I was before I hurt my knee, especially on the vault," Roenitz commented.

Assistant Coach Scott Gay felt that the team was in better shape for the invitational, especially mentally, than they were for the meet against the University of Minnesota. "For the future the team should get nothing but better. We have three to four weeks before our next big meet which will give us time to really concentrate and improve," Gay commented.

The next home meet for the Lady Blue Devils will be with Northern Michigan University on Saturday at 1 p.m. in the Johnson Fieldhouse.



Six-game winning streak halted as cagers drop 3 conference bouts

Rheatra Daniels
Sports Reporter

On January 14, the UW-Stout men's basketball team entered Johnson Fieldhouse with a six game winning streak ready to face their rival, UW-Eau Claire. Eau Claire overpowered the Blue Devil hoopsters 60-53.

Cramming into Johnson Fieldhouse were Stout fans, and plenty of Eau Claire supporters. Although Stout controlled the opening tip-off, Eau Claire seesawed with the Blue Devils in controlling the game's tempo.

The first half of play was highlighted by Mark Steven's two ally-oops, and David Sandstrom's driving lay-up which put Stout ahead 14-12 after 12 minutes of play. Chuck Dugger, with his twisted lay-up, led the Blue Devils over the Blugolds 30-29 at halftime.

In the second half, coming off the bench, John Patterson led the Blue Devils with 10 points. High rebounder for Stout was Rick Stephan who hauled down nine under the boards.

Slowly chipping away, the Blugolds finally took the lead over the Blue Devils with 12:28 remaining. The Blue Devils were never to catch up.

The Blue Devils could not contain Eau Claire's Brian Krueger who chipped in 18 points to lead the Blugolds in scoring.

Eau Claire has defeated Stout in their last two meetings. Eau Claire now leads the series 81-45. The series dates back to 1916-17.

Over Christmas break Stout defeated Marian College 106-73. Also, the Blue Devils topped UW-Milwaukee 73-54, St. Norbert 66-59 and UW-River Falls 70-60 for their sixth straight win.

This weekend the Blue Devils traveled on the road and were defeated by UW-Oshkosh 83-74 and UW-Platteville 85-72. Mintz stated, "The team was flat because of the Eau Claire loss."

Stout high scorers against Oshkosh were John Patterson and Mark Stevens who each had 12 points. Rick Stephan had 11 points and 12 rebounds. Stout's reinstated Ron Hunter scored all of his 10 points in the second half.

Against UW-Platteville Rick Stephan paced Stout with 15 points, and 10 rebounds. Patterson had 11 points and Greg Jansen added 10 points to the Stout tally.

John Patterson, a junior from Brooklyn, New York, has been named the Blue Devil men's basketball player of the week.

Patterson, a 6-4 forward, scored 33 points and grabbed eight rebounds in the three hard-fought losses for the Blue Devil team.

The Blue Devils next home game is January 26, against Northland College.

Swimmers return from Florida trip to split meet with UW-La Crosse

Kim Steger
Sports Reporter

After a week of strict training and intense competition in Florida during Christmas break, the UW-Stout swim teams came back to school ready to attack tough competition.

Friday's meet against UW-La Crosse earned the women's team a 62-49 victory, while the men's team fell 42-69.

Last Friday, the Blue Devil women earned themselves a 62-49 victory against La Crosse. La Crosse, a very important dual meet, was felt to have been the best meet of the year according to John Miller, head coach of the men's and women's Blue Devil swim teams.

The 400-meter medley relay team of Cheryl DeBaker, Anne Branson, Wendy Heineke and Laurie Potter won their event with their second best time of the year. The 400-meter freestyle relay team of Steff Weiss, Marie Fortier, Jennifer Krupke and Jackie Gilbert also placed first with a time of 3:58.

Jill Shlimovitz placed third in the 1000-meter freestyle event. She also placed third in the 200-yard backstroke.

Taking first in the 200-yard backstroke was DeBaker. DeBaker also won the 50-meter freestyle event while Potter took third.

In the 100- and 200-meter freestyle events, Gilbert took two firsts, while Weiss placed second in each race.

Branson swam to a victory in the 200-meter breaststroke.

Heineke won the 200-meter individual medley with the time of 2:22. Placing a respectable third in this event was Krupke. This was Krupke's first competitive 200 IM race. "Jennifer scored real important points. She did a nice job," Miller remarked.

In the 200-meter fly, Fortier placed second while Potter took fourth place.

Placing fourth in the IM diving event was Terri Peterson while Lisa Bjerkelund took fifth.

"The victory over La Crosse was a big stepping stone. Hopefully everyone can stay together and win as a team, not just individuals," Co-captain Jennifer Krupke said. "Other teams may have more quantity, but we have more quality."

The UW-Stout men's swim team came up short against La Crosse and lost with a score of 69-42. The 400-meter medley relay team of Lerbs, Stu Boese, Steve Kostrova and O'Reilly swam to a victory with a time of 3:49. The 400-meter free relay team of Brad Stark, Kurt Siebert, Lerbs and Kukuzke also placed fourth.

Kostrova placed first in both the 200 IM and the 200-meter fly. Boese took third in the 200 IM.

Placing second in the 200-meter freestyle was Kukuzke who also placed third in the 500-meter freestyle. Nelson placed fifth in the 500 freestyle.

Coach Miller felt that the loss of points was partly due to lack of divers on the team.

National qualifier Boese took third in the 200-meter breaststroke while O'Reilly placed fourth.

Swimming to second place in the 50-meter freestyle was Stark. Siebert placed fourth. Siebert also placed fourth in the 100-meter freestyle, while Stark placed first.

The Devils' next meet is the Blugold Invitational hosted by Eau Claire this weekend.

Wurtz released pending appeal

Maria Wagner
News Reporter

Robert P. Wurtz, a professor in the Counseling and Psychological Services Department at UW-Stout was sentenced Monday, Dec. 30 to nine months in county jail for his conviction on a misdemeanor sexual assault charge stemming from an incident last January 1984.

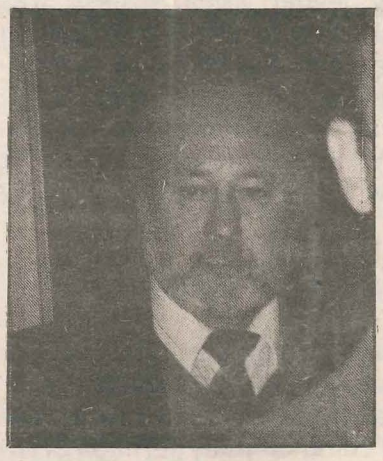
Wurtz was released from jail Tuesday, Dec. 31 after an appeal was filed by his attorney and he posted a $5000 signature bond as ordered by Dunn County Circuit Court Judge Donna Muza. Judge Muza allowed Wurtz to post the bond on the condition that he have no unsupervised contact with minor children other than family members and that he not leave the state without the court's permission.

Judge Muza stayed the execution of the Wurz's sentence Jan. 9 after Menomonie Attorney Phillip Steans filed an appeal on his behalf.

According to John Enger of University Relations, Wurtz is presently on a non-teaching assignment with the Education & Human Services department at Stout writing grants and doing research.

The University can not dismiss a teacher with tenure but must present the case to the Board of Regents. The process for dismissal begins with a notice of charge and a local hearing both of which are required before the case may be presented to the Board of Regents.

If the criminal charge is upheld, dismissal proceedings will be intitiated.
—John Enger
University Relations



Robert Wurtz

The University will wait to see if the charge is upheld before any dismissal proceedings take place, said Enger. "No action will be taken until the outcome of the appeal is upheld," said Enger, "If the criminal charge is upheld, dismissal proceedings will be initiated."

Wurtz was convicted Thursday, Oct. 10, 1985 by a Dunn County Circuit Court of three counts of fourth-degree sexual assault on a 16-year old friend of his daughter who spent the night in his home Jan. 20, 1985.

International fair displays students' cultural heritage

Tim Hopkins
News Reporter

Shoppers at the Thunderbird Mall were given the opportunity to "learn something new" as they walked from store to store. The Second Annual International Fair was held Saturday, January 25, filling the Mall with the colorful costumes, music and foods of seven different countries.

The fair was sponsored by the International Relations Club and co-sponsored by the Friends of International Students, a community organization. The international students were in charge of planning the exhibits to represent their country with the "Friends" acting as supervisors.

Seven exhibits were set up throughout the Mall, representing the countries of: Malaysia, Hong Kong, Taiwan, Singapore, Wales, Norway and the Caribbean. Students working at the exhibits wore traditional garb and exhibited various types of displays representing their homeland.

The Hong Kong, Singapore and Taiwan exhibit displayed colorful, handmade satin shoes and fans, along with bright paper lanterns, which are customary to Hong Kong. They were also selling fried Won Ton, a traditional dish. A Chinese student at the exhibit would translate shoppers' names into Chinese and write it on colored paper.

Norway was represented by Etti Salomonsen, who has been at UW-Stout for two years. Her exhibit displayed a great deal of the Norwegian landscape, with postcards and photographs of the different regions of the country. A slide show presented the traditional wooden cabins and motels, with grass-covered rooftops and open fireplaces.

The fair is a nice opportunity for the community people to meet international students.

H & R Student

The exhibit also contained handmade sweaters and shoes, along with handpainted wooden bowls. "All the bowls are wooden and handpainted by what is called rose-painting," Salomonsen explained, "and different regions of the country use different colors and have different things painted on them according to the region of the country."

The Caribbean exhibit displayed maps of the country, along with pictures of the area. Along with the international exhibits were booths from Higgins Travel Service and Sunshine Travel Agency. They each offered travel brochures and information on vacations to many areas.

Malaysia was represented by several people, dressed in costume and selling a number of ethnic foods. The foods offered included: a pink Malaysian punch, fish crackers, coconut rolls, and Kuih Kena, a sugar doughnut made from yams. Viewers at this exhibit seemed particularly interested in the egg rolls, which were claimed to be "delicious" and another type of food called Satay, a spicy beef served on a stick.

The exhibit also displayed many pictures of the Malaysian culture, including pottery, fabrics, silverware and pewter.

The Wales exhibit presented handmade articles, including wool sweaters and woven mats. There was also a large wooden flat bat and a ball for playing cricket, which the exhibitor claimed is "a game similar to baseball, only more skillfull."

Along with the displays and the food, music was provided by Stella

Solidarity leader stands trial

Gdansk, Poland-Solidarity leader Lech Walesa was notified he will go on trial Feb. 11 in Gdansk, Poland on charges of slandering state election officials by allegedly releasing false voter turnout figures, his wife said.

The legal moves mark an escalation of the government's campaign against Walesa, who was interned for 11 months after martial law was imposed and Solidarity was suppressed.

Presidential campaign heats up

Manila, Philipines-President Ferdinand Marcos on Monday warned that Corazon Aquino, his rival for president, might declare martial if she is elected. Acquino answered that only Marcos could do that, perhaps even before the Feb. 7 election.

While Acquino accused Marcos of "panicking" as the election approaches, Manila's military police chief declared a citywide "red alert," a routine measure for Philippine elections although not usually done this early.

Space shuttle disaster stuns world

Cape Canaveral, Florida-America and the world was stunned by the tragic death of the seven astronauts that resulted from the explosion of the Space Shuttle Challenger only moments after lift-off Tuesday morning. Approximately one minute and 15 seconds after lift-off the explosion occurred.

In Washington, President Reagan expressed his grief at the loss of Astronauts Gregory Jarvis, Christa Mc Auliffe, Ronald Mc Nair, Ellison Onizuka, Judith Resnick, Francis Scobee, and Michael Smith. The astronauts were scheduled to study Halley's comet on this flight. Reagan said that out of respect to the sacrifices of these individuals the space program ought to continue forward.

Exxon must pay back states

Washington, D.C. The Exxon Corp. must pay more than $2 billion to the states for overcharging oil consumers under the largest money judgement ever to become final in a U.S. court. The Supreme Court made the award final by refusing to hear Exxon's appeal.

That left standing rulings by lower courts requiring Exxon to pay over $2 billion in rebates and interest to states on proportion to their resident's share of America's use of petroleum products.

Budget remedy will pass

Madison- Wisconsin legislators have predicted passage by Friday of Gov. Anthony Earl's 152-page prescription for curing the projected state budget deficit. Republicans said the state treasury would wouldn't be threatened by a deficit if the governor and Legislature enacted annual budgets instaed of two-year documents.

A nation mourns

Compiled by Paul D. Nelson

"We are checking with recovery forces to see what can be done at this point. ... Contingency procedures are in effect. ... Vehicle has exploded. ... We are awaiting word from any recovery forces downrange" were the messages relayed by a NASA mission control specialist at the Kennedy Space Center after the seven member crew of the Space Shuttle Challenger lost their lives when 526,000 gallons of liquid hydrogen and oxygen in the spacecraft's main engine exploded for reasons not yet determined.

The $1.2 billion spacecraft, which was one of four used by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA), lifted off the launch pad at 10:38 a.m. CST on Tuesday.

The explosion occured approximately 72 seconds after liftoff.

The only parts of the Challenger to survive the devastating explosion were the two first-stage solid fuel rocket boosters. A NASA mission control specialist detonated these remaining engines approximately one minute later because of the concern that they may land in a heavily populated area.

The Challenger had suffered five launch date postponements before the disaster. Earlier this month, the Space Shuttle Columbia experienced seven launch delays before successfully completing its scheduled mission.

Tuesday's attempted Challenger mission was the twenty-fifth shuttle mission since the program's inception.

The previous American space related disaster occured on Jan. 27, 1967 when the three astronauts aboard Apollo One perished after their capsule burst into flames before liftoff.

President Reagan, after being informed of Challenger's fate, conferred with selected members of Congress and made the decision to postpone Tuesday's State of the Union address for one week.

The House of Representatives, who were in session when they received news of the tragedy, adjourned for the day after the chamber's chaplain delivered a prayer for the astronauts.

American embassies around the world flew their flags at half mast in tribute to the crewman of the Challenger who gave their lives in service to their country.

The five men and two women killed in the mishap were pilot Mike Smith, flight commander Francis R. Scobee, and mission specialists Ronald E. McNair, Ellison S. Onizuka, Gregory Jarvis, Judy Resnik and Sharon Christa McAuliffe.

McAuliffe, who was not only NASA's first citizen in space, but the first teacher as well, was selected from a group of 11,146 teachers who applied for the spot.

King colleague to rekindle dream

Tim Hopkins
News Editor

The internationally renowned civil rights leader Dr. Ralph Abernathy will speak on the UW-Stout campus at 8 p.m. Tuesday, Feb. 4. The talk titled "The History and Future of the Civil Rights Movement" will take place in the Great Hall of the Memorial Student Center.

Dr. Abernathy's struggle to gain civil rights and human rights for the oppressed spans more than 30 years. He is perhaps best known for working side-by-side with Dr. Martin Luther King starting with the Montgomery, Alabama bus boycott.

He and Dr. King's major achievements include the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965. Dr. Abernathy was at Dr. King's side April 4, 1968 when he was assassinated. At that time, Dr. Abernathy took up the leadership of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (S.C.L.C.)

I do think that the young Black Americans need to pay more attention to the issues.
—Patsy Barnes

Dr. Abernathy organized the Poor People's campaign in 1968. The campaign exposed the plight of America's impoverished people. Poor people of every race and ethnic group joined together to build Resurrection City in Washington, D. C. Congress got the message as legislation was then passed providing free food stamps, health care, day care centers, and programs for the elderly.

Barnes thinks Dr. Abernathy's appearance is an opportunity for people to gain a valuable historical background on the American civil rights movement.

Dr. Abernathy is a man who has had his home bombed, his church dynamited and was beaten and left for dead when he was leading the Montgomery Boycott. Barnes wanted to emphasize the importance of people listening to Dr. Abernathy because he offers a historical perspective on civil rights that is rarely offered to students today.

She believes it is especially important for for young people to know about the past injustices that took place so that current efforts such as Affirmative Action can be judged in the proper context. "I don't think many majority students know that history," Barnes said. "They don't know about those inequities. They didn't know that 30 years ago blacks were given the right to vote."

Barnes thinks that minority youth in America must learn their history in order to protect and maintain their rights today. "They just assume that all the rights that they have right now, that they've always had those rights. That's not the case," she said.

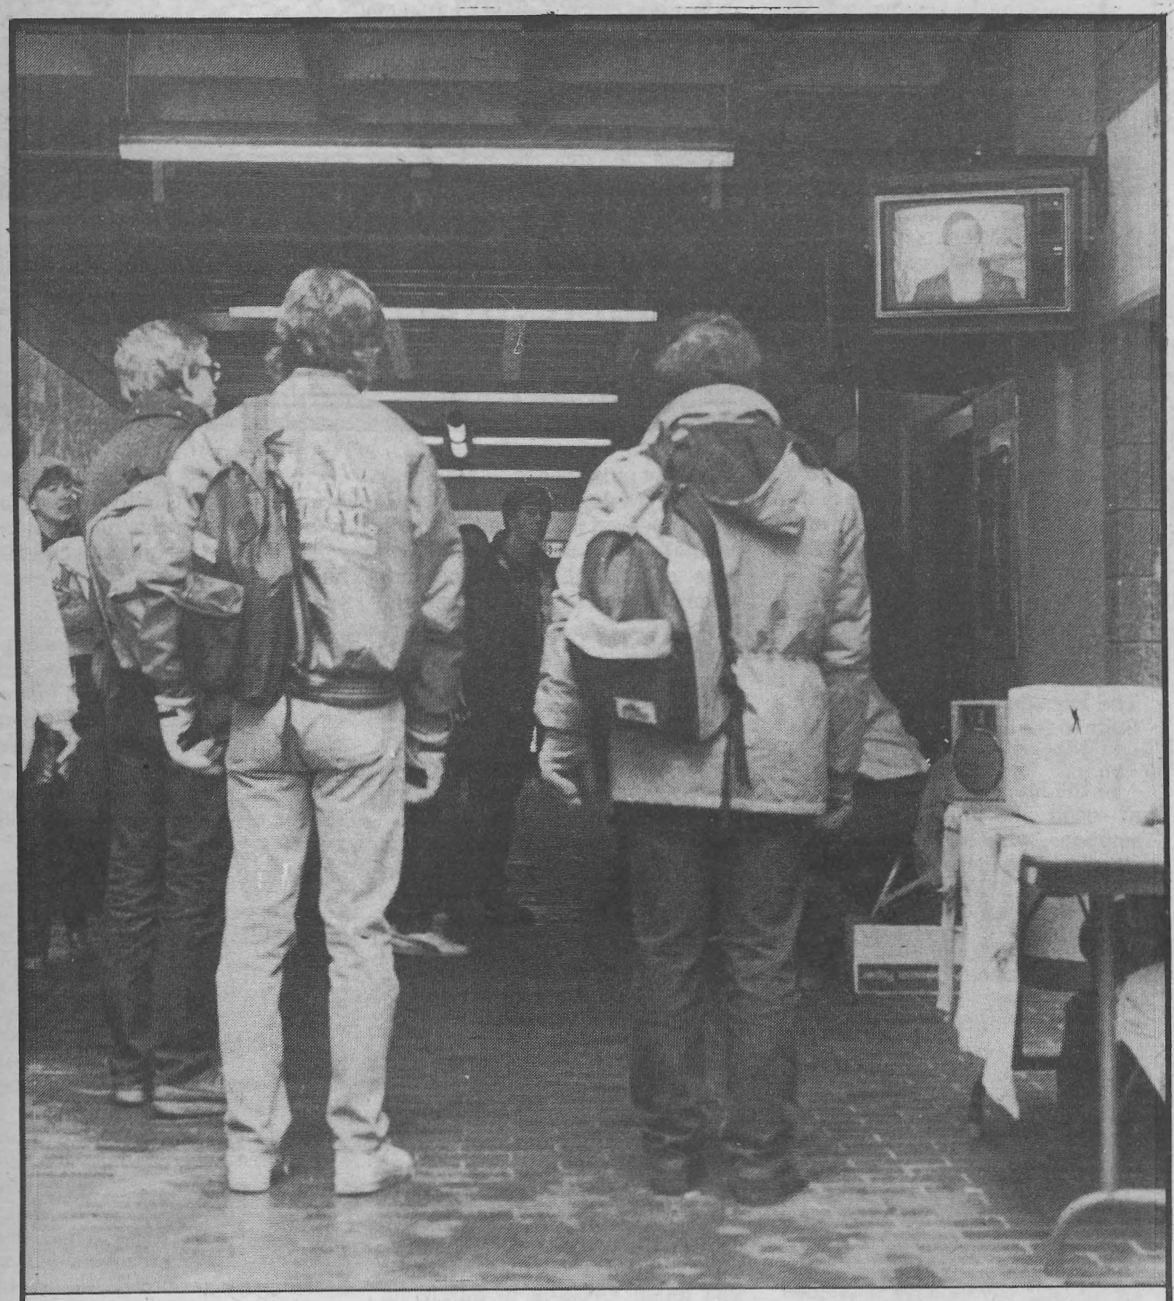
Ralph Abernathy's appearance here ought to be valuable for anyone who wants to gain a better understanding of the ground America has covered in the endless battle for civil rights, Barnes said. "I think it's important that they go to something like this, Ralph Abernathy, and find out what the historical significance is of Affirmative Action."

Barnes hopes that Dr. Abernathy's appearance here might encourage young Black Americans to become interested in contemporary problems directly affecting them. "I do think that the young Black Americans need to pay more attention to the issues," she said. She added, "I think they need to do more searching into their history."

The civil rights movement is alive today Barnes said and it is involved "anytime individual rights are being violated." Her major concern is that the civil rights movement is not getting any publicity these days.

"People are out here fighting for our issues," she said. "Black Americans are fighting for those issues, but you're not going to hear anything about those fights until it gets violent," she fears.

Barnes recommends that anyone who has the chance to see and hear Dr. Abernathy Tuesday night not pass up the opportunity. "If you don't know who he is, you should know," Barnes said.



Students were expressionless as they watched TV reports almost in disbelief which announced the details on the space shuttle Challenger's explosion. The atmosphere throughout the Student Center was solemn throughout this afternoon as the unexpected aspect of this tragedy drastically altered the ordinary patterns of daily life for all Americans. Stout sophomore dies from cancerous tumor

News Reporter

A nightmare had just begun. In May 1985, a former UW-Stout Sophomore, MarySue Buttweiler, didn't realize she only had eight months to live. Unexpected seizures led doctors to believe she was epilepic. By September they realized that her condition was much worse.

MarySue had been diagnosed as having cancer, a disease rare to a person her age. A cancerous tumor had enveloped half of her brain. After going through several treatments, including Colbalt Radiation Therapy, her tumor was beyond the state of remission. Every effort seemed to fail.

With hope and encourgement from her family and friends, MarySue struggled with the deadly disease. Something had to be done because the tumor had grown into a dangerous area of the brain. After extensive examinations MarySue was left with three options.

The first was to remove the entire tumor, leaving her paralyzed from the neck down. The second was to discontinue treatment and pray for remission. The third and final option was to remove half of the tumor. MarySue chose the third option.

During the operation, doctors found that the tumor had spread into her spinal column. After the operation it was determined that she would have four to six weeks to live. Choosing to return home for Christmas, her only wish was to be back in school with her friends.

Upon acceptance of her death, she began something unique. She prepared her own funeral arrangements by choosing passages to be read and selecting her burial attire.

In talking to close friends, I realized how much support she received from her family. Many families have been torn apart, but MarySue's family developed an even closer bond.

On January 16, 1986 MarySue Buttweiler died in peace. In rememberance of MarySue, from her close friends here at Stout, here is a poem written by Susan Polis Schultz:

True Friends

There are many people that we meet in our lives but only a very few will make a lasting impression on our minds and hearts
It is these people that we will think of often and who will always remain important to us as true friends

Missions should continue

Our quest to explore the last frontier, the planets in our solar system as well as the infinite heavens beyond, extracted the ultimate sacrifice this week when the seven member crew of the Space Shuttle Challenger perished while unselfishly serving their country.

The brave Americans who lost their lives in the hydrogen-rich explosion, two women and five men who we will be forever indebted to, were willing participants in a space program designed to benefit all who remain safely on the ground.

Let us not forget that it was only 19 years ago this month that three equally brave patriots aboard Apollo One lost their lives in a fire which engulfed their capsule before the spacecraft left the launch pad.

But even though the Challenger's fateful 72 second flight took seven of our countrymen from us, we should not be deterred in our mission to learn the secrets of the last frontier.

To do otherwise would be an insult to those who have perished in the same pursuit.

Groups lack initiative

The current budget dilemma facing the Stout Student Association (SSA), and all organizations who receive funding via the segregated fees distributed by the SSA, has prompted a great deal of debate among all concerned parties.

But the views currently held by some of the SSA funded organizations in relation to corporate sponsorship, a valuable and much needed policy that last year's SSA Student Senate fought long and hard to acquire, are not only unjustified, but downright arrogant.

The funded organizations who have the most to gain by integrating corporate sponsorship into their operating budgets have openly rejected it in favor of the traditional "handouts" they receive from the SSA. Their spokesmen rely on the pitifully weak argument that too much time and effort would have to be expended to make arrangements with corporate America. Yet even administrative personnel who oversee these organizations have admitted that the obstacles which these groups cite are to a degree nonexistent.

Perhaps these organizations suffer not from a lack of resources, but in reality, a tendency toward laziness.

Crash and Burn

Sky-high obliteration empties soul

Matt Kalina

It was a gut-wrenching sight as the Challenger blasted apart in a ferocious ball of flame two miles above the ocean, 18 miles off Cape Canaveral.

For a day, the nation stopped and was at a loss for words. Instructors found it hard to teach, and students found it hard to listen. The President even postponed his State of the Union address scheduled for Tuesday night.

In the Memorial Student Center at noon the mall was luridly somber, with alarmed crowds stricken with incredulity, gathered around the TV's attached to the walls and in the TV lounge.

It was a maximum heartbreak, a prevailing mood of despair and anguish, great emotion and deep compassion, disbelief and shock. Everything seemed to fall apart, drawing a vain search for answers.

I had just finished brushing my teeth at 10:50 a.m. when I first heard news of the catastrophe break over the radio in my room. All I remember hearing was, "...all seven astronauts are feared lost." I rushed downstairs to the TV to find out exactly what had happened. I hauntingly felt the hair on my nape stand on end as I heard further details that the space shuttle had exploded like a hurling air-born bomb.

Watching a piercing re-play of the mishap brought all my cluelessness stingingly out of the dark. My pulse raced in high gear as my eyes gazed at the launch. It first appeared to be like all others, normal, until the elapsed flight time of one minute 12 seconds when the vehicle suddenly became a fireball.

Although it was not officially confirmed that anyone lived through the terrible explosion at that time, I knew in my mind at that instant that there was no chance of survival - they were all killed.

But I stood sliding the channel selector back and forth in shocked disbelief of what I had just witnessed. This couldn't be happening.

It was equally difficult observing Dan Rather momentarily breaking down at approximately 11:20 a.m. as his rigid, emotionless countenance showed telling signs of distress as he described members of the crew from a group picture.

Before the disaster, Americans were caught up in the belief that the shuttle launches were virtually fool-proof occurrences that seemed as typical as airline flights. It was tough sledding to dazzle us anymore. We had become accustomed to the regularity of space flights. It became so routine and automatic that we forgot the risks that astronauts shouldered climbing into a loaded spaceship.

We all bitterly realized Tuesday morning that space travel is just in its infancy. The facts must be embraced that the Challenger was only a machine, a machine that remains to be experimental, and that huge risks dangle from every space mission.

The disaster shadows Monday's anniversary of the only other fatal accident in the 25-year-old history of NASA, in which Virgil Grissom, Edward White and Roger Chaffee burned to their fiery deaths as an intense fire swept through their capsule on the launching pad of Apollo 1 in 1967.

Besides the fact that Tuesday, Commander Francis Scobee, Pilot Michael Smith, Payload Specialist Gregory Jarvis, schoolteacher Christa McAuliffe and Mission Specialists Judith Resnik, Ronald Mcnair and Ellison Onixza perished, this national tragedy poses serious side effects. People may become jaded about space. It raises speculation about the future of manned space exploration, the survival of the space program, NASA's high concentration of the shuttle into its space program, and the aggressiveness to avoid delays. It also casts serious doubts on the shuttles' commercial viability, and the feasibility of the President's Strategic Defense Initiative.

As we stand haggardly enveloped by the deafening rumble of annihilation, a question reverberates, "Where do we go from here?"

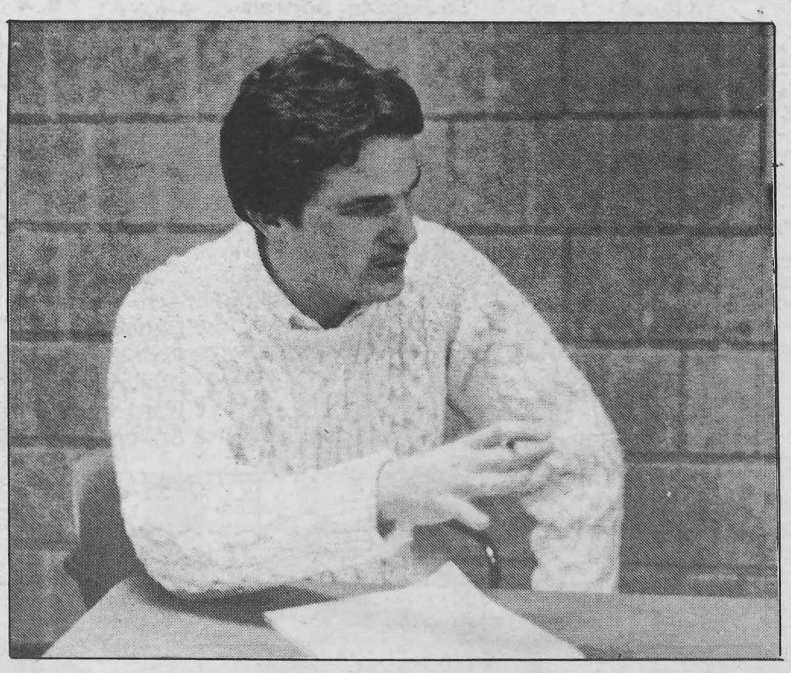
Subject: Referendums on April 1 ballot propose to alter the structure of city government

Text by Matt Kalina



Jay Schroeder, 23, a business administration major from UW-Stout has been an alderman on the Menomonie City Council since April 1, 1984. Schroeder is originally from Clinton Wis.

STOUTONIA: HOW WOULD THE STOUT COMMUNITY BE EFFECTED BY THE PROPOSED CHANGE IN GOVERNMENT AS INDICATED IN THE TWO BINDING REFERENDUMS?

The benefit for the Stout students is the same for the people who have lived here for ninety years and that is that they will be able to elect representatives more directly. So I feel that it is an opportunity to work together with the residents of this city. I'm sure all the students or a majority want an opportunity to elect a representative that can go to the council and have an alderman that will accomplish this. If you have candidates that run for mayor, they have to work with these students' concerns and all residents' concerns because they are elected by them and could be defeated by them. So it is about becoming more accountable to everyone not just special groups.

Change is a 'win-win situation'

STOUTONIA: HOW WOULD THE DIVISION OF WARDS EFFECT THE POSSIBILITY OF A STOUT STUDENT BEING ON THE CITY COUNCIL?

SCHROEDER: As it is now, you run at-large, so you have to run throughout the whole community. If it switches to alderman by ward, the wards are designated by the census and they would be split up into eleven wards. When splitting up these wards, ideally it would have an equal number in each ward. By having a ward you will have a person that has to run in that specific area that has to talk to those people and have to carry out what those concerns are. If they don't, that area has the opportunity to find a candidate that will. But it is a benefit to having closer representation and accountibility. So it's a win-win situation.

STOUTONIA: WILL THE PROPOSED POSITION OF MAYOR BE PLANNED TO BE FULL-TIME?

SCHROEDER: Yes, from my personal feelings of that change I think the people who have circulated these petitions feel that way. They realize that things have become more time-consuming to run the city. A full-time mayor will have the duty to devote his entire day to that — in researching how people feel about issues and trying to set a direction for the community. We are not going back to a part-time mayor.

Dismantling city gov't. immature solution for library disagreement

Did the Menomonie City Council send the Municipal Library Board confusing signals when it asked for an advisory referendum on library construction in 1982? I think so. Let me explain.

In 1976, the City Council sponsored a study of library needs. The study revealed some rather obvious shortcomings in library services and recommended a building program.

The 1977 council created the Municipal Board to expand library services.

The 1979 council appropriated $125,000 to purchase a site. Later that year, the council provided an additional $30,000 for construction.

After six years of study and planning by the library board, the 1982 council asked for an advisory referendum on whether to build a library or not. Since the library board had purchased and announced a site two years earlier, there was little chance that a referendum would be approved in 1982 or ever, for that matter. Site selection alienates too many voters.

If the council needed advice, it was in 1976 when library discussion began in earnest, not after six years of planning and purchases. After learning that Menomonie did not want a library, the city council, regardless of costs, should have dissolved the library board immediately, sold the site and scraped the architect's plans.

That did not happen, however. Instead, the library board was allowed to labor in blissful ignorance, continuing to work for a new building.

In 1985, the state made funds available for library construction. The library board decided to apply for the maximum grant — $125,000. At the same time that this was happening, the state's division of library services told the city to begin operating a public library or risk losing state library services. (Menomonie remains the largest community in the state without a public library.)

There were a number of forces coming together: 1) Menomonie sorely needed a library. Few would dispute that. 2) A state order to get into the public library business or lose state services was pending. 3) With a successful application, Menomonie could receive $125,000 in state building funds. City council approval for the grant application was required. With the grant, the library board had about 75 percent of the funds on hand needed to complete the project.

Faced with an extremely tough decision, the city council could have abdicated any responsibility for the library dilemma by hiding behind the results of the 1982 referendum — pretending that those results were binding and not advisory. Instead, a majority of the council decided to unsnarl a problem that had grown in severity, cost and complexity over a ten year period. To do anything less would have demonstrated irresponsibilty and cowardice. For the council to claim that the 1982 referendum was binding would have been the easy way out, but the ultimate in dishonesty. A cop-out.

In reality, the council could not vote against the grant application without going one step further by dissolving the library board. Why continue the charade if there was no intention to build a library? Of course, there was a catch-22 situation facing the council. Dissolving the library board would have ended state library services to Menomonie.

I admire council members who understand the isues and voted in March of 1985 to resolve the situa-

'Student bashing' over dog messes wasteful

Really Now-Dog Dootie Blues!
I guess it's about time again for "student bashing". Not a few years ago it was all this stuff about noisy parties and questionable student conduct. I mean, hey, life is full of its little smells, messes and noises. That's why humans created the idea of boots, shelters, clothing and other protections.The world will never be full of only neat, tidy, regimented people and that's a fact.

Let's not trivialize every little noticeable interruption of life's steady, predictable pace just to point out that there canbe students around who might simply be taking a little more time growing up. This is an educational community and I bet there was a door in front of that house where a complaint could have been made. Let's keep the Dog Dootie out of the paper too!
P.S. I have gotten annoyed when someone else's dog has done "it" in my yard where it wasn't supposed to. But that was my yard.

I question the motives of those involved in the anti-abortion movement. Have they removed the log in their own eyes before seeking to take away the speck in someone else's, or is it still blinding them? Have they, from lack of experience or understanding, chosen the easy road of self-righteousness, stoning those who have problems and trials in their lives? Does not Jesus say "Judge not" and "Condemn not"?

And what is their "life" in the term "pro-life". Life on earth is a complex matter involving far more than the life of unborn humans. Responsible human beings understand that the survival of ALL life on earth is in our hands. We must care for our water, our land, our air, to keep from being poisoned by unchecked destruction at human hands. We must care for the poor, the hungry, the abused who live among us now. We must take steps to end the threat of annihilation that has come from the unwise use of power.

In Genesis, man is given dominion over the earth and everything in it. How wisely has this power been used? Part of the wise use of this power involves keeping our own race in check lest we overrun the earth and destroy it in the process. Or must we rely on war, famine and disease?

Abortion is not an ultimate answer to these problems. But neither are there answers comings from those people I have heard in the anti-abortion crusade, who attack, accuse and revile others. They are creating divisions where there should be love and cooperation. We have far to go to create a world where there are no unwanted children; where every child born is cared for and loved as is his or her birthright.

But we will never get there by forcing women to have unwanted children. To do so is no less than enslavement. The time and energy expended by anti-abortionists would be better spent on searching their own souls for solutions to hatred and diversivness. Indeed, this movement appears to me to be full of hatred.

But never have I known a woman to have an abortion because of hatred. Despair, yes, anguish, yes, but not hatred. She may have been a victim of rape or incest. She may be working to support her family and unable to leave her job to be pregnant and to care for another infant. Many working situations do not have maternity leave or benefits. She may be physically unable to have another child. Abortion is a sad but necessary act in a world where people do not care for each other enough to find other ways.

And in this instance, caring involves continued and greater research on and use of birth control. It involves loving our children enough to teach them about their bodies and how to become sexually responsible adults. Above all, caring means that we, every one of us, become peacemakers and leave our stone throwing days behind us.

Debate on calendar drawing to a close

Tim Hopkins
News Editor

Proposed changes in the academic calendar for the next two years raised questions in student's minds about the process involved in developing the academic calendar. The biggest reaction results from the planned ending of the Fall Semester as late as Dec. 23.

Chancellor Robert Swanson and Faculty Senate Chairman Robert Moran have expressed complete agreement about the need for these changes.

Chancellor Swanson made it clear that whatever changes were made, somebody would have been left unhappy. Both Swanson and Moran said that the severe time constraints for making these changes probably added to the disenchantment among students about the new schedule.

"It was the sudden happening of the legislature coming in and saying, 'you can't start until this date,' that caused us now to very quickly have to recast it," Swanson said. "Any time you change something," he said, "you're bucking an awful lot of tradition out there and people who aren't necesssarily against it just don't comprehend this change."

Moran commented that, "No matter which of the options you choose there is a lot of objection to them." Moran believes that for professors "the one (calendar) that has the most popular support is the one we're going to have next year and the following (year.) I would say that support is overwhelming."

Both men were aware of students'concerns about transportation problems for those students having final exams as late as Dec. 23. Moran allayed these concerns when he said that the later ending date for evaluation week "is only going to effect a small minority of (students). It depends on how the registrar distributes the tests."

The change to the later ending semester was forced by the problems foreseen resulting from the nearly week long contact period for new students. "There would have been six solid days where the students would have had absolutely nothing to do."

Housing Director Judy Spain said it would be a bad experience for so many new students to start their college here without anything planned for them to do. Chancellor Swanson agreed with these concerns when he said, "Why would you have people here for four or five days with nothing for them to do? What would be the point of getting them here?"

The proposed calendar for the next two years has more class days in the Spring Semester than in the Fall. Moran said there would be a loss of approximately three class hours per student per class at the

Since postponing Christmas vacation to accomodate the new academic calendar is unthinkable, the only other viable option would be to have finals after Christmas vacation. Moran said, "That is universally hated."

The option of switching to a quarters system isn't practical because "What was a semester course now becomes a quarter course. The goals would have to be readjusted and so forth. That would mean a complete revamping of the curriculum, 100 percent," Moran said.

The option of going to two shorter semesters with a month long interim seems attractive to everyone except those taking quarter classes because they would feel the most hurt by the reduction in class time each semester.

In conclusion, complaints may exist about the proposed calendar but judging from Chancellor Swanson and Robert Moran's comments, this calendar ought to please the most people.

Diversionary Tactics

After shock

Tim Hopkins

The explosion of the Challenger Space Shuttle is a tragedy from which America ought to learn valuable lessons. We have come a long ways since the launching of Friendship 7 when John Glenn became the first American to orbit the earth.

In the more than 20 years since that major event, we have become awfully matter-of-fact about space exploration. For example, there is no doubt that more Americans tuned into the spectacle of Super Bowl XX than watched the launch of the Challenger.

The interest of practically every American was focused on the series of events surrounding the Challenger's explosion as the details were slowly brought together. Since 1967 when the three Apollo 1 astronauts were killed by a flash fire that swept through their space capsule during a test session, America has had 19 years of space launches that occurred without tragedy.

The shock of the Challenger's explosion contrasting with America's successful history of manned rocket launches led most if not all who observed the explosion on TV to initially react with the thought, "This can't be happening."

Over time, Americans had grown to ignore the risk of space travel. The sense of adventure had disappeared. Until a minute and 15 seconds into the fateful Challenger flight, we viewed these "space shuttles" with the concern of someone considering a shuttle flight from Chicago to Milwaukee.

America indicated how unimpressed it was by space travel when people chose not to go out of their way to view The Right Stuff, the film made from Tom Wolfe's book chronicalling the birth of the space age in America.

An emotional turning point occurred during The Right Stuff when a then young Chuck Yeager defends the actions of the late Gus Grissom who was being criticized by reporters for his panicked reactions during splash down.

The reporters were laughing about how Grissom had "screwed the pooch," when Yeager abruptly interrupted them. "Gus didn't screw the pooch," Yeager said. "How many folks do you know who could sit calmy atop a candle knowing that any moment they could be spam in a can? No, Gus did all right," Yeager concluded.

Yeager's sensitivity to the risks accepted by those choosing to put it all on the line so we might benefit by their exploration of the frontier of outerspace would be foreign to the average American today. We've been tossing off these space flights as inconsequential.

Looking backward, I fondly remember getting up early one morning with my family to watch John Glenn launching into outerspace. I vividly remember the night that Neil Armstrong first set foot on the moon. A proud feeling filled the room that there would be no stopping us now.

Sadly, I have only a cloudy memory of space shuttle flights. I watched a space shuttle landing one morning this summer when it happened to be televised at the moment I was changing the channels from Donahue to CNN.

If there is a legacy left from the seven astronauts who died this Tuesday, Jan.28, it ought to be that they made America more conscientious about space travel.

In the days ahead we'll read reports from NASA that try to explain the cause(s) of this disaster. It should be like fitting the pieces together to a difficult puzzle to help us reach valuable answers we must have in order to move forward.

Whatever the answers to these questions, our memory of Francis Scobee, Judith Resnick, Ronald Mc Nair, Ellison Onizuka, Gregory Jarvis, Michael Smith and Christa Mc Auliffe ought to make us ever mindful of the sacrifices made by so many to perpetuate our voyage into the final frontier.

So you wanna break a lease

Patti Strassman

More and more individuals are coming to me with the same question- How can I break my lease?

My first response is you probably won't want to after you realize the money and hassle involved. Then I run them through a few basic questions: Is your landlord under any code violation? In other words, Does your rental unit lack plumbing, sewage or hot or cold water? Are your heating facilities unsafe or incapable of maintaining at least 67 degrees Fahrenheit (19 degrees Celsius) throughout the year? How is your electric system? Are there any structural or other conditions which could be hazardous to your health and safety? (City code violations are available in the U.W. library).

If one of these conditions does exist your chances of breaking your lease without having to be responsible for rent lost, or cost of advertising to the landlord to re-rent your space are good. In any other case my suggestion for breaking a lease would be to examine the problem or problems and decide on an alternate plan-(there are alternatives). By working through our service you will find the available resources and proper procedures to pursue your specific problem.

My biggest concern lies behind the large number of people who wish to break their lease because of the basic poor condition of the house or apartment. Cold, drafty rooms, holes in walls or unpleasant esthetics are a few examples.

These are not new problems that just arose. This was the condition of the house when they moved in. And that leads me to my next question - Why did they sign the lease? Didn't they take the time to look at the house they plan to reside in for the next nine-12 months? The answer to the question usually goes something like this-Well ya, and our landlord said he would fix the holes and put up the weatherization stripping. But he never did. In fact he hasn't even been in the house once since he moved in.

That is a bummer, the landlord did orally state he would make repairs, however that doesn't hold up in court too well. Hence, the tenant isn't left with much leverage. What should have taken place is a signed statement on the lease explaining repairs needed and dates promised for completion. Now your landlord is legally responsible to make these repairs. And your a happy tenent.

If you are experiencing problems with your landlord please stop in and see me. I can help.

STOUTONIA: OPPONENTS OF THE REFERENDUMS SAY THAT THIS CHANGE IN GOVERNMENT WILL BE A STEP BACKWARD FOR THE CITY. HOW DO YOU REACT?

SCHROEDER: The only thing I have to say about that is we aren't going to take a step back in time, back into an old way. We are going to take a step back where the people control the government and people tell the government what they want. I think that is what democracy is, and that is what our government is founded on. I can't visualize it being a step back when communities such as New York City do not have a city manager, granted they have administrators to him. But how is their government organized? Is it under a city manager form? Or is it under a mayor form? Around the country and around Wisconsin the overwhelming majority of city governments are organized in a mayor form of government. So it is not a step back or a detriment to the community. If at any time it is a step back, it is a step back to democracy.

STOUTONIA: WHAT DO WE HAVE TO GAIN WITH A MAYOR?

SCHROEDER: By electing a mayor along with the alderman by ward, we will be implementing a system of checks and balances which we do not have now. I think that's the principles our government was founded on. Like in the Congress of the United States, there is a government body that is the house and one that is the Senate. Each state has two Senate members, and the House members are elected by population. So you have two ways of electing officials.

STOUTONIA: DO YOU FEEL THAT THE PRESENT CITY MANAGER, GEORGE LANGMACK, WHO HAS HELD THE POSITION SINCE ITS INCEPTION IN 1968 HAS BEEN EFFECTIVE?

SCHROEDER: In examination of him or his position, I would imagine you would have to compare it to cities of our growth over that 20-year period. But the problem with that is the City Manager is not elected directly by the people. So is he getting a direction from the people?

BUT DOESN'T THE CITY COUNCIL DESERVE THE RIGHT TO REMOVE A CITY MANAGER FROM HIS POSITION IF HE IS NOT FUFILLING HIS OBLIGATIONS?

SCHROEDER: He serves at the council's will. I have never had a formal vote on re-appointing him or the dismissal of him. But shouldn't that be everytime we have a change-over in the council membership? I would think that that would be a correct policy to follow.

STOUTONIA: ARE YOU MAKING ANY PREDICTIONS ON THE OUTCOME OF THE VOTES ON THE REFERENDUMS ON THE APRIL 1 BALLOT?

SCHROEDER: Well, one thing that I feel strongly about is if the citizens of this community become involved or become aware of what's occuring in this city, and want a better opportunity to have a say in this community, whether it be a life-long citizens or a University student I think they will support both of the referendums. This is a chance for the Stout community to students with the life-long residents in a united goal of having more control over the government

STOUTONIA: WILL YOU MAKE ANY PREDICTIONS IN TERMS OF THE NUMBER OF VOTES?

SCHROEDER: I think there will be a very heavy turnout in the election.

STOUTONIA: SO DO YOU FEEL THAT MOST PEOPLE HAVE A REAL CONCERN GOING INTO THE ELECTION?

SCHROEDER: I they have been aware of what's going on in the community and want a more of a say in what's going on, I think it will be very interesting attending or going to the polls. I feel that with public awareness of the issues both referendums will have no trouble passing.

STOUTONIA: WHY HAVE YOU DECIDED TO RUN FOR RE-ELECTION?

SCHROEDER: When I first ran in 1984, I ran as a student from the University and I thought that had positive and negative aspects. I wanted to show the community and the University that a Stout student could work with the community and try to better it. Orginally I had not planned to run for re-election. I had planned on going either directly or indirectly into the workforce or furthering my schooling by going into graduate work.

STOUTONIA: WHAT BROUGHT ABOUT THE CHANGE IN MIND?

SCHROEDER: The things that made me want to run for re-election were the things that I value as an elected official, which are having public input into what is occuring in government. After all, it is the people's government; it's not a group of people. It's the taxpayer's government. The reason I'm running again is that the people should have more control in what occurs in city government. I want to run and try to promote more input. As we get more input for any issue, I think our decision will be easier, because we will be getting all of the alternatives, weighing them, taking a little from each one and fromulating the best policy.

February has been declared Black History Month to publicize the contributions of Black Americans to the discovery, pioneering, development and continuance of America.

The Association for the study of Negro Life and History (ASALH) declared the month long celebration recognizing that "the Contributions of Black Americans have not properly and adequately been presented in the textbooks, media and other communication devices in this country," stated Pat Barnes, Coordinator of Black Student Services.

"Indeed for the most part, blacks have been left out of the written record about America," added M. Sammye Miller. "The designation of the month of Feburary each year is an attempt to remedy this neglect and to provide for all Americans information needed for creative and empathetic understanding about the Black American in the Nation."

February was chosen for the observance of Black History Month by Dr. Carter G. Woodson, Ph.D, the Father of Black History in America. His thinking behind the selection of February was to coordinate the month with Fredrick Douglass and Abraham Lincoln's birthdays due to their prominence in the history of Black Americans.

Many campus commissions have planned events in honor of Black History Month. The Human Services Board is having Civil Rights Awareness Week from February 3-7, 1986. They will present information on civil rights including Assembly Bill 668, which is designed to preclude discrimination by any agency or program that receives state funding.

The University Speakers Series is presenting Dr. Ralph Abernathy on Tuesday, February 4 in the Great Hall of the Student Center. The 8 p.m. event is free of charge.

Abernathy, one-time assistant of Dr. Martin Luther King, will speak on "The History and Future of the Civil Rights Movement." Abernathy was at the side of Dr. King when King was assassinated. After the assassination of King, Abernathy succeeded him as President of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

Other events include the classical movie "A Raisin in the Sun", depicting a black family in the early 1960's; the choir "Sounds of Blackness", presenting a historical walk through Jazz and Rhythm and Blues; and a Black-American theme meal in the Corner III.

"I'm pretty pleased with what the commissions have scheduled for Black History Month," stated Pat Barnes, "I'd like to see more of this in the future."

Money from vending machines allocated to seven committees

Catherine A. Schneider
News Reporter

As you desperately search for another nickel so you can purchase a can of pop from your halls' vending machine, do you wonder where your money is going? And, as you spend your last forty five cents on that Snickers bar, can you realize how much money is eventually collected from the vending machines? Do you care?

Well, if you haven't, can't and don't, perhaps you should. Last year, the vending machines, which can be found in the academic buildings, the Student Center, the Commons, and the residence halls, pulled in commissions totaling nearly $55,000.

According to Jim Freer, the budget and accounting controller, the vending operations are controlled by Auxillary Operations. They are in charge of negotiations with contracters, auditing, collection, and follow-up.

In charge of allocating the money is Helmuth Albrecht. Helmuth said that money from the academic buildings was placed within the Student Centers' budget and that money earned in the residence halls was placed in the IRHC budget. Smaller sums of money earned in places such as the fieldhouse and commons were allocated to these institutions.

Last year, the student center received nearly $28,000. Albrecht said, " We look at this money as an income item. It helps us keep our student center fees down."

Receiving nearly $26,000 was the Inter-Residence Hall Council. This is the money that comes from the vending machines found in the halls. How this money is spent is decided upon by the IRHC hall executive board after they review the budgets that have been submitted to them by their committees. Once the executive board has recommended a budget, it must be approved by the IRHC council.

There are seven standing committees that receive a portion of this money. One of these is the Activities Committee, which receives nearly $8000. This committee brings entertainment to UW-Stout. This year they have done such things as bringing Ray Short to campus and sponsoring a Christmas shopping trip to the cities.

Receiving $1475 is the Residential Dining Services Committee. They are the link between students and the dining services. Special meals, the pumpkin carving contest, and decorations are a few examples of their efforts.

Allocated almost $2000 a year is the Energy Committee. This committee is responsible for such activities such as "black-out" and energy days. They monitor the amount of energy used by each hall and award prizes on the percentage that use goes down.

The Parent's Weekend Committee receives a hefty $4075. This money is used for publicity, booking events, postage, booklets, invitations, and all the other costs involved in Parent's Weekend.

The Leadership Committee receives nearly $7000 a year. Most of this money is spent on the leadership conference in September, and the leadership banquet at which awards, scholarships, and honors are given out.

Receiving a much smaller amount is the Recreation Committee, cashing in with only $690. In the past, this money has been used for such things as the Hall Olympics, foosball tournaments, and trips to see the Milwaukee Brewers.

At the bottom of the expense totals is COPE--A Committee for a Progressive Enviroment. This committee acts a link between the students and the residence hall services. It deals with such things as common area damages, hall contracts, and teaching students about leases. This committee receives $670 per year.

IRHC president Holly Peusse noted that nearly $6500 was spent for the executives boards' budget. This budget includes such items as; half of the room charge of executive board members, transportation and fees for national and regional conferences and conventions, office supplies, national, regional, and local dues, and miscellaneous costs.

If there is money left from the committee's budgets, it will go back to the residence hall office and then into hall improvements. Peusse commented that it was rare to have any money left over, however.

In deciding how to allocate the money, Peusse said that the board looks at how much money the committee received the previous year, what activities they have planned, and how well they have forecast their expenses. When making these decisions, Peusse said, " We look at who will benefit the most and how many people will benefit. That is the criteria for our budget."

University Notes

UW-System costs

Despite tuition increases higher than the national average, the University of Wisconsin System is less expensive than the average cost at a public university. According to current estimates, students at UW-Madison paid $3,750 to $4,027 in tuition, room and board for 1985-86. The average charge at a public university was $4,587 for tuition, room and board. A spokesman for University Relations, Harvey Breuscher said fees at the university were rising "fast enough to give students nosebleeds," but the school was still among the lowest priced in the nation.

Teachers recruited

Recruitment is taking place to fill university level teaching positions in many disciplines for Summer and Fall 1986 and Spring 1987 in an extensive educational program sponsored by Indiana University and the Midwest Consortium for International Activities. The setting is a new facility just outside Kuala Lumpur, capital of Malaysia. Call the Office of International Programs at Ext. 1896 for more information.

Industry/Education

UW-Stout is one of seven institutions in Wisconsin to participate in a newly formed "Center for Manufacturing and Productivity." In addition to Stout, other member institutions are Milwaukee School of Engineering, Marquette University, UW-Madison, UW-Parkside, UW-Milwaukee and UW-Platteville. John Entorf, Associate Dean of Stout's School of Industry and Technology, said that the center reflects a growing relationship between the state's educational institutions and Wisconsin business and industry.

The National Student Campaign Against Hunger has launched a program to combat hunger in America, funded by a $100,000 grant from USA for Africa. The program, Action for Community Transformation (ACT), offers pragmatic and financial assistance to student projects, as well as a summer expedition to Africa for students conducting the most effective projects in their communities. For more information phone either Hope Ricciotti or Janet Anderson at (617) 423-4644.

Black enrollment

Both the rate and number of black students in the UW-System have declined this decade. Wisconsin Association of Independent Colleges and Universities' data shows that blacks represented five percent of the student bodies at those institutions in 1974 and four percent in 1984. The study warns that the nation must renew its commitment to make college accessible to both blacks and Hispanics, who together will make up more than 25 percent of the nation's population by the year 2020.

Adequacy of library hours questioned

Karen Smith
News Reporter

One of the most heavily used facilities on campus is the Library Learning Center. Due to the limited hours of operation at the library questions are being asked whether it is meeting all of the needs of the UW-Stout students.

The library is open from 7:45 A.M.-11 P.M. on weekdays, 9 A.M.-5 P.M. on Saturdays, and 1 P.M.-11 P.M. on Sundays. The hours are also extended during evaluation week. There are mixed views on whether or not the library should have longer hours or not.

The director of the library, Joe Jax, did not feel it was a major concern, especially since no one has gone directly to him and complained about the limited library hours. This library schedule is a perennial issue though. Jax sees many disadvantages of longer LLC hours.

The first thing he asks is if the students want a full service library, or just a place to open their books, take a nap, etc... "The only logical way that everyone's needs are being met is to leave it open 24 hours a day. This is not only expensive, but impossible on the current budget," Jax said. For four straight years their has been no increase in the budget, and none is foreseen next year either.

In 1984, the Department of Institutional Management did a survey on the hours of the LLC here at Stout. The students were asked to evaluate existing hours and identify preferences for additional or different hours. Fifty-five of the respondents indicated LLC hours are adequate as is. Almost eleven and one-half percent thought it should be opened earlier in the morning, 19 percent preferred later evening hours, and 25 percent said longer weekend hours would meet their needs.

Tracy Lea Landis, SSA Women's Affairs Senator, also feels that the present hours are adequate. "Many students are either too busy or too tired to use the library at night. Students can always study at home too," she said.

Molly Burke, a sophmore Hotel and Restaurant Management major, sees things differently. She lives off campus and does not have a lounge or any place to study quietly. The dorm lounges are often noisy as well. "I think that their should be a room in the library that is available for use 24 hours a day." The University of Indiana, where she transferred from, had a similar room that she said was highly used and beneficial to the students.

Brian Birchler, a junior majoring in Industrial Technology, also thinks the hours aren't long enough. He not only has a heavy credit load, but also works many hours that sometimes go late into the evening. "I think that it should at least be opened earlier for people with 8 a.m. classes and for students to be able to leave their houses or dorm rooms and get into a study environment." He thinks that it is especially inadequate at meeting the working students' needs.

Overall, despite the varied opinions, the hours will probably stay the same until more people indicate their interest and concern about it. The most difficult obstacle to overcome would be overcoming the budget limitations.

Chow has been a student here for three years and enjoys taking part in the international activities. "The fair is a nice opportunity for the community people to meet international students," Chow said, "because some of them may have never had the chance to talk to an international person or taste the food of different countries. It gives them a chance to learn something new today."

This was the second fair that has been held and the Friends of International Students are hoping to continue to hold the fair every year. Nancy Stallsmith, the Chairperson of Friends of International Students, feels that the message behind the fair is "to increase better understanding and better relationships between the international students and the community."

Anyone in the community can become a friend to an international student. Friends get acquainted with the student and invite him or her to do things or call them from time to time to talk. Those interested in becoming a friend can contact Nancy Stallsmith at 235-9465.

SSA exposed to debate on local government

Kelly Cohorst
News Reporter

The Stout Student Association (SSA) faced the issue Tuesday night of the upcoming binding referendums scheduled April 1 in Menomonie. The referendum involves the issues regarding the election of the council members and the reorganization of the cities government.

The voters will be asked to select three council members and to vote on the two referendums. The referendums consist of choosing a Mayoral position over the City Manager, and the other is to add five more members to the city council's current total of seven, creating an 11 member City Council.

The reorganization of Menomonie's government would revert back to a Mayoral system that the city had over 18 years ago. This might be considered taking a step backwards. The major difference between the two governmental styles is that the City Manager is appointed by the City Council, and the City Mayor is voted in by the people.

The most controversial issue in Menomonie currently is the building of the Municipal Library. The Mabel Tainter Library is the only library for the public's use. This library although a landmark is described as outdated by those who worked to create the new library.

Chairman of the Municipal Library Board, Chuck Buelow complained at the meeting that Mabel Tainter Library lacks any access for the handicapped and is considered inadequate for browsing since the space there is limited and access to many books is only available by using a ladder to climb up to the book.

It is also nearly impossible to find adequate parking nearby according to. Since Menomonie decided to build the new library at the Lake Menomin site the city was then able to receive state funds which were being withheld until Menomonie updated its library facilities.

The first half of the SSA meeting involved hearing the opposing viewpoints of the mayoral proposal. City Councilman Jay Schroeder was recognized at the meeting and spoke of the proposed reorganization of the city's government. He pointed out the fact that the mayoral type of government is more democratic because it has a series of checks and balances similar to our federal government.

The Municipal Library Board President, Charles Buelow, interrupted the meeting as he rose unexpectedly and spoke out of turn. The senate yielded the floor to accommodate him. Buelow complained that the Municipal Library Board had not been given the chance to be heard

There were several other speakers who were recognized by the SSA. Library Learning Center Director, John Jax spoke for the Committee to Save Our City(SOC). He stated that if the city was to progress it has to keep moving foward. Jax said, if the city was to change forms of government it would be taking a step backwards. The answers to many of these questions will be made on April 1, by Menomonie voters.

Student association representatives interestedly observe the disagreement between speakers about whether or not Menomonie residents should vote to replace the city manager led government with a mayor. The binding referendum is scheduled April 1 this year. The future of the new municipal library is in the balance. (Stoutonia photo by Jeff Bartels)

Major concert features The Romantics

Karen Heagle
Arts Reporter

Sunday, February 9, at 9 p.m. in the Johnson Fieldhouse, Stout will witness its first major concert in two years. The top forty band, The Romantics, will perform this major concert event.

Preview

Contemporary Music Productions is pleased to be featuring The Romantics. This band, some years ago, had the Top Ten single "Talkin' in Your Sleep," and another popular single, "That's What I Like About You." The band has just launched their second tour for their second album, "Rhythm Romance." The band has released the first single from the album in major cities and it should arrive in Menomonie soon.

A regional band from Minneapolis, Metro All-Stars will open this show. The band has showcased at National Association of Campus Activities, in Wisconsin, and recently appeared in the St. Paul Winter Carnival. In addition to these credits, the band also competed on Star Search last year, and they are releasing their second album.

The Romantics have gotten MTV airplay, and according to Christa Sanicola, CMP chairperson, they have a spectacular stage production, not only through the actual music, but in terms of lighting and the stage picture.

Sanicola, who saw the band perform in Milwaukee, found herself impressed with the band's professionalism, and showmanship: "I've never seen a major show like this. I can't state enough how professional they are. The arena was packed and the crowd was wild. You could have sworn a hot new band was on stage." Speaking of the band personally, Sanicola said, "The guys are real down to earth—real nice guys."

In terms of promotion, local radio station Z-100 will devote a weekend toward promoting the concert. They will be giving away tickets through out the weekend. Since this is the first major concert at Stout since Night Ranger's appearance two years ago, CMP has high hopes that the event will be highly successful. Chairperson Sanicola commented, "I'd like to see the show sell out. It would be a real pat on the back." CMP believes they have a "Class A" act.

CMP believes they have a "Class A" act.

Tickets are $5 for students with an ID, and $7 on the day of the show. The tickets are available at the Service Center, EME Audio Systems, Ragstock, Two plus Two, in both Eau Claire and Menomonie as well as Eau Claire's Union Records and Tapes. So get ready for some Rhythm Romance and rock with The Romantics, Sunday, Feb. 9.

The Romantics, hot national act will fly into Johnson Field House on Sunday, Feb. 9. Sporting a jet-black leather look and a fistful of well-known, quality pop tunes, The Romantics weave their spell aided by a captivating stage show. The Metro All-Stars, powerhouse Twin Cities group open this special CMP double bill.

Gifted instructors display talents; give Furlong Gallery distinction

Jef Maynard
Arts Editor

Furlong Gallery is a place of distinction. The collective exhibition of 10 art department faculty members shows the marks of their distinguished artistic endeavors.

Concurrent with their demanding schedules as instructors, these artists forge and refine their specialized skills.

Review

The surprise of the show is the pair of large ceramic pieces by Gary Erickson. One piece is entitled "Brown Quatrafoil." It consists of four earthenware, organic shapes, fitted into each other. Each layer flares wider at one end, blossoming out into a flower-like arrangememnt.

The bottom layer is glazed in a gray, which acts as a base. The next layer is shorter, made of one inch thick coils, attached so deftly that the joining does not effect the strong coil shape. The coils appear to be merely resting on each other.

The largest "petal" is a similar shape, twisted slightly. The form appears to be constructed of a coil method as well, then tooled on the outside to give it a shell appearance, something like the inside of an armadillo shell.

Nestled inside this outer shell is an intricately woven layer of fired earthenware. The precisely curled strands might twist the nerves of viewers who imagine themselves constructing this work.

The whole work viewed at a distance looks like a sort of water lily blossom or a large floppy basket in a holder.

The second piece by Erickson employs a broader use of colored glazes, and patinas. It removes itself from natural color schemes by the use of a strong medium blue on the elaborate coiled interior. Seen down from the top, the strong blue ribs create a curious and cold inner space.

Listening to the interior of this twister, as if it were a large sea shell, the sound of the sea is not what hails the listener. Rather it is the sound of the electric vibrations in the room. So much for transcendence.

Mystery shrouds this tall, thin piece called "Blue Twister." The bottom section has a corroded copper patina look about it, as if it were a copper vessel recovered from a hundred-year rest in the ocean, or the dried shell of some deep-sea vegetation.

White on white sculptures hang in a crescendo of size. Silently, the fragments, these modern "relics" haunt back to frieze and pediment sculptures of ancient Greece and Imperial Rome.

For Those About to Rock

BeeGeephobia

David Chase

BeeGeephobia: Fear of BeeGee albums.

As a psychology major, I have heard of many different types of phobias. I myself am a victim of a phobia — BeeGeephobia. In the mid '70s life was running along pretty smooth for me. I was going into jr. high, happy with life and pretty stable at that point.

Then it happened, a tragedy struck the nation, "Saturday Night Fever" was released. I was shocked, almost frightened with the thought that they might play the album on the radio. Sure enough the album was played, and if that wasn't bad enough, it became the best selling album of the '70s.

This was the beginning of the disco era, lasting from 1975 to 1979. For rock-n-rollers like me, it was pure hell. For others it was a way to get into the so called "hip" crowd. Now don't take me wrong, I love to dance, but most of what I consider dancing is not found in discotheques.

I think we've all met "Slick" before, he's the guy that wears those tight black pants, red silk shirt, an optional scarf and more gold chains than Mr. T. Slick is one of the unfortunate few who are still caught up in the disco era. He has every BeeGee album made and most of Donna Summers'. But though time has left Slick behind, he still tries to keep up with what's hip. You'll know you've met Slick when he greets you by saying, "Hi, I breakdance."

Alright, enough about Slick, he's a dying breed, but, what if ... now I don't want to start a panic, but what if The BeeGees were to release another album that caused another trend. Could rock-n-roll survive through another BeeGee trend? Let us hope we never have to find out or BeeGeephobia may become an epidemic. What could be worse than another BeeGee album? How about another BeeGee film? I was really pissed off that the BeeGees had enough nerve to take a classic album like "Sgt. Pepper's" and turn it into trash on film.

Well I hope I've made my point in expressing my feelings for disco. Fellow BeeGeephobiacs may rest assured that disco is long gone and The BeeGees are aging rapidly. So goodbye sister disco and long live rock.

Here are my Top 15 albums to survive the disco era.

1. Physical Graffitti - Led Zeppelin
2. One More For The Road -Lynyrd Skynyrd
3. Frampton Comes Alive - Peter Frampton
4. Night At The Opera - Queen
5. Straight Shooter - Bad Company
6. Who Are You - The Who
7. Some Girls - The Roll Stones
8. Fly Like An Eagle - Steve Miller Band
9. Dreamboat Annie - Heart
10. Draw The Line - Aerosmith
11. Free For All - Ted Nugent
12. In Through The Outdoor - Led Zeppelin
13. Fandango - ZZ Top
14. Farewell To Kings - Rush
15. Boston - Boston

Here are 3 albums you should avoid if you are a BeeGeephobiac.

1. Saturday Night Fever - The BeeGees and others
2. Stayin Alive - The BeeGees and others
3. Here At Last ... Live - The BeeGees

THERE'S AN ARMY OF CHOICES OUT THERE.

It's not easy. Sometimes the number of choices you have seems mind-boggling. But sometimes, when you know what you want, freedom of choice is a great thing. Look at today's Army.

There's the Active Army and the Army Reserve. If you qualify for Active, you serve 2-4 years, choose from over 300 skills to train in, and in over 80 of those skills you could be eligible for up to $25,200 in college money.

If you already have a job or are in school, consider the Army Reserve. All it takes is one weekend a month and two weeks a year. Plus, you'll learn a useful skill and earn over $1,200 a year.

Both choices give you career experience, physical conditioning, new friends, good pay, and a chance to serve your country. It's all up to you. Call your local Army Recruiter.

Dirty Dozen to jam

There is no question that the most experimental marching band in New Orleans today is the Dirty Dozen. The Dozen represents an amazing integration, or reintegration of the major advances in jazz and rhythm and blues since 1900.

When you hear the Dozen, you might hear Louis, Coltrane, Monk, Bird, Baby Dodds, Bechet, Pharoah Sanders, Miles Davis, Longhair, and blues great Joe Turner woven into the context of one tune, for instance "Lil Liza Jane."

The Dozen are able to innovate off traditional marching band structures because they are composed of eight (not twelve) young musicians with marching band background in their families and experience as apprentice teenagers in the older bands.

Though the Dozen began as a Kazoo rag band, it made the transition about four years ago into a serious musical band with the addition of baritone saxophonist Roger Lewis and a growing exchange of ideas between Kirk and Charles Joseph.

Bandleader and jazz historian Danny Barker observes, "The Dozen has speeded up the beat. I think it comes from the beat of the high school marching bands. Really, it's too fast for a parade beat. They always have to slow down so the parade can catch up. Only juveniles can dance to them in a club."

The Dirty Dozen will be at The Joynt on Water St. in Eau Claire. The show will be on Feb. 9.

former chairperson of the art department, Orazio Fumagalli. They emerge from the wall, like fragments partially exposed by waves on the shore.

Mixed with their antiquity is an air of modern manipulations generating an image that relates to art as it was and has become.

Another collection of forms of a smaller scale is the impressive metal work of the multi-talented Susan Hunt.

Hunt teaches courses primarily related to graphic design. Beyond this, she has in exhibition, some shining achievements in art metals.

The most dazzling work is titled, "Reliquary for Last True Sail." Surface handling, finish and texture are what make this piece appealing. A sail and thin shaft of a mast are anchored to a base, yet move in motionless space.

The devoted fans of realism in arts are treated to two pieces by Doug Cumming.

Sitting directly across from his still-life painting, called "Duetschland Message," it is more believably seen as a draped black cloth, a painting stretcher, ribbon strips a shelf and an envelope, than as a painting of those objects.

Not content with mere mastery of the ageless craft of realism, Cumming uses the skill to refer to various aspects of modern German society. There is a reference to the flag in th colors of the ribbon, and the "Green" political party among other personalized symbols.

Space does not permit a full review of each of the contributing 10 artists. Creative and highly refined metal works by Humphrey Gilbert and Ron Verdon are in exhibition. Current art department chairperson Gene Bloedorn has exhibited three drawings in percil.

Paintings by Jerry Bowker, William Shulman, and some especially intriguing works by William DeHoff complete the gallery interior.

The Faculty Exhibition II runs through Feb. 14 at Furlong Gallery in Ray Hall.

Furlong Gallery provides special experience with contemporary art

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

Looking for a cheap thrill or maybe a free one? The J. Furlong Gallery, 109 Ray Hall, is the answer. You can experience various forms of art at the monthly shows free of charge.

Sponsored by the UW-Stout Art Department, this gallery is for the benefit of the entire community. During the academic year, collections are shown monthly. The works shown in the gallery are those of professional artists.

Eddie Wong, Associate Professor of art, is the curator. He contacts artists and organizes the exhibits. These artists range in fame from regional to international.

Shows of the past have been thematic or one person exhibitions. The next exhibit, Jan. 28 to Feb. 14, will be the Art Faculty Show II. This will include the works of 10 studio art professors.

Going to the gallery can not only be enjoyable but educational. Artists showing their work often speak at the gallery to share their thoughts about the work and how it was created.

The Furlong Gallery has been in the Ray Hall location for about a year. Before that time it was situated in the Applied Arts Building. An art gallery program has been created simutaneously with the art department.

Last fall the gallery was named and dedicated in honor of Dr. John Furlong. Furlong was the former assistant to the chancellor and a supporter of the arts.

Going to the gallery can provide a different sort of experience. According to Wong there is a problem with contemporary art. People don't understand it. Contemporary art is the work of living artists. This type of art is what is mainly shown in the gallery. Historical art is sometimes rented from museums and shown.

Bill Moran, a graphic design student, has been working closely with the gallery. He created the Furlong banner hanging outside the building. Another banner is being created for current exhibits.

Since the Furlong Gallery is the only one of its kind in the area, it is a good outlet for fine art. According to Moran, it can be a springboard to the understanding of art.

The gallery is open for viewing Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. unless otherwise stated on the gallery door. Fill your leisure time with art. At the Furlong Gallery it's free and it is a thrill.

As the sign says, J. Furlong Gallery. Located two doors from rental resources, the gallery hosts the best available exhibitions. Currently, Art Faculty II is on display, which runs through Feb. 14. This space is a functional size, featuring indirect frontal sunlight. (Photo by Eileen O'Neill)

Alumni Cookbook

Linda Konkol

There's a new cookbook on the market — The Joy of Wellness Cookbook — and it was written by a UW-Stout graduate, Beverly Ryder.

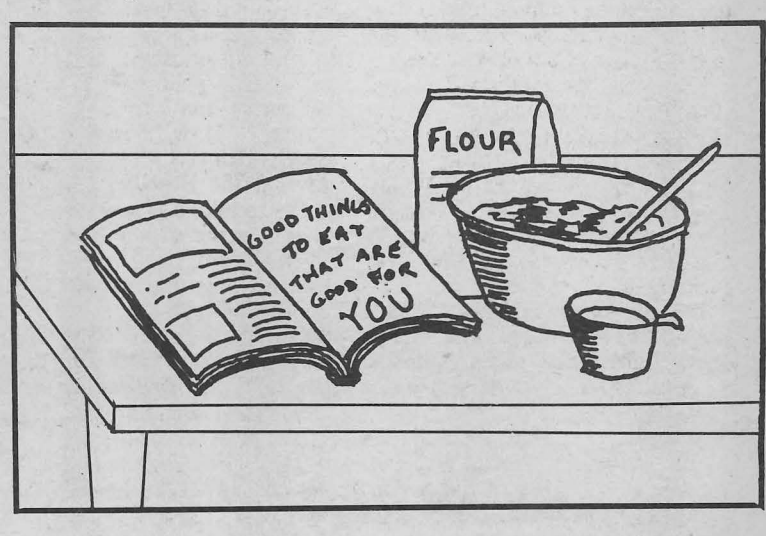
The author, (then Beverly Brehmer), graduated from Stout in 1952 with a degree in Home Economics Education. (At the time she attended Stout, Chancellor Swanson was student body president.)

In the 1960's, Ryder started substituting honey for refined sugar, experimenting with whole wheat flour, and using less fat in her cooking.

that getting the book published was difficult; some publishers were hesitant to print the book because she was an unknown author.

After lots of rejections, Ryder decided to publish the book herself. Now she finds that an entirely different set of skills is needed to market the book and believes what some writers and publishers say may be true, "persistence is even more important than talent."

There is currently a copy of the Joy of Wellness Cookbook in the Stout library, and the book will soon be on sale at the University Bookstore.



In 1979, she started the challenging task of writing a cookbook which emphasizes fruits, vegetables, whole grains, and lean meats, and reduces use of fats, cholesterol, refined sugar, artificial sweeteners, and salt.

After four and a half years, thousands of experiments (some the dog wouldn't eat), mountains of dirty dishes, and several revisions, she completed the Joy of Wellness Cookbook.

The book contains 720 recipes for soups, salads, main dishes, vegetables, breads, and desserts. The recipes contain no sugar, honey, molasses, butter, margarine, oil, egg yolks, or artificial sweeteners. They are also reduced in sodium and low in cholesterol.

The recipes are easy to follow and relatively inexpensive to prepare. However, many of the dessert recipes use dates as the sweetener, an expensive ingredient.

Ryder also includes nutrition research findings, menu planning ideas, fat content of selected foods, and recommended readings.

Ryder says she tried to use the most up-to-date nutritional information available and stuck to the nutritional guidelines she outlined for herself. Her efforts earned her praise from Dr. John W. Farquhar, director of the Stanford Heart Disease Prevention Program.

In the foreward to the book, Farquhar wrote, "The Joy of Wellness Cookbook is timely, and authoritative and health promoting. The American people are in the middle of an important new health revolution and Mrs. Ryder is helping us get there by a route that will increase our eating pleasure while we travel toward a goal of preventing heart attack, stroke and many cancers - all under partial influence of our nutritional habits."

Ryder's work didn't end with the finished manuscript. She found

Here's a sample of recipes from the book:

Pizza Pasta

1 3/4 cups (7 oz.) raw whole-wheat macaroni or other pasta, cooked
4 extra-large egg whites (3/4 cup), slightly beaten
1/4 cup chopped parsley
1 cup skim milk
1/3 lb. ground round
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 cup each, chopped; onions and green pepper
8 oz. sliced mushrooms
1 tsp. basil
1/2 tsp. each: salt, oregano, and fennel (or anise) seed
8-oz. can tomato sauce
1 cup (4 oz.) shredded lowest-fat natural cheese

Toss pasta with egg whites, parsley, and milk. Add salt and pepper to taste. Spread in large nonstick fry pan. Sprinkle remaining ingredients on top in order listed. Cover and bake 35 minutes at 350. Cut in wedges like pizza. Serves 6 to 8.

Quick Raisin Peach Dessert

Crumb Crust:
1/2 cup whole-wheat flour
1/4 tsp. each: salt and baking powder
1/4 cup walnuts, ground
1/8 cup chopped walnuts
Filling:
1/3 cup raisins
16-oz. can juice-packed peaches (or other fruit), drained, sliced
1/4 cup frozen apple juice concentrate cinnamon

Mix crust ingredients. Spread 2/3 of mixture in 9-inch round nonstick pan. Sprinkle with raisins; spread peaches on top. Drizzle concentrate over peaches. Sprinkle with cinnamon, then remaining crumbs. Bake 25 minutes at 350. If you wish, add a whipped topping at serving time. Serves 4 to 5.

Lawrence fills head coach position

Rochelle Buhr
Sports Editor

James Richard Lawrence has accepted the position of new head football coach for the UW-Stout Blue Devils.

Athletic Director Warren Bowlus announced his appointment Wednesday.

Lawrence will be filling the vacant gridiron position that was vacated by Bob Kamish in December. Kamish stepped down from the head coaching job to assume other university duties.

Lawrence was chosen from a list of 100 candidates and screened by a panel of seven members including the three tri-captains of the Blue Devil football squad.

At the press conference, Bowlus introduced Lawrence as having a, "wide and varied background in coaching football." His previous accomplishments support this.

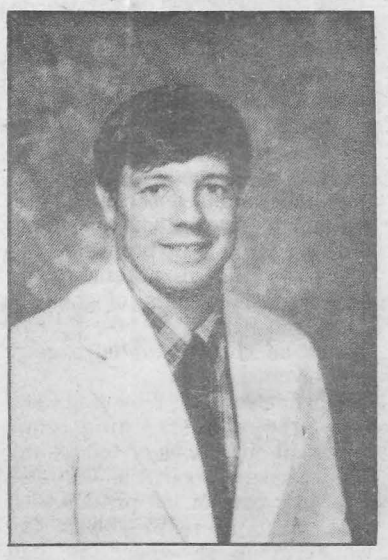
Before accepting the coaching position at Stout, he was the administrative assistant to the head football coach, recruitment coordinator, and a coach for outside linebackers at the University of Wyoming.

He was also athletic director and head football coach at Panhandle State University, Goodwell, Oklahoma. His duration at Panhandle had him turn over a football program that had only one winning season in 17 years, to a 17-5 contender in two years.

Lawrence also has coaching experience at the high school level, coaching four high schools in Iowa and Nebraska.

Lawrence began his playing career in his home state of Wyoming, where he was an All-stater. He received his bachelors degree from Upper Iowa State University, Fayette. He also served as a member of the coaching staff and defensive coordinator at Upper Iowa. Lawrence also received a masters degree from Northwest Missouri State University, Maryville.

Tuesday, Lawrence arrived to sign his contract, which officially takes effect this Saturday. "I accepted the offer immediately. I thought the interview process was done in a professional manner. I'm comfortable with the people, and believe this is a first class organization," Lawrence stated Wednesday.



Rich Lawrence

Lawrence stressed that he will be working to create a good attitude about Blue Devil football throughout the university and the community. He stated that he will achieve this by creating a good feeling in the athletes themselves, and then channeling this good spirit throughout the community.

Lawrence anticipates a winning season next year by being competitive in defense. "I'm a firm believer that championships are won on defense," Lawrence declared. He also added that he will work for a championship, but realizes how competitve the WSUC is.

Blue Devil football tri-captains Brandt Olsen and Chuck Carr also drew praise for Lawrence. "He's motivating and oraganized," Olsen stated. Carr commented, "He's very experienced and skilled. He has changed programs around."

Athletic Director Bowlus is excited about Lawrence's appointment. "We are very happy and pleased to have Rich Lawrence named as our new head football coach here at Stout. I couldn't be more satified with the selection. I think he'll bring in a new attitude to our community of Stout and Menomonie."

Monday, January 27, the Minnesota Vikings' quarterback, Tommy Kramer, addressed a large group of students at UW-Stout about goal setting and career planning.

Kramer, a graduate with a business degree from Rice University in Houston, Texas, emphasized the importance of goal setting. He stressed that your goals are never set too high.

When asked what happens to people who are disappointed by not being recruited, Kramer commented that most college recruiters don't care about you after you've played for their team. So if you're being recruited, make sure you have something to fall back on. Try to get as much out of college as possible. Try to be successful in something other than sports.

Kramer stated that after retirement he would like to get into broadcasting, see his store, Formal Times USA, expand and maybe coach professionally.

Swimmers second in invitational; coach pleased with performance

Kim Steger
Sports Reporter

Last weekend the UW-Stout men's and women's swim teams traveled to the Eau Claire Invitational. Both teams placed second while Eau Claire placed first. Other competitors were Michigan Tech and Lawrence University.

Wendy Heineke swam to two victories in the 100- and 200-meter backstroke. She also placed third in the 100-meter freestyle.

The medley relay team of Heineke, Anne Branson, Laurie Potter and Steff Weiss placed fourth.

Also placing fourth in an event was Jackie Gilbert in the 500-meter freestyle.

Head Swim Coach John Miller commented that this was a low key meet with little pressure. "This was one meet the swimmers could pick what events they wanted to compete in and see what they could do with their times." Two Blue Devil women that Coach Miller pointed out were Jennifer Krupke and Marie Fortier. This was their first competitive 400-meter individual medley race and Coach Miller felt they did well for it being their first time. He also replied that he was pleased with their times.

Placing third in the 200-meter free relay was the team of Cheryl DeBaker, Potter, Weiss and Jackie Gilbert.

Diver Terri Peterson qualified for nationals, which was a nice surprise for both Coach Miller and Peterson. Another Blue Devil diver, Lisa Bjerklund, fell only nine points short of qualifying for nationals.

On the men's team, Steve Kostrova placed first in both the 100- and 200-meter butterfly events.

Placing second with his best time this year was John Lerbs in the 400-meter IM.

> Overall we did well in this invitational. We're right where I expected us to be.
> —John Miller
> Head Coach

Brad Stark also had his best time this year in the 100-meter freestyle in which he placed second.

Another surprise in the meet was Mark Kukuzke's third place finish in the 1650. "It was a real good swim for it being Mark's first time competing in this event," said Miller.

Swimming to third place in the 400-meter medley was the team of Lerbs, Kurt Siebert, Kostrova and Stark.

The 400-meter free relay placed second with the team of Stark Siebert, Stu Boese and Kostrova.

"Overall we did well in this invitational. We're right where I expected us to be," Miller said. Looking at the current national times, five Stout women and three Stout men rank in the top ten. Coach Miller said, "If we keep the swimmers healthy we could do better. We have a good roll going." Analyzing the three remaining conference meets, Miller is confident of a victory over River Falls. He feels that Stevens Point will be a good match-up, but Point will have the home pool advantage. Miller views Eau Claire, one of the top teams in the nation, as very tough. He doesn't see them letting up. "They have a lot of depth and talent," said Miller.

The stronger events in both the men's and women's team are in the middle distance events and the backstroke. The men are strong in the IM events and Miller stressed that the women's team is very cohesive. Low participation of new recruits is one weakness Miller notes on the men's team.

The Blue Devils face a busy weekend with the women's team hosting a triangular on Friday at 4:30 p.m. The men's team will also host a triangular on Friday at 1 p.m. Saturday the teams will swim against the University of Northern Iowa.

Super boredom

Rochelle Buhr

NBC dubbed it "The Superbowl: An American Celebration," and tried to convey that watching this game would somehow make Americans more patriotic.

NBC began their coverage with a drawn-out pre-game show. Merlin Olsen and company presented endless analyzations, graphs, and player biographies that only a hard-core football enthusiast would find interesting. They even included a little break in between their production that featured a dancing weiner and happy sodas. It was still boring.

They made the TV audience scream for the game to begin.

Finally, when the Bears booted the opening kickoff to the Patriots, anxious Americans probably muttered, "This is history."

NBC loved it. They made us feel guilty if we didn't love it too. So we watched the Superbowl, and cheered for our team, and fell asleep, waking up only when Bear's quarterback Jim McMahon changed his headband.

That was Superbowl XX. A boring blowout that only succeeded in putting Jim McMahon in the spotlight again. NBC's Bob Costas interviewed McMahon in the locker room after the game. McMahon was adorned with a blinking headband, and also a huge wad of chew that single-handedly managed to gross out the entire TV audience every time he leaned over to find a place to expurgate his juices. Tacky.

Speaking of boring, and of quarterbacks, Tommy Kramer, quarterback for the Vikings, made a visit to our campus this past Monday.

There was a good crowd present, and he didn't deserve it. He managed to speak about absolutely nothing for a whopping ten minutes. His monotone voice delivered short quips of going to Rice University and how he had known he always wanted to play pro football.

So what Tommy. Why didn't you talk about overcoming your chemical addictions or tell us any inside scoops about the Vikings? The only part of his presentation that was interesting was the wonderment of where he had traveled to get such a fantastic tan.

Because the Superbowl was so dull, the commercials became suddenly attention-grabbing — especially when informed that major advertisers had paid a hefty one million a minute.

I saw the giant watch, and was unimpressed. My favorite was the McDonald's McDLT spot that featured Pepe LePugh trying to snag a black and white striped cat. Basically McDonalds whole McDLT ad campaign drove me crazy, because I think that whole hamburger concept is bogus. The lettuce is going to wilt when it hits the hot burger anyway.

Since the football season has formally closed, I see it only fitting to cap it off with something that is primarily for the female football lovers of the world. But don't skip over it guys. Take note of your competition.

Tischer replaces Terry as Stout's assistant football, track coach

Paul Wehking
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout Athletic Department recently named Brent Tischer as head track and assistant football coach. Tischer will fill the shoes of six-year veteran coach, Steve Terry, who is on leave to complete his doctorate degree at the University of New Mexico. Terry is expected to reclaim those two coaching jobs upon arriving back at Stout in January of 1987.

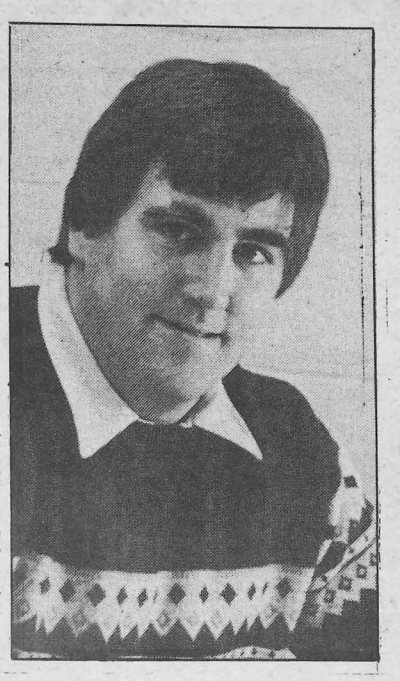
Tischer left Bismark Junior College, Bismark, N.D., where he had been head football and head track coach since 1984. In track, he managed to produce six All-Americans and a seventh place finish in the National Indoor Track Championships. As a football coach, his team broke numerous offensive passing records in his first year as head coach.

Other positions that Tischer has held include head track coach and assistant football coach at Yankton College, Yankton, S.D. He also coached at Jamestown College, Jamestown, N.D., where he was an assistant football coach and track coach. Along with the coaching jobs, Tischer also taught physical education, was Director of Intramurals, and was an admissions counselor at these various institutions.

Tischer received his bachelor's degree from Jamestown and his master's from South Dakota State University. Some of his own personal athletic accomplishments include being an All-American in track and football at Jamestown.

According to the Stout News Bureau, Athletic Director, Warren Bowlus said, "We're very lucky to have found someone of this caliber for this position. He has a good background in both track and football. The combination is excellent."

Tischer's attitude toward his new post is very positive. He is looking forward to working with an established track program and being part of an essentially new football coaching staff. The replacement for former Head Football Coach Bob Kamish was named Wednesday.



Brent Tischer

In just their third week of practice for the indoor track season, Tischer had this to say when asked about his goals for the upcoming season. "I think we would hope to place second in the conference indoors and fifth outdoors."

Senior Captain Todd Fox felt that Tischer was a good choice for the head track coach position. "He seems to be a good overall coach and is a good organizer," Fox said of Tischer. Tischer also mentioned that he would be more of an organizer for the track team whereas football will be his top priority.

When reminded that his carriage would turn back into a pumpkin in January of 1987 with the return of Terry, Tischer said, "Many people in the athletic department who have been appointed for similar terms are still on the staff."

Tischer's tactics will be put to the test this Saturday at the University of Northern Iowa where the team will compete in quadrangular track meet action.

Lady cagers drop two conference bouts

Paul Wehking
Sports Reporter

It was another tough week for the UW-Stout women's basketball team. The women cagers fell short last Tuesday with a loss to UW-Superior, 68-44. Then on Saturday they dropped their second game of the week to UW-La Crosse, 79-63.

Regarding the Superior game, Head Coach Lynda Lee had this to say of her players. "We played a poor game. We just weren't mentally strong going into that game." When asked about the same game, Junior Captain Patti Cook cited other possible reasons for the loss. "We went into the game too relaxed and we didn't play well as a team." The loss was a hard one for the lady Blue Devils because they felt that Superior was about their caliber. They also felt they should have played better against them.

Despite the score, 79-63, the Stout women did manage to avenge themselves on Saturday against La Crosse. Earlier in the season, the lady Blue Devils were beaten soundly by La Crosse, 104-55. Last Saturday showed that the Blue Devils had become a different team since the two teams had first met. At halftime, La Crosse Head Coach Terri Sheridan was asked about the revitalized Blue Devils. "I can't believe it's the same team. They have improved a great deal both offensively and defensively."

Offensively, the Stout cagers were led by Sophomore Sharon Koene who scored 17 points on seven field goals and three free throws. Other notable point scorers for Stout were Laura VanderWegen and Darlene Johnson, both with ten points.

In the second half, the Stout women played much more aggressively. Their aggressive play did cost them though. Top rebounder for Stout, Renee Kasten, fouled out midway through the second half. She was followed by Patti Cook and Darlene Johnson who fouled out late in the game.

Kecia Anderson reflected her feelings about the La Crosse game. "Our attitude was really up for this game. We worked all week on getting back down court to defense their fast break." According to Anderson, fast breaks was where La Crosse hurt them the most in the previous game.

Despite their record, 1-13, the women cagers remain optimistic about upcoming games. "We try to concentrate on playing better each week and everyone seems to have maintained a positive attitude," said Cook of her Stout team.

Earlier this week, Stout's Sports Information Director, Jeff Bjork, named Laura VanderWegen as the winner of the women's award for outstanding basketball player of the week. VanderWegen, who is just returning from an internship, scored 20 points in last week's games which were her first two games of this season. "Laura is the spark of our offense. She gets the other girls motivated with her explosive style of play," said Coach Lee. When asked of her recent honor, VanderWegen was unaware that she had received the honor. "I think maybe the reason I got it is because this is only my second game and I am very excited to play," said VanderWegen.

The women cagers face a busy schedule this week with three games, two of those being against conference opponents UW-Whitewater and UW-Platteville this weekend.

The UW-Stout men's basketball team defeated Marian College on Jan. 24 by a score of 124-70. Besides the Blue Devils' victory, they also tied and broke some school records.

The Blue Devils took the lead in the first half with a score of 56-31. The leading scorer for the Blue Devils was Senior Chuck Dugger with 17 points. He was also the leading rebounder with nine. Junior John Patterson added 16 points.

Peter Ryan scored 27 points and Bob Gruse hauled in 11 rebounds to lead Marian College.

At the end of the game, the Blue Devils didn't just have a victory under their belts. They also broke a school record for the largest victory against a four-year college with a 54-point margin and tied the school record for the most points scored with a victory since 1971.

The men's second victory, which was a make-up game, took place on Superbowl Sunday against Northland College. The Blue Devils, whose record before the game was 8-7, won 113-60. Northland entered the contest with a 2-14 record.

The Blue Devils took the lead from the start after Rick Stephan won the tip. Stout kept the lead through the whole first half which ended with the score 48-27. The second half had the same story line with Stout in complete control. Blue Devil Head Coach Dwain Mintz commented, "The team achieved their goal by playing as a team. The team passed the ball and they did not force the baskets. If the shots were there, they took the shot."

Glen Fischer and Mark Stevens tied for leading scorer with 16 points. Stevens was also the leading rebounder with 13. Stevens is ranked fourth in the WSUC in rebounding. Also ranked in the WSUC is Brian Ellingson, who is second in assists.

Stout ruggers defeated by Eau Claire

Kim Steger
Sports Reporter

Battling through a foot of snow and freezing cold temperatures, the UW-Stout Men's Rugby Club was defeated by the Eau Claire Blugolds. The Stout rugger's A-team was defeated 12-3 and the B-team 3-0.

Scoring the only points for Stout on a penalty kick was Louie Lieberg. One disadvantage the Blue Devils faced was losing a key player, John Wangen, to an injury early in the first half. Wangen, president of the club, was caught in the bottom of a ruck and came out of it with torn ligaments in his knee. A ruck is formed when a man is tackled and the ball comes to the ground between two or more opposing players. Only the feet can be used to conduct the ball. Wangen won't know the extent of his injury until he sees a doctor. An Eau Claire rugby player also suffered an injury.

Even though the club lost quality members this semester, the team has added five new rookies. There is also constant improvement in the other members of the team. Players not returning include Jay Frazier, Mike Krudwhig, Rob Kampf and Brian Lafreniere.

Outstanding players noted in Saturday's game were Jeff Hayes, Mike Hackworthy and P.J. McDonnell. Chuck VanHorn, the longest playing member of the team, felt that this game was "a good learning experience for the upcoming tournament." Stout's only loss last season was to Eau Claire by only three points. Eau Claire's rugby club has been thought of as tough, and on the same high level of competition as Stout's team. For only practicing three times before Saturday's game, rugger Bill Morse feels that Stout's team looks very good. Morse also mentioned that playing a game in the snow doesn't indicate the type of teams involved. There's confidence on the Stout team that the Blue Devils will come away with a victory the next time they come up against Eau Claire.

In three weeks the Blue Devils will participate in the Arcticfest Tournament, hosted by Stevens Point.

Gymnasts edged by Eau Claire; brace for weekend opponent

Suzanne Schroeter
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout women's gymnastics team was defeated by UW-Eau Claire last Wednesday. Eau Claire finished with a team score of 116.45 while Stout was close behind with 112.00.

"I felt it was the lowest key meet so far. It was dead even in the stands," Coach Zuerlin said. "They put their heart into the Clare Talen Classic so they might have been drained from that meet."

In the vault competition Lisa Hille tied for first with an Eau Claire competitor with an 8.40. Patti Roenitz placed fourth on the vault with an 8.20.

Tammy Dennis placed second in the uneven bar competition with a score of 7.30. "I hit my bar routine and did well on the beam," Dennis commented.

"My biggest goal is to bring up my bar score. This entails working on a new dismount and a free-hip handstand," Dennis said.

Roenitz also placed on the uneven bars with a 7.20.

In the floor exercises Hille took first place with an 8.35 while Roenitz took third. "We did good on the floor exercises. The girls are confident on the floor," Coach Zuerlein commented.

"As a team we need more enthusiasm and also some more support from the crowd," Dennis commented.

"They don't seem to be a strong middle-of-the-week team. They do much better at weekend meets," Zuerlein said.

Lisa Hille is working on some new moves that she hopes to have down by this Saturday's meet. "My routines are going smoother and I'm making the connections smoother," Hille commented.

"Michigan has the strongest team that they have ever had," Zuerlein said. "There is not much hope in beating them but it is good competition. We have a young team that will hopefully gain a lot of experience."

Conference on AIDS informs area educators

Tim Hopkins
News Editor

An "epidemic of fear" created by the media's coverage of AIDS needs to be stopped by informing people about the disease and using this knowledge to limit the spread of AIDS as best as possible. This was the message from Holly Dowling, a health educator from the State Division of Health who was the featured speaker Wednesday, Jan. 29 at a daylong fact-finding conference on AIDS at UW-Stout.

The conference was designed specifically to inform public school administrators, teachers, guidance counselors, nurses and parents, according to Sandy Walleen. Walleen is a member of Stout's Office of Continuing Education and Summer Session which helped co-sponsor the event.

Walleen said the conference, which drew nearly 100 educators from northern Wisconsin and Minnesota, was designed to assist these professionals in developing policies and community resources before being faced with the issue of AIDS.

Dowling identified AIDS as "very marketable for the media. It's tragic, it's outcome is terminal and it effects young people." As a result, she said, "It's a real challenge to try and weed through what is in the press and what is on TV and figure out what is fact and what is fiction."

She put the four year-old virus, AIDS, in the context of the history of smoking related fatalities. "Since surveillance began in 1981, about 8,000 individuals have died. If you look at that same time frame, 1981 to now, between 300,000 and 400,000 individuals have died from smoking related illnesses," Dowling said.

To effectively deal with AIDS she said, "It needs to be looked at without the hysteria that is accompanying it today." AIDS researchers learn more about the disease every day according to Dowling. She said education is the best method of slowing down the spread of AIDS.

Currently, the state budget includes $115,000 for local health

Dean of Education, Sabatino, faces theft charge

Dean of Education, David Sabatino was charged last week for allegedly taking a rifle owned by his former wife. Questioned on the charges, Sabatino responded sarcastically, "It's a wonderful story." (Photo courtesy of ITS)

A preliminary hearing is scheduled for Friday afternoon Feb. 7 at the St. Croix County Circuit Courthouse for the dean of Education and Human Services at UW-Stout. David A. Sabatino was charged with one count each of burglary and felony theft of a firearm late last week.

Sabatino's attorney, Robert Walters of Menomonie, explained that the preliminary hearing set for 2 p.m. Friday concerns whether a crime has been committed within the court's jurisdiction and whether probable cause exists to bind the defendant over for arraignment on the charges.

Sabatino was released Friday Jan. 31 on a $5,000 signature bond afte he was charged for allegedly taking a rifle owned by his former wife, Ann Sabatino, of Hudson from the James Moore home in River Falls on Jan. 9 or 10.

The complaint issued by the St. Croix County district attorney's office alleged that Sabatino went to the Moore home in the town of Troy and took the .22 caliber rifle from a closet.

On Jan. 10, Sabatino allegedly went to the River Falls elementary school, where his former wife is principal, showed the gun to her and eventually gave it to her, according to the complaint. He was arrested that same day.

Asked about his response to the complaint alleging these actions, Sabatino said sarcastically, "It's a wonderful story."

University Relations Director John Enger said that the university "plans no action to be taken at this time" concerning Sabatino's post at Stout. "At this point, it's all accusation" Enger said. "The University will not take any action until the facts of the case are known," he said.

Sabatino has been a dean at Stout since 1982. He was a professor and chairman of the department of special education at Southern Illinois University, Carbondale, before coming to Stout.

Aid reductions focus of week's events

Patrick Miles
News Reporter

The "Second Annual Financial Aid Awareness Week" this week informed UW-Stout students about current financial aid issues and helped focus attention on the nearly $200,000 in cut backs proposed by the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Amendment.

Financial Aid Awareness Week was formed three years ago by Governor Earl. The idea is to help students fill out financial aid applications, answer their questions, and inform them on current and upcoming issues dealing with financial aid.

Two major activities for the week which started Monday, Feb. 10 and ran through Friday, Feb. 14 were the operation of an information booth and a speech by Financial Aid Director Kurt Kindschi. The week is co-sponsored by the Office of Financial Aid and the Stout Student Association (SSA).

Students were able to visit the information booth in the Cobblestone Court of the Memorial Student Center on Feb. 11 and 12. The booth was set up to help answer students' questions about financial aid forms and the current state of financial aids.

One feature presented at the booth was a computer program called "Financial Aid Loan Manager" which answered questions about student loans that all students receiving loans will have to face someday.

When students utilized the program, they were given a short page of information to accompany the program. After answering a few simple questions asked by the computer, students were told approximately how much their monthly payments will be and the total loan payment for the year.

The total amount of interest paid over the life of the loan was also given plus the total amount of principle paid. Students were given an approximation of the percentage of their yearly income which will be spent in payments on their loans. With this information it is hoped students can better judge how much more they can afford in loans.

The program was developed in the effort to reduce the number of students defaulting on their loan payments. The office of Financial Aid and SSA strongly encouraged students to use the Financial Aid Loan Manager. "I'm going to encourage people to use the Loan Manager so they can see what they're getting themselves into before they're in too deep," said the Vice-President of Academic Affairs, Mike Zelinski. The program is available to students in the Office of Financial Aid.

"The Future of Financial Aid" was the topic of Kurt Kindschi's speech in the Crystal Ballroom in the Student Center 8 p.m., Feb. 12. The speech described the number of students that could be affected by the recently passed Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act.

> Students must relay their appreciation for the funds that have already been provided for these financial aid programs
> —Kurt Kindshi
> Financial Aid Director

The amendment, signed by President Reagan last December, is named after it's Senate sponsors Phil Gramm(R-TX), Warren B. Rudman(R-NH), and co-sponsor Ernest F. Hollings Jr.(D-SC).

The law forces Congress and the administration to continually reduce the size of the federal budget deficit over the next five years until they achieve a balanced budget in 1991.

If Congress and the administration fail to come to an agreement on the budget, the Gramm-Rudman formula, which is created by the General Accounting Office, makes automatic cuts. One-half of the cuts will come from defense spending and the other half from most domestic programs, including financial aid.

According to Kindschi, all types of federal financial aid for the 1986-87 school year will be cut by about 4.3 percent. For Stout students dependent on aid, that means that U.S. Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants(SEOG), National Direct Student Loans(NDSL), and College Work Study(CWS) will be reduced by approximately $60,000. U.S. Pell Grants will be cut by about $135,000. Also, the processing fee for Guaranteed Student Loans will be increased from 5 percent to 5 and one-half percent. The processing fee will not affect in-state students as much as out-of- -state

City Council changes vote; grants Sigma Tau Gamma beer license

Matt Kalina
Managing Editor

In special session late last Wednesday afternoon, the Menomonie City Council reversed its vote taken two days before which denied the sale of beer during the snowmobile radar speed run that will be a part of the seven-day Menomonie Winter Carnival Feb. 15 and 16. The City Council awarded a special class B beer license to a UW-Stout fraternity.

The City Council had previously voted unanimously against granting the license to Sigma Tau Gamma during last Monday's meeting. The fraternity had requested the license to operate a beer concession during the nationally sanctioned snowmobile radar speed run sponsored by Budweiser and Stout's Vets Club to be held on Lake Menomin.

Bill Haskell, president of Sigma Tau Gamma said that their application was initially turned down because it was unclear and lacked detail.

Duane Bauer, Executive Director of the Menomonie Area Chamber of Commerce, said that the application from Sigma Tau Gamma was voted down by the City Council for lack of information. Bauer said, it had not included an explanation for the beer sale.

Brad Dishno, vice president of the Vet's Club, said that the initial rejection of Sigma Tau Gamma's application was "more of a misunderstanding than anything else." Dishno said, "It was no problem, they (city council) approved it right away."

Bauer said that after the denial of the application, he explained to City Council President Glen Schuknecht the connection of the beer sales with the snowmobile radar speed run and stressed the importance of the event to the city. Bauer said that he received "one hundred percent cooperation" from City Council aldermen. This led to the special session of the City Council held late Wednesday afternoon which reversed its decision against granting the license.

Bauer said that Menomonie would benefit from drawing a sizable group of people from a large area into the city and from the possibility that the event will be held in the future.

Ever since federally financed public assistance, commonly known as welfare, was created via the Social Security Act of 1935, conservatives have declared it an incentive not to work, while liberals believe it to be compassionate support for those less fortunate.

But the realization that a permanent underclass may have developed because of a dependence on public assistance, in addition to federal budget cuts needed to balance the federal deficit, has prompted many state lawmakers to find solutions to solve their own budget shortfalls.

And to insure that the perceived underclass will not grow beyond its present size and conceivably decrease in the future, lawmakers have searched for ways to instill the American work ethic in welfare recipients, while at the same time educating them that public assistance is not to be a way of life.

In trying to solve the two aforementioned problems 20 states have enacted a program, titled workfare, which requires welfare recipients to accept occupational training and/ or jobs in order to receive public assistance.

California, currently the home of the nation's most ambitious workfare program, approved Greater Avenues for Independence (GAIN) last September. Lawmakers fully expect this workfare program to eventually encompass approximately one-third of the Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) recipients.

A bi-partisan criticism of AFDC has surfaced in recent years because many believe that the program has caused the breakdown of the underclass's family unit by creating an interdependency on public assistance from one generation in the family to another.

Although handicapped individuals and single parents are exempt from GAIN, but are allowed to volunteer, those eligible who do not register for the program will have their public assistance terminated.

GAIN legislation, when originally introduced in California, passed in the state senate and the state assembly by votes of 32-2 and 60-9, respectively.

Lawrence Mead, professor of politics at New York University, supports the concept of workfare in his book Beyond Entitlement: The Social Obligations of Citizenship. He believes that society, through workfare, will set standards of behavior for welfare recipients and give them the discipline which they currently lack.

Jo Anne Ross, an official of the Social Security Administration, has stated that workfare programs are currently the "top priority of the Department of Health and Human Services."

Entrepreneurs 'rediscovered'

Tim Hopkins
News Editor

The first ever U.S. Senate subcommittee hearing at UW-Stout gave two successful Wisconsin entrepreneurs the chance to explain the benefits America receives from entrepreneurship.

The standing room only audience at the Senate Small Business Committee's Subcommittee On Entrepreneuriship hearing in the Great Hall Tuesday afternoon learned from the success stories of Michael Healy, president of Hibernia Brewing Company and Ron Simek, president of Tombstone Pizza Corporation.

Senator Robert Kasten, (R, WI) chaired the hearing which also featured Chancellor Robert Swanson's testimony on the successful history Stout has had working with business and industry in cooperation with the state of Wisconsin.

A regional administrator for the Small Business Administration, Richard Dirken started off the testimony by exclaiming that, "We are experiencing a rediscovery of what entrepreneurs mean to our society."

Dirken identified entrepreneurship as, "a basic part of American life." Small business is a leader generating new industries and new products today, according to Dirken. He saluted the "risk takers" who make up the entrepreneurs in America.

The latest efforts by the SBA to aid small business include a loan pooling arrangement where investors can buy into a pool of SBA loans making more funds available at lower interest rates for small business lending by private institutions.

Chancellor Swanson outlined the growth of UW-Stout with the growth of U.S. industry. He said that, "Within the UW System, Stout has been designated a special mission university."

"We are convinced that future economic development is dependent upon our ability to build partnerships between the university and industry," Swanson said. In pursuit of such partnership between business and education, Swanson said, "We look to industry for course content, technological help, training stations and financial resources."

Chancellor Swanson reviewed industries' future needs as outlined by prominent educators and business executives. He saw a new emphasis on the "soft and social sciences" of marketing and consumption. He said Stout recognized these changes. "We see our role as becoming involved, not only to help solve some of the short-range problems of industry, but, more importantly, to sharpen our fundamental knowledge in these areas."

He identified the seven centers at Stout which provide needed services for industry. The co-op and internships with industry programs were mentioned plus the new incubator program which Swanson said was thriving. The incubator program is designed to give ventures a solid start in a "resource rich" environment.

Currently, Stout can contract with up to six clients at one time. Incubation phases depend on the clients' individual goals. The maximum length for any incubation program is three years.

President Healy of Hibernia Brewing Co. in Eau Claire and President Simek of Tombstone Pizza Corp. in Medford, grabbed the audience's interest when they described the challenges and rewards from starting a new business.

Healy explained that Hibernia Brewing's success resulted from their targeting the imported beer drinkers niche, "the only segment of the beer market to do any significant growth over the last year," he said. "My dream would not have come true without the assistance of the SBA," Healy said.

Healy also received help from UW-Eau Claire faculty members when he formed his new company. He stressed small business' important role creating jobs saying, "The Fortune 500 largest corporations in the US have created no new net jobs in the last 15 years."

Simek said that Tombstone Pizza's success as the fifth largest frozen pizza company in the US resulted from local support along with the quality of their product plus the excellent service reputation they had earned.

Audience members were intrigued to the extent that they asked if either company had stock for sale. Both firms are privately owned. Both businessmen agreed there was no substitute for quality.

Senator Bob Kasten chaired the hearing in the Great Hall which heard Chancellor Swanson and successful entrepreneurs outline the role of small business as leaders in innovation in production, marketing, and research of consumption trends. (Stoutonia photo by Brad Kautzer)

Sabatino arraigned; free on bond

Tim Hopkins
News Editor

UW-Stout's dean of Education and Human Services was bound over for trial in St. Croix County Circuit Court following a probable cause hearing on two felony charges Friday afternoon, Feb. 7.

The date for an arraignment hearing for David A. Sabatino, 47, of Boyceville, has not yet been scheduled by St. Croix County Circuit Judge Philip Todryk. Sabatino is charged with burglary and theft of a firearm for allegedly entering the rural River Falls home of James Moore on Jan. 9 or 10 and taking a .22 calibre rifle owned by his former wife, Ann Sabatino.

Judge Todryk ruled Friday that there was probable cause that a crime had been committed within the court's jurisdiction and ordered the continuation of proceedings against Sabatino.

Associate Director of University Relations, John Enger has specified that, "The University does not plan to take any formal action. It is going to have to be up to the criminal justice system."

Sabatino allegedly went to the River Falls elementary school on Jan. 10 where Ann Sabatino is principal, talked with her and handed her a clip from the gun. The complaint says he then agreed to go to the school parking lot where he returned the rifle to her.

Sabatino remains free on a $5,000 personal recognizance bond.

Incest Survivors Group tackles problems

Bridget Record
News Reporter

The newly proposed Incest Survivors Support Group is designed to learn more about how incest as an experience has affected and will continue affecting those who have suffered from incest.

UW-Stout's Clinical Services Center is organizing an Incest Survivors Support group on campus. The program is expected to be co-facilitated, with a man/woman team working together. Anne Ramage, Assistant Director of Residence Life, and coordinator of University Alcohol Problems, will work as one of the facilitator for the program. The support group, which will be confidential in order to protect the incest survivors, will last for eight weeks, plans to meet for two hours each week.

According to Ramage, in many cases, the abused child eperiences guilt or shame. The child feels that it is somehow his or her fault. She said that by opening up and talking about what has happened to them, the children experience a catharsis through which they are able to get rid of the guilty feelings they may have been harboring for years. Ramage said the program will give the incest survivors a chance to tell their stories and tell the affect that it has had on them.

There are a number of reasons why parents or relatives abuse children, said Ramage. Marital problems between spouses can be a cause of incest. If the marriage is unsatisfying, a spouse may turn to a child in the family to meet their emotional or sexual needs. Role reversal is another family situation from which incest may result. Ramage said role reversal occurs when the daughter takes over responsibility for the household, and takes care of her father as her mother would.

Ramage said incest is found in many forms, from fondling or inappropriate kissing, to sexual intercourse. She outlined many problems stemming from incest. "Incest affects a person's entire life," said Ramage. "Many times an incest survivor may have a sense of little personal power. They are unassertive in establishing their own boundaries. It is difficult for them to say no about anything. Not just in terms of sexuality, but in job and social situations as well. The survivor may continue to get into relationships that are abusive: sexually, emotionally, and mentally, because they don't know anything else."

> The survivor may continue to get into relationships that are abusive...because they don't know anything else.
> —Anne Ramage

The survivor may also have tremendous difficulties maintaining an intimate relationship. Ramage said incest survivors fear what their partner would think if they knew about their experiences, and find it hard to open up to them. An intimate relationship may also be difficult for an incest survivor because they may view sex as being dirty.

Another problem the survivor must face is dealing with the perpetrator if he or she is still alive. Ramage said the survivors must sort out their feelings about this person, now that they are grown up and away from the situation.

Ramage says that it is better if the participant's in the program receive individual counseling, and then become active in group counseling. Incest survivors need to come to terms with themselves before they can benefit from the program by discussing their ordeal with others who have been through the same experience.

Boycott biased landlords

In this day in age we would hope that the most pervasive forms of discrimination, those which are based on race, creed, color or gender, would have been discarded by the majority of Americans today.

Yet one of the aforementioned indiscretions, discrimination based on gender, is widely practiced by a significant number of student housing landlords in this community.

Many of our fellow students, who have pursued off-campus housing via the recently released SSA Off-Campus Housing List, have been turned away by landlords who have bluntly informed them that their property is not available to either "males" or "females".

We believe that this is as discriminatory as if local merchants posted signs in their storefront windows which read "No Blacks Allowed".

We urge those students who have been denied housing, based on their gender, to report these incidents to SSA Landlord/Tenant Representative Patty Strassman so she can remove these addresses from the SSA compiled list of available off-campus housing.

Those landlords who insist on discriminating against a segment of the student body should be kept in doubt as to where their next rent check is coming from.

Treat all students equal

For many years students in selected fields of study have had access to various studios and workshops in the Applied Arts Building.

But why isn't the same consideration afforded the rest of us who may benefit from twenty-four hour accessibility to personal computers or a portion of the Library Learning Center?

We would like to know if the present inequity is caused by indifference or a lack of foresight.

Or are some of us better than others?

Crash and Burn

Rabid swine penned inside Pig House

Matt Kalina

It appears to be a standard college house, but what lurks behind the walls of 1214 7th St. goes well beyond human normalcy.

You see, it is not an ordinary house at all. It's known as the pig house, and anyone who is familiar with it knows that it is labeled that for good reasons. The pigs that presently preside there are: "Diamond" Dan McAleese, Doug Lapoint, Erick "Rick" Johnson, Pete Chaput and Jeff Krier.

A few months ago (no one seems to know for sure) three red, two-and-a-half-foot, plywood letters, P-I-G, that identified the residence, were removed from the porch roof of the house.

"I think we'll settle on two, three or four months ago," Doug reflected during an interview Monday night inside the intestinal confines of the pig house. "It was sometime in November when we put the plastic on the windows. Pee Wee the neighbor boy and Pete took it down."

Rick explained, "It was braced against the house and then held up by a bungy-cord. It kind of just sat up there. We're amazed that it stayed up there that long because we couldn't really nail it down. It looked fragile."

The pigs all have their hypotheses on why it was actually taken down. Dan said, "Its in the theory state now. My theory is that right-wing fundamentalists in this town pressured our landlord to take it down, that's my personal theory."

Doug said, "We got a couple of those kind of people on this block. Maybe they had something to do with it. That's mere speculation."

The pigs contend that hints were dropped from various people to remove it. Rick continued, "Well, there were hints that it, like, should come down. Like, 'yeah, we'll have to get that sign down one of these days.'" Doug added, "That was from George, our landlord," But we kept telling him that we needed a ladder to do it." Yes, the pigs were stalling to a degree. Rick said, "George was real good about it. He actually kinda' liked it a little bit. I think it started out, like, he would go to his landlord meetings, and at first he would get ribbed about it, and then it slowly turned to pressure to do something about it."

According to the City Building Inspector Gene Boettcher, signs that identify a house are not against regulations. He said over the phone Tuesday that the placement of a sign on a house is based solely an agreement between the landlord and the tenant. "We can't stop it unless it advertises a product," He said.

The pigs did mourn the loss of the pig sign. "Well, it's enshrined now," responded Dan. And what a shrine it is. Propped up on the top of a radiator are the three, lustrous, red letters outlined in black, encircled with dazzling Christmas lights and surrounded by pig pictures.

Doug said, "We didn't want to take it down at all." Dan added point blank, "It was traumatic, I was hurt. Something was missing." Remarked Rick, "Part of my life was gone." Doug said, "The character of the house has changed severely."

How did people express their reaction to the sign missing from the roof? "'Oh, the sign's down, What happened to the sign?'" said Doug. "What can you say?"

Subject: Stout football team to experience attitudinal 'about face' enroute to success

Text by Rochelle Buhr

Rich Lawrence

Rich Lawrence, 39, is the new head coach of the UW-Stout football team. Lawrence filled the vacant position in January after Bob Kamish resigned from the head grid-iron position to assume other duties. Lawrence is originally from Wyoming.

STOUTONIA: WHAT IS THE PART OF THE UW-STOUT FOOTBALL PROGRAM THAT YOU PLAN TO CHANGE FIRST? HOW WILL YOU CHANGE IT?

LAWRENCE: I think the most important thing that we are trying to change, first, is the attitude of complacency. We are very interested in getting our athletes to realize that nothing comes easily in life, in particular, football. As I have told my football players, that I wish I could stand up in front of them and tell them we are not going to work hard, we are not going to practice, and we are not going to do any weight lifting, and we are going to go out win. Right at the present time we can't do that. We know that's our main objective right now, to get the athletes to realize that to be a successful football team the work ethic has to be changed.

STOUTONIA: DO YOU THINK THAT THE WORK ETHIC WAS LACKING?

LAWRENCE: Any time you come into a program that has not been over the five hundred mark, you run into a certain amount of that, and the athletes become complacent. Consequently, we don't want them that way. We want them to realize that there is work involved in being a good football player.

STOUTONIA: HOW WILL YOU DEAL WITH THE FACT THAT PERHAPS SOME MEMBERS OF YOUR FOOTBALL TEAM WILL BE USING DRUGS, OR STEROIDS, ON AND OFF SEASON?

LAWRENCE: There will be no use of drugs on our football team. If they are caught using drugs then they are not a member of our football team. I have told them that I am more then willing to work with any member who is using drugs to Clean up; stop grumbling

It is evident that some so-called "neighbors" have nothing else to do but give Stout students a hard time. It is unfortunate that once and a while dogs accidentally stray from their owner's yards and do what comes naturally to them. There happens to be a lot of dogs in the neighborhood and something like a doggy dump on the sidewalk is bound to happen sooner or later. It shouldn't happen, but it does. Handling the situation by using profane language and threatening others with violent innuendos is not what one would call mature or responsible. It is obnoxious and offending. Furthermore, one would think that an employee of the University, who also happens to be a student landlord, would have better things to do with his time than constantly badger the very same students that are providing his livelihood. Constantly complaining about everything from dogs to noise to sidewalks not being shovelled properly is in itself obnoxious and offending.

Perhaps those individuals who feel that everything students do, such as have pets and enjoy an occasional party, shouldn't derive their livelihood from these offensive students. One would think that confronting these matters "head on" would be the mature thing to do, rather than calling the police right away or resorting to the use of vulgar language in the school paper.

Please Mr. Phillips, if you have a beef, let those offending you know about it. Please don't call the police first and follow up by writing violent letters to the school paper. This is no way to solve the problem. In fact, it probably creates further problems, especially when students are often fined excessively by "Menomonie's finest" because of your complaints. As a neighbor, landlord, and employee of the University, couldn't you confront your student neighbors directly and maturely? Shouldn't you be setting a good example for Stout students on the job as well as off the job? If not, maybe you should find employment elsewhere. Rid yourself of the obnoxious, offending acts of Stout students once and for all!

Scholarships available

Within the past few weeks we have heard news of proposed tuition increases for UW-System students, including those of you here at Stout, and we've heard President Reagan propose in his budget message the elimination of many financial aid opportunities for students.

In the face of these events, I'm mystified why UW-Stout students consistently have failed to apply for Stout Foundation scholarships. With over 7,000 eligible students each of the past several years, we have never had more than 600 individuals apply for scholarships. Last year, over 250 Stout students received scholarships ranging from $150 to $1,600, and totalling over $90,000.

Most of these scholarships are unrestricted. For the restricted scholarships, there are often many qualified students on campus, but very few ever apply. Most scholarships, probably at least 75 percent, have no restrictions about financial need. These are scholarships to award outstanding individuals.

It is hard for me in my work with prospective donors of such scholarships to argue convincingly that Stout students need more financial aid, when Stout students don't bother to apply. Every Stout stu-

CAMPUS SLANT/ What will occur in the Phillippines after election results are known?

Adrian Amelse,

Whenever their is an election, some will benefit while others will lose. Unfortunately, the majority of the Philippine citizens will probably lose because of Marcos' governmental powers which will have detrimental effects upon the morals and well-being of the Philippine country.

Tom Starck,
Freshman,
Hotel Restaurant Management

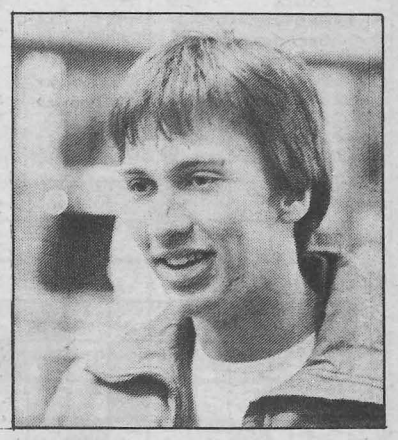
Depending on the outcome of the election, if it's a fraud, it has a great deal to do with what's going to happen in that country. It could be a big turnaround for the country. The problem might be that the people involved might be scandalous.

Kaye Haralson,
Freshman,
Early Childhood Education

I think economically Aquino would help the Philippines if she would win because she knows a lot about the economics. Personally, I hope to see Aquino elected. I think the people of the Philippines believe that their is nothing wrong and that Marcos is doing what they think is best.

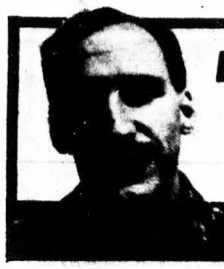
Mark Rohlinger,
Senior,
Industrial Technology

It's definitely not going to be any good because the people aren't going to know who to trust. It won't be good for their government at all. It could lead to changes in their whole government system. It's pretty close right now, but I think Marcos will win.



Steve Williams,
Freshman,
Applied Technology

I think Marcos has been stuffing the ballot boxes. As a result the Philippine people will be forced to live in unfree world. I think there will be more and more riots because of the whole deal. When they hear the results, they will act accordingly against that particular leader.



Diversionary Tactics

Buyer Beware

Tim Hopkins

It's sad that so few Americans realize the masterful job done by our salesman, actor, commander-in-chief to make us believe we're in the midst of an "economic miracle."

Wasn't it fun listening to our beloved, practically canonized president invoking the words from an armed forces promo that we BE ALL THAT WE CAN BE. I almost saw Bill Murray there for a moment dressed in Army fatigues traipsing through a field as he completed basic training.

Ronald Reagan has mastered the art of telling people what they want to hear while diverting their attention away from the real tragedy of the situation. According to the Gipper, things are only bad for those who lack the imagination to place themselves in a rosier environment.

Of course, Ronald Reagan is adept at looking the other way when those suffering from lower incomes raise their voices to complain about injustices that exist in America today. Ronald Reagan also recognizes that Americans would rather revel in our supposed economic fortunes rather than seriously addressing the socio-economic problems that are growing here.

President Reagan believes that if we look the other way the problem of teen pregnancy in America will simply disappear. Unfortunately, the numbers provide quite a different conclusion. One American child in five is in a poor family. Almost a quarter of American children less than six years old live in poverty. More than half the black children born in America are born out of wedlock.

Another fact the president conveniently overlooked in his State of the Union Address is that one American in seven lives below the official poverty line today. That means 33 million Americans are being denied the chance to participate in the American dream.

Why did President Reagan overlook these facts in his State of the Union address? I guess it's not fun confronting a difficult problem which offers no easy solutions. And it's tougher still to address a problem which your administration has gone out of its way to help create.

If your response to this statement is, "It can't be so," think again. Government records show that a family of four living at the poverty line paid $269 in federal income and payroll taxes in 1978; last year that same family paid $1,147, a jump from four percent to ten percent of their income paid in taxes.

The Center On Budget and Policy Priorities, a private Washington research group, reports that among income groups only the richest fifth of Americans gained in after-tax income between 1980 and 1983, the years of the big Reagan tax cut. The top fifth of households gained an average of $1,480 after taxes. The poorest fifth lost an average of $190.

President Reagan likes comparing his administration to past administration's like Lyndon Johnson's. He tries to sell the idea that defense spending is really no greater a part of our GNP than it was in those years. The numbers may indeed agree but the emphasis has changed drastically.

Lyndon Johnson launched the "War on Poverty." Ronald Reagan hasn't the compassion to consider such a campaign.

To this point, the Ronald Reagan legacy includes the worst annual budget and trade deficits in our nation's history, plus a national deficit that in the last five years has doubled all the deficits accumulated by all the presidents since the beginning of America.

Our most popular president since World War II is promoting happiness and security through development of a military system which can't even be tested because of ABM treaties. Yet we're pledging $76 billion of our money to create a system promised to make "Nuclear war obsolete." Of course, if SDI doesn't work and we deploy it against an attack, nuclear war would indeed become obsolete.

If we stepped back a moment from our recent military build up just to catch our breath, we might recognize the truth in Regis McKenna's assessment of our economic quandry. "While military spending has increased, our competitiveness in commercial and industrial markets has dramatically dec Over the past few years, t nas been a pronounced shift ır spending patterns toward ıry-oriented development, spe..... lly weapons development. Jobs are created for weapons development, but no new wealth is created to cycle back into the innovative process."

This is the old guns vs. butter argument we've all been exposed to. We've elected a leader whose foreign policy amounts to nothing more than an us vs. them scenario to whom negotiation is a meaningless word.

It's a pity President Reagan doesn't remember the words of our past leaders. President Dwight Eisenhower believed in the pragmatic need for negotiating a solution with our opponents.

"I believe we must be strong militarily," Eisenhower said, "But beyond a certain point military strength can become a national weakness. The trouble with collecting military strength beyond our needs is that it tends to become a substitute for all the other things involved in true national security. It fosters the belief that national security is automatically tied to to the amount of money we spend on arms. What we overlook is that we may be spending our money on the wrong things."

Currently President Reagan is urging an eight percent increase in defense spending while severely cutting back on domestic spending. His rationale is that defense spending didn't increase last year, so judging on a pro rata basis our eight percent increase this year is best thought of as a two year increase at four percent each year.

If only he could heed the words of Dwight Eisenhower. In this one case there isn't strength in numbers, only a false apparition of strength.

President Reagan harps continually about the need to "cut the fat" from the domestic budget. If he really wanted to cut waste, Reagan could start by trimming the defense budget which is renowned for its waste. Pentagon spending boondoggles make for humorous anecdotes to be passed around at lunch time. We seem able to laugh at these stories because it's too painful to accept that fact it's our dollars being tossed away.

At this point, the president has made it clear that SDI is sacrosanct to the degree that we ought to sacrifice federal programs that have worked significantly in the past helping uplift the poor, making them healthier and giving them hope for the future. Ronald Reagan has effectively given his approval to the destruction of these programs so we can focus our energies upon building more weapons. In honor of President Reagan it seems time we erased the famous words on the Statue of Liberty, "Send me your poor, your tired and your huddled masses."

Women bearers of life; not creaters of life

I was very concerned after reading all five "pro-choice" remarks in the last edition of The Stoutonia considering abortion. I guess what upsets me most is the majority of people mean well, but just don't realize what they are saying. A quote I once came across sums it all up, and because of its' basic common sense and truth it convinced me.

"Women do not need the Supreme Court to support their 'right' to choose to have an abortion. Rather, women need to decide whether to avoid pregnancy, or to accept it, should pregnancy occur. By the time a woman is pregnant, she has already made her choice. Though women are bearers of life, they are not the creators of life, and therefore have no fundamental right to destroy the life they carry in their body."

I'm very glad my mother sincerely believed in "pro-choice." She did enough to have me, giving me a chance for choices too!

Coverage of professor unfair and damaging

As a recent graduate of Stout, I feel compelled to comment on this year's editions of The Stoutonia.

Other than your fine coverage of the arts, I'm embarrassed by how closely it resembles the National Enquirer rather than than a university quality newspaper. I realize you do not have trained journalists or even journalism students to staff your paper, but such a powerful tool demands responsibility if not competence.

In particular, I strongly object to your obvious exploitation of one of our professors. Sensationalism at the sacrifice of objectivity, accuracy and perspective is inexcusable, particularly when it is so extremely unfair and damaging. How many more headlines and inches of print will your reporters need from a non-university related misdemeanor before he's satisfied?

I have had that professor as an instructor in a number of classes. He's one of the finest, most sensitive, caring and helpful teachers I've ever had. He, our students and alumni, all deserve something better from our most visible university publication.

I agree that censorship is not the answer. But it seems that at some point someone on your staff must be held accountable.

"We tried to replace it with Orville up there," Doug explained. "Orville does a good job, but it's just not the same," said Rick. "Well just look at it, it's something unique," Dan added.

"Orville kinda' went up there with the sign for a while. I think he was purchased from Fleet Farm," Dan said. "He's a plastic sand filled pig. We bought it and there was no sand in it, so we went down to Wakanda Beach and filled her up with sand. Now it's standing up there as proud as can be."

Joram McClurg, Keith Okan, Pete Chaput and Rick, the original pigs, inspired the whole pig business. "Yea, us four last year,"

Rick said in firm acknowledgement. "It started out that we were going to have a name the house party. This was when we first moved in last year. But by the time we got everything put together we had already established it as the pig house." The illustrious letters were first placed on the roof a couple weeks before school last year.

Doug said, "We originally put it up there to be viewed with the sign, but we ended up having to take the sign down. We refused to take the pig down. No one has bothered us about that. We just neglected to take it down."

"George said we could put the sign up for special occasions." What exactly is a special occasion? "Like a party or something," Rick said. "But I guess we need a ladder to do that too." Dan added, "No ladder, we can't do anything." Rick continued, "First off, we had it lit. But we got a statement from the City saying that it was against the electric code."

Doug said some of the neighbors are not amused by the sign. "There's a lady across the street who probably also got on George's case about it." Doug said. "She came over to visit on several occasions last year. "She has offered to take the sign down. We said, 'Go ahead and take it down."' Dan said, "But we had no ladder. I guess she really didn't like to look at it from across the street." Rick said, "There's another guy across the street, and he has been a supporter of it."

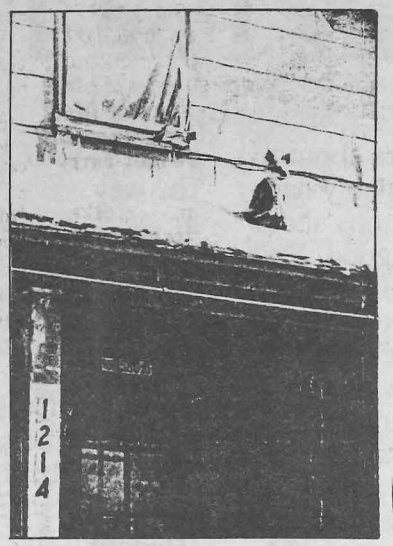
"George is trying to sell the house right now," Doug said. "Tomorrow the realtor is coming over to show it. She knows this place as the pig house." Doug uttered, "When she sets appointments up for people, she writes it down as the pig house." Rick jabbered, "They even came to take a photograph to advertise the house and the sign was up." Dan continued, "Yea, over on some of the realty listings its got " PIG' right on it.

What does the future hold for the pig house? Is there a remote chance that the pig house will be no more? Doug claimed, "I don't think just because we'll get a new landlord..." Rick continued, "...Its gonna' change anything." Doug added, "But you never know."

Is the Menomonie pig house one of a kind? Hardly.

"They (the original four pigs) went to Milwaukee, where they have a pig house. And they decided to start one here in Menomonie," Doug said. "The founding fathers," Dan interjected.

Rick said, "The pig house in Milwaukee actually didn't have a sign up. The house next to it had a sign that said 'PIG' with a big arrow pointing backwards at the (pig) house. It was an inspiring place I guess. There was a lot of history in that house."



After

Dan pondered, "Wasn't it last year when those boys from the pig house in Milwaukee came up here?" Rick answered, "Yea, I believe." Dan continued, "It was one or two that came up. They saw the sign up there and said, 'fraternity brothers. We belong here!"' Dan said. "So they came in and laid themselves down."

Doug said, "There is also a pig house in Iowa. So we're sorta' a national unchartered fraternity."

Rick recalled, "Once I was back studying in my room and all of a sudden I heard a bunch of commotion out here. I walked out and there was, like, thirty people in the living room. I found out it was the St. Paul Pigs rugby team. Doug said, "Yea, they saw the sign and thought it was a party for them."

Rick said, "We're thinking about starting an alumni fund also. At least enough to pay for some beers when people show."

Nancy Nasby, who graduated in December, was the first female pig. "I think that's an honor we'll bestow upon her," said Dan. "We feel fortunate that we have opened the doors for women." Rick added, "She was one of the sows last year."

There is only one requirement in becoming a pig. "You got to be pig material," said Doug.

Rick boasted, "I guess we have a lot of pig paraphenalia in the house. Pointing to a giant, multicolored, day-glo pig, he said, "That's the latest edition." Doug said, "That's actually a piggy bank." Rick said, "Most of this stuff was all gifts."

Rick said, "It started out with, like, the neighbor girls, sows." Doug affirmed, "They're all gone now." Rick continued, "They started bringing a few items over. then family, friends, whatever did the same. It kept building and building." Dan explained, "It mushroomed, It really mushroomed." Doug continued, "And then we had to put up a place for everything."

Dan admitted, "I have to say that my favorite pig thing is the signed picture from the pork queen." Sure enough, the 1984 Wisconsin State Pork Queen Stephanie Roth, a Stout student, signed a framed picture in the pig house. "That was our best party of the year," Rick remarked. "I mean, like, look at that," Dan commanded. "She wore a crown and everything," Rick said. "That's big time," Dan said. "It was a big moment," echoed Doug. "It's immortal. It's immortal," Dan said. "When you have memorabilia like that, how can you let something like this go? You gotta' keep going," Doug said. "That's right," Dan affirmed.

"The trophy's nice," Dan said. "We got pig magnets on the fridge," Rick mouthed. "Dish towels, pepper shakers," Doug and Rick said in unison. "People bring over pigs colored in coloring books for us, and then they tape 'em on the fridge," Doug said. "Different species of pigs, you know," said Dan. "As a matter of fact," explained Doug, "one of my friends from Virginia cuts up articles about pigs and mails them to us. So then we have to decide if we should put it up or not."

Carrying a box, Dan said, "The pig mania game. It's a dice game. So it's nice."

Rick said, "Pete has the pig mobile. It's painted up," "He painted it right before it broke down, and it just kinda sat outside there," Doug said. "Drydock," Dan added.

Pointing to a marble game Rick said, "This right here is Pig Out."

"We recorded the pig races on David Letterman," Doug interjected.

Rick said, "At parties we'll put on some Pink Floyd." Doug said, "Usually we put on a lot of slides. Slides flash on most of the walls."

Rick said, "What we'll do is, at a party we'll set up, like, four projectors in different areas. Intermixed with all the other slides, will be various pig slides." Doug added, "Pictures of pigs and things related to pigs."

Do they eat a lot of bacon? Doug responded, "No more than the average person." Dan chimed in, "I think the biggest pork product in this house is definitely Spam."

Rick said, "Usually if we are grilling out, we'll usually go pork over beef. At least I do."

> I think the biggest pork product in this house is definitely Spam.
> —Dan McAlees Pig

The pigs do have a few things up their sleeves. Doug said, "We were thinking about starting our new high-tech image. When we took that sign down we were thinking about putting some kind of electric sign, just to kinda' spruce up the image of the house." Dan said, "We need a look. We need a look."

Doug said, "The old sign definitely has character. We were going to build a light right into the window."

Rick said, "We were planning a docu-drama on the pig house. Doug added, "But we plan a lot of things."

"What part of what pig stands for is Pi Iota Gamma, Stout's unchartered fraternity," Rick said. "We were shunned by the Greek community and we really feel bad about it," Doug continued. "We have to," Dan said. "Our past compatriots, I guess, went before the Greek Council with a constitution but were denied access into the Greek community."

Some may consider the pig house to be a inspirational land-mark while others think of it as an rude, insignificant blight, but most agree that it has accumulated a fair share of notoriety. Doug said, "The house does have a reputation because of the sign. It's pretty well-known. People just know where it is."

Dan said, "I think a lot of people recognize us as weavers of moral fiber. I think that realization holds true." The pigs live under another motto: "Strength is not measured in proof but fluid ounces."

Off Campus Blues

Broken codes

Patty Strassman

The mental anguish of communicating to your landlord that your home sweet home is not so sweet, and you have been very patient as far as waiting goes for your landlord to repair the broken oven fan and clean up the mold in the bathroom (also due to the lack of proper ventilation).

These in fact are code violations and can be resolved with the proper knowledge and persistence.

First of all, let's define a "code violation." Housing codes are state or local regulations which establish a minimum level of maintenance for residential property. They are enforced by state or local housing inspectors who have the power to order the landlord to repair the defects within a certain period of time, with the threat of a possible fine if the landlord fails to abide by the deadline.

Housing codes usually cover items like minimum temperature, rodent and insect infestation, structural problems, plumbing, electrical, heating efficiency and safety.

After you have identified the problem as being a code violation (state and city codes are available in the library), you may contact the Menomonie building inspector to issue your complaint. You as a tenant may set up an appointment for the inspection. After the inspection has been made and the violation has been confirmed, the building inspector will write up a notice to your landlord stating he or she has a minimum of 30 days to correct the violation.

Your landlord will then execute one of two options: commence to the correction, or attempt to side track the issue. If the latter occurs and 30 days passes without correction, it is a good idea to contact the building inspector. Remind him of your case and report to him the lack of results.

It is then the responsibility of the building inspector to write a final letter of notification to your landlord. This letter will inform your landlord that their time has expired and if the problem is not corrected within and not more than 14 days, they will receive a citation of operating a room or lodge without a proper license and a court date will be set. A fine will be given for each violated day as of the final notice. At this point the city attorney steps in and takes over.

So as you can clearly see there is some hope for a comfortable and safe place to reside. However it may take some persistence getting there.

Having All The Answers Isn't As Important As Looking For Them

Now that you're about to graduate, you probably have more than a few questions about your future. That's good. You should. At Ponderosa Steakhouse, we are interested in people who want to learn more, to grow. A career with us can mean many things: management, unit operations, marketing, and much more. And, as a national chain of well-known restaurants, we can offer exposure to a wide range of options.

We don't expect college graduates to arrive knowing everything there is to know about our complex, growing business. We do expect you to be inquisitive, goal-oriented. We also expect you'll learn fast in our extremely thorough training program. After that, you'll find we are large enough to provide ample room for growth, but also smart enough to watch - and reward -your achievements along the way.

If you're looking for right combination of growth and opportunity, consider Ponderosa. You'll find they can add up to a great career.

Soon Ponderosa representatives will be visiting your campus. They will be looking for candidates interested in a restaurant management career. In addition, there are openings for students in Ponderosa's Work Experience Program. So be sure to check with your Career Planning and Placement Coordinator for the times and dates. For additional information, you may write to:

PONDEROSA, 8585 N. 76th Place, Milwaukee, WI 53223. Attention: Steven Shimp. We are an equal opportunity employer.

Acceptance group's main goal

Catherine A. Schneider
News Reporter

People who are gay or lesbian face a harder time in a small community, forcing the creation of such groups as the Gay and Lesbian Community at UW-Stout (GLCS.) "There wouldn't be an organization like GLCS if there wasn't such a thing as non-acceptance," said the GLCS president.

"Being gay or lesbian would be the same as having blonde hair or liking chocolate ice cream," he said summing up the entire reason for the group's exsistence, the need for acceptance and support.

The vice-president of GLCS commented, "In a small town it's not that easy to hide and some people are afraid of people knowing." The president of the club added, "Stout attracts many students from rural areas. These students have backgrounds that may not include much exposure to homosexuality."

The club, which is recognized by both the Stout Student Association and the chancellor, has existed for 11 years. Activity dwindled over the past two years their president said, but "It's stronger and bigger than it's ever been before."

One of the club's main functions is the operation of a hotline. Interested students can get answers to their questions and information on where and when GLCS meetings take place. The president explained that, "We don't publish our meeting times or places. We want to remain discreet so people will feel safe coming to the meetings."

Support meetings are another major priority for the club. These meetings are open to the public and concerns topics such as coming out, coping with the attitudes of family and friends, and questions about AIDS. The vice president noted, "Almost everything centers around the issues of acceptance."

Support is the crucial need for the college age gay or lesbian the president said. "Everybody is raised straight. You know the stigmas and the taboos (attached to homosexuality). College is a big laboratory and everyone experiments. At many colleges, there is a lot more coming out because there is less risk. At Stout, there is a very high personal risk and we're (G.L.C.S.) trying to lessen that risk."

"Freshmen face an even harder time. In addition to being faced with the same issues other freshmen face, their problems are compounded with their questions of whether they are gay or not."

The vice president identified coming out as a gradual process which takes time in order to learn to accept one's self. The president added, "It's a choice between self respect and being acceptable to the rest of society. If you come out, you are choosing self respect."

The club also participates in classroom visits. Usually these are psychology or sociology classes. Members of the group are invited by the instructors to join the class and talk to the students. Topics vary, depending on the instructor.

Members may also elect to participate in group recreational activities. Some of these activities include going uptown together or seeing movies. The president noted, "In Menomonie, we're basically it. We have no bar, no coffeehouse, or other meeting place."

He stressed, "We are not activists or trying to get legislation passed. What we are is a human services organization."

He thinks that most people don't realize how many gay or lesbian people there are on campus. Going by statistics, he said that there are from 350 to 500 gay men and 200 to 350 lesbians at Stout.

He noted a general lack of understanding from the heterosexual community at Stout concerning homosexuality. He said, "When a straight person thinks of homosexuality, the first thing they think of is sex and that is where their understanding ends. While it's true that it is a matter of sexual orientation, there's much more to it. There are social, political, and emotional issues that have to be considered, too."

Funding

students because Wisconsin is lowering the state fee.

Kindschi also stated that not all students will be affected equally. Students from higher income families will find their financial aid reduced, whereas students from lower income families may even get by without suffering any reduction in aid.

If the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Amendment is not changed, students could see another 30 percent reduction in financial aid for the 1987-88 school year on top of the 1986-87 school year financial aid cuts.

Kindschi stressed that these figures are not finalized and as a result are subject to possible changes. He also emphasized the significance of the financial aid program.

According to a study done in part by Associate Director of University Relations John K. Enger, UW-Stout students who are currently receiving financial aid will have additional lifetime earnings totaling $1.5 billion because they're able to receive college degrees, according to figures compiled by the university.

The theme of Kindschi's speech was that the future of future of financial aid is in "the student's hand that holds a pen." When asked how he feels about financial aid appropriations, Kindschi answered "the bottom line of my feeling in dealing with appropriations is that the problem lies with the necessity to communicate."

Kindschi stressed "students must relay their appreciation for the funds that have already been provided for these financial aid programs, plus explain the critical importance of maintaining stability in these programs in the future." Two Congressmen from Wisconsin on the House subcommittee with financial aid appropriations under its jurisdiction are Steven Gunderson and Thomas Petri.

Randy Giertz of Bill's Distributing, who with Budweiser and Stout's Vets Club are sponsoring the event, said only canned beer will be sold from 10:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. from inside a tent. Stout's Ski Club will provide additional refreshments. He said nine deputies from the Dunn County Sheriff's Department will patrol the area, and 10 bathrooms will be located on the ice.

Giertz said the event will feature two tracks enabling snowmobilers to determine how fast their machines can run, one for the "average stock snowmobile" and another for those who will attempt a world speed record. Giertz expects 4,000 people to show up for the event.

Dishno said as many as six snowmobilers on "unlimited sleds" will attempt to break the world speed record of 158 m.p.h. Dishno said that Menomonie is one of only seven "world class" speed runs held each year in the nation.

Greg Graves, president of the Vet's Club said, "The potential of the event is really big. We have been preparing for it since last year."

Haskell said, "Hopefully, it will go smoothly, and we will have it next year."

The awards ceremony for the speed run will be held at Lake Street Station at 5:30 p.m.

The professional and amateur snowmobile speed run is the largest single event that will take place in the Menomonie Winter Carnival. The Carnival, which began Feb. 7, also includes the 2nd annual Red Cedar Ski Classic which starts at the Menomonie Fish and Game Feb. 15 at 10 a.m. and ends at noon. A sweetheart dance sponsored by the Menomonie Rotary Club to be held in the Crystal Ballroom at the Student Center at 6:30 concludes the 1986 winter carnival.

Syblings help chemical Co-dependents

Kelly Cohorst
News Reporter

Sharon Wegscheider-Cruse, well known for her research on chemically dependant children provided the audience with her insights as the founding board chairperson of the National Association for Children of Alcoholics (COA). Wegscheider-Cruse spoke Monday night at Harvey Hall Auditorium.

Wegscheider has gained her reputation after writing several books along with producing two films on chemical dependency. She received the Marty Mann Award, as the top communicator in the alcoholic field, in 1982.

Along with doing her research, Wegscheider-Cruse has spoken at conferences and been the director of several training treatment programs on chemical dependency. She founded the Family Care Department at the Johnson Institute in Minneapolis.

She has also developed a national reputation for her family restoration workshops. Within the restoration program Wegscheider-Cruse has many regulations that are to be followed before she will see her clientele.

One of the major treatment procedures for COA is to have 40 to 60 hours of therapy. She has found that this is one of the best ways to work with the individual.

Another regulation disallows parents from joining the treatment process, many family members have wanted their parents to be there with them. She said that psychologists have found that having the "parent figure" in the same therapeutic treatment group is not beneficial for the individual.

However, she encourages the codependent to bring their syblings to the meetings and to have them go through the treatments together. This helps both family members to fully understand the pain that the others are going through, she said.

After the codependents have gone through treatment in the selected areas, they are referred to support groups located in the region where they live.

Eighty percent of the codependent patients are referred to therapy for six months. The other 20 percent are she categorized into three groups. Either they finish getting the help they need at a different time, or they have a relapse or they completely give up which eventually leads to death.

Wegscheider-Cruse defined codependency or COA as, "a disease that affects any relative of an alcoholic either physically, mentally, or emotionally." Codependent children have been either directly or indirectly involved behaviorly with an alcoholic she said. This implication means that the codependency can be passed on from generation to generation without being detected.

If a first generation adult is an alcoholic and the second and third generations are not, the codependency traits of mental incompatibility may still occur in the second and third generations.

Whether the disease has surfaced or not, it is still inside every person that is effected. It may show up in very different ways such as in workalcoholism, eating disorders.It has also been proven that impulsive behaviorisms such as nicotine use are characteristic of codependants. The statistics are unbelievable. One in every four people are codependents.

This type of a disease is covered by most insurance companies. Medicade and Medicare offer from 53 to 54 percent total coverage for most of there clental. Other kinds of insurance policies have no coverage or very little. The COA works to improve memebers' self reguard, Wegscheider-Cruswe said. they work at making the COA group members more capable of relating to others. At this time, she says they are trying to improve the inner direction of COA members.

Florida residents plan measures to reduce Spring Break problems

Charles Keller
News Reporter

Imbibing endless quantities of beer, all night parties, and crowding hotel rooms to overcapacitation are traditional Spring Break activities for many. But, if officials from Broward County Florida have their way, there will be stricter penalties faced by those wanting to practice full-time revelry at the community's expense.

"We've decided to take control of Spring Break rather than let it control us. As a yearly event it has the same magnitude as Mardi Gras and many of the same concerns. Our plan is to take steps to try to solve such problems as traffic, housing, beach conditions and behavior that might cause personal injury" stated June Switken, director of the Broward County Tourist Development Council.

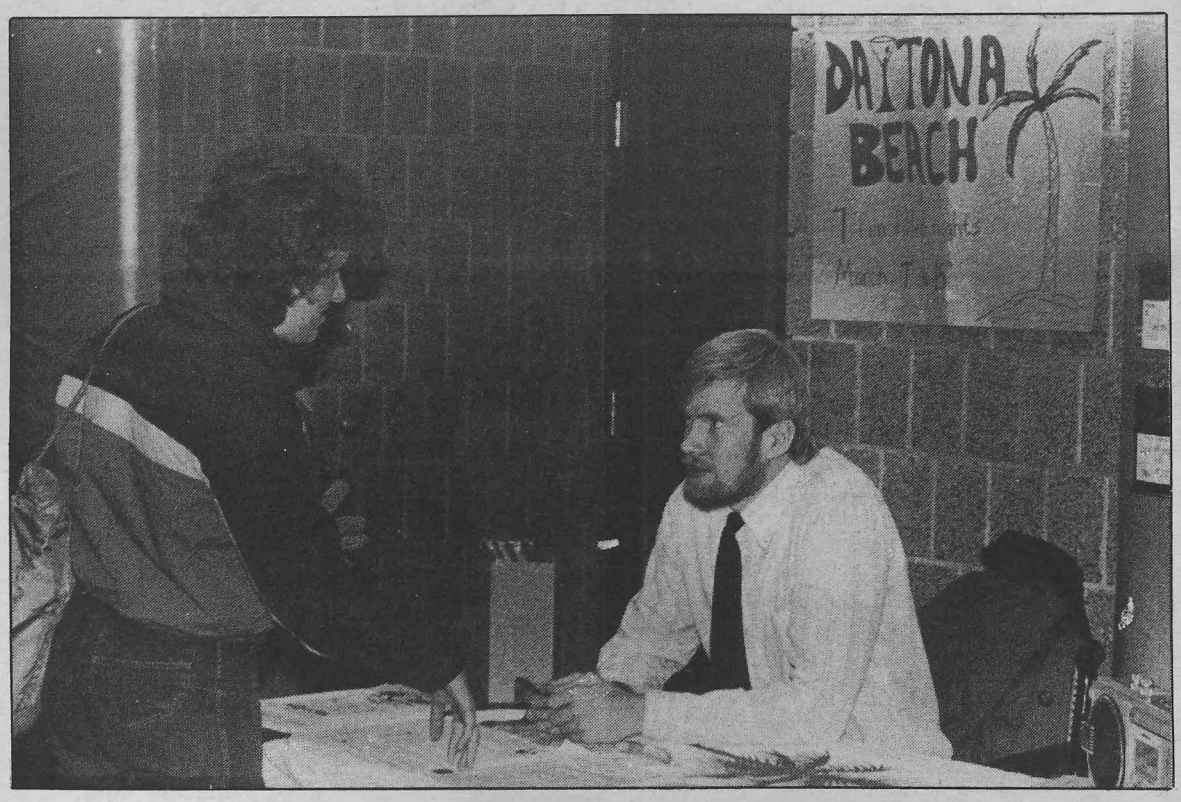
With nearly a half a million students expected this year, the council has planned a list of measures to reduce the problems that have occurred in the past. These measures include the addition of the College Games, Pedestrian Mall, an activity filled Calendar of Events, and a Code of Ethics.

The College Games is an organized program of co-ed sporting events to be held on the beach daily in the afternoon and in the evening. Competitions will include a basketball free-throw, volleyball and tug-of-war. Prizes are awarded to daily winners, and cash scholarships will be awarded weekly to winning schools.

To alert the students to local laws and rules of behavior, a Spring Break Code of Ethics has been created and will be posted throughout the county in hotels, restaurants, bars and other public places. "Obviously our aim is to improve behavior, but the Code is not a grocery list of do's and don't's," according to Ina Lee, head of Spring Break public relations committee. "We want students to have fun, but to realize that Fort Laurderdale's not only a place for them to vacation for six weeks each year; it's our home."

The code states that in Florida the drinking age is 19 years old. It also states that, "disregard for occupancy limits in hotels and motels will result in eviction, forfeiture of deposit, and possibly prosecution." Notification will also be sent to all other Broward County Hotel and Motel Association members informing about the persons involved. These persons will not be able to rent rooms from association members.

"I can see where they are coming from," stated Jack Martinson who went to Fort Lauderdale for Spring Break 1985. "We did some crazy stuff and damage did occur. I feel they have the right to protect their property, it is their home." The "crazy stuff" included having shopping cart races into the swimming pool, and tying sheets together and crawling down the side of the hotel. "We were drunk, and it seemed like the thing to do at the time, but now I realize that somebody could have gotten injured."



Now is the time many students begin planning their week long frolic during Spring Break. The question arises if the newly approved stricter penalties for over indulgence in partying will affect these plans. (Stoutonia photo by Todd A. Nelson)

Gunderson offers guide

A free 46-page booklet describing the five federal financial aid programs is available from Congressman Steve Gunderson. "The Student Guide: Five Federal Financial Aid Programs" outlines what students need to know about Pell grants, Guaranteed Student Loans, Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants, National Direct Student Loans and work-study programs. The booklet describes how each program works, how much money is available, eligibility standards, application deadlines and other details. To obtain a copy of the guide, write to: Congressman Steve Gunderson, 227 Cannon House Office Building, Washington D.C. 20515.

Theatre presentation set

University Theatre will present Tom Stoppard's award winning comedy Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead Feb. 20-22. Stoppard's most recent plays, The Real Thing and On The Razzle, have been big hits, attesting to the extraordinary talent of this playwrite. The Stout production is directed by James M. Miller, his first since joining the university as the new theatre technical director. Tickets may be reserved by phoning the box office at Ext. 1468.

Safety Seminar

"Safety and Worker's Compensation" will be discussed during a supervisors' training seminar to be held Tuesday, March 18 at Midway Motor Lodge in Eau Claire. The seminar is presented as a service to employers by UW-Stout's Safety-Loss Control Center, Projects With Industry and Employer Assistance Center.

Topic: Maximum Sex

Josh Mc Dowell's topic Thursday night Feb. 13 is "Maximum Sex." Mc Dowell, the author of books such as Evidence that Demands a Verdict, will appear at 8 p.m. in The Johnson Fieldhouse.

PWI exceeds goal

UW-Stout's Projects With Industry (PWI) program placed 174 persons with disabilities from West Central Wisconsin into competitive employment positions during the past year. According to the programs annual report, the placement figure represents 114 percent of an established goal. During the past three years 447 PWI participants have been placed.

Education via WPR

Wisconsin Public Radio (WPR) is offering university credit courses over the radio. Lee Smalley, professor of industrial and marketing education at UW-Stout is the only professor outside of Madison to teach a course for WPR. Smalley's course, "Futures of Technology" is designed to help listeners become aware of future probabilities related to technology. The 12 week class which began Jan. 20 airs Mondays from 9 to 10 p.m.

OASIS social

The organization of Adults Students In Stout (OASIS) will have a coffee social Wed. Feb. 19 from 5 to 6:30 p.m. at the Badger Room in the Memorial Student Center. If you have any questions please phone Toni Kunstman at 235-4335.

Torture in the 80's

The video film "Torture in the Eighties" will be shown at the next meeting of the UW-Stout chapter of Amnesty International. This graphic presentation of human rights violations will be followed by a short discussion. The remainder of the meeting will deal with Amnesty's new focus on the Union of South Africa. There is no charge and the public is welcome. The meeting will be held at 7 p.m. on Monday, Feb. 17 in the White Pine Room, 110, of the Memorial Student Center.

Deaf-blind rehabilitation

Successful rehabilitation of deaf-blind persons will be discussed during a presentation from 9 a.m. to noon, Monday, Feb. 24 in the Crystal Ballroom of the Memorial Student Center. Making the presentation will be B.J. Maxson, a deaf-blind specialist from the Rehabilitation and Training Center on Blindness and Low Vision at Mississippi State University. Topics to be discussed include communication, careers and work potential and integration of community resources. There will be a question and answer session.

find help somewhere, but the time that he is finding help, he is not a member of our football team. There will be no use of them, and I explained this to our players in the very first meeting.

STOUTONIA: EXPLAIN HOW YOU WILL INSTILL A GOOD TEAM ATTITUDE INTO YOUR PLAYERS?

LAWRENCE: It will come around from the feeling that we are doing the right thing to win. Naturally it will take awhile. It will take a couple of wins to make this attitude into complete existence. However, I think already I have seen it in some of our players, that there is an attitude that at least we are giving them an opportunity. We have organized the weight program, we have organized the off-season. We are giving them the opportunity to win. This is basically from a coaching staff standpoint, I have asked my coaching staff to work as hard as you can work to give the athlete the opportunity to be a winner. I think that's what creates a good positive mental attitude.

STOUTONIA: HOW WILL YOU GET THE FANS OUT?

LAWRENCE: Success breeds success, and breeds fans as we all know. We are going to have to win to get certain fans out however; I think my approach to football is not that it is all winning or losing. We have a lot of football players that I admire right at the present time. Some of them have great work ethics right now, and are working hard. I think they have a great attitude, and I think that they want to be winners. As people in the community realize that our football players are no different from any one else, except they are obligated to a work ethic that a lot of people are not willing to put up with. Consequently, I think that brings in a little admiration from the community, and I think that people will recognize this, especially as we begin to use our athletes in services in different clubs, and using them in the community. This in itself, will gradually bring the fans to the ball game.

STOUTONIA: AFTER VIEWING FILMS FROM LAST SEASON, WHAT AREA OF THE BLUE DEVIL FOOTBALL SQUAD DO YOU THINK WILL NEED THE MOST WORK?

LAWRENCE: We've got to create a consistency on offense.

STOUTONIA: REALISTICALLY, WITH THE PLAYERS YOU HAVE, AND THE PLAYERS THAT YOU WILL ACQUIRE, DO YOU THINK THAT YOU AND YOUR STAFF CAN CULTIVATE A WINNING TEAM?

LAWRENCE: It is hard to tell right now. If you look at the schedule, we are playing a couple of division II schools, scholarship schools, that will make it difficult. Also, playing in a conference that many consider to be one of the outstanding conferences in the United States, it will be tough to be a winner. We can create a consistency, and a competitiveness that people will admire. and as this cultivates itself, over time we can create a winner.

STOUTONIA: DESCRIBE YOUR COACHING STYLE?

LAWRENCE: I am concerned about the athletes, but I will demand a lot from them. Sometimes I'm the father figure, and sometimes I'm the bad guy on the block. You got to be that way to motivate them. The main thing that I told our football team is that I do care. and that our staff does care about them. We want them to know that we can create a winner. Sometimes that takes a pat on the back and sometime a kick in the pants, I can do both.

STOUTONIA: HOW WILL YOU HANDLE CRITICISM?

LAWRENCE: I don't handle it myself. I have a superior being that lives way up there above me. He helps me handle a whole lot of criticism, and I rely on him a whole lot. I don't think that I have ever been in a situation that between us we couldn't handle.

Revised budget proposed

Kelly Cohorst
News Reporter

The Budget was the major topic of discussion at the Stout Student Association(SSA) meeting Tuesday evening. Tom Schwalbach of the Financial Affairs Committee discussed the budget and the cooperative programming that was added to the budget for proposal.

The following is the proposed 1986-87 Budget allocations.
Organization 1985-1986 First Budget 1986-1987

United Council Representative, David Kester reported that the United Council would be at UW-Stout Friday and Saturday, Feb. 21 & 22. Chancellor Swanson will speak that Saturday on the future of the UW-system. He is Vice-Chairman of the Board of Regents' Committee.

The Correspondence Memorandum, for the Educational Activities Committee(EAC), from Jack A.Ganzemiller, proposed a revision in (EAC).

The revision proposed would allow students who audited a course to repeat it under the same policy where students getting a C or B grade may repeat a class with permission from the student's program director. The rationale from the EAC is that, "We are unjustly penalizing a conscientious student from obtaining a better foundation before enrolling in a course for a credit but allowing a less motivated student to retake a course unlimited with no restrictions."

> "The present grading system allows no recognition of the true grade earned by the undergraduate.
> —Jack Ganzemiller
> EAC Chairman"

A second revision was proposed to the present grading system. The present policy for the undergraduate program is one letter grade; A=4.0, B=3.00, C=2.00, D=1.0, F=0.00, with the relative grade point standing.

The proposed change would institute a grading system with intermediate grades: A equals 4.0, A minus equals 3.66, B plus equals 3.33, B equals 3.00, B minus equals 2.66, C plus equals 2.33, C equals 2.00, D plus equals 1.33, D equals 1.00, D minus equals 0.66, and F equals 0.00.

The EAC said the proposed change was needed because, "The present system unfairly restricts the faculty, who can and desire to, from awarding grades other than gross final letter grades." In effect, the EAC reported, "The present system allows no recognition of the true grade earned by the undergraduate."

Theft in dining service a problem; students ultimately pay the costs

Beth Reid
News Reporter

The number one question about theft and vandalism at UW-Stout's dining services concerns the motivation of students to steal just under $10,000 in dinnerware and silverware from themselves.

"This year we tried to alleviate some of this by providing the residence halls with a welcome box for students," said Harry Aubert, Director of Residential Dining Services. "The box had our calendar in it, some nutritional information, a UW-Stout plastic cup, heavy duty silverware, and salt and pepper shakers. The intent was to make the students feel that they already had these things in their rooms, so they wouldn't have to take them."

Aubert hoped this move would cut down on theft, but judging from the numbers the experiment has been a failure. During first semester of this year, approximately $4100 worth of china was stolen, including: 36 dozen bullion cups, six dozen cereal bowls, 15 dozen salad bowls, 21 dozen 6-inch plates, 4 dozen vegetable dishes, 51 dozen dinner plates, and 26 dozen coffee mugs.

Silverware is also a popular item. Approximately $724 worth was taken last semester, including 148 dozen forks, 120 dozen knives, 134 dozen tea spoons and 37 dozen soup spoons. The amount for second semester is anticipated to repeat the $724 figure in the fall semester. With the expectation that another $4100 in china will be taken, the total loss for both semesters is projected as $9648.

"This year was a little worse than last year," Aubert said, "because we replaced all the old white china with a robin-egg blue china which looks more like stoneware and is more appealing."

The problem is that students don't realize that they are paying for it. "No matter what they're taking, they are ripping themselves off and the honest person who is sitting next to them," said Ann Thies, Assistant Director of Dining Services. "The students ought to know that they are paying for last year's people who stole dishes and they are passing the burden onto next year's students by what they're stealing this year."

Besides china and silverware, there is a major problem of theft during the special dinners. "The students have to come here approximately 170 days to eat," said Aubert, "so we take a lot of time and put in extra planning to have special meals to help break up the monotony." Aubert was concerned about the students who turn around and do things to ruin it for others.

As an example, Aubert mentioned a special Hawaiian meal last year in which whole pieces of tropical fruit were scattered around on the tables for decorative purposes. Halfway through the meal, all of the fruit was gone and the effect had been spoiled for the rest of the students.

> No matter what they're taking, they are ripping themselves off and the honest person sitting next to them.
> —Ann Thies
> Asst. Dir. Food Services

During the Christmas season, the dining service tries to create a festive atmosphere by putting up a decorated tree and wrapping empty boxes to simulate gifts. "We had to rope off the area where the tree was to keep students from spoiling it," Thies said, "and students still stole all the decorated boxes and took bulbs out of the light strings."

A special meal that used helium balloons was spoiled by students taking the balloons Thies said. "By the end of the meal the dining room was bare," Thies said. The dining services bought two scales, one for the Commons and one for Tainter to allow students to weigh themselves. The scales were bolted to the wall to prevent them from being stolen, but the scale at Tainter has had parts stolen off it, and is no longer usable.

There are a number of other ideas the dining services have thought of to do to help create a nicer atmosphere and make it more appealing, including having a special candlelight dinner or using linen napkins on the tables. "We don't dare try to put any of these things out on the tables to make it look nice for fear they'll be gone before all can appreciate the effect," Thies said.

Besides theft, there is also a problem of vandalism. A suggestion box that was put at Tainter for students to provide ideas was ripped off the wall and taken from the dining room. Menu slots to show the items on the menu were stolen, so a padlock had to be placed on the menu display.

"It's tough when you spend a lot of money, like in the major remodeling of Tainter," Aubert said, "and you find people going through breaking lights and ripping things off the wall."

The problem has always been there and the dining services have chosen to handle the situation in a passive manner. "We recognize it as a cost of business," Aubert said, "and if we see someone we confront them."

A number of major colleges have people standing at the exits, checking students' backpacks and bags as they leave. "We could do this," Aubert said, "but what kind of an image would that project of the dining services? We don't want to make an environment that is negative and distrusting. We are trying to create the image that we care about the students and want to serve them in the best way we can."

Boxes will be provided at the end of the year in each of the residence halls to encourage students to return the items they have taken. This was done last year, but only a very small portion of what was taken was returned. Aubert hopes that students will realize they are only footing the bill themselves and that they will see a better return of stolen items this year.

Comedian Mason entertains by mixing ventriloquism and music

Beth Reid
Arts Reporter

Those who didn't attend the performance of comedian Taylor Mason at the Great Hall on Thursday, Feb.6, missed the opportunity to see one of the best new rising comedians. Although the audience was small, that didn't stop Mason from giving an extremely entertaining show.

Review

The 27-year-old comedian combined comedy with music and ventriloquism to produce a show which was unique and full of variety.

Mason is an excellent piano player, and uses this talent throughout much of his act. Starting out with the "Flintstones Theme Song," he gave his idea of how this song would be sung by various performers, such as The Who and Mick Jaggar of the Rolling Stones. From there, he moved onto the "Brady Bunch Theme Song" and gave his own rendition of this familiar tune.

Along with singing familiar songs, Mason has written many of his own songs, including a love song to computers, which is titled "I Want an Interface Baby." Another original was an upbeat song called "Living in a Video" that told how he was born in a video and included various celebrity names and TV show titles throughout.

Other songs he performed include: "Psycho Santa" which was a Christmas Carol as sung by the group "The Talking Heads"; a "Fairy Tale of the 80's," which tied nursery rhymes together and presented them in a more liberal way; and an original called "I Don't Do Love Songs and I Don't Care."

All of the music was fast-paced and had a rock and roll beat. Mason feels that "comedy is a state of mind of rock and roll" so the music fits well into his act.

The performance dealt with a number of current topics which the audience could easily relate to. This generation has grown up with the threat of nuclear war, but Mason was able to take a serious subject like this and turn it into a laugh. Topics such as Ronald Reagan and the economy were turned into a "Rappin' Economical Boogie" routine.

A major portion of the show included ventriloquism, where he used a sock puppet with paper eyes and yarn hair. This segment in the show proved to be a favorite with the audience, as the puppet flirted with a male member of the audience, sang songs, and smoked a cigarette.

Mason also used ventriloquism to call God on the telephone and talk to St. Peter, the Holy Ghost and God. Members of the audience were invited to ask God questions. After calling God, Mason gave the Devil a ring.

The 90-minute performance was a delight and kept the audience laughing. The material, which Mason writes himself, was fun to both see and hear. "My show is up and exciting," Mason said, "and that's what I enjoy the most. I like taking the material that I have really worked hard on, performing it on stage and seeing it work."

His act used to be all ventriloquism, which he got started on when he was a kid. He had a speech impediment and in order to learn to speak without a lisp, he was taught to talk while keeping his teeth shut. He began practicing ventriloquism in front of a mirror, concentrating on making sounds in order to make a puppet talk.

At the age of nine, he quit working with the puppet, and didn't pick it up again until he was in college. He played football for the University of Illinois, but was injured and had to have knee surgery. After the surgery, he got out his puppet again and began practicing. He performed at his fraternity parties, acting as a DJ, and then began giving shows for other events on campus. After graduation he went to Chicago and joined the Second City, performing at piano bars and night clubs.

He went back to graduate school to get his master's in creative advertising because he wasn't making enough money as a performer. After graduate school, he got started working at a comedy club in Chicago, then went down to Nashville. It was in Nashville that he began bringing music into the act.

After a while he got a manager and started working just in Chicago, where he stayed for one year and started working at a college circuit. "I enjoy doing colleges," Mason said, "because this is the best place for a young entertainer to play. They give you a lot of stage time to work on material."

Mason moved back to New York in June, but travels all over the country performing for colleges and various nightclubs. He has opened for celebrities such as Tina Turner, Spyro Gyra, Jerry Lee Lewis, Crystal Gayle and a number of others. Currently on tour, he has performed 18 shows in 14 days in 11 cities. Returning to New York this week, he will be doing a show at "Catch a Rising Star," where he performs often, and will also be at the Rodney Dangerfield Nightclub.

For those who saw the show, they were lucky, and for the many people who missed it, watch for his name and don't give up the chance to see one of the best rising new entertainers.

Taylor Mason was far and away the funniest man in the Great Hall last Thursday. The mixture of comedy music and humor took the edge off the cold winter night. (Photo by Jeff Bartels)

Metal art provides pleasure, vocational opportunities

Karen Heagle
Arts Reporter

The art department offers several hands-on studio courses in painting, sculpture, drawing and ceramics, but one area the department offers that is sometimes overlooked is the art metals classes. Students are unaware of the vocational possibilities in art metals, let alone the pleasures of it.

Goldsmith, as well as art instructor, Humphrey Gilbert is well aware of the opportunities of his craft. He makes over 40 commissions per year making custom jewelry, statues, and limitless other items upon request of his customers.

Unlike a commercial jewelry store, Gilbert makes one-of-a-kind items. He meets with each customer and discusses their need thoroughly. The first meeting is just a consultation. From there Gilbert makes renderings, drawings and wax models. The customer is constantly providing constructive criticism so that the piece will be made to their need.

In the third meeting Gilbert presents the final piece in metal. Since Gilbert's items are custom made he chooses not to open a display and have his customers select from already finished items. His customers have real input.

> I really enjoyed the limitless kinds of metals,
> —Humphrey Gilbert
> Metals Instructor

Humphrey Gilbert graduated in Art Education at UW-Eau Claire. He got a job teaching high school, but found himself quite dissatisfied. "It was kind of all in my head. I really wasn't very accomplished at anything other than dabbling at ceramics, dabbling at sculpture."

Gilbert came to Stout looking for an area to specialize in, as well as gain some graduate credits. Then Gilbert took his first metals course and believes, "It's just been metal ever since. I really enjoyed the limitless kinds of metals."

In 1969 Humphrey joined Stout's art department. That's when he became a serious goldsmith. As a goldsmith he's made life-size bronze sculptures, commissions for churches and precious jewelry, just to name a few of his credits.

Currently Gilbert is working with Titanium, and finds himself enthused with the continuous developments in metal alloys that make his job as a goldsmith increasingly challenging. "You think you know everything, and then there's a metal you never even heard before, because its brand new."

Gilbert has found many talented students in the department. He discovered that at least 20 of his metals students in the past 15 years have gone on to be successful goldsmiths.

Some of his students have worked at local jewelry stores and others are freelance goldsmiths in cities like Chicago, Minneapolis, and Milwaukee. "They're all over the place," says Gilbert. "Considering metal is an area that's been around since the very beginning, I'm glad we offer vocational opportunities like this."

Gilbert believes that there's never too many goldsmiths. "There are 100 full-time goldsmiths in the cities, and as far as I can tell they're swamped and could use 100 more," Gilbert exclaims. With the price of commercial jewelry as it is, if you can get something custom made for the same price, why not?

Second only to the ceramics' course enrollment, art metals has the largest draw of non-art major students. Gilbert's initial address to a beginning metals class is: "We've all finger painted, drawn, played with clay and sculpted, but how many students have done a centrifugal cast?" Three out of thirty respond with a "yes."

"We're dealing with an unknown thing, and people are afraid of the unknown." Although metal careers are reasonably unknown, Gilbert's classes are usually full. Gilbert accounts the classes' good reputation for the turnout.

The department offers a beginning course, which is an orientation. Art Metals II is more in depth. The students are introduced to stone setting and using precious metals.

Gilbert has had students take up to 20 credits in his metals classes. Some students take the class as an elective, and end up changing their major to art. The limitless materials and creative options keep goldsmiths, as well as art metals students, always exploring their creative capabilities.

For Those About to Rock

Rock 'n' Roll Sunday

David Chase

Where were you last Sunday night? Sitting at home doing homework? At the bar tying one on? Perhaps you just sat at home watching the boob tube. Whatever it was you were doing it probably was not as much fun as the Romantics concert. It was a night the members of CMP should feel good about, after all, the concert went over very smoothly and seemed to be enjoyed by most everyone of the 1,350 people that attended it.

The concert was opened up by the Metros, (formally the Metro All-stars), a Twin City band that may very well be on their way to the top of the rock & roll charts. The band has been in existence for eight years and has just recently signed a contract with MTM Capitol Records. The contract is for five years, in which they must produce five albums. Their first album, After The Passion's Gone, will be released April 18th.

The Metros opened up their show with the song "After The Passion's Gone." Their sound was as clear as could be expected in the fieldhouse and one could tell they were relaxed both on and offstage. They played a set of eight songs, most of which had heavy bass lines and great saxophone efforts.

The highlight of their show was their last tune, North South East West in which the band really seemed to play with a lot of enthusiasm. The song led into a short version of The Beat Goes On, a tune done by several bands of the 60's. Overall, their performance was both professional and entertaining.

After the Metros performed, they took the time to stop and shake my hand, introduce themselves and told me in what direction the band was headed. I found out that they had warmed up for some pretty big-time bands such as Foreigner, 38 Special, Eddy Money and Joan Jett .

I asked keyboard player Andy Bailey if the band was going to stay clear of the bar scene.

"No, we can't jump into the big leagues right away," Bailey said. "We'll have to see about our air play, then try to get hooked on to a major tour."

It may not be long before the Metros reach the "big leagues." Their new LP is expected to do well and they should have a video released soon afterwards. Their new album has some reputable help from Journey's drummer Larry London and keyboardist Shane Keester from the Amy Grant band. With all this going for them, we can look forward to hearing a lot from the Metros in 1986.

But what about the Romantics? After all, they were the headline band. The Romantics were a bit of a surprise to me, a pleasant surprise. Their music was energetic and easy to dance to. It was just plain fun. No strings attached, just fun.

The Romantics hit the stage wearing matching black shirts, silver pants, silver jackets and look-alike hairdos that defied the laws of gravity. They opened their show with Let's Get Started, an appropriate beginning for their 14-song act. The crowd wasted no time getting into the music by dancing and singing along.

The Romantics' sound may be described as a combination of the Kinks, the Beatles and Chuck Berry. I'm not saying they were as good or even at the same level as these bands, but their songs can be easily identified as a rough mixture of musical influence by these superstars.

Some highlights of their show were the songs One In A Million which brought about some scatterings of dancing among the crowd. One of my favorites was the tune You Got Me Where You Want Me, a sheer rowdy tune that broke into a short Chuck Berry-type jam.

The Romantics got into some true heavy metal sound with the song On A Night Like This. I was pleasantly surprised to see them break into some good jams. Another one of my favorites was their version of the Stones' classic Around And Around. The audience really got into it with this one and never let up afterwards.

The song that was best received by the audience was What I Like About You, their most familiar song and biggest hit. The harp was brought out for this tune and the crowd participated surprisingly well. To my delight the song Twistin' was added onto the end of it causing a great deal of the audience to dance.

The concert was closed after the band played an oldie but goodie, Route 66, another Stones tune. The band did not try to change this song, but instead played it as it should be, a basic rock & roll jam.

After the concert I was allowed a short interview with one of the members, Wally Palmar, lead vocalist and rhythm guitarist for the band. He told me to watch for their new video Test Of Times.

I asked Wally if he was familiar with Stout and how he felt about the crowd here.

"Yea, we've heard of Stout," Palmar said. "Passed through here before, good crowd, size doesn't matter as much as the crowd's enthusiasm."

Fine Line

Art Crisis Hotline

Jef Maynard

Well fine. Maybe you are having an intangible sort of existential crisis, and it's about modern art. You can't tell a Manet from a Monet from a rose. You are in a quandry about your duties and responsibilities towards modern art since you are living in the modern world. A real quandry.

Reading current art magazines printed on the best of all possible papers doesn't seem to clear up anything. The transcendental quality of the best of all possible journalism is impeded by the puffed-up writer who stands between you and the true experience. And don't we know about that?

One solution is to call for higher beings to cleanse your artistic lenses, set straight your keel on your own private ship of fools. It's time to wax and polish your karma.

There is a local phone number that you can call where the operators are always standing by. Through this service, many people, (nearly borderline psychotics where art is concerned), have received the grace of salvation from the Art Crisis Hotline.

Some of the best minds are ready to answer your questions, burning questions about art. Which ear did Van Gogh actually cut a chunk off, and did he mail it, common post, or did he have a courier deliver it directly?

According to the director of the Art Crisis Hotline, Fenton Crisp, some recent queries have been about dinner parties, and party etiquette. Crisp says that their friendly counsellors explain passages from the public scripture, relating the parable of social behavior according to Brancusi:

"There was much wine all around, we got very happy toward the end. The meal finished, Brancusi picked up the dishes and carried them to a corner sink, came back with a stiff steel brush and scraped the (sculpture/dinner) table clean and white again.

"Our clothes were more or less white with plaster, but he said not to worry, it was perfectly clean stuff. He himself, wore dirty white work pants, which indeed did look cleaner after the meal. More liquor was brought out..."

How long have you hated Mona Lisa?

Family relations and previous art experience have a bearing on the nature of artistic disorders and chaos later in life.

The counsellors usually ask questions about family art history. If the caller's parents came of age during surrealism, for example, the cousellor might ask about the caller's interest in surrealism, and what came before it.

Recently overheard, was this typical conversation with a deeply disturbed client, "How long have you hated Mona Lisa? Have you talked to your parents about this? After all, dada knows best."

Troubles with artists in sports comes up occassionally, usually from anonymous callers. "We usually tell them that some artists enjoy sports but usually don't have time for full-time professional careers as atheletes and artists. We tell the artists that call about almost-famous poet and dada, Arthur Craven," said Crisp.

Craven, who claimed he was "too lazy" to submit anything to show at a certain exhibition, aspired to a boxing match between himself and then world-champion Jack Johnson.

Johnson was huge and possibly the toughest heavy weight champion. Craven freaked out just before the match and fighting the effects of most of a fifth of whiskey, he managed to pulverize himself unconscious on Johnson's fists in less than five minutes.

Some callers are upset about whether or not a piece of art functions, is utility the same as function, and should an artist make alot of stuff just to sell it?

Most artists consider money a horrible evil and should be handled in moderation, if at all, and should be spent into oblivion as fast as possible. Many artists restore their souls, and cleanse them in a alcoholic solution where money is concerned.

Crisp recommmends that people troubled about which art products to buy should stick to name brands from reputable art surplus warehouses. The politically minded should stay away from artists who have extensive holdings in South Africa, and Kerr-McGee.

Serious mental illness can be handled only by trained professional therapists, but many people can get started on their own by having long talks with artists already infected, which according to Crisp includes just about all of them.

The Art Crisis Hotline has a local number where, regardless of the complexity or depth of the question, the caller can acquire all the wisdom and complete knowledge available about the arts. The number in Menomonie is 235-0123.

Unique holiday gifts romance sweetheart

Beth Reid
Arts Reporter

Roses are red, Violets are blue, Tomorrow is Valentine's Day, And I don't know what to send you.

Stumped for ideas of what to send your sweetheart for Valentine's Day? Although flowers and candy have been the traditional gift to send, there are a number of other more unique ideas that can show how much you care.

Besides roses, which can be rather expensive this time of year, there are other ways to say it with flowers. Different flowers have various romantic meanings and can be just as nice as roses. Present someone special with the flower that best expresses your true feelings. Gardenia: "I secretly love you." Lily-of-the-Valley: "I'm sorry, let's make up." Sweet William: "You are gallant and suave." Violet: "I return your love."

Getting away from flowers, there are a number of other gifts which can be sent through the mail or delivered. Helium balloons are colorful and can be purchased as a bouquet or as a single balloon with a message attached. For someone that's far away, make a tape recording of your voice on a cassette instead of writing a letter or sending a card.

If money is a problem, homemade gifts are the answer. Frame a favorite photograph of the two of you or make a collage of photos from past moments you shared together. Homemade coupons, promising the bearer a night out to a movie of his choice, doing laundry, or a massage is an inexpensive way to show someone you care. Pick something he or she really likes to do and offer to take them there, or select something they hate to do and offer to do it the next time.

An ordinary sweatshirt can be dazzled up by using a stencil kit and decorating it with hearts or flowers. Other crafty ideas might include handmade pillows with lace and ruffles or a needlepointed sachet filled with rose-scented potpourri.

Food is always a favorite. Try making homemade fudge, heart-shaped cookies decorated with messages or pink and white cupcakes wrapped up in a bright red box.

A candlelight dinner is nice, and to stay with the theme of Valentine's Day, make everything red. Begin the meal with red wine, then serve a red meat, such as steak with sauteed red peppers, red cabbage or raddichio salad, and baked red apples or cherries jubilee for dessert.

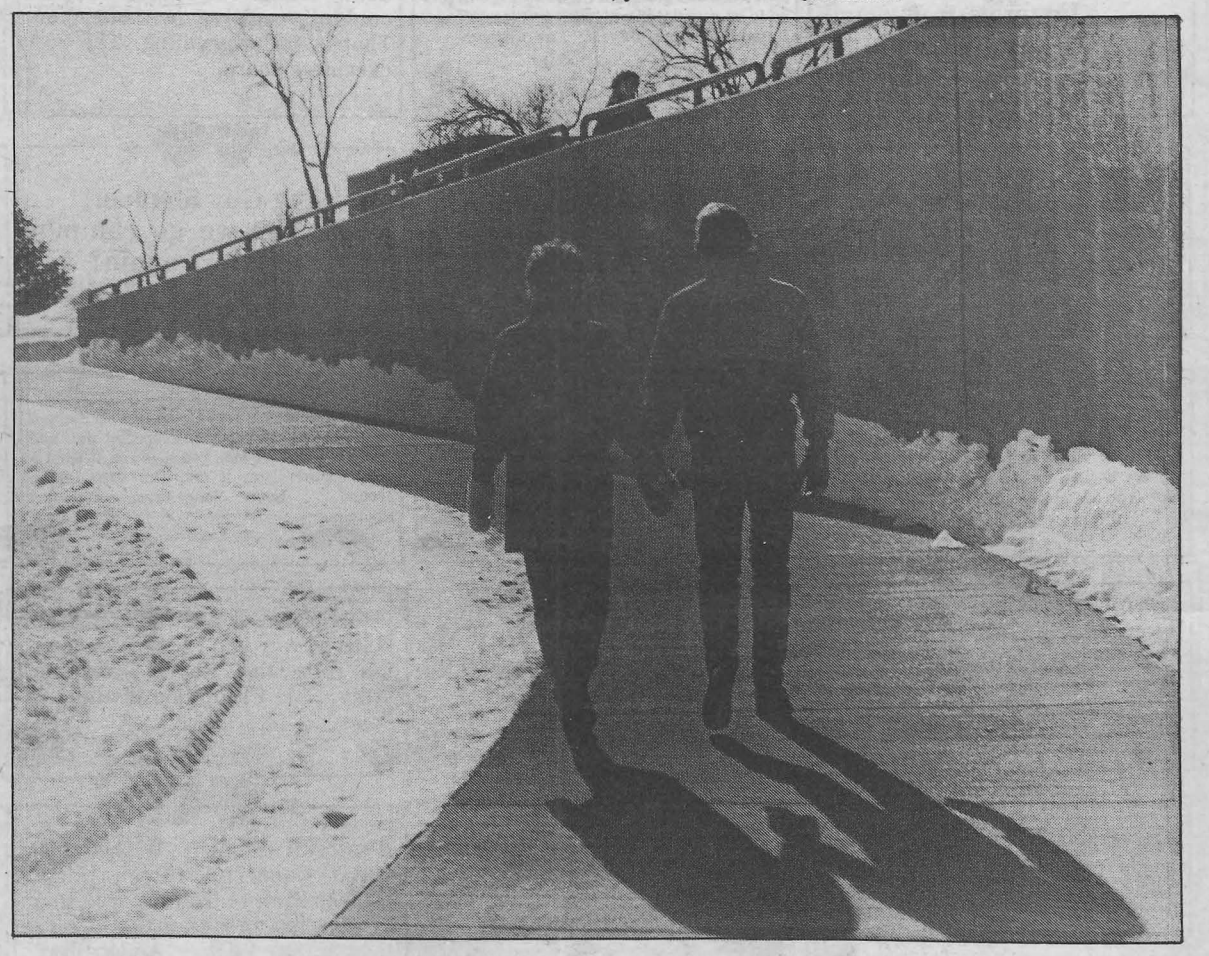
If cooking a fancy dinner isn't your specialty, make a heart-shaped homemade pizza, using frozen bread dough for the crust and bottled pizza sauce. Top it off with pepperoni, lots of cheese and spell out "I Love You" with red pimentos.

For gifts that melt his heart, send an ad in the paper, telling him how special he is or send him a bottle of champagne with two fluted glasses for the two of you to share. Tickets to his favorite sports event to see his favorite team play with a promise to buy the popcorn is a sure winner. For a gift that will remind him of you all year long, give him a subscription to his favorite magazine.

If he is the type who oversleeps, give him an alarm clock with a note: "counting the seconds till I see you." For the man who enjoys astronomy, buy him a piece of the moon. With a tax deductible contribution to the Boston Science Museum, you can give him a deed to his own crater, along with a moon map showing its location. Prices start at $25. Write to: The Development Office, Museum of Science, Science Park, Boston MA 02114.

Besides that special someone, there are other people who deserve to be remembered too: the friend who never forgets your birthday shouldn't be forgotten; the friend who introduced you to Mr. Right; your parents, after all, if it wasn't for their romance, you wouldn't be here; your roommate.

Time is running out and if none of these ideas seem quite right, it's probably best to stick with the traditional heart-shaped box of candy because the way to win someone's heart is through the stomach.



Romance warms the heart even the coldest heart, even in the coldest season. Life may be full of curves and walls, it may be uphill all the way, but being with someone special makes the sun shine bright and warm.

Valentine's chocolates

Linda Konkol

Since the turn of the century, Feb. 14 has been associated with sweethearts, red roses, and...CHOCOLATE. This candy has sometimes been called "the gift of love," and statistics show that chocolate is well-deserving of the name. Last year, Americans spent more than $5 million on chocolates for Valentine's Day.

To save money and have some fun, why not make your own chocolate candies for your valentine this year? Chocolate is easy to work with when a few guidelines are followed.

Most recipes for chocolate candies require the chocolate to be melted. This can be done in several ways. You can melt it on the stove if you use a heavy saucepan on very low heat and stir it frequently.

Double boilers are often used for melting chocolate. If you don't have a double boiler, improvise by placing a small saucepan in a larger saucepan filled with water.

A microwave can be used for melting chocolate if it is set on half power (medium or defrost cycle). Stir the chocolate every 30 seconds until it is soft. Then stop cooking it and stir it until it's smooth.

The biggest problem that can occur when melting chocolate is stiffening. Moisture is what causes chocolate to stiffen and become lumpy or hard. A small amount of water, or even steam, can stiffen melting chocolate into a solid mass.

To prevent stiffening, make sure the utensils you use to handle chocolate are dry. Do not add butter or margarine to chocolate while melting, as they contain moisture.

If chocolate does stiffen during melting, solid vegetable shortening may be added. For each three ounces of chocolate, start with one teaspoon of shortening and add up to one tablespoon. Stir until the chocolate liquifies again and becomes smooth.

Once melted, chocolate may easily be combined with nuts, raisins, coconut and fruits to make a variety of confections.

When storing chocolate candies, keep them in a cool, dark place. Exposure to sunlight or excessive heat causes the cocoa butter in chocolate to rise to the surface, producing a whitish film on top. This doesn't ruin the chocolate, but makes it less appetizing.

Chocolates should not be stored in refrigerators, since they're too moist and contain too many strongly-odored foods. As The Chocolate Bible says, if you do store chocolate in the refrigerator, "be sure nothing of a nature and odor stronger than a carton of milk is anywhere in the vicinity, unless you wish to have onion- or cheese-flavored chocolate."

Storage should not be a problem for these Chocolate Clusters and Chocolate Creams. They'll probably disappear more quickly than you'd like.

The Chocolate Clusters are very easy to make. To vary, add raisins, nuts, or maybe some of both. For a "gift of love" that's a little more challenging to make, try the Chocolate Creams.

Chocolate Clusters

1 pkg. (12 oz.) semisweet chocolate chips (2 cups)
1 1/2 tsp. vanilla
2 cups raisins OR chopped almonds OR chopped peanuts

In a double boiler over hot — not boiling — water, melt chocolate with vanilla, stirring occasionally, until smooth. Remove from heat. Add raisins or nuts; stir to coat evenly. Drop by teaspoonfuls onto waxed paper. Let cool completely. Clusters may be stored at room temperature or frozen up to 1 month. Makes 3 dozen.

Chocolate Creams

1/4 cup butter or margarine, softened
1 1/2 cups powdered sugar
1 Tbsp. milk
1/2 tsp. vanilla
1/8 tsp. salt
2 squares (1 oz. each) unsweetened chocolate
1 1/2 tsp. melted shortening

Cream butter; gradually add sugar, beating well. Stir in milk, vanilla, and salt. Chill until firm. Shape into 1-inch balls. Combine chocolate and shortening in top of a double boiler; place over hot water, stirring until chocolate is melted. Using 2 forks, quickly dip each ball of candy into chocolate mixture. Place on waxed paper. Makes about 2 dozen.

Local bands rock Mardi Gras dance

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

Review

We are all guilty of it on occasion. A great tune comes on the radio, you pick up a hairbrush for a microphone or a tennis racket for a guitar and you start to air jam.

A portion of UW-Stout students and community people have traded in their brushes and rackets for authentic microphones and electric guitars. They have made their rock and roll dreams materialize. Two such local groups, The Slant and The Curbfeelers performed last Saturday night, Feb. 8, in the Great Hall of the Memorial Student Center.

The Great Hall was bedecked with colorful streamers and glittering masks. The occasion was a Mardi Gras dance sponsored by the Special Events Commission as part of the Winterfest activities.

Both bands had played before on the stage of the Great Hall.

The Slant opened the evening with a variety of popular rock & roll tunes. The second billing, The Curbfeelers, performed what lead singer, Tracy Lee Landis, called, "The roots of rock & roll."

The Slant is a four person band consisting of a singer, Christa Sanicola; singer, bass player, Hagen Gunderson; drummer, Mike (Slant) Hucek; and guitarist, Todd Wilson. Wilson and Gunderson have been playing together for seven years. As a whole the band has been performing an average of two nights a week in the Menomonie area.

All of the members being students, finding time for practice four nights a week hasn't been a problem. Hucek said, "It's been easy finding time because most of us live together. We just say, let's go jam."

Through word of mouth and advertising, The Slant has gotten gigs at bars and wedding dances. "There is a lot of work here but you have to be able to play a lot of different stuff," Gunderson said.

This group plays rock & roll, polka and country-western music. Although the group performs a range of tunes, Gunderson said, "I think rock & roll is our true love."

"It's a good income if we can play two nights a week. It helps us through school," said Hucek. Although members of the band are studying at Stout to acquire degrees, they all plan to enter the music business in some capacity from promotion to performing. Gunderson said, "I'd like to go into it as a career. Having a degree from school is a safety net."

Some of the band members are self-made musicians and others have had professional lessons. "I pounded on Lincoln Log cans when I was little," said the drummer, Hucek.

The Slant plans to stay together for a while. Presently they are updating their top 40 music and preparing for a performance at the Lake Street Station. More markets are opening up for local talent. Wilson said, "We try to expand the whole market rather than compete with other bands."

Saturday night the band was faced with stage problems. For atmosphere's sake, flash powder was exploded, but not on cue. Hucek said, "When flash powder exploded two feet behind the drum riser I almost did a somersault over my drum set."

> When flash powder exploded two feet behind the drum riser I almost did a somersault...
> —Mike Hucek
> Slant drummmer

Landis felt good about The Curbfeeler's evening performance. Appearing with Landis were Eric Pearson on lead guitar, Hagen Gunderson on bass, Jerry McHugh on keyboards and Paul Quick on drums. Saturday was McHugh's first night on stage with the band. This musician is blind and going to school in Eau Claire.

Three of the five band members are students at Stout. They perform an average of two nights a month. The name, The Curbfeelers, does not have any deep or significant meaning. This group of musicians just got together one summer and started to play. Landis said, "We found each other. That's the way you have to do it. You have to keep finding each other."

These "found" musicians play in a variety of places around Menomonie and at Stout. "We were the first band to open the Great Hall. It is almost like our home," Landis said. In the near future the band will play at a bikers' ball in Eau Claire.

Like other bands, finding a place to play is hard work. Equipment is also a restriction. The members always want to have the next step up in technology. Another difficulty is academic demands. Landis said, "It is difficult to memorize elementary statistics and musical arrangements at the same time."

This is Landis' first membership in a band. She has taken voice lessons from the Stout music department. She said she grew up on guitar and bluegrass music.

The band as a whole wants to have fun and play all sorts of music. What is it like to be on stage? Landis said, "It's fun when the guitar is roll'n and popp'n. The bass is going all over the place and you see it all come together."

Before the conclusion of my interview, I was able to ask drummer David Petratos whether or not the Romantics would be coming back to Stout.

"We'd like a chance to come back," said Petratos. "We really liked it."

With what little time I had to interview the band, I can safely say there is nothing really unusual about them (with the exception of their hair). They are nothing more than a rowdy group of rockers trying to survive in the competitive world of rock & roll.

So who are the people responsible for the good time I had on Sunday?

The Metros
Andy Bailey - Keyboards
Andy Gautier - Drums
Danny Mangold
-Guitar/Songwriter
Dusty Cox - Saxophone
Jody Hanks - Lead Vocal
Larry Stock - Bass

The Metroettes? (Not groupies, just obsessed.)

The Romantics
Wally Palmar - Rhythm Guitar and Lead Vocals
Mike Skill - Bass
Coz Canler - Lead Guitar
David Petratos - Drums

In conclusion I would like to say that I enjoyed both bands but found the Metros a bit more entertaining and a lot more professional. It was a good night for me, a good night for Stout and a great night for rock & roll.

Class — Baking Processes: Yeast Bread

A class titled "Baking Processes: Yeast Bread" will be held at UW-Stout from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., Feb. 15-18 in room 238 of the Home Economics building.

The course is a combination of lectures and laboratory work. Lecture discussion periods will present principles of ingredient selection, preparation and evaluation of finished products. This portion of the course is designed to help students learn the theory and science of yeast bread baking.

Laboratory sessions will provide an opportunity to apply and demonstrate principles learned in lectures, and to develop personal skills in the art of yeast bread making. Students will learn to make yeast bread with various grains, dinner and sweet rolls, specialty breads, fried breads, pita bread and bagels. The metric system of measurement also will be introduced.

Tuition for the undergraduate level course is $49.30. Ingredients will be furnished.

Register deadline is Feb. 12. To register, call (715) 232-2693 in the Menomonie area; 800-22-STOUT outside Menomonie.

Gladys Earl, assistant instructor in the food and nutrition department, will teach the course. Earl is the author of a book on yeast bread production. She is a member of the executive committee of the board of Directors of the American National Metric Council and a regional manager of the United States Metric Association.

Sounds of Blackness

On Thursday, Feb. 27 the Sounds of Blackness will perform at the Harvey Hall Theatre at 7 p.m. There will be a reception in the Crystal Ballroom — Memorial Student Union after the performance at 8:30 p.m. The Sounds of Blackness is a 25-member choir and band, and the event is free and open to all.

Rosencrantz & Guildenstern are Dead

The University Theatre, UW-Stout will present Tom Stoppard's award-winning comedy Rosencrantz & Guildenstern are Dead Feb. 20, 21 and 22 in the Harvey Hall auditorium. The play has been called "a work of fascinating distinction" by the New York Times, which also cited Stoppard as "among the finest English-speaking writers of our age."

The production marks the area directorial debut of Dr. James M. Miller, Stout's new technical director of theatre. Miller describes the play as "an imaginative and original twist on Shakespeare's well-known Hamlet as seen by two of its less well-remembered characters."

Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are old friends of the young Hamlet who have been summoned to Elsinore by the scheming King Claudius to investigate Hamlet's sudden case of lunacy. They little suspect that they have become entangled in a complex web of intrigue, double-dealing and subterfuge. All they know is that every time they try to have a quiet moment to themselves, someone comes barging in and orders them to do something else that they do not fully understand.

While they wait for the next noisy intrusion, they pass the time playing verbal tennis and contemplating the meaning of life. Occasionally, we catch a word or phrase that drifts over from the offstage action of some very familiar scenes — "to be or not to be," "get thee to a nunnery." It is, in a sense, Shakespeare's Hamlet played sideways.

Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead performs at 8 p.m. in the Harvey Hall auditorium on the UW-Stout campus in Menomonie. Adults $3.00, faculty and students $2.00. Tickets may be reserved by calling (715) 232-1468.

Martial arts club dominates tournament

Louie Filkins
Sports Reporter

Imagine fighting your friends and enjoying it. That's exactly what happened when the Eau Claire branch of Karate North hosted the UW-Stout and Shell Lake branches in the Central Wisconsin Intramural Tournament.

The tournament was held the first Saturday in February at the Highland Mall in Eau Claire. The Stout Martial Arts Club was challenged to compete in the tournament by Eau Claire's instructor, Mark Smerud.

Stout has one of the largest karate schools in the area. It is instructed by a black belt, Tom Sawyer, who has been with Karate North for eight years.

Karate North is the largest (most members) martial arts school in North America. Although it is based in Duluth, the school has branches as far away as California and Florida not to mention 15 schools in Canada. According to Mark Smerud, this was the first intramural outside of Duluth.

Smerud also commented on the excellent sportsmanship and a fine turnout of over 70 competitors. "One reason the tournament was such a success is the fact that there were no injuries," Smerud said. He also thanked the Stout club for their support in the development and participation in the tournament.

Gold, green, and purple belts were the three major divisions at the competition. Each were divided into form and sparring.

Form is similar to a floor routine in gymnastics. The contestants are given scores ranging from 1 to 10 on their performance. Five judges rate a sequence of various karate techniques. James Lind was the winner of the purple belt form. He said the following about the tournament, "I was very pleased with the level of competition and respect at Eau Claire. There was good control and better techniques used than I've seen at other tournaments."

Sparring (fighting) is one-on-one competition. Two points are awarded for kicks and 1 point for punches. It may sound dangerous, but it isn't. Foam pads are worn on the hands and feet. Injuries are uncommon because absolutely no contact to the head is allowed.

Stout dominated the events, winning and placing well, except in the women's division. The following is a list of places taken by Stout:

Form

Men's Gold- 4th: Shawn Cordy.

Men's Green- 1st: Steve Millman: 5th: John Reed.

Men's Purple- 1st: James Lind; 2nd: James Filkins; 4th: Jeff Bartels; 5th: Lee Brenholt.

Grapplers finish sixth in WSUC tournament

Paul Wehking
Sports Reporter

Champion heavyweight Dave Witt, led the UW-Stout wrestlers to a sixth place finish in the WSUC conference wrestling tournament last weekend.

With only four participants, the Stout grapplers managed to claim the sixth place position out of the nine WSUC conference teams. For the wrestlers, this hearty finish out-shines the teams paltry 0-13 dual meet record. Wayne Hendrickson, 167 lbs., said, "I'm really happy with the way we finished, really happy."

"I had a good tourney," Witt said of his weekend performance. Witt encountered smooth sailing on his route to the heavyweight championship pinning two of his opponents and beating the other, Andy McDonald of UW-Whitewater, 10-4, in the finals.

Witt is now more confident than ever that he will qualify for the NCAA National Tournament, which is to be held the last weekend in February. "Witt will qualify no doubt, barring any injuries," Head Coach Walt Perkins said. In order to do this, Witt must place first in the upcoming NCAA Regional Tournament which is just over one week away. Witt maintained his modest composure saying, "I just have to wait to get there, I don't want to overlook anybody."

Chris Iverson, 126 lbs., added another accomplishment to his already admirable freshman season. Iverson scrapped to a third place finish by defeating his UW-River Falls foe in a close, 13-12, battle. "I'm pretty happy with my season, I've improved alot," Iverson said. When asked about the upcoming tournament Iverson said, "I plan to work very hard the next two weeks. I think I have a good chance."

Iverson is hoping to wrestle well at the regional tournament. If he does, he has a chance at being one of the five alternates that are picked to compete in the national tournament in addition to the ten individual champions. "If I don't make it this year there is always next year but I'm giving it my best shot," Iverson said.

Hendrickson, captured second place in the 167-pound division losing, 14-1, to Brian Keller of River Falls in the championship match. Hendrickson's second match was probably the most exhausting of the day for him. Hendrickson and his Whitewater opponent wrestled to a 4-4 tie after the regulation seven minutes, taking the match into overtime where again, the wrestlers tied. Hendrickson eventually won the match on a criteria decision enabling him to continue on to the finals where he met Keller. "I was mentally down in that match and was tired. I barely squeaked it out," he said.

Hendrickson will also want to be in his best wrestling condition as he also has a chance at being named an alternate to the national tourney. The only Stout wrestler who didn't place in the tournament was 158-pounder Tom Cliver. Cliver lost his opening two matches putting him out of the tournament.

Other Stout wrestlers that did not compete in the tournament were, 134-pounder Jon Coldwell and Kevin Burbach, 142 lbs. Coldwell did not wrestle due to an injury and Burbach is busy "wrestling" with an illness.

If these two had wrestled they may have provided Stout with some extra points that could have enhanced their team finish. The fifth place spot eluded the Blue Devils by two points and the fourth place slot escaped them by four points.

Coach Perkins is excited about the upcoming tourneys saying, "Last year we peaked at conference. We haven't peaked yet this year. I think it will happen in a couple of weeks."

'Skin' sales falter

Rochelle Buhr

Dear Sports Illustrated,

I received your annual swimsuit issue the other day, and had to keep my lips tightly pursed in order to hold in my screams of "pigs".

Your cover of an enticing blonde soaking up the sun in the ocean on Bora Bora probably had all your male subscribers yelling mora mora. They got it, right in the middle of your magazine. Hugh Hefner would be proud.

How cute to title your bathing beauty spread, "Ornaments of Society". I suppose this is an accurate description, because, thank God, at least these chicks can be packed in boxes most of the year.

Also I have heard that this issue was your second largest, second only to the 1984 Summer Olympics. Your skimpy women sell well too, garnering eight times your average weekly newsstand sales.

How could the men resist your issue this year? They couldn't, because there was not enough swimsuit in the whole spread put together, to cover even one girl. Granted, some of the suits were cute, and perhaps a few could actually be useable, but most were probably designed for maximum skin exposer, than holding up in the surf.

That little colorful number that the woman's windsurfer record holder had on would fly off like a rubber band if a good gust of wind got behind her sail.

All I can say about the wet t-shirt shot is tacky.

I notice that your sport magazine competition has also decided to capitalize on the sex-sells approach.

Sport's March issue had their own version of your swimsuit issue, only they tried to stay more within the realm of sports by exploiting what they called, "The Most Beautiful Women in Sports." The girls posing actually were athletes.

Sport botched up. Their models just didn't have the bods that yours had, and also, their photography failed to expose the key curvy female zones that your magazine highlights did. Frankly, Sport probably left the boys yawning.

Next year I hope you will include a section for your female readers. I suggest a few pages devoted to the best looking men in the NFL in Speedos.

You could make it a package deal. Have women and men, perhaps in shots together, and include bibs for the readers so their drool will not spot the copies. After all, they have to be in good shape to adorn locker rooms and refrigerators.

Don't terminate my subscription. I realize that we all have these lustful tendencies, in your case women and money.

It's fun to gag sometimes.

Sincerely,
Rochelle

P.S. Please send me next year's swimsuit issue in a brown wrapper.

Men race to victories; Point splashes women

Last weekend the UW-Stout men's swim team splashed their way to two impressive victories. They defeated Michigan Tech 59-46 and UW-Stevens Point 56-49.

This was the first time in ten years that Stout has claimed a victory over Stevens Point, which is a Division II school.

Placing first against Stevens Point was the men's 400-yard medley relay team of John Lerbs, Stu Boese, Steve Kostrova and Brad Stark.

The 400-yard free relay team of Lerbs, Craig Nelson, Mark Kukuzke and Kurt Siebert also placed first, with a time of 3:27.2.

Kukuzke earned two individual victories in the 1000-yard free and the 500-yard free.

Kostrova also had two victories in the 200-yard individual medley and the 200-yard fly.

Other first place finishes went to Stark in the 100-yard and 200-yard free and Lerbs in the 200-yard backstoke.

The only second place finish went to Siebert in the 50-yard free.

Placing third for the Blue Devil men were Bob O'Reilly in the 1000-yard free, and Boese in both the 200-yard individual medley and the 200-yard breaststroke. Siebert also had a third place finish in the 100-yard free.

Fourth place finishes went to Nelson in the 200-yard and 500-yard free and to O'Reilly in the 50-yard free and the 200-yard breaststroke.

On Friday the Blue Devil men defeated Michigan Tech with victories going to Boese in the 200-yard IM and Siebert in the 200-yard free. Kukuzke placed first in the 200-yard back and Kostrova in the 200-yard fly.

Consistant swimmer, Brad Stark raced to two individual victories in the 50-yard and 100-yard free. He also contributed, along with Lerbs, Boese and Kostrova, to a first place finish in the 400-yard free relay.

The Blue Devil men went on to claim eight seconds, one third and one fourth place finishes.

John Miller, Head coach of Stout's men's and women's swim teams, announced Terri Peterson and Stark as atheletes of the week.

Miller stressed that Peterson, a member of the women's team, has showed a lot of consistency in her diving. She has won the 1 and 2-meter diving events in the last three meets.

Stark was chosen on account of his numerous and consistant first place finishes in all of his events.

After a long ride to Stevens Point the women's team came home defeated.

Victories went to the 400-yard free relay team of Jackie Gilbert, Steff Weiss, Wendy Heineke and Laurie Potter. Gilbert also placed first in the 500-yard free with a time of 5:36.9.

Second place finishes went to Cheryl DeBaker in the 200-yard back, Jill Schlimovitz in the 1650-yard free, Weiss in the 200-yard free, Jenninfer Krupke in the 400 individual medley and Heineke in the 200-yard fly.

Coming in third for the Blue Devil women were Weiss in the 500-yard free, Anne Branson in the 200-yard breaststroke, and DeBaker in the 50-yard free.

Four fourth place finishes went to Schlimovitz in the 200-yard backstroke, Krupke in the 100-yard free, Potter in the 200-yard free and Branson in the 50-yard free.

Another factor that made the tournament a success is that many purple belts were able to be judges for the first time. President of the club, Todd Skogen said, "It was fun to be a judge, especially judging the little kids."

The Martial Arts Club meets Mondays and Wednesdays at 9:00 p.m. in the dance studio of the fieldhouse. The club will be holding its own tournament at the Johnson Fieldhouse on May 3rd. Spectators and competitors are welcome, any questions, contact Tom Sawyer, 235-6564.

Drugs could have 'domino effect'

Baseball commissioner Peter Ueberroth said Monday night at Yale University that eliminating drugs in sports could have a "domino effect" on society. "If businesses can spend millions and millions and millions of dollars on advertising shampoo and beer," he said, "they can spend a little on educating about drugs."

Thomas named assistant football coach

Bob Thomas, the former Spring Valley High School football coach, has been named assistant football coach at UW-Stout. Athletic Director Warren Bowlus said that this is one of the first steps for Head Football Coach Rich Lawrence in putting together his staff. At Spring Valley, Thomas compiled a 119-29-4 football record, winning nine conference championships in less than 13 years.

Dr. J. to play one more season

Julius Erving, the Philadelphia 76ers star forward, has ended speculation when, before Sunday's All-Star game, he made public his decision to play at least another year in the NBA.

"After assessing things spiritually, mentally, physically and emotionally, I decided I wanted to continue to play," said Erving, 35, the third-leading scorer in professional basketball history.

New look for golf tournament

The Bing Crosby golf tournament, withdrew from Pebble Beach, Calif., in a hassle over corporate sponsorship. It will be played at the Bermuda Run Country Club near Winston-Salem, N.C., June 5-8 with amateurs replacing professional golfers. The event will feature governors heading up two-man teams for each of the 50 states, and the other 50 teams will be headed by corporations. The over $2 million purse will go to charity.

Hoopsters grab two victories; lose one

Wendy Johnson
Sports Reporter

UW-Platteville, the number three ranked team in the WSUC Conference, was conquered last Saturday night by UW-Stout 69-64.

The game started when the Blue Devils took control of the tip, but the control didn't last long for the Blue Devils. One minute and forty seconds into the game, Platteville's Rock Ripley made a slam dunk. The Blue Devils rapidly rectified the situation as Glen Fischer put Stout in the lead for the first time when he drove in and made a lay-up. At the end of the first half the Blue Devils led 33-29.

The Blue Devils did not lose their momentum after the half. They continued to stay neck and neck with the Pioneers until the last six minutes of the game, where Stout excelled to an 8 point lead. To top it off, David Sandstrom sank a basket to give the Blue Devils their largest lead in the game.

There was an unexpected time out in the last four minutes of the game when Mark Stevens lost his contact. Many players tried to find the missing contact, but no one found it until UW-Stout's Assistant Coach Ed Andrist walked right up to it. The crowd cheered when the contact was found as though someone scored an important basket.

Ron Hunter took the title of lead scorer with 14 points, four of those were free throws. Right behind Hunter was Sandstrom with 13 points.

Blue Devil center Rick Stephen commented, "I didn't play much of the second half because David Sandstrom came off the bench and played a great game."

Mark Stevens was close behind Sandstrom when he shot 12 points. Stevens brought down seven rebounds from the boards to be the leader in rebounds.

Platteville's Tim Hill sunk 19 points to become the lead scorer and he rebounded six rebounds to become the lead rebounder. Senior Mark Place trailed behind Hill with 13 points.

The Blue Devils home turf was invaded Friday night by UW-Oshkosh. The invasion did not bother Stout, as they defeated Oshkosh 72-67.

The Blue Devils went into the game revengeful, because the Devils lost earlier in the season to Oshkosh.

The first half of the game looked as though Stout was going to repeat their loss against the Titans. However, in the last 4:30 of the first half, Tom Gomolak put the Blue Devils ahead by tipping the ball into the basket. The tip helped put the Blue Devils ahead at the end of the first half with a score of 38-30.

Stout came back on to the court for the second half with the same momentum as the first half.keeping their lead throughout the half.

Gomolak, a junior for the Blue Devils, was the lead scorer with 18 points and lead rebounder with 13. Greg Jansen put in 12 points and Rick Stephan, who is rated second in the WSUC Conference in rebounding, had 12 rebounds.

Last Tuesday Stout was dropped by UW-Whitewater 69-59. Whitewater is ranked number one and the Blue Devils are ranked number five in all games played.

At the end of the first half Stout was behind with a score 36-25. The Blue Devils tried to make a comeback, but they stayed behind the whole second half by at least seven points.

The lead scorer was John Patterson with 14 points, and Stephan put in 12 points. Off the boards, Stevens rebounded 14.

Whitewater's Dwayne Johnson was not able to be stopped by the Blue Devils as he put in 22 points. Duane Vance scored 13points. Their leading rebounder was Gary Ruch with seven rebounds.

UW-Stout's Head Coach Dwain Mintz said, "If the team wins the next four games, that will insure home court advantage otherwise if they win two out of four it should insure a playoff birth."

Stevens said, "The team will be ready to go for the rest of the games, we have a week off to prepare." Stephan said that he wants to continue his high quality rebounding and play what is expected of him.

Next Wednesday, the Blue Devils will be on the road challenging UW-Superior.

Oshkosh overpowers weak Blue Devil team

Louie Filkins
Sports Reporter

"We just didn't execute the way we should have," an unemotional head coach, Linda Lee, said commenting on the UW-Stout Lady Blue Devils' 86-60 loss to UW-Oshkosh last Saturday.

Stout won the opening tip only to miss the following lay-up, a problem which seemed to plague the Lady Blue Devils all game long. Oshkosh jumped to an early 10-2 lead with controlled passing and hot shooting.

Stout made a slight comeback late in the first half by getting the ball inside more to Renee Kasten, "We didn't move the ball inside enough, we had better success scoring when we worked it in,"Kasten said. However, after a few quick layups, she left the game at the 3:53 mark because of a sore calf muscle. She was taken to the locker for fear that she was cramping up, but it turned out to be a false alarm.

The Oshkosh Titans lead 41-29 at half-time. Excellent shooting by the Titans made much of the difference in the first half. They sank 15 of 16 at the line and tormented the Stout defense with pin-point shooting.

Darlene Johnson and Renee Kasten lead the scoring for the Blue Devils with 8 points each at the half. Red-hot Patty Lesseluong led the Titans with 14 points. Kasten also led the rebound category with 7. Stout was almost a new team in the beginning of the second half. Much better passing held the Blue Devils within reach of Oshkosh early in the half. The Lady Blue Devils played well in defense, but once again the consistent outside shooting of the Titans, especially by Susie Runaas, stunned the Devils.

Later in the game, Stout's passing and defense faltered and Oshkosh went into the bonus at 11:03. Fine shooting, particularly free-throws by Oshkosh and faulty passing by Stout, finally turned the game into a blowout.

The Blue Devils were responsible for 6 turnovers in the first half and 10 in the second half. Laura Vanderwegen and Patti Cook, who played very aggressively, both scored 12 points for Stout. Her style of play eventually hurt Cook, as she, Kasten and Anderson fouled out late in the game.

Oshkosh was definitely up for this game after defeating Eau Claire the night before. According to head coach, Carol Anhalt, the Titans number one center didn't start because of and injury and also saw very little playing time. Anhalt also said, "Patty Lesseluong is questionable because of torn cartilage in her ribs." It looks like she should rip her cartilage more often after a game-high of 25 points.

One very bright spot on the Lady Blue Devils squad is Renee Kasten. She is now in sole possession of most rebounds in the WWIAC When asked if she could possibly end up the leader at the close of the season, Kasten said, "I hope I can stay healthy and keep up my rebounding average through the end of the season."

The Stout Lady Blue Devils will host Northwestern Friday at the Johnson Fieldhouse.

Injuries and illnesses affect gymnasts

The UW-Stout women's gymnastics team has been battling not only some tough competition, but numerous injuries and illnesses as well. The Lady Blue Devils were defeated last Tuesday by Hamline University and placed last in the Titan Invitational this past Saturday.

In the meet against Hamline, the Lady gymnasts had the highest team score of the year. Head gymnastics Coach John Zuerlein was extremely pleased with their performance and said that they hit the scores that they had set for themselves.

On the vault Pam Fujioka captured first place with an 8.85. Lisa Hille took third with a score of 8.45 and Patti Roenitz placed fourth with an 8.35.

Hille was not pleased with her meet. She felt that the only event that she hit was the vault. However, she said that as a team she felt they did very well.

Roenitz also did well on the uneven bars and the floor exercise. She placed third on the bars with a score of 8.10 and fourth on the floor exercise with an 8.55.

Roenitz felt that she and the team had a good meet against Hamline. In the all-around event she placed second with a score of 31.1. Cosmas Whitten also did well in all-around, placing third. Whitten had a goal of getting an all-around score of 28.0 and achieved this goal by getting a score of 28.05. Nancy Schlener and Carolyn Bjerke tied for fourth place in all-around with a score of 25.60.

Although the team did extremely well, two gymnasts were not able to compete because of injuries. Joyce Alger is out with shin splints, and Tammy Dennis has a groin injury that is keeping her from competing.

In Saturday's Titan Invitational, the Lady Blue Devils were up against some tough competition. Ball State University, University of Alaska, Winona State University, and UW-Oshkosh were in attendance.

Stout went in with a skeleton team and did their best. Tammy Dennis was able to compete on the vault and the uneven bars but Cosmas Whitten was out with an injury. Whitten is out with what they suspect is cartilage damage to the knee which happened in their meet against Hamline.

Illness was another obstacle in this meet. Coach Zuerlein was not able to go with the gymnasts because he had the flu. Carolyn Bjerke was also sick with the flu but competed in the meet and did her best.

Assistant coach Scott Gay felt that the long trip and the various injuries and illnesses contributed to the lower scores. He also mentioned that the judges were scoring lower than usual for all of the teams.

The Lady Blue Devils next meet will be the Sweetheart Invitational this Saturday at Superior. They will compete against UW-Eau Claire, North Dakota State, Superior, Moorhead State, Northern Michigan University, and Minot State.

Coach Zuerlein is predicting that their going to have another skeleton team for this meet. Roenitz has a strained ligament and the flu, but wants to be doing bars and maybe beam for Saturday. Zuerlein wants to go so the girls keep up a competitive edge.

Coach Zuerlein also said that he is toning down their practice this week in hopes of letting some people recover from injuries and illnesses.

Stout tracksters show potential; strive for a successful season

Kim Steger
Sports Reporter

Shortly into their indoor season, the UW-Stout men's and women's track teams have qualified three individuals for the CNAIA Division III Nationals.

Paul Bons qualified in the 1500-meter race with the time of 4:00. Women qualifying for nationals include Sue Meyer in the 2-mile race and Sheila Geere in the 300-meter race. Geere broke the school record in this event with the time of 10:24.

On Feb. 1, the men's team traveled to Iowa to compete in the UNI Quadrangular meet. Other schools competing were Iowa, Lincoln University and Augustana.

Running to a victory for the Blue Devils was Bons in the 1-mile run with a time of 4:20.02. Eric Bretl placed first in the 1000-meter run.

Second place finishes went to Bons in the 1000-meter run and freshman Joe Prestigiacomo in the triple jump.

The only third place finish went for the Blue Devil tracksters went to Todd Fox in the 2-mile run.

Fourth place finishes went to Del Johnson in the 300-meter dash and Dan Dovcette in the 60-meter high hurdles.

On January 25, the women's team traveled to the University of Minnesota to compete in the Minnesota Quadrangular.

Sue Meyer ran to fourth place in the 1500-meter run and Ann Meyer took sixth place in the 3000-meter run.

John Miller, UW-Stout women's track coach, commented that the women's team looks slightly spotty. "We have some real fine performances, but we're not as strong as I hoped we would be," Miller said. He also remarked that this is to be expected this early in the season.

Miller hopes that the team will build their quality as well as the quantity of members on the team. New members are always encouraged and welcomed.

Miller feels that the strong events for the women's team are in the distance events. He particularly pointed out strong runners Geere, Sue Meyer and Ann Meyer.

There have been no major injuries on the women's team, only few minor stress injuries.

Coach Miller plans on using the same training techniques that have been used in the past five years. He's found them to work good, and has been happy with their results.

The men's and women's next indoor meet will be the Eric Liddell Games hosted by Bethel College on February 15.

What's so funny about being female?

Riggs has the answer

Scrap those expensive dinner reservations you made for the weekend. Cancel your plans to see The Color Spielberg and let the dog out early. Then get in line at Dudley Riggs E.T.C. in the West Bank's theater district for What's So Funny About Being Female? (It's not a question old Sigmund Freud ever thought to ask.)

The revue features six local stand-up comediennes in an uproarious showcase. For 90 minutes of female funniness, the laughs spill into the street, threatening to swamp every other leisure pursuit in two towns. Riggs hasn't launched such a tidal wave since the fabled Comedy All-Stars — Jeff Cesario, Alex Cole, Louie Anderson and Joel Madison — bailed out for solo careers four years ago.

What's So Funny About Being Female? is big comedy that sends sexism packing, a fine feminist how-do-you-do, once again reminding audiences that a woman's place is whatever she chooses. And there's ample diversity in this show to convey that expression through several distinct viewpoints, all of them guaranteed to wear out the laugh reflex. Hosted by Dean Johnson, What's So Funny moves at a breezy clip, shattering images of women and replacing them with real people. As the "token man," Johnson shines in the part without a trace of white male liberal guilt; he looks and acts like the proud only boy in a big family of sisters.

Johannesburg, S. Africa-In his second round of media offensive, President Pieter W. Botha pledged his reform of apartheid. In his statements, he promised to provide equal treatment for all, saying that "No South African will be excluded from full political rights," and that he and his government were "committed to power sharing, equal opportunity, equal treatment, and equal justice for all."

The real progress for Blacks remains unclear however. In his speech to Parliament, it was made clear that no control would be given to the Blacks. Political commentator David Breir said that Botha was offering little new, but was doing it "with new inventiveness."

Pope continues despite opposition

New Delhi, India-Pope John Paul has continued with his visit to Hindu-dominated India, despite his meeting with Hindu demonstrators who chanted, "Sinner pope, go home!" and "Pope, go to hell!"

Hindu extremists believe that the purpose of the trip is to convert Hindus to Christianity. Of India's population of 750 million, only about 13 million are Roman Catholics.

Illegal Americans better off in Libya

Washington, D.C.-Robert Oakley, Director of the State Department's Office for Counterterrorism and Emergency Planning said that Americans who have choosen to remain in Libya illegally are "better off not coming home."

"If they come home, they're subject to up to ten years in jail and a $50,000 fine," said Oakley.

Those who have chosen to stay are now less likely to be taken hostage, says Oakley, because the United States has made it clear that they no longer accept responsibility for them.

Navy requests sailor's execution

Newport, R.I.-The Navy has requested a military tribunal to execute a sailor. The sailor, Petty Officer 3rd Class Mitchell Garaway, has been convicted of fatally stabbing Lt. James Sterner because he believed that the officer had blocked his promotion.

An eight member jury will decide whether to sentence to him to life or to make him the first person to be executed by the Navy since the Civil War.

Lawyer seeks murder charges dismissal

Appleton, WI.-The lawyer representing Sandra Pankow, 36, a babysitter charged with the deaths of three infants while in her care, said that he would ask a judge to dismiss the charges at the preliminary hearing.

Pankow has been charged with the deaths of Kristen Hammilton, Shawn Bloomer, and Tyler Kloes. Pathologists have testified that all three deaths could be attributed to forced asphyxiation.

Perspective

Growth and its requirements

Compiled by Paul D. Nelson

One question American workers must now ask themselves, brought on by what is and what will continue to be a dynamic labor environment, is whether the occupation in which they are currently employed will be obsolete in ten years.

And if the widely read and discussed book Megatrends is correct in the assumption that we must abandon the obsolete notion of reacting to occurrences and instead anticipate them to determine the proper course of action, then the aforementioned question should cause each and every American to closely examine and chart an occupational plan based on the best forecasts available.

The United States Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) recently released data which project the growth or decline expected in key American industries by 1995.

The top five gainers in employment opportunity were computers and electronics, health care, high technology, recreation, and publishing by increases of 35, 29, 28, 27 and 20 percent, respectively.

The biggest losers were textiles and apparel, food and beverages, and automaking by decreases of 18, 10 and four percent, respectively.

The single largest occupational increase, a near doubling 98 percent, was in the projected employment of paralegals.

The most pronounced occupational decrease was the 40 percent decline forecast for stenographers.

Associate BLS commissioner Ronald Kutscher asserts that tomorrow's occupations will require "higher skills, more judgement and more analytical ability."

Marvin Cetron, President of Forecasting International and co-author of Jobs of the Future, believes that "Anyone who stops his or her education after high school is committing occupational suicide."

Yet American education has only recently re-examined its methods and standards to determine if they can adequately equip todays students with the basics necessary to perform tomorrow's jobs.

An international study of mathematics competency done in 1982 indicated that American 12th grade students scored below their counterparts in 15 other nations. The results were attributed to the fact that less than 50 percent of the U.S. high school population was, at the time, enrolled in the three years of math and science courses necessary to understand and apply present and emerging technologies.

Nearly all high school age students in Japan and West Germany take three years or more of math and science.

In addition, all Soviet students are exposed to one year of calculus on their way through the Russian educational system.

Committee ponders mall development

The area directly south of the Memorial Student Center is being considered for a pedestrian mall the could include an ice skating rink. One question remaining about the mall is, where will faculty and students park their cars? The Student Center requests that if a mall is built, that Fourth Street be left open. (Stoutonia photo by Todd A. Nelson)

Beth Reid
News Reporter

Green space...aesthetically satisfying...multifunctional. These are words that have been used to describe the criteria for the development of the mall area south of the Student Center.

"One of the biggest areas of concern is that the area be multifunctional," Wes Stead, SSA representative for the Campus Facilities and Grounds Committee, said. "We are trying not to define the area as having only one purpose."

Many ideas have been brought up, but the development is still in the discussion stage. The idea of a small amphitheater has been dropped, along with the idea of a small pond. The committee has decided that they want to keep the area open and provide green space rather than filling it up with buildings. A pond would cause too many problems with trying to keep it clean, and would also pose possible safety hazards during the winter with people falling through the ice.

One idea that has been voted on and accepted is that a skating rink be developed. The closest rink for general skating is located at Wilson Park. "The rink would be shaped in a different style to provide for general skating," Stead said, "but would not be used for broomball or hockey."

Another topic of major concern is parking. "One concern is what is going to be done to the mall area," Bob Johnson, Director of Student Center Auxiliary Services and Administration, said, "and the second concern is that if you do something to the mall, what effect will it have on parking in the area."

The committee has been discussing whether Fourth Street, which is one of the closest parking areas, be kept as an open street or closed off into a cul-de-sac. The Student Center wants the street left open.

No concrete decision has been made as to whether the street will be left open or closed, but the committee has made the following general statement: "The design of the central campus will provide for as many or more near adjacent stalls as now exist, while making the area functional and aesthetically satisfying. Covered or short distance access to the nearby buildings for safety and inclement weather reasons should be considered."

Other criteria that have been set down by the committee is to have "small individual seating areas, some perhaps covered or glass-enclosed; landscaping which is delightful and conducive to individual and small group use, without the construction of permanent seating or stage areas."

No date has been set for construction to begin because they are still in the stage of proposals and designs. The design will have to be developed, a proposal will be written up and approved and then there must be a request for funding. Once these steps have been completed, the construction will begin.

Children of alcoholics supported by various local support groups

Maria Wagner
News Reporter

Approximately 58 percent of the children of alcoholics are at risk of becoming alcohol dependent themselves, said Anne Ramage, Assistant Director of Residence Halls and Coordinator of the Children of Alcoholics Group (COA) at UW-Stout campus. This percentage is even higher if more than one parent is alcoholic.

Ramage said "Most children of alcoholics are overachievers but, as adults their coping mechanisms begin to fall apart. They become very independent, making it difficult for them to be in an intimate relationship of any sort."

COA groups give those involved the opportunity to talk about how they have been affected and how they are still affected. How they deal with alcohol use is also discussed.

These support groups have had 18 different groups formed in the past two and a half years. Each group has 6-10 members with two facilitators; some being graduate students at Stout, but all have had previous training and experience. Some facilitators have been past

Sharon Cruse

COA members. The groups are closed, confidential and co-ed.

According to Dr. Charles Barnard, Director of Marriage and Family Therapy with the Counseling and Psychological Services Department, the success rate of the COA groups was tested one year ago and it "was determined quite substantially that there were significant and positive changes to children of alcoholics experiencing the treatment of the COA groups."

Members of the COA group, children of alcoholics not involved in the treatment and students chosen randomly from the Stout campus were tested. According to Barnard they all completed the same psychological instruments post and prior to the treatment period. The results were positive for those involved in the COA groups.

According to Barnard, three areas that COA group members improved in were areas that children of alcoholics frequently identify as problem areas. They improved in the area of self regard, making themselves feel more capable, as well as in the capacity to relate intimately with others. They also improved in the area of inner-directedness, increasing trust in themselves rather than being influenced only by their external environment.

On Monday, Feb. 10 at 8:00 p.m. in Harvey Hall Auditorium, Sharon Wegscheider-Cruse will speak on addictions and co-dependent relationships; one thing that children of alcoholics struggle with. Wegscheider is president of Onsite Training & Consulting, Inc.

Editorial

Funding of education necessary for future

The current deficits afflicting our state and national governments have reached such a magnitude that, for the first time, some of our elected lawmakers are having to make some difficult decisions.

Yet in their pursuit of bringing state and federal spending in line with revenues they are making a grave error which, we believe, will have a profound long term negative impact on our economy.

The error we are addressing is the short sighted decision to "shoot ourselves in the foot" by dramatically reducing the past levels of funding for higher education.

Lawmakers know that it is politically expedient, especially in fiscal matters, to achieve short term results because their average constituent lacks the foresight necessary to visualize the consequences of their sometimes irresponsible legislative actions.

But we believe that lawmakers should be reminded that their decision to cut the level of funding for higher education, in an economy where increasing credentialization dictates that people may someday need a degree to be employed as a ditch digger, will only increase unemployment, swell the welfare rolls and cause a severe shortage of skilled labor in the long term.

There are already far too many functionally illiterate adults in this nation who cannot read their pre-schooler a bedtime story.

The Bottom Line

Absence of Malice

Rich Brueckner

The American Medical Association (AMA) has set a mandate for a "smokeless society" by the year 2000. They propose to achieve this lofty goal by banning all advertisement of tobacco products.

I think their strategy is to minimize the number of people who start smoking while letting nature take its course with those who already do. I could just see the new warning on cartons — "Warning: the Surgeon General has determined that you have less than 15 years to live."

It is logical to assume that the promotion of a hazardous substance leads people to try that substance. A water fountain in Menomonie would seem the perfect case in point.

The problem is that nicotine is slightly more habit forming than contaminated water. Drinking something that glows in the dark gets old real fast.

The cigarette companies contend that they are only trying to generate brand loyalty rather than new smokers. They are so concerned that they spent over a billion dollars on advertising last year.

I think it is interesting that they spend a proportional amount on advertising in countries where the government controls the whole industry and brand loyalty doesn't make dime difference.

I'm not sure what they are trying to accomplish. When I see a model with a cigarette, I don't wish for a smoke so much as a good, trusty lighter.

I propose an experiment to resolve this issue. Why not promote smoking to an entirely new market and then judge the results?

Preschoolers are the only group relatively free of tobacco users. Kids are rather easy to appeal to. Instead of promoting breakfast cereal, the little blue men could dance around a fire and chant the advantages of going smokeless with "Smurf" chewing tobacco. At least that would explain their stunted growth and pigmentation.

They wouldn't even have to come up with new slogans for this campaign. Van Halen's last album cover could be a great role model for toddlers — "You've come a long way, baby."

The Surgeon General's warning would not be a problem since the little tikes can't even read yet. If youngsters do take up smoking, the AMA will be proven right once and for all.

Constitutional questions will always surround the banning of advertisement of legal products. Only in America could a federally subsidized industry wrap itself in the flag and produce a carcinogen with pride.

I think the issue here is the power of advertising to make up our own minds for us. As more factions realize this, we'll be likely to see it used more and more.

Persuasion has found the perfect medium in music videos like "We are the World" and "Sun City". Imagine if the South African government put out a video a la John Lennon; "All We Are Saying is Give Apartheid a Chance."

Facing massive aid cuts and tuition increases, college students could produce a new version of Dire Strait's "Money for Nothing" that would go, "I want my...I want my Work-study."

Suspense could be used to enhance effect. "We show you the way to your fullest debt potential. In an exciting environment of fiscal irresponsibility, you'll find the rationale to spend your childrens' income. Join us. We're not a company; we're your country!"

Our President is pretty good at getting his message across. Sometimes he doesn't even have to actually say what it is. When a slightly graying Tom Brokaw interviewed him before the Superbowl, the potential for plugging Grecian Formula was enormous.

Old Ronny got a little miffed when "60 Minutes" did a story a while back on his habit of quoting lines from movies. In a fit of denial, he shouted, "I'm mad as hell, and I'm not gonna take it any more!"

I'm not sure what this all boils down to. The power to program people is the price we have to pay for better communications. The guy who spouts off in The Stoutonia would like to believe that this is why he is so screwed up.

Subject: Citizens support city manager form of government as opposed to 'petty politics'

John Jax

John Jax, Library Learning Center Director, is co-chairperson of the Citizens Committee To Save Our City. Carolyn Onstad, owner and proprietor of Carolyn's Hallmark Gift Shop, is the other co-chairperson.

STOUTONIA: WHAT IS THE "SAVE OUR CITY" CAMPAIGN?

JAX: We were asked to serve by a group of over fifty community business and industrial people to formulate a campaign to retain the existing form of city government. Personally, I was on the City Council for over eight years. I served as the president of the City Council for six years, and during this time we had tremendous growth and a fine relationship with the city manager/council form of government. The people who asked Carolyn and myself to serve were primarily interested in retaining the base for future growth which we've experienced in the 1970s and 1980s.

STOUTONIA: HOW DOES THE CAMPAIGN'S PURPOSE TIE IN WITH THE CONTROVERSY SURROUNDING THE NEW LIBRARY CURRENTLY UNDER CONSTRUCTION?

JAX: I think indirectly it does, but the roots of the movement toward the mayoral form of government go back to 1967. That referendum passed in favor of a city manager/-council form of government by only a few hundred votes at that time. There has been a residual number of people who still favor the mayoral form of government and they have persisted that we ought to go back to this form of government. I believe that the library was an indirect issue related to it, but not the main issue.

STOUTONIA: WHY SHOULD THE CITY OF MENOMONIE BE GOVERNED BY A CITY MANAGER AS OPPOSED TO A MAYOR?

JAX: We have been beautifully served by the city manager form of government for the past eighteen years. Whether or not we have a full-time mayor or part-time mayor is really not for the proposers to say. We have a government that's been intact, it's been successful, it's been progressive, it has had phenomenal growth and to move back to a mayoral form of government, without any logic or without any real substance that it would be better, to me is ludicrous.

Buhr is incorrect, boring

In reference to Rochelle Buhr's column, "Super Boredom," don't you proofread your reporters' articles before letting them be printed?

First of all, for those diehard Bear's fans and for anyone who knows anything about the Super Bowl, the Chicago Bears received the opening kickoff instead of booting it to the Patriots.

Ms. Buhr's reference to a "boring blowout" is typical of everyone who resents the Bears for being the best team in the NFL. I'm sure that everyone from Chicago and those who followed the Bears throughout the season, didn't feel that it was dull, rather a perfect ending to a perfect season. I would have rather seen a shutout.

Secondly, in reference to "Rochelle's Top Ten Best Looking Men in the NFL," who the hell is Tom Cousineau? If she is referring to the Jet's defensive end Mark Gastineau, he is the ugliest looking person I have seen in a long time.

Finally, the football season is not over yet. Sunday is the Pro-bowl, and there are a good deal of the Chicago Bears that will be playing in it. I hope it is as "boring as the Superbowl." You should really have someone who knows something about sports writing a sports column.

Trashy, sick Brueckner takes smearing potshot at Gay/Lesbian Community

Rich Brueckner's Jan. 23 column, "Not Exactly The News" is sad testimony to his persistent lack of good taste and creative writing ability. Aside from being a vulgar, sickening and ignorant attack of gay and lesbian persons, it is a slanderous, unprovoked pot-shot at a legitimate campus organization.

And that is why we, the members on Gay and Lesbian Community at Stout (GLCS) strongly object to your allowing this to go to print. Your journalistic ethics are at best, questionable. Maybe you forget that the Stoutonia is a campus organization too. You have no right to smear another organization's name and image in such a wanton, derogatory manner.

You could have exercised your editorial right and held this column from print. Even though your editorial policy states that you don't endorse a columnist's opinions, we hardly believe you would have allowed the publication of an equally hostile and bigoted article about black persons, women or disabled persons.

Nevertheless, this isn't the first time Brueckner has abused his position at the Stoutonia to smear gay and lesbian people. In his Oct. 10, 1985 column, he wrote a fictitous David Letterman show, putting these words in the popular comedian's mouth: "...no one cares if homosexuals and addicts die from AIDS...." In his Nov. 21, 1985 column, he invented a toy called the "G.I. Joe AIDS Detection/Attack Squadron" which "seeks out gays and blows them to hell."

And in his latest installment, this time completely devoted to attacking gays and lesbians, not to mention GLCS, he likens homosexuality to beastiality, makes fun of AIDS, reinforces old stereotypes like "limp wrists" and suggests the introduction of a "gay laxative" on the market. Worst of all, he (libels) GLCS's Hotline, calling it "The AIDS Bee-line."

Come on, editors, wake up. This isn't an informative, enlightening, creative, well-constructed commentary you're allowing Brueckner to print — it's trash. Brueckner's world-view may include nothing more than stereotypical caricatures when it comes to the gay population, as his writing confirms, but the truth is real people get hurt when you print it. These people are students, just like you, who pay for your newspaper out of their student-activity fees.

Some of these students are members of GLCS, who work hard to maintain a credible, professionable, positive image of the organization. We operate a hotline to assist us in providing much needed support and education to all gay and lesbian persons in the community. City is accountable

In a recent interview (in SPOTLIGHT), Jay Schroeder accused the present city government of having a lack of accountability. I would disagree strongly.

Our city taxes have not increased for six years. How much more accountable to the public can one be to hold the line on taxation while at the same time supplying a multitude of responsible services?

Mr. Schroeder has admitted to me he knows that money to pay for new library construction has been set aside over the past several years. These costs are not going to be paid out of additional taxes — the money is already there.

How accountable is Jay Schroeder passing, as he does, this knowledge while refusing to admit it?

Abortion equals genocide

In response to Jeanne Wilkinson's letter, (January 30, 1986) I would like to say, excuse me? Jeanne, you raised more issues and questions than you gave any hint of a solution for. I saw some common ground pop out at the end of your letter, so I can see that your heart was right, I guess.

I will, however, disagree with your statement "Part of the wise use of this power involves keeping our own race in check lest we overrun the earth and destroy it..." You also said "Abortion is a sad but necessary act."

Am I to assume that you're suggesting the use of abortion as a wise use of power to keep our race in check? If we can live with ourselves after murdering eighteen million babies in the last thirteen years, then possibly some other forms of race control are in the wings? Euthanasia? How about one step further?

Let's line up all the unproductive physically and mentally handicapped people and mow them down, ala Hitler! If you think I am making something out of nothing, you are not alone, but law makers all over the country are suggesting laws that will lead to the very same end that I just described.

Sounds nasty? Sure it does. The laws might go into effect just about the time that you are too old or too poor to defend yourself. Then what?

Jeanne, I am not trying to make out to be Neo-Nazi. I am trying however, to show the END to the type of thinking that looks at life as expendable for a higher good.

Life is a gift from God. No man or woman should be given the choice to end a life before its time. I agree with you Jeanne on the issue of protecting all life. The poor, hungry, and the abused must be shown love and care. Jesus himself said "When you have done it unto the least of these, you have done it unto me..."Matthew 25:40

Unborn possess rights

This letter is in reference to last week's letter by Jeanne Wilkinson. I think we all can agree that life and living for the most part is in itself a good thing. If someone takes our life away from us, that person is called a murderer, am I not correct? Now tell me this, how can anyone make the CHOICE that someone's life is or is not worth living based on the pro-creative parties inconvenience or lack of responsibility? Sounds very judgemental to me, why it even sounds God like.

Are we playing God with our unborn? Seems obvious to me! "What about rape victims, why should they have to give birth to a child they didn't want?" Good question, but why should the baby suffer a death sentence for the rapist's crime? The child could be put up for adoption instead.

Putting that aside, let's look at the stats, less then one percent of all rape cases become pregnancies. Hmmm, sounds like an emotional smokescreen to keep abortionists in the top ten of the Fortune 500. They take in 500 million a year and do 1.5 million abortions a year. Ask yourself this, were most of these for victims of rape? Have women been exploited by doctors greed? I think it's quite obvious!

Jeanne, you feel the pro-life movement is one of hatred, your right to a certain extent, pro-lifers have a deep hatred for that which is an abomination in the sight of God. We only want that which is Holy and Godly. As far as the pregnant mother is concerned we love her and want to show her that it is alright to have the child. "What about the woman who has had an abortion?" We in the pro-life movement also love her and want to help her in any possible way. We do not and will not attack, accuse, or revile anyone in one of these positions.

I personally suggest anyone in a situation like this repent and get right with God, asking him to forgive you for your sin and then making Jesus Christ Lord of your life. Give Christ total control. If you will, you'll never be in a mess like this.

Greedy doctors have the most to lose if abortion is made illegal. Do they want it illegalized? NO WAY! At least not the greedy ones. It just goes to show you, the LOVE of money is the root of all evil, whether it be abortion or any other form of wickedness.

Let's quit playing God and allow the God of the Bible to help us out of the messes we're in. There's your solution!

What's so funny about being female?

Scrap those expensive dinner reservations you made for the weekend. Cancel your plans to see The Color Spielberg and let the dog out early. Then get in line at Dudley Riggs E.T.C. in the West Bank's theater district for What's So Funny About Being Female? (It's not a question old Sigmund Freud ever thought to ask.)

The revue features six local stand-up comediennes in an uproarious showcase. For 90 minutes of female funniness, the laughs spill into the street, threatening to swamp every other leisure pursuit in two towns. Riggs hasn't launched such a tidal wave since the fabled Comedy All-Stars — Jeff Cesario, Alex Cole, Louie Anderson and Joel Madison — bailed out for solo careers four years ago.

What's So Funny About Being Female? is big comedy that sends sexism packing, a fine feminist how-do-you-do, once again reminding audiences that a woman's place is whatever she chooses. And there's ample diversity in this show to convey that expression through several distinct viewpoints, all of them guaranteed to wear out the laugh reflex. Hosted by Dean Johnson, What's So Funny moves at a breezy clip, shattering images of women and replacing them with real people. As the "token man," Johnson shines in the part without a trace of white male liberal guilt; he looks and acts like the proud only boy in a big family of sisters.

The company staged a similar show last fall, but this year's sequel plays tighter, with more jokes per minute and an improved lineup. In fact, what makes the reprise so surprisingly good are the siginificant advances in material made by relative newcomers Judy Rae, Cindy Gregg and Priscilla Nelson. As the saying goes, they've come a long way, baby. (Last Friday's first performance also featured a cameo by Kristin Anderson, one of three rotating new comediennes. Her confidence level exceeded her material, but the crowd loved her denouncements of feminine hygiene products on TV — "What, I'm not intelligent enough to buy them myself?" —

Titantic tuition butchers pupils

Matt Kalina

Playing suction-cup to a rigid personal budget can be as tough as staying for just one at triple-cripple.

I know; I formulated what I term a rigid personal budget in early January for this semester.

First, because it was easier, I listed all of my expenditures for the semester: tuition, rent, insurance, food, gas and beer.

Then I listed all of my sources of revenue: wages, cash savings, and tax refund checks.

The bottom line: revenue equaled expenses — everything seemed compos mentis.

But after penciling my way through income tax forms last week, I tumbled onto the fact that I will have to make revisions the size of boxcars. You see, I didn't predict the distinction of becoming for the first time ever, an actual U.S. and Wisconsin taxpayer only because I made a tad more money than last year, just enough to push me into a tax paying bracket.

I performed a reconnaissance mission over those forms dozens of times trying to catch my error. I'm too young to be paying taxes. But every method I used, it turned up the same answer — toss bucks Uncle Sam's way.

I won't have to actually launch off a check or money order to the Internal Revenue Service Center in Kansas City or to the Wisconsin Department of Revenue in Madison, but the taxmen are only going to give me a monkey-sized fraction of my taxes withheld (53 percent of federal refund and 16 percent of State refund,) so, in effect, I did fork over mucho dinero for taxes.

But that is not the worst news.

It seems as the State Revenue of Wisconsin is also shy a few bucks from what was expected in their rigid personal budgets — more like bounteous greenbacks. Governor Tony Earl wants 53 million in cuts from state agencies to make up for the major cash shortfall in the State Treasury.

Guess who has to shoulder one-third of those cuts? You and me pal. That would be a jabbing increase of $66 plus a previously planned $126 hike. What we're talking about is a 33 percent hike in tuition; in terms of cold cash, fork over $200 more for tuition next year, buddy.

Also when you come back next year, expect the possibility of less library hours, slower processing of financial aids, less counseling services, less maintenance on buildings and other support services along with the reduction of enrollment by nearly 200 students.

It's a sad picture of the once glorious UW-System.

The most recent figures that I could paw, placed the UW-System 46th in the nation for state and local funding per student for higher education. Taxpayers and other sources currently foot 70 percent of the bill.

It's like one of those velvet paintings of matadors that are sold along the roadside. That's a sad picture indeed.

Students will be forced to bear a heavy load for tuition, seriously limiting the number of middle-income and poor students who can attend. Who needs the rotten suburbanites and their sidekick, the begging proletariat anyway?

What's mysterious is that our one and only Student Regent John Schenian, who was appointed three months ago, unbelievably voted for the UW-System cuts and tuition increase proposals which also met the overall approval of the Board of Regents.

Why didn't our newly-appointed Student Regent support us? Where does John Schenian, 24, a first-year law student get off without representing his constituents, the Wisconsin public university students, in protesting the increase in tuition? How does our newly-appointed student regent look at his twisted self in the mirror when he jabbered soon after his appointment that he would work to ease the burden of tuition on students uttering, "I really feel that a couple of percentage points, (in tuition costs by students), to some students, means they will not be able to afford to go to school."?

Speaking to me over the telephone Tuesday, he said that he voted for it because he felt it was the only solution because the State Legislature put a gun to their heads. He said that it was only his second regent meeting and that he didn't understand fully what was happening and that the Board of Regents is powerless to legislative change of this magnitude.

These are timid reasons for voting for a tuition increase. Instead of being voiceless, Schenian could have stood up, stuck his neck out, made some waves and shown us what he is made of by making a statement.

I asked Schenian if he would change his vote if he could turn back time. He said since mega students are firing shots of criticism at him, he said if he were offered the chance, he would instead vote no, for the sake of symbolism.

I hope Schenian will keep us, the students, firmly in mind next time he votes on something as important as budgets, tuition and money. If he fails to do so again, more shots will be fired, but they will hit to maim.

STOUTONIA: HOW WOULD YOU RESPOND TO THE PREMISE THAT A CITY MANAGER IS LESS DIRECTLY ACCOUNTABLE TO THE PEOPLE THAN A MAYOR?

JAX: The city manager serves at the wish of the city council. The city council is elected by the voters of this city. If they had a preference for a different city manager who is not responsive to the populous, then they should remove that person and get somebody in office that is responsive. I think the existing city manager has been very, very responsive to the constituency of this city. We could not have progressed as much as we have with an irresponsible, lazy or non-responsive city manager. I feel we have had a very responsive city manager/council form of government in this city.

STOUTONIA: DO YOU SUPPORT THE CURRENT SYSTEM OF ELECTING CITY COUNCILMAN AT LARGE, OR DO YOU SUPPORT A CHANGE TO THE SELECTION OF CITY COUNCILMAN BY WARDS?

JAX: I really think that the representation by ward or at large is only as good as the people that are elected to serve in those positions. I don't think it makes any difference. Personally I do favor the at large concept, but I don't have many problems with the ward system since I have served under both forms of government.

STOUTONIA: DO SOME LONGTIME RESIDENTS OF MENOMONIE OPPOSE THE SELECTION OF CITY COUNCILMAN BY WARDS BECAUSE, IF ADOPTED, IT COULD GIVE STOUT STUDENTS A LARGER VOICE IN CITY POLITICS?

JAX: I'm not sure that any existing form of election, whether it be at large or by ward, would give any one faction or segment of the community the upper hand. I think that Stout represents two-thirds of the city any way you want to look at it, in population. Conceivably, it you would have eleven wards, we could have eleven so-called "Stout people" elected. If we would have, as we do now, seven at large members, conceivably we could have seven "Stout people" elected. I don't find anything wrong with that because I don't feel that there is an onus about Stout people. I think they are good people. If the voters elect those people and if the Stout people aspire to those positions, then they should be elected.

STOUTONIA: IN REALITY, WHAT CAN A CITY MANAGER DO THAT A MAYOR CANNOT?

JAX: The mayor is subject to the petty politics that a city manager is not. For example, a mayor has to stand for election every two years, has to bow to the cornerstone of petty factions of politics that really don't pertain to management or governments, but pertain more specifically to how one feels about a specific issue. For example, you have a parking ticket and someone who doesn't like it wants it fixed. Or perhaps they want to get their own people appointed to government positions whether it be in the utilities or protective services, things like that. I think the city manager removes government and management from politics.

STOUTONIA: WHAT WILL HAPPEN TO THE LIBRARY IF BOTH REFERENDUMS PASS AND THE NEW MAYOR AND WARD CITY COUNCILMEN DECIDE TO PERMANENTLY HALT ITS CONSTRUCTION?

JAX: I really can't say. I think that if that happens, if the circumstances prevail, then that's what the city deserves. After all, they would have voted their preference both in the referenda and in electing the council people who have that position or feeling.

STOUTONIA: WHAT ARE YOUR PREDICTIONS AS TO THE OUTCOME OF BALLOTING ON THE TWO PROPOSED REFERENDUMS?

JAX: I feel that the city manager issue will prevail because I really think that when the people examine the issues involved and the progress that we have made over the past fifteen years, that they will say, "Why take a gamble?" It is foolish to go back to a mayoral form of government in which we don't know whether it will be a part-time or full-time mayor, or whether that position will be more costly than the existing form of government or what. There are too many unknowns. I think the voters are intelligent and they will vote no in the referendum for a mayoral form of government and retain the city manager/council form of government. Concerning the wards, I think that that one is up for grabs. It doesn't make a lot of difference to a lot of people. It is not as significant as the change in the form of government, choosing between a mayoral or city manager form of government.

Local water sources hold excessive radium

Karen Smith
News Reporter

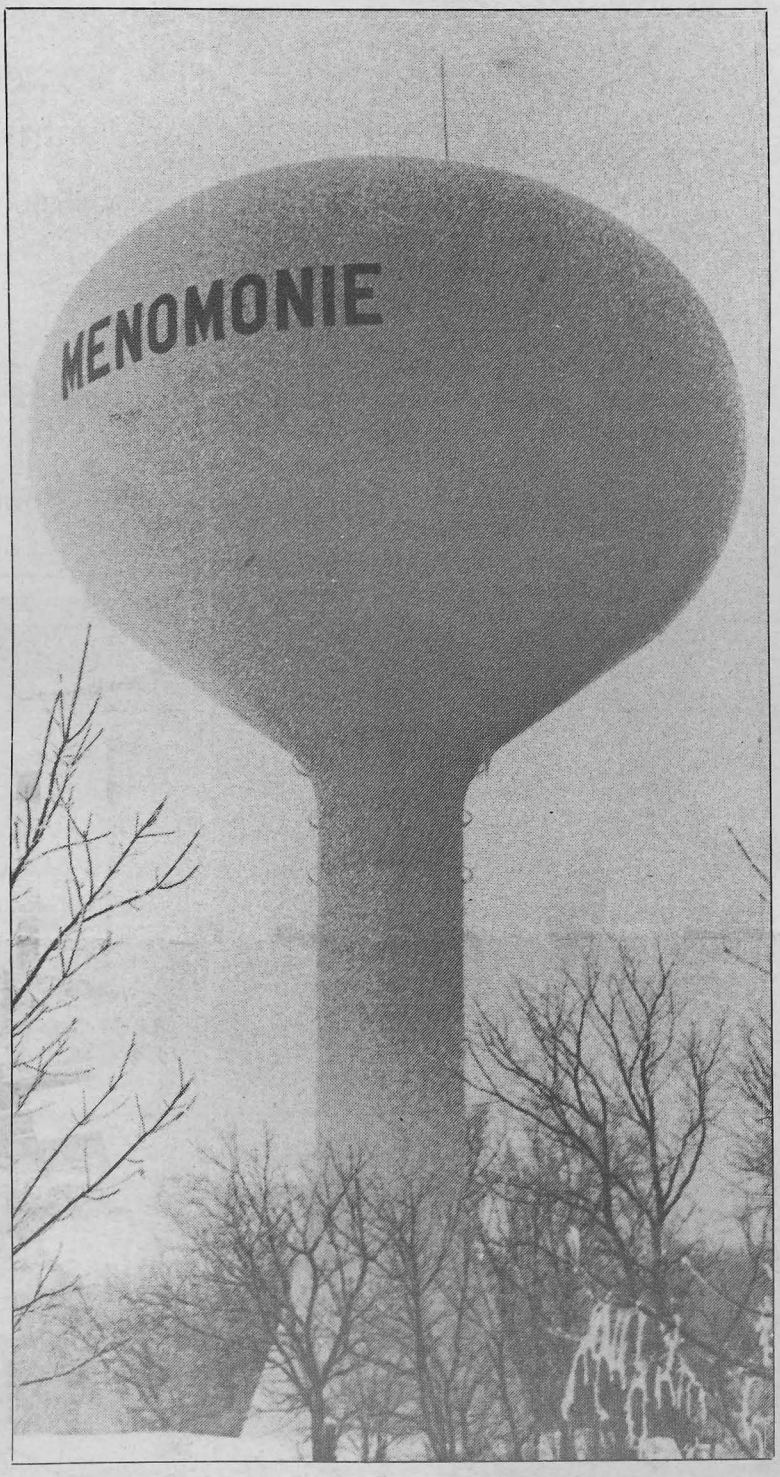
There are at least 44 communities in Wisconsin, including Menomonie, concerned with the excessive levels of radium in their water supplies. The Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources is working on a way to remove the elevated levels of radium in drinking water and safely dispose of removed wastes within two years.

The radium found in the drinking water isn't from man-made contaminates, but occurs naturally in the sandstone rocks and is drawn towards water. The body absorbs radium similarly to the way calcium is absorbed. As a result, drinking water containing excessive amounts of radium may increase the chances of developing bone cancer after a lifetime of exposure.

Radioactivity in the water can be removed a number of ways. These include alternating the water supplies, blending the water, and applying central treatment by using a water softener and practicing waste disposal. However, these methods can be expensive. The drinking water in Menomonie has a radium level of .0000000000059, .4 millionths over the acceptable level. The Menomonie Water Department is currently studying to find the best method for removing the radium and disposing the waste.

John Fizel, the water superintendent for the Menomonie Water Department, said that Menomonie is required to remove the excessive amounts of radium. The main problem is finding a place to put the waste. "If we do take the radium out, we put it in the river, which goes into the soil, and eventually back into the water", Fizel said. "The process also becomes expensive." The radium could also be removed by chemicals, but the right ones have to be used since they can also become harmful.

Although this can become serious, studies have shown that someone would have to drink 100 gallons of water a day for it to do any harm. A decision on what route to take in removing the radium will be reached by 1987.



Since Menomonie's water supply has been found having radiation levels exceeding acceptable limits, the city's water department is searching for an efficient, yet relatively inexpensive way for eliminating the radium. (Stoutonia photo by Brad Kautzer)

SSA reconsiders new programming proposal

Kelly Cohorst
News Reporter

The Stout Student Association (SSA) learned about a new program from the associate director of alumni services Tuesday evening. Patricia Reisinger explained the goals behind the new extern program that is available through the Alumni Association at UW-Stout.

The extern program sends juniors and seniors to work on the job with the alumni who have made themselves available for the program through Alumni Services. The students get the opportunity to work on the job for up to a week, either beside the alumni or in place of the alumni. Reisinger said the advantage from doing this type of a program is the way these students have the chance to see alumni doing the work that they are plan to do in their careers.

This program was started two years ago by Alumni Services in Minneapolis/St. Paul. They sent a survey to alumni asking them if there was any interest in having the students come and talk to the alumni about their jobs. Reisinger said the alumni response has been especially "phenomenal" in the eastern part of the state, through Green Bay all the way down to Milwaukee.

Dave Williams from the Stout Foundation outlined how the Foundation's Scholarship Program gave out 250 scholarships ranging from $150 to $1650, totaling over $90,000 last year. From the 7700 students attending UW-Stout only 600 applied for the scholarships, Williams said.

Williams reported that scholarship totals will exceed $100,000 this year. That total includes a $3000.00 scholarship restricted to Hotel and Restaurant majors. The Foundation also funds a wide variety of research and development activities for students, faculty and staff.

Chuck Keller, vice president of legislative affairs said that a $27.3 million deficit will hit universities nationwide in the 1986-87 school year. The legislative affairs committee believes that the administrative salaries should feel the impact of 1/3 of the cuts.

Keller also stated that there would be an open forum debate among the seven city council candidates. The candidates will debate the city library issue, the mayor vs manager issue, and the city ward issue.

Cooperative Programming was proposed once again. Vice President of Financial Affairs, Tom Schwalbach proposed the rules for cooperative programming in the following format:

Who is eligible? Any funded organization may co-program with one more organizations be it funded or not. A non-funded organization is defined as any SSA recognized organization.

When will applications be accepted? The first review of applications will take place 30 days after the total budget is passed by the USS. Applications may be turned in anytime after this and will be considered as long as there is money in the Cooperative Programming Fund.

Who will decide if the event will be funded? The co-op board will have control of the monies allocated to the Cooperative Programming Fund. This board will be made up of the Finance Committee and two people having programming experience. The two members must be recommended by the vice president of financial affairs and approved by the senate.

What kind of events are eligible? Any event which will most inform, entertain and/or in some way be of benefit to the student body at large.

International seminars

Five seminars on "International Perspectives in Communication and Education" are scheduled this semester. International students from various countries will participate in a panel discussion of their educational experiences here and in their home country. They will also discuss the implications of these experiences for their study here. The series is open to the public. Meetings will be held from 3:30 to 5 p.m. in Ballroom A of the Memorial Student Center. Topics will include the Caribbean, March 20; Africa, April 8; and Europe April 29.

Chairman named

Harlyn Misfeldt has been named chair of UW-Stout's department of education, according to an announcement by David Sabatino, dean of the School of Education and Human Services. Misfeldt has had 26 years of teaching experience, including six years in a public school and 20 years at Stout.

Educational symposium

There will be an educational strategy development project symposium Tuesday, Feb. 11, 1986 from 2 to 4 p.m. in the Northwoods Room of the Memorial Student Center. The symposium features the reports of Carole Flint, English, Bette Hanson, Human Development, Family Living and Community Services, Bruce Pamperin, Social Science, Janet Polansky, English, Lee Smalley, Industrial and Marketing Education, and Dennis Vanden Bloomen, Business. The public is invited. Call Ext. 2656 if there are any questions.

Research grant

Researchers at UW-Stout's Center for Vocational, Technical and Adult Education have been awarded a grant to study the interdistrict tuition policy in the State's Vocational, Technical and Adult Education System. Project Director Orville Nelson said that the purpose of the study is to determine the problems, barriers and inequities created by interdistrict tuition.

Psychology institute

The 15th Annual School Psychology Institute at the UW-Eau Claire will be held on Feb. 28 from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. The title of this year's institute is "Intervention and Assessment: Serving the Student, the Family and the Professional." Interested parties can obtain information about the Institute from Arts and Sciences Outreach, Scholfield Hall 20, UW-Eau Claire, Eau Claire, WI, 54701.

Job training study

A team from Stout's School of Liberal Studies has been awarded contract to conduct a follow-up evaluation of job training contractors and programs supported by the Western Wisconsin Private Industry Council Inc. , La Crosse, WI. The evaluation will survey the 1745 individuals who received and completed training between July 1984 and June 1985. The study will compare the status of the individuals prior to receiving training, to their current status regarding employment, income and a variety of other measures.

Aids

agencies to offer AIDS counseling, education and referral services. "That counseling can play a significant role in prevention," Dowling said.

Dowling blamed the media for having neither the time nor the understanding to help educate the public about AIDS. "The problem with AIDS," she said, "is it is not a simple syndrome. It doesn't lend itself well to the oversimplification of a one- or two-minute broadcast on TV because of its complexity."

Dowling stressed that despite what you might have heard reported in the media, "No cases have been found to date where AIDS has been transmitted by casual or even close daily contact with AIDS patients." She is disturbed by the public's undue concern for sharing casual contact with an AIDS victim.

The Division of Health has studied family members in the case where one has been diagnosed having AIDS. None of these family members have contracted AIDS through casual contact. Part of the problem concerning public hysteria about AIDS is their "fear of unknown", Dowling said.

Responding to a question about Wisconsin's Department of Health guidelines for decontaminating a CPR manikin, Dowling said, "Research shows that blood and semen are the only bodily fluids that have been known to transfer AIDS." Seventy-five percent of all AIDS infections result from sexual contact, Dowling reported.

Dowling defined AIDS as a blood-born virus that strips the body of many of its immune system activities, leaving the victim vulnerable to diseases that wouldn't even be threatening to the health of someone whose immune system is intact.

Dowling said the National Center for Disease Control's major concern results from their estimate that 1,000 Americans are being affected with AIDS antibodies each day. She stressed that the presence of AIDS antibodies doesn't necessarily mean a person will get AIDS. Each of these individuals does become an AIDS carrier.

The essential preventative method for halting the spread of AIDS starts with the identification of those who belong to the high-risk groups for AIDS. Homosexuals, hemophiliacs, the unborn children of infected mothers and people who share intravenous drug needles make up the high-risk group.

Wisconsin is a low-risk region according to Dowling. There have been 62 confirmed AIDS cases here, 41 of whom have died. The Division of Health estimates that 6,000 Wisconsinites are infected with AIDS and that 30 state residents are being infected each day, Dowling said.

THERE'S AN ARMY OF CHOICES OUT THERE.

It's not easy. Sometimes the number of choices you have seems mind-boggling. But sometimes, when you know what you want, freedom of choice is a great thing. Look at today's Army.

There's the Active Army and the Army Reserve. If you qualify for Active, you serve 2-4 years, choose from over 300 skills to train in, and in over 80 of those skills you could be eligible for up to $25,200 in college money.

If you already have a job or are in school, consider the Army Reserve. All it takes is one weekend a month and two weeks a year. Plus, you'll learn a useful skill and earn over $1,200 a year.

Both choices give you career experience, physical conditioning, new friends, good pay, and a chance to serve your country. It's all up to you. Call your local Army Recruiter.

Warner blends country, easy listening

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

The mood: sit back and relax.
The medium: contemporary folk music.
The performer: Dennis Warner.
Last weekend Warner shared his musical talents with the UW-Stout community. He performed in the Price Commons on Thursday and in the Pawn on Friday and Saturday.

This artist described his work as "a cross over of country and pop, easy listening music." Being a native of the Midwest, much of Warner's original pieces had an outdoor flavor. His music ranged from a rendition about boy scouting to a more melodic tune about winter.

Warner sang with with a full, deep voice. He strummed and picked his guitar fluently. His first interest in music began at an early age. When his father played guitar, Warner as a child would sing along with the tunes.

Since grade school Warner has played the guitar. While in college at St. Cloud State, Warner majored in philosophy and minored in voice. During these years he also became an accomplished classical cellist.

After his college years, this musician concentrated upon his talents in voice and guitar. For a time he played in a country rock, blue grass band. Now he is a solo coffee house musician.

...much of Warner's original pieces had an outdoor flavor.

Entering the coffee house performance circuit was an expensive process. Now that Warner has become known among university and college coffee houses, he travels all over the United States. Being a coffee house performer has always been a professional goal for Warner.

Harry Chapin, Jim Croce and John Denver are song writers which Warner admires and have influenced his work. During his performances, he likes to play a good blend of both original and non-original works.

A few of Warner's selections leaned toward a stranger sort of musical taste. One tune was entitled, "I Hold Your Hand in Mine" written by Tom Lehrer. This song had a waltz tempo. The lyrics contained a horrifying humor reminiscent of the writings of Edgar Allen Poe.

Another humorous rendition was, "Solar Power." Singing in acappella, Warner strolled through the audience and had them join in the chorus. The tune had the familiar melody of an old Christmas song.

Warner tends to write his music in periods of time. Right now he is in what he calls "a dry spell." Comparing his song list from one year to the next he finds that two-thirds of that list are new works.

When spring rolls around, Warner will begin recording for his first album or tape. Presently he is polishing up the tunes that are to be recorded.

On Thursday evening Warner concluded his performance with "Oh My Jenny." With his relaxed stage presence, Warner had the small audience singing along. The atmosphere was that of an old singing pub.

Compact disc players provide quality sound

Amy Pagel
Arts Reporter

WVSS, Stout's own radio station at 91 FM, has moved into "The sound of today and the future," student Curt Rehm said.

Compact laser disc are fast becoming part of today's life and less of the future. Now they are more a part of the lives of those working at and listening to WVSS.

Ace Matthews, Program Director, has been trying for two years to get a compact disc player for the station and his personal use. When he finally found one, Ace discovered various problems accompanied his dream music machine.

They allow higher quality sound with less distortion.

—Richard Kuhn Student

The player is perfect for times when no DJ is in the station to make record changes, but it can only play one album over and over again.

Recently, the station aquired a unit that can play six discs . Songs are chosen at random from the disks so a better variety is now available to listeners.

problem now facing WVSS is getting more laser discs.Currently the station has 28 rock discs and over 150 discs from Ace's own collection.

The process of manufacturing laser discs requires a dust free environment. Dust within the disk will cause the computer to misread the character and distort the music. Disc delivery is another problem, due to difficulties manufacturers are having in production.

At this time, the station is allowing students to check out discs in exchange for use of the students discs. This allows for a little more variety.

Money is also a problem WVSS is having in its quest to move to the CD players. Laser discs are more expensive than conventional albums.

Advantages of the laser discs still far outweigh these set backs. The discs are very hard to damage with reasonable use and are impossible to wear out. Scratches on the disc will not effect the sound. Sound is built into the disc in a computerized number code, unlike the surface grooves of records.

Student Richard Kuhn says about the discs, "They allow higher quality sound with less distortion."

The future of laser discs is very hopeful for everyone at WVSS. Program changes are already in effect. Continuous music can be heard now from 1:00 a.m. to 8:00 a.m. with the CD Concert and whenever a DJ is not available.

Matthews classical collection of discs is used from 8:00 a.m. to 10:00 a.m. and noon to 1:00 p.m. to meet FCC (Federal Communications Commission) regulations and allows DJs to play the music they like to hear.

SSA allocated funds that will allow the station to get three more 6-disc units and one hundred discs.

Both Scott Smith, student Program Director, and Mathhews hope the new units will increase listener numbers through more variety and better programming. DJs may also be trained to use these units for their own programs.

Other programs that may soon be heard utilizing the "Sound of the Future" are the Open Request Show, Rock Out the Night, Rock In the Silence, and student programs like a new wave program by Stephie and Gina (on from 3:00 to 5:00 p.m. weekdays).

Radio production class member Jeff Johnson breaks onto the air before signing off with an extended play CD. The dj's appreciate the conveniences and clean sound of the system. (Photo by Eileen O'Neill)

Despite the limited availability and higher costs, WVSS is adjusting towards using compact laser discs. Late night hours and empty scheduled spots now feature classical and rock continuous CD programming. The unit at right can play random tracks from up to six discs.

Newly established club includes various dance and choreography

Beth Reid
Arts Reporter

"One, two, three, kick! One, two, three and turn!" Words like these could be heard on Monday night as the University Dance Club had its first choreography dance lesson. The club is a newly established organization designed for male and female students interested in any type of dance.

Kaleene Kenning, creator and President of the University Dance Club, has had 14 years of dance training and has taught dance for six years. When she came to Stout as a freshman, she wanted to continue practicing dance, so she decided to get a dance club started on campus. Through the aerobics mini courses, she met others who were also interested in organizing a club. After 18 months of hard work, Kenning saw her efforts pay off. Sign up for membership began on Wednesday, Jan. 29 and by the following Thursday afternoon the club had 60 members.

"Members are not required to have any previous dance experience," Kenning said, "although most people who have an interest in dance have pursued some type of dance." The club is designed to include a variety of dance. They will be offering short seminars and workshops on different styles of dance including folk dance, social or ballroom, ballet, jazz and other ethnic dances.

"Our organization revolves around all areas of dance," Kenning said. "For someone who is interested in ethnic dance or some other style, we want to meet their needs and make the club for anyone."

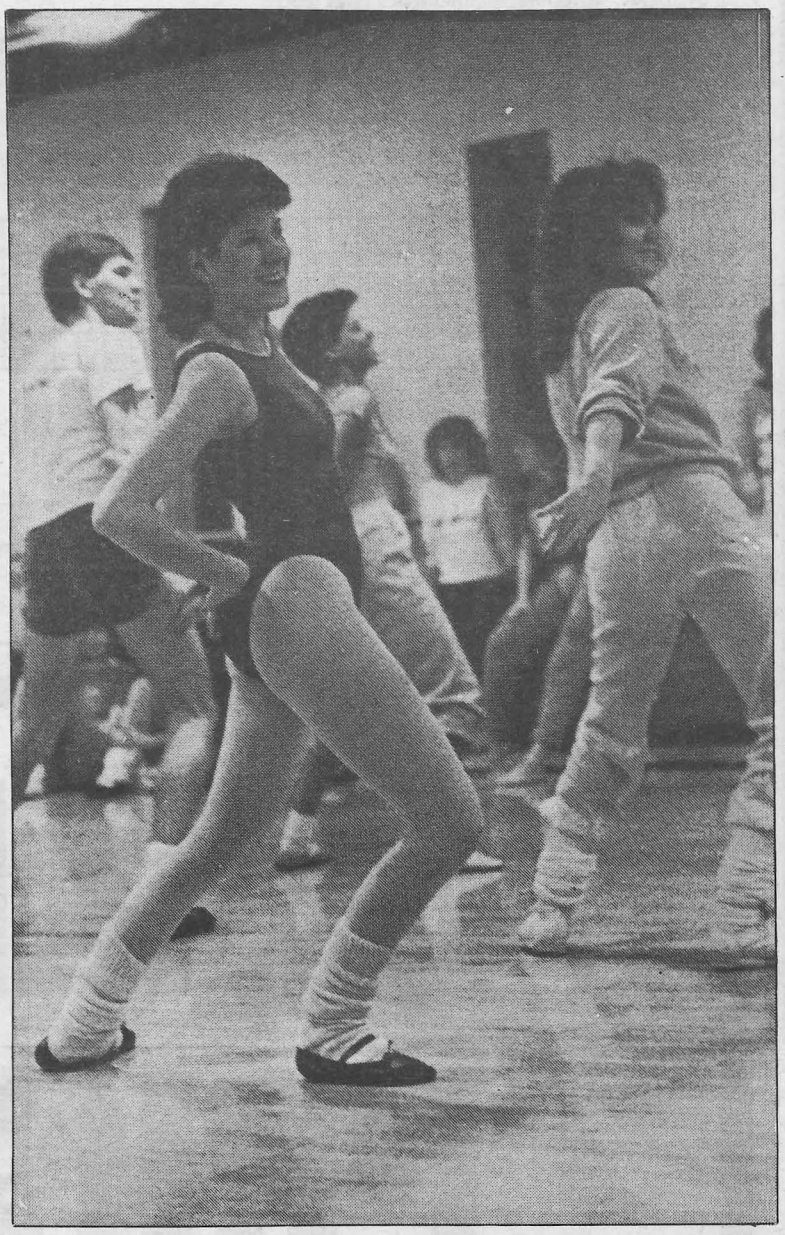
The routines members will be learning are choreographed and taught by members of the executive board. The club will be performing during Parents' Weekend and they are also hoping to perform at the Mabel Tainter Theater. "Right now we are concentrating mostly on jazz and tap routines for Parents' Weekend," Kenning said, "but we are going to be getting started on the ballet routines that will also be performed that weekend."

The general meetings are held the last Wednesday of each month at 8 p.m. in the Crystal Ballroom to discuss upcoming events. Other meetings are held three to four times per week to learn the different routines. Members are required to pay a $5.00 membership dues for each semester. This entitles them to attend all the meetings free and to go to the special seminars and workshops. Non-members may attend meetings at a cost of $1.00 per meeting.

After the members have learned the routines, they will be required to audition for performances. "We will have six to eight people from outside of the organization to judge the auditions for the performances," Kenning said, "and we will charge $1.00 per person per audition. This money will go towards our publicity fees."

If members are not interested in learning a routine and would rather choreograph their own group dance they have the option to do so. "Groups of eight people may make up their own routine and audition for Parents' Weekend," Kenning said. "We will be having a separate audition time for them and the cost will $8.00."

New members can join at any time. "We want to stress that it's not just for women," Kenning said. "We have male dancers already and we need more men." Interested people can contact Kaleene Kenning at X-1737 or Miki Schmitz at 235-1916.



Members of the newly formed University Dance Club enjoy the art, exercise and laughs at their first meeting. Membership is still open. (Stoutonia photo by Brad Kautzer)

ZZ Top stays at the top

David Chase

ZZ Top will be performing three concerts at the St. Paul Civic Center, entertaining over 54,000 people. Now pause for a moment and think about what that means. One out of every twenty people in the Twin Cities will be attending a ZZ Top concert.

Surely there is something special about this heavy metal — boogie band from Texas. Their unique sound is both highly energetic and fiercely motivating for those who enjoy rock & roll. Perhaps these are the reasons why ZZ Top has managed to stay on top for 16 years.

Lead guitarist Billy Gibbons founded the band in 1970 after leaving his former band, the Moving Sidewalks. Joined by Dusty Hill on bass and Frank Beard on drums, ZZ Top was complete and ready to perform. By 1971, they had their first LP released and were known for stealing the show from the bands they opened for.

In 1972, the release of Rio Grande Mud reflected the growing popularity of the band by going gold, selling over 500,000 copies. Their following release, Tres Hombres 1973, also went gold with the help of their first hit single LA Grange.

By this time, ZZ Top was established as a headline band that excelled in concert, a reputation they have lived up to for 16 years. The release of Fandango 1974, was a significant step forward in the band's career.

The album consisted of one side, having an electrifying live performance that allows the listener to grasp the energy involved in their performances. The other side consisted of studio recordings including their first smash hit Tush. This was ZZ Top's first LP to go platinum, selling over a million copies.

Two years later, the band put out their fifth album, Tejas 1976. This led to a massive world wide tour in which they sold out almost every show. Feeling exhausted, the band took a three year rest which resulted in a Best of ZZ Top LP.

Now we all know what happened to music between the years of 1976 and 1979. That dreaded disease disco invaded and disrupted our lives. So the acceptance of a new ZZ Top album did not seem likely to occur with the way music had changed. But in 1979, Dequello was released and became an instant success.

With the release of Dequello and its hit singles, Cheap Sunglasses and Nation Wide, ZZ Top once again became a top billing for concert halls all over the world. Their appearance changed a bit, going from cowboy hats and boots to long beards, black suits, and gangster hats. But the music itself had not changed, the heavy raw blues and boogie was still evident in their music.

Since their revival in 1979, ZZ Top has released three other LP's, El Loco, Eliminator and Afterburner all having success and all resulting in tours. Eliminator found huge success through their videos such as the one used for their hit song Legs.

Afterburner is their latest effort and has been quite successful. The album is climbing the charts and their concerts are selling out all over the world. Not bad for a few cowboys out of Texas, not bad for anyone.

Below is a list of all the ZZ Top albums released and how I rate them. Five stars represents the best, one would represent the worst.

ZZ Top 1970 - 1986
 First Album - 1971
 Rio Grande Mud - 1972
 Tres Hombres - 1973
 Fandango - 1974
 Tejas - 1976
* Best of - 1977
* Dequello - 1979
 El Loco - 1981
* Eliminator - 1983
* Afterburner - 1985

As a last comment, I would like to point out that ZZ Top has never had any help by guest or studio musicians on any of their albums. Not many rock bands can make this claim. Surely ZZ Top is a band which will survive for many years to come.

Live call-in forum to examine alcohol use

Alcohol use on college campuses: is it night life or a nightmare? SPECTRUM 28 brings the matter to television viewers throughout West Central Wisconsin in the fourth of its live television forums on Friday, Feb.7 at 9:30 p.m. on WHWC-TV/28 Menomonie. The special one-hour program will be repeated Saturday, Feb.8 at 9:30 a.m.

Leading the discussion will be a panel of students, tavern owners, law enforcement personnel, and behaviorists. The program will include a live studio audience of college students and other interested people and viewers will be able to join the discussion via telephone throughout the broadcast.

"West Central Wisconsin has several concentrations of post secondary students throughout its communities," commented SPECTRUM 28 Host Max Herbach. "Drinking affects not only the individuals who use and abuse alcohol, but also the campuses and communities that host these institutions. Is it good clean fun, a social phenomenon, or a serious problem? Join us Friday for some answers," he urged.

In recent months SPECTRUM 28 is contracted and funded by the Wisconsin Public Television Network through WHWC-TV/28 Menomonie and produced by the UW-Stout Teleproduction Center.

Grapplers set sights on WSUC tourney

Paul Wehking
Sports Reporter

After four recent losses, the UW-Stout wrestlers are setting their sights on the upcoming conference tournament which is to be held this weekend at UW-Oshkosh.

Over the past few weeks, Stout has lost four dual meets to conference opponents UW-Stevens Point, UW-Oshkosh, UW-Whitewater and UW-Platteville.

On Friday the Stout grapplers were defeated by Whitewater, 38-11 and Platteville, 36-22. Stout looked much tougher on Friday than they had immediately after semester break. "We have definitely come a long way the hard way," Head Coach Walt Perkins said of his wrestlers. "It was tough getting back into the swing of things after our 15-day road trip," Perkins said in reference to the team's trip to Florida over break.

Against Whitewater three Stout grapplers managed to post wins. At 134 pounds, Jon Coldwell decisioned his opponent 10-4 while Wayne Hendrickson, 167 pounds, and heavyweight Dave Witt scored 6-2 and 6-1 wins respectively. Tom Cliver wrestled to a tough 1-1 tie at 158 pounds, pitching in two points for Stout's tally.

The second match of the night was against Platteville. Stout's Chris Iverson, 126 pounds, pinned his opponent late in the third period to give the grapplers their first points of the match. Moments later teammate Tom Cliver followed suit by dispatching his opponent in the first period. Other wins were a technical fall scored by Hendrickson and a 12-4 decision by Witt.

The Stout matmen are worthy of some credit. Set aside the 26 to 30 points that they automatically give their opponents due to forfeit and the Stout team becomes very competitive. For instance, in their two recent losses, ignoring their immediate 30-point deficit, the score against Whitewater is 11-8, and against Platteville the score is 22-6, both in favor of Stout. When asked about this Perkins said, "If we filled out [as a team] we would probably be in the top three or four in the conference."

The 31st Annual WSUC Conference Wrestling Tournament starts tomorrow at 7 p.m. in Oshkosh. The last time that any Stout grappling team captured the WSUC crown was in 1970.

It is definitely going to be a tough tournament for Stout, who finished fifth in the tourney last year. Perennial powers UW-River Falls and Whitewater are currently ranked fourth and fifth respectively in the nation in Division III competition.

Another obstacle is that there are seven returning conference champions out of the ten different weights. Three of those champs may have a direct influence on how three of Stout's wrestlers fare.

At 126 pounds Iverson may meet up with Tim Potratz, Oshkosh, who was a WSUC champ in 1983. In the 134-pound division, Jon Coldwell, with his record at an overall 2-6, may meet his fate in the first round against defending champ Paul Corner, UW-LaCrosse, who won the tourney last year at 134 pounds. Lastly, at 158 lbs., Cliver could possibly face Brian Keller, River Falls, whose last year's championship and this year's 31-2 record speak for themselves.

It looks as though Witt will be favored in the heavyweight division. Witt, who is 5-0 against conference opponents said, "I don't think I'll have any problems at conference. Bruce Rivard, (River Falls), will be my toughest competition. As far as nationals, I'll take that one step at a time." Hendrickson feels that he also has a good chance at placing well in Oshkosh at 167 pounds. Perkins is hoping to have three out of his five wrestlers place at the conference tourney. "We need a conference champ. Not since I've been here have we had one," Perkins said. Perkins is in his third year as head wrestling coach.

Another goal that Perkins has for the Stout matmen is to qualify one or two wrestlers for the national tournament. "If we place three of five at conference and qualify one or two for nationals, it will make our year a big success," Perkins said.

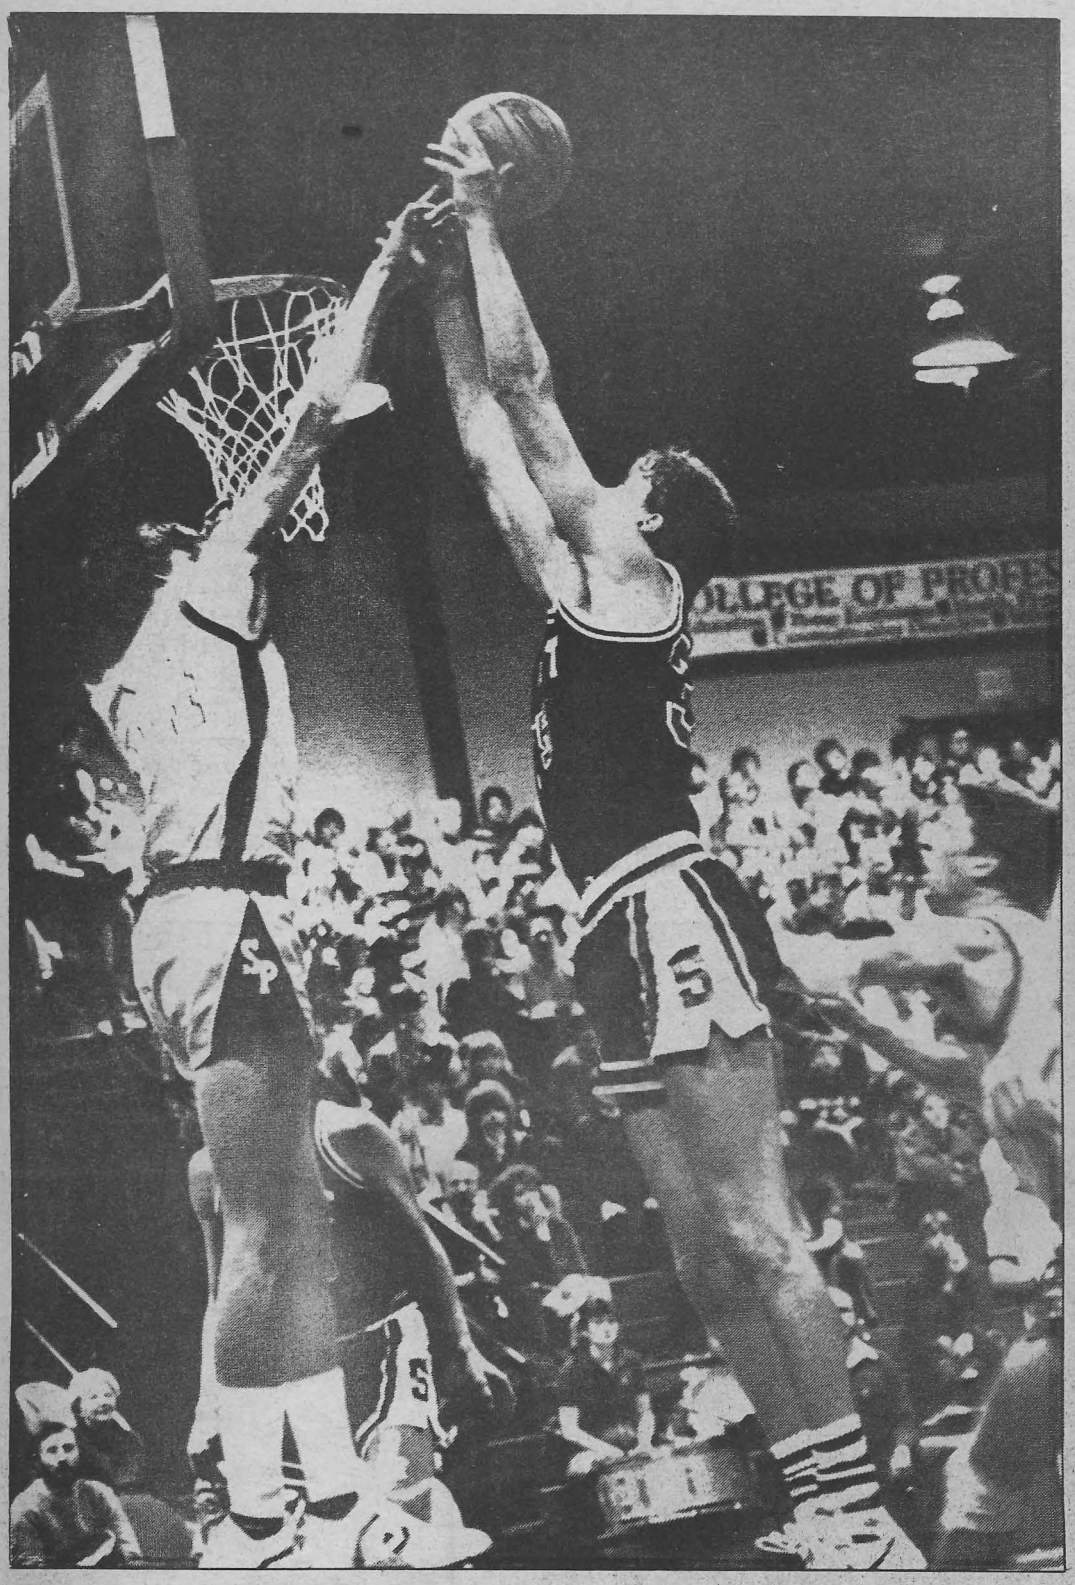
Cagers down La Crosse; lose to Point



Wendy Johnson
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout Blue Devils men's basketball team split last week's games with a victory Jan. 29 against UW-La Crosse 73-59, but then lost on Saturday to UW-Stevens Point 58-49.

The Blue Devils dominated the boards against La Crosse, outrebounding La Crosse 41-26. Rebounding is the Blue Devils' strongest point. They are ranked in the top five in the nation for rebound percentage and number one in the WSUC.

In the La Crosse game, Rick Stephan, who leads the Devils in rebounding with 7.3 per game, pulled down 13 rebounds for the Blue Devils. Mark Stevens led the Devils, which was his highest scoring game, with 21 points and 7 rebounds. The Indians leading scorer with 18 points was Lee Stahl. Close behind him was his teammate, Bruce Conner, with 16 points. Paul Kuske, the Indians' lead rebounder, had 7 rebounds.

Stout ended the half with a lead of 33-25, but La Crosse was never more than 8 points behind in the first half. After the halftime break, the Blue Devils continued the lead, and through the second half, the Devils had at least a 10-point lead. Also Stevens and Ron Hunter both slam dunked to add to the excitement of the game.

The Blue Devils fell to Stevens Point 58-49 on Saturday. The first half was neck and neck. When the half ended, the score was 29-25 with Stevens Point ahead. The second half gave Stout problems, and in the last five minutes, Stevens Point took the big lead. Stout's head coach Dwain Mintz said, "At the end of the third quarter Point started to outplay us."

Mintz commented, "Our three main problems were too many fouls, too many turnovers, and we gave away key rebounds." The Devils outscored Stevens Point 23-20 in field goals, but the Blue Devils were hurt by the fouls that turned into points for Stevens Point.

Stevens Point made 18 free throws out of 24, whereas the Blue Devils shot 100 percent but only had three chances at the line. The Blue Devils usually take charge on the boards, but Stevens Point tied Stout with 22 rebounds.

The lead rebounders for Point and Stout both had 6 rebounds. The players were Rick Stephan for Stout and Jeff Olson for Stevens Point.

The lead scorers for Stout were Rick Stephan with 12 points and Brian Ellingson with 10 points. Stevens Point's lead scorer, Tim Naegeli, had 22 points. Craig Hawley added 15 points for the Pointers.

Stout's John Patterson said, "The team did not play its full potential. We didn't have the consistency needed to win." Also he commented, "We gave it away. We threw the ball away too many times."

The Blue Devils hope to have two big wins on Feb. 7 and 8, when they will be up against UW-Oshkosh and UW-Platteville.

Mark Stevens noted, "We have a score to settle because both teams were lucky and beat us this season. We are a better ball club than either Platteville or Oshkosh and we will prove it Friday and Saturday."

On Feb. 8th at 5 p.m., there will be an alumni preliminary game. Some of the former Blue Devil players who will be participating are: Craig Sumners, who graduated in 1982 and was drafted by the NBA; Jim Connel, a member of the 1966 championship team; Dale Magedanz, a member of the 1969 championship team; Ken Obermueller, a member of the 1975 championship team; Randy Merg, who graduated in 1983 and Jeff Cleveland, who graduated in 1981.

Out of Bounds

Wanted: fans

Rochelle Buhr

I haven't seen anyone paint their face at Stout.

While watching Saturday afternoon college basketball games, I get a tinge of jealously while television cameras pan fans that are raising hell in the stands with war painted faces complete with school colors and symbols. It looks like they really have a good time supporting their team.

Also, the cheerleaders look like they are trying to get the rest of the crowd cheering. They paint their faces too.

A neat little tradition that the Villanova Wildcats' basketball fans do is that after the first Villanova basket is scored, hundreds of streamers and other confetti flows from the stands onto the court. So much of this junk flies down from the crowd, that the game has to be stopped and the court has to be cleaned off. This is enjoyable to watch on TV, and I'm sure it is even more euphoric for the Villanova fans participating.

Penn State has a Nittany Lion that does push-ups, one arm ones, for every point scored in their football games, and I always hear stories of girls getting passed down the stands during Badger football games.

Marshmallow fights and students singing their school alma mater, and not knowing the words so they just sing, "We don't know the ——— ——— words," to their college tune, are just a few more examples of school unity and spirit. (When I first encountered these foul mouthed lyrics to a tune held sacred to alumnus, I was shocked and then amused!)

How come Stout doesn't have any tradition to snag the fans in and create school spirit? I realize that most of the schools I mentioned above have successful sport programs in one of the "big" sports, but I believe that even if their teams fell into a slump, their fans would still back them and try to cheer them out.

Recently, at the Eau Claire-Stout basketball game, I did hear of a large crowd filling the Johnson Fieldhouse. However, most of the crowd was not comprised of Stout fans who could easily walk to the fieldhouse, but Eau Claire supporters who wanted to drive over to Menomonie to prove to their team that they were backed.

It is pathetic to see a college with an enrollment that exceeds 7,700 to neglect their own peers by not showing any appreciation or support. How egocentric to support only a winning program that makes one feel good and proud, and to deny a pittance of support to perhaps a less successful team who probably needs the most confidence boosters.

It is amazing how a good crowd can suddenly turn a one-sided game into a bloodthirsty struggle for a victory. Why is it called "home court advantage," — so the players can be near their mothers? Hardly. It is because this is where the team will hopefully garner their most fan support.

Obviously, Stout does not have but a meager handful of fan support. I have rattled my brain for a solution to this fanless problem, and have arrived at this: simply sell beer in the stands, and at halftime pass out dice.

In the sporting world it has become popular to finger-point, and the sport in the spotlight today is professional football. Not because of the Super Bowl now past, but because of Raymond Berry, head coach of the New England Patriots, stepping forward and telling the world that there are a few members playing on his organization that have a serious drug problem.

The American public has become outraged at discovering that some of their football heroes are junkies. What the American public fails to realize is that football players are not gods, but are humans, and tend to fall into the same chemical traps as other humans.

Dr. Armand Nicholl, New England Patriots team physician states this fact best. "Are the New England Patriots ravaged by drugs with some dozen players seriously addicted to cocaine? Absolutely not. Do they have a few players who experimented with recreational drugs? Yes. And so have 50 million other Americans."

Perhaps Dr. Nicholl is brushing off a huge problem in the Patriots' organization, or perhaps he is just being realistic about the whole situation.

I think it is time to stop these holy roller style tactics to clean up professional sports that the media and other professional sporting organizations are presently using.

Professional teams will remember that they were created to make a profit, and having problem team members is terrible public relations and is unprofitable.

The NFL should learn to clean up their programs internally, and not make problems public so they can avoid a Salem-style witch hunt that was made popular by the drug scandals of Major League Baseball.

NFC defeats AFC in the Pro Bowl

Last Sunday the NFC, sparked by a second half comeback, rallied to defeat the AFC 28-24 in the NFL Pro Bowl.

New York Giants quarterback Phil Simms, making his first Pro Bowl appearance, threw three touchdown passes in the second half to rally the NFC from a 24-7 halftime deficit.

Stout indoor track highlights

The UW-Stout indoor track team traveled to Northern Iowa last Saturday to compete. Stout's Paul Bons placed first in the mile run with a time of 4:20.02 and also captured second in the 1000-meter run, finishing in 2 minutes, 18.55 seconds. Bons' teammate Eric Bretl took a first place in the 1000 run with a time of 2:18.06. In the two-mile run Blue Devil Todd Fox captured third, crossing the finish line in 9:24.89.

Billy Olson's record short-lived

Joe Dial of Marlow, Okla. cleared 19-4 3/4 Saturday in Columbia, Mo., to set a world indoor record in the pole vault. Dial broke Billy Olson's previous record clearing 19-3 1/2 mark he set last week.

A record for the lady techsters

The Louisiana Tech women's basketball team set an NCAA record Monday with its 60th consecutive home victory, 80-63 against Memphis State. The Lady Techsters (18-2) won 59 in a row at home, lost to Southern Cal, then began the current streak.

Swimmers display improvement in losses to Division I opponents

Kim Steger
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout men's and women's swim teams faced a challenge Saturday hosting a meet against Northern Iowa. Both teams lost with the women being defeated 52-60 and the men 40-71.

In the men's meet, Jon Lerbs placed second in the 100-yard backstroke. Lerbs also teamed up with Mark Kukuzke, Bob O'Reilly and Brad Stark to win the 400-yard free relay.

In the 100-yard free Stark was touched out and forced to settle for second place. However, he came back with a victory in the 200-yard free with a time of 1:51.41.

Taking second place in the 400-yard medley relay was the team of Lerbs, Kurt Siebert, Steve Kostrova and Craig Nelson.

Siebert placed second in both the 100-yard breaststroke and the 50-yard free. Other second place finishers included Stark in the 100-yard free and Kukuzke in the 500-yard free and the 1000-yard free.

Swimming to two individual victories was Kostrova in the 200-yard individual medley and the 100-yard fly.

We've improved one hundred percent. We've surprised a lot of people.
—Anne Branson
Co-Captain

There were no diving competitors on the Blue Devil team.

Racing to first place on the women's team was Wendy Heineke in the 200-yard IM, 100-yard fly and the 100-yard backstroke. Jackie Gilbert swam to two victories in the 200-yard free and the 500-yard free.

Second place finishes went to Jill Shlimovitz in the 1000-yard free and Steff Weiss in the 200-yard free. Teaming together to take second place in the 400-yard free was Marie Fortier, Jennifer Krupke, Gilbert and Shlimovitz. The 4000-yard medley relay team of Cheryl DeBaker, Anne Branson, Laurie Potter and Weiss also placed second with the time of 2:05.66, only three seconds short of first place.

Third place finishers include DeBaker in the 50-yard free and the 100-yard free, Shlimovitz in the 100-yard back and Branson in the 100-yard breaststroke.

Taking fourth places were Potter in the 50-yard free and Fortier in the 500-yard free.

In the diving events, Peterson came away with two victories and Bjerkelund placed third in both events.

Co-captains Krupke and Branson felt that the women's team did quite well considering that Stout is only an NAIA team and Northern Iowa is a Division 1 school. When asked how much the women's team has improved since last year Branson replied, "We've improved one hundred percent. We've surprised a lot of people, especially with our victory over La Crosse and our top place finish in the Eau Claire Invitational. We have a good outside chance for second place in nationals."

All relay teams on the women's team have qualified for nationals. Other qualifiers and their events consist of Peterson in the IM and 3M diving events.

Gilbert has qualified in the 500-yard free, 200-yard free and three of the relays.

Heineke qualified in the 100- and 200-yard back, 100-yard fly, 200-IM and three of the relays.

Qualifying in two relays apiece were Potter, Branson and Krupke.

Weiss has qualified in the 200-and 500-yard free and two of the relays.

Lady gymnasts show improvement in setback

Suzanne Schroeter
Sports Reporter

This past Saturday the UW-Stout women's gymnastics team hosted Northern Michigan University in a dual meet at home. Northern Michigan beat out the Lady Blue Devils with a team score of 169.80 while Stout finished with a score of 143.50.

Although Northern Michigan dominated the match, the Lady Blue Devils were aggressive and put their best into the meet. Head Gymnastics Coach John Zuerlein was very pleased with the way the squad went out and faced their competition.

The team members also felt much better about the meet against Northern Michigan. "We shaped up after our meet against UW-Eau Claire and hopefully we will be able to keep it up," Patti Roenitz said.

Lisa Hille also felt that the meet went well. "We had the Eau Claire meet in the back of our minds which kept us going," she commented. "The team also seemed to hold the intensity through the whole meet which helped out a lot," Hille added. "We're also getting some people back who were out with injuries which helps."

Pam Fujioka, who was out of previous competitions with a dislocated elbow, competed on the vault in Saturday's meet and tied for second with a score of 8.55.

Fujioka was very pleased with her vault and said that she was getting the strength back in her arm. "It was emotionally satisfying to be able to fly again," Fujioka commented.

In addition to performing on the vault, Fujioka may also be performing on the uneven bars and on the floor exercise for Saturday's meet in Oshkosh.

Lisa Hille turned in a good performance on her floor exercise and tied for third with a 8.60. Hille also did well on her vault with a score of 8.30.

"I did my best on the floor. It was one of my better routines. Everything flowed and connected together perfectly," Hille commented.

Patti Roenitz was kept from competing in all the events on Saturday because of a hyperextended knee injury which happened in practice the week before while practicing her dismount off the uneven bars. Roenitz, who was just getting over a knee injury that occurred before Thanksgiving, was only able to compete on the uneven bars and the balance beam.

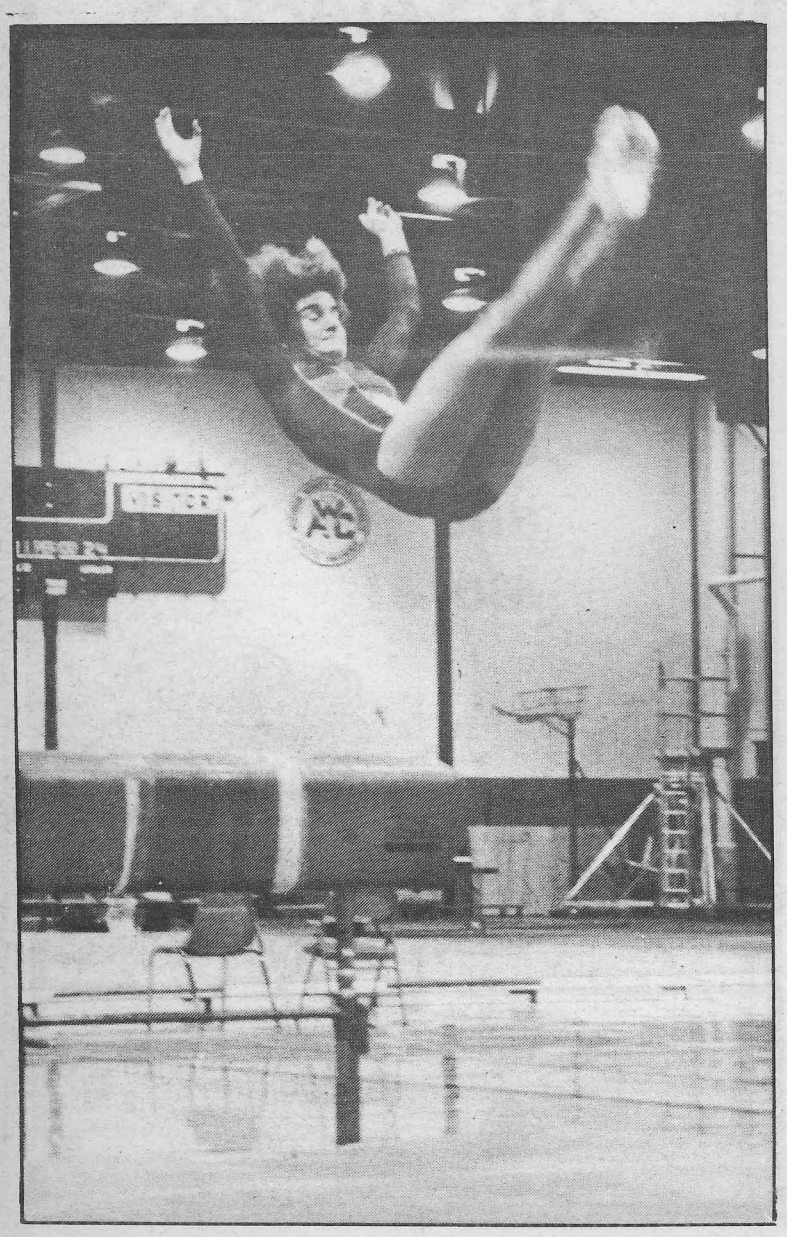
Roenitz should be back to doing all-around by Saturday's meet. "I hope to be doing a Tsuk vault by Saturday which is a half on with a back tuck off," Roenitz commented. Roenitz wishes to be able to do this because it would bring her back up to where she was before she injured her knee in October.

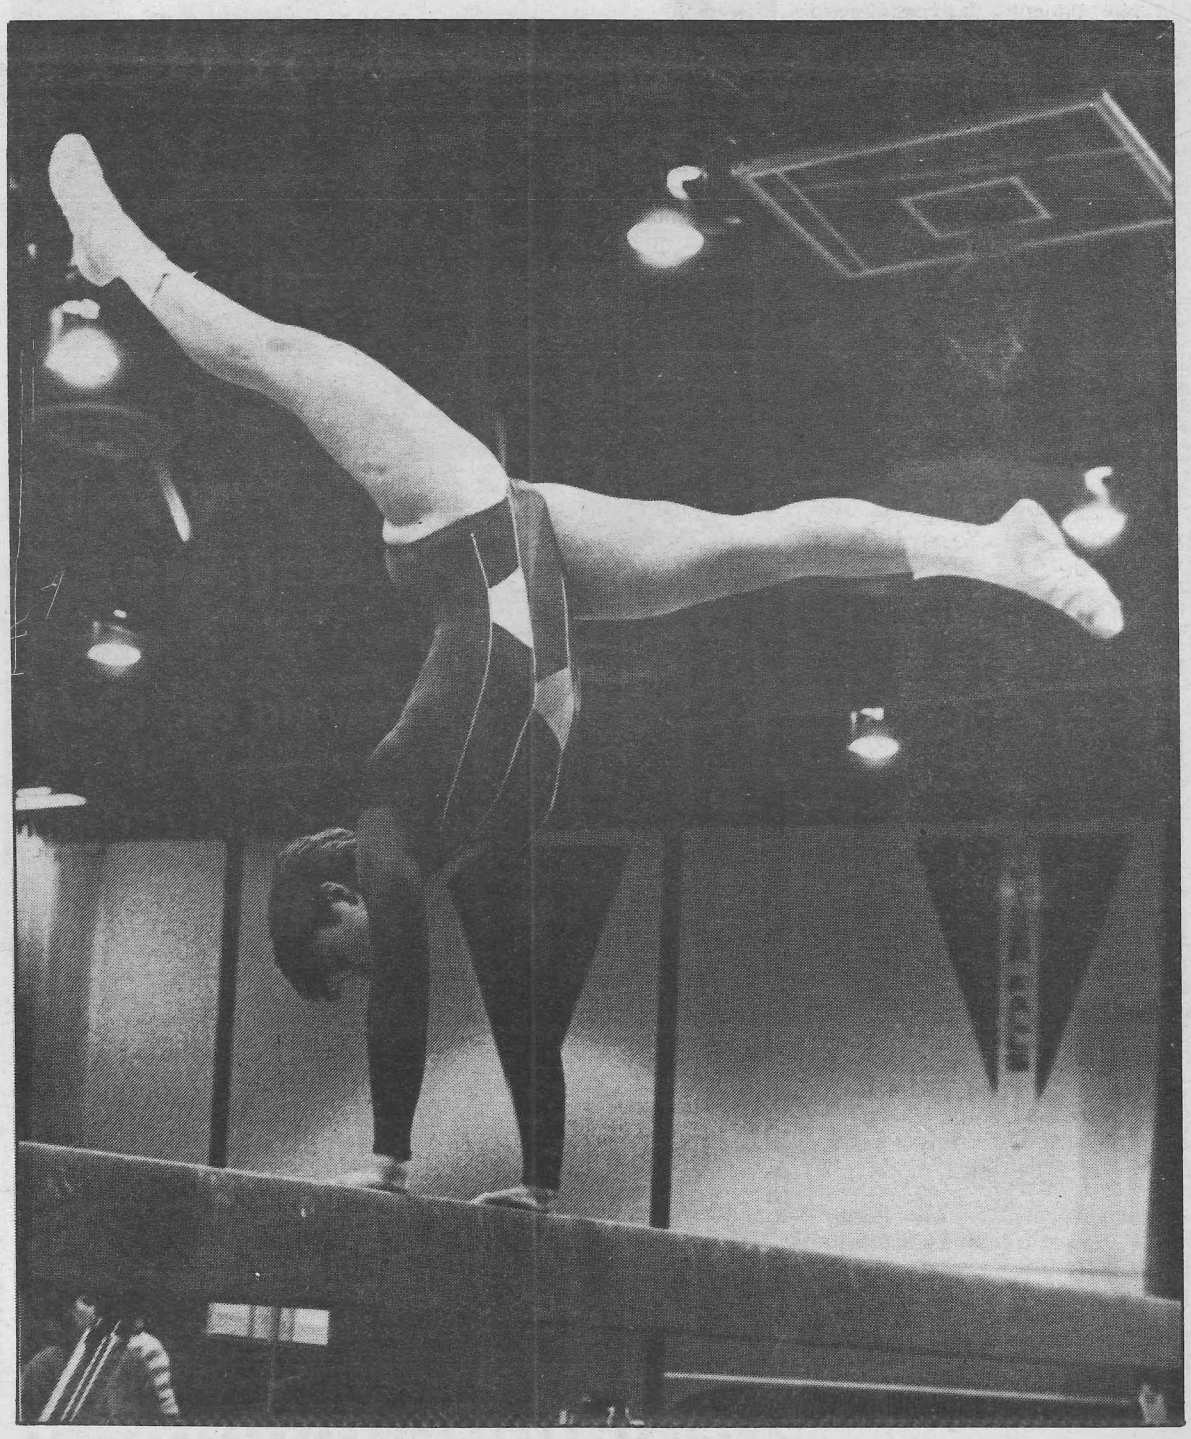
Cosmas Whitten also had a strong performance turning in a 7.95 on the vault and a 7.80 on her floor exercise.

"I always wanted to get an 8.00 on floor but I'm happy with my score," Whitten said. Whitten also commented that in the future she would like to work on making everything look clean and not sloppy.

Overall Zuerlein was pleased with the way his team performed. "They did much better in this meet than in their meet against Eau Claire," Zuerlein commented.

The Lady Blue Devils' next meet will be the Titan Invitational, an all-day event.





Poll seeks reason for lack of fans at Stout's home sporting events

The score is tied with only seconds remaining on the clock. The UW-Stout fans are going wild. Or rather, they would be if they were attending this sporting event. Let's face it, watching a varsity athletic event apparently isn't where it's at.

After conducting a small poll of a variety of Stout students, it was evident that school spirit was not one of the student body's strong points.

Of the students polled, most of them said that they attend less than five school-affiliated athletic events per year with the Homecoming football game receiving most of the students' favor.

Various reasons for the sparse crowds at these home events were given. Many students said that they have time conflicts or just not enough time to attend. With Stout being known for two things, being a suitcase college and an ultimate party school, it is obvious that there would be a conflict with one's free time.

Go to a women's basketball game on a Thursday night and aside from parents and a few loyal friends the lady Blue Devils don't have much of a cheering section. Compare this to the standing room only, sellout crowd at "Beat the Clock," the infamous drink special offered by a local establishment, and it becomes evident why there are not many fans at the game.

Some students suggested that beer and other alcoholic beverages should be offered at school sporting events. When asked about this possibility, Athletic Director Warren Bowlus said, "That is against the rules and in order to have alcohol at any of these events it must be okayed by the Chancellor."

Senior Laurie Beogeman managed to come up with a more concrete reason for not attending. "If the home games were publicized more I would probably attend more games," said Beogeman. Other students agreed with this reason, saying that usually a season schedule is handed out at the beginning of the academic year and then there are no follow-up reminders.

Some students gave a Catch-22 quote saying, "I would go to more events if there were more fans at the events."

"Obviously, everyone wants to support a winner but no one wants to support a loser," said Junior Traci Siech. Seich is among the more loyal Blue Devil supporters polled, who said that they attend more than 30 contests during the school year. Currently, the only winner that Stout has is the men's basketball team with a record of 10-8. Louie Filkins said, "Stout fans are lackadaisical when compared to other UW systems. The crowd could be the twelfth man on the team," in reference to how the crowd plays a part in influencing how well a team does. Filkins attends home basketball and baseball games faithfully.

"The crowd is definitely a motivational factor and they have quite an impact on how well we do on game day," said football captain Chuck Carr. With this, one would think that a larger crowd would have a bigger influence on how a team does and this is usually the case. Freshman Dave Sandstrom said, "The crowd at the Eau Claire game was great. It really helps to fire the team up. But, if the crowd is small it seems to have a negative effect on the team." When the Stout cagers played UW-Eau Claire, the 2109 fans nearly filled Johnson Fieldhouse, which has a seating capacity of 2200.

The men's basketball games against conference opponents usually draw an average of 1100 fans per game which is up by approximately 300 relative to last year. Bowlus commented that the attendance at the home football games has increased by almost 1500 since last year.

These figures indicate that more people are coming out to support Stout's teams but there is still an overwhelmingly large part of the student body that remains oblivious to this trend.

"We [the Athletic Department] are competing with many other organizations for student input," said Sports Information Director Jeff Bjork. Bjork also stated, "Students have so many options on campus these days such as movies, concerts, and speakers. Students many years earlier didn't have as many options and thus went to more athletic events."

Good crowd support at athletic events definitely creates a more positive attitude for those who compete and fans usually have an enjoyable time also. As Jeff Bjork stated, "The home field advantage is no advantage if the fans aren't there to support the teams."

SSA approves cooperative programming

Kelly Cohorst
News Reporter

Cooperative Programming was the primary topic at the Stout Student Association (SSA) Meeting on Tuesday night. Many questions asked about the program remain to be answered by the manner in which it is implemented.

The goal of Cooperative Programming is to stretch the SSA's spending dollar. The finance Committee believes that this program can work with great results if the associations that are involved are willing to work as one.

A road block to Cooperative Programming according to some is that many orgainizations aren't willing to work as one because of perceived differences.

At the meeting, an amendment that passed concerning the Cooperative Programming budget stated that two or more organizations must work together in order to be eligible for this funding. An amendment was passed requiring that a committee oversee the implementation of Cooperative Programming.

Steve Olson gave an apt analogy of Cooperative Programming during Senate Caucus when he said, "If two of us were to split the cost of one pitcher of beer, rather than each buying a pitcher and then throwing away the warm leftovers, than we would have the idea of Cooperative Programming."

Tracy Lea Landis was adamantly opposed to this idea. She said, the Cooperative Programming is changing the whole structure of the checks and balances. Landis stated her fear of the shift in the political body and how it might in the future allow some type of problem in the government structure of the SSA.

Many students picketed as the members of the SSA walked into the meeting. The protesters held signs that opposed Cooperative Programming. They also handed out Anti-Cooperative programming fliers that asked the following questions. Does SSA want to tamper with the autonomy of off campus groups? Is the concept of Cooperative Programming really the best way to achieve the stated objective of effective spending? Can we find a better way?

Roger Daleiden, president of the Fine Arts Association, was one of the protesters against Cooperative Programming. He said his main concern was to get funding for Prometheus.

Prometheus is an arts publication by students sent out once a year which Daleiden said provided valuable credentials for student's resumes and for applications for scholarships and graduate school.

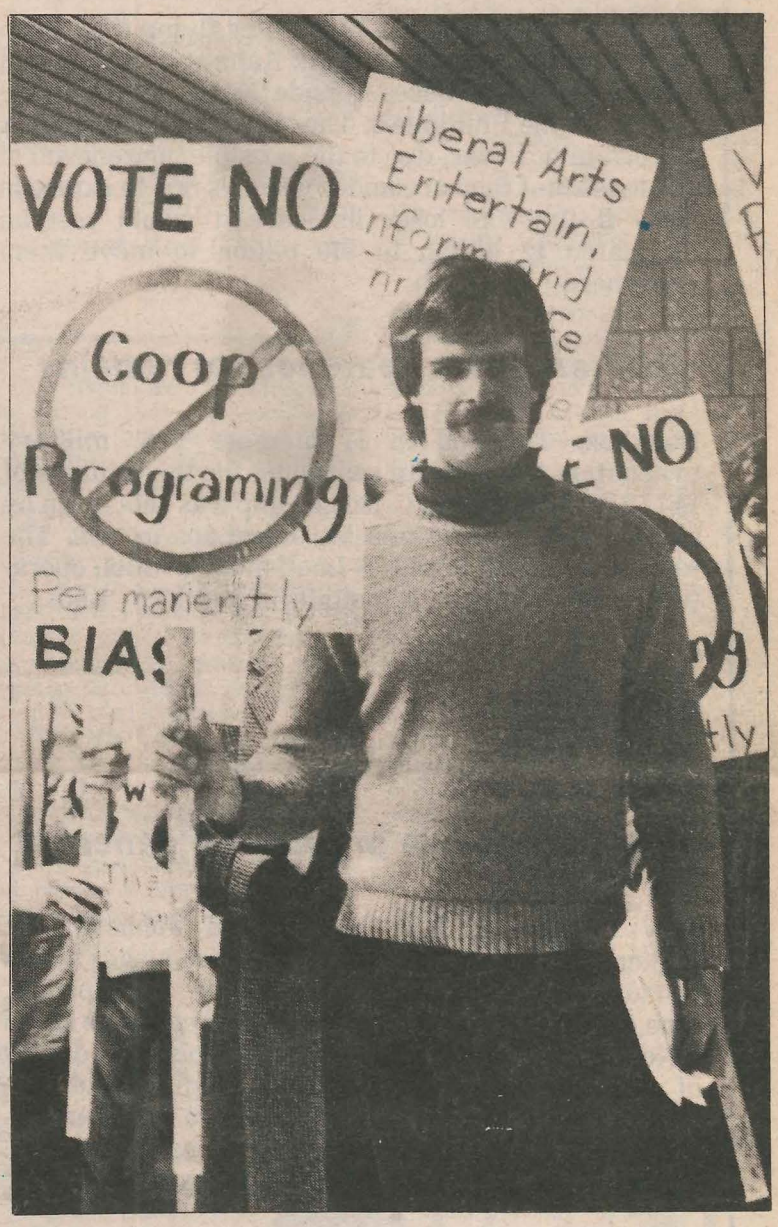
Since Prometheus is of such reputed high quality, it costs more money to publish than the originally proposed $750 budget allocation. In order to save Prometheus, a motion was passed to fund the magazine with an additional $750, which came out of the Cooperative Programming Fund.

Another topic of discussion was problems created by the SSA's limited desk facilities created by allegedly dicriminatory use of the two desks. The University Programming Board (UPB), is presently using both the desks. Other SSA funded organizations expressed their feelings of being intimidated from using both the desks and the long distance phone lines plus the typewriter available to any group of SSA.

A motion passed making the statement that justice was not being served to all funded organizations since the facilities in the SSA office were designed for all SSA funded organizations.

The hope behind the motion was to increase communication between organizations and the University Student Senate. It was pointed out that these facilities are only currently serving nine organizations of the 20 funded recognized organizations.

The resolution was made that the USS of the SSA stand up for the rights of all funded recognized organizations and support greater use of SSA facilities.



Roger Daleiden of the Fine Arts Association was one of several protesters who showed up for the SSA meeting Tuesday night. Daleiden's main concern was getting additional funding for the arts publication Prometheus. SSA increased Prometheus' budget by $750. (Stoutonia photo by Dan Banach)

Fieldhouse construction will begin once revisions are approved by state

Pat Miles
News Reporter

Plans for the renovation of Johnson Fieldhouse are expected to be completed next month as the nearly $5 million renovation project is expected to start as soon as the Fall of '86.

The Fieldhouse opened in 1965 for a student population of 2500. As a result of the rapid growth of UW-Stout's population, in 1978 the Office of Planning and Information delivered a proposal to Madison for approval from the Board of Regents, Building Commission, State legislature, and Governor Lee Dreyfus.

Because of the poor economy in the state, Governor Dreyfus vetoed many school's plans for spending on such projects.

Later, in the 1981-83 biennium, a plan for an addition was approved but was not funded. This happened once again in the 1983-85 biennium. Now, in the 1985-87 biennium, funds of up to $5 million have been approved, but the blueprints of an addition must be updated and authorized.

At the time the idea started, the plans for an addition to the Fieldhouse would have accommodated the student population of about 6500 which included a men's gymnastic team. Currently, UW-Stout has no men's gymnastic team. Meanwhile, enrollment has increased to nearly 7700.

Therefore, the Office of Planning and Information has worked with the Athletic Department and revised the old plan of construction. The revised plan was delivered to Madison on Monday, Feb. 10.

The plan first goes to an architect who prepares the specifications. That includes drawing up the blueprints, listing the options of materials, etc. The proposed plan is then given over to the Board of Regents and the Building Commission for authorization in April.

When Glen Schuknecht, Director of Planning and Information, was asked if there is a possiblity that the proposal will be rejected, he answered, "If expenses are kept under $5 million there should be no problem. It's just a lot of 'red tape.'"

After the plan is authorized, contractors will bid for the construction job. Who ever offers the lowest bid by August will be awarded the contract. The ground breaking is expected at that time. "We expect to break ground this Fall," Athletic Director Warren Bowlus said.

"Realistically speaking, it won't be completed until the Fall of 1988," Bowlus said. The time table in the proposal shows that completion is expected by June of '88. The hope is to open the Fieldhouse up for students that Fall.

The proposal states that the main part of the addition will be built onto the south side of the building. There are currently two Butler buildings in this location. They will be moved at the expense of about $52,000. They may be placed near the football field to be used as rest rooms, storage, and a concession stand. On the west side, a

US bases could lose lease

Manila, Phillipines-Just 75 minutes flying time from the Soviet Union forces at Cam Rahn Bay, the largest U.S. air and sea bases outside North America are located in the Phillipines. The future of these bases is uncertain however, due to the possible nonrenewal of the lease that they are under which is due to expire in 1991. If the U.S. loses its lease it would cost an estimated $2 billion to $10 billion to move them elsewhere.

Military team searches for remains

Bangkok, Thailand-An 11 member U.S. military evacuation team began searching for the remains of 14 U.S. airmen whose C-130 gunship was shot down by soviet surface-to-air missles over Laos in 1972. The team is a part of joint U.S-Laotion excavation operation based in the jungle foothills in southern Laos.

Tylenol capsule production canceled

New Brunswick, N.J.-Johnson and Johnson, the maker of Tylenol, announced that it no longer would produce over-the-counter medication in capsules, nine days after cyanide contaminated capsules killed a New York woman. In 1982 cyanide-poisoning deaths of seven people were linked to tainted Tylenol capsules. The company has "no plans to re-enter this business for the foreseeable future," said James E. Burke, chairman of Johnson and Johnson.

Lobbying costs increase again

Washington, D.C-The price of persuading Congress rose again in 1985 as Capitol Hill lobbyists spent more than $45.5 million trying to influence a myriad of issues ranging from taxes to imports. This amount was $3.5 million more than 1984 and $2.25 million more than 1983.

Mail-order monogamy

Compiled by Paul D. Nelson

Initially introduced in the 1960's and revived in the middle of this decade, the Dating Game strives to match eligible bachelors and bachelorettes. The show even emphasizes it's legitimacy by making viewers aware of marriages that supposedly occur via successful participation on the show.

Yet approximately 10,000 middle-aged American men, who have suddenly become single via divorce or the death of their wife, have played a far different kind of dating game the past twelve years.

These men have found new "mates for life" by subscribing to and participating in several newsletters which advertise available mail-order Asian women seeking to marry American men.

The three largest selling newsletters, Cherry Blossom, Lotus Blossom and Island Blossom charge approximately $10 for an introductory sample of addresses and up to $300 for all current issues and previously published back issues.

Quoted in the February/March issue of Mother Jones magazine, several anonymous men justified their participation in the male-order bride business with the following observations:

"There are a lot of desperate men out there. Attractive men, successful men, microbiologists. They're not losers. They're just not attracted to American women anymore - because these women have become impossible."

"They're [American women] not cooperative, but combative -and they never appreciate what you do for them."

"They're [American women] not psychologically together. They just don't seem to know what they want."

"Maybe it's our fault for repressing them for so long."

Yet the vast majority of American women reject these sentiments as ravings from a group of middle-aged American men who actually want slaves and not equal marriage partners.

Quoted in the same issue of Mother Jones, Asian women who have married American men and come to the United States expressed these insights:

"The men I have known in my country are not gentlemen. Philippine men, they beat their wives. American men treat their wives better."

"That first year, I cannot go out by myself. I would get lost. I know how [to] drive. I got my license. I just don't know the area too well, and I'm afraid to talk to other people."

"It's true. I don't want to write check[s] without his permission. I take a long time to learn to say it is not his money, but our money."

"In America, it's not easy like I think. You can't pick money off the streets. It's hard work, enjoying my life."

Yet the benefits to the new couple are not seen as one-sided in favor of the men. Any marriage which is viewed by the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) as legitimate not only entitles the Asian bride to the green card which makes her a permanent U.S. resident, but also gives her relatives overseas the chance to legally apply for entry into this country as well.

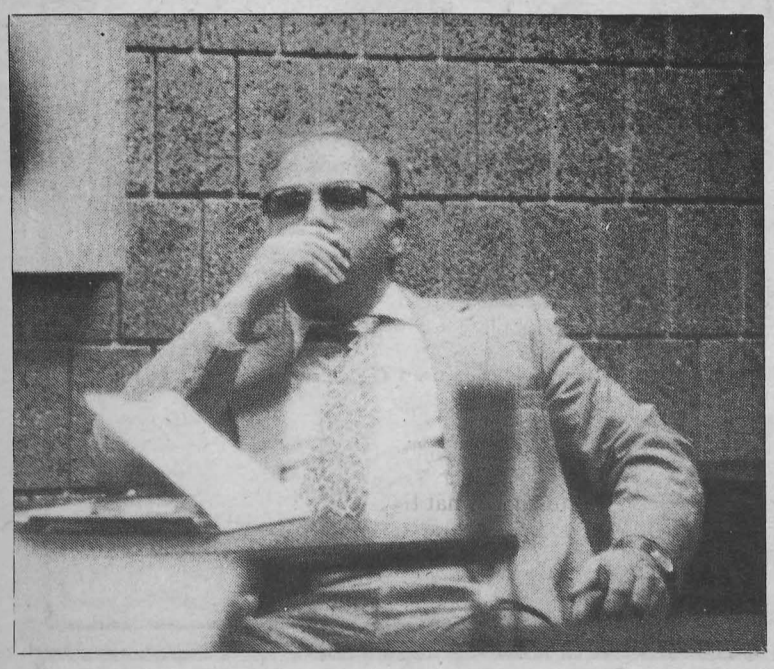
Committee votes to close Sabatino hearing

Paul D. Nelson
Editor in Chief

The Badger Room, located on the lower level of the Memorial Student Center, was the location used last Tuesday by Positive Action Committee Number Three to hear testimony in a complaint filed by Kirsten Hoffenberger against David Sabatino.

Hoffenberger, a graduate student, is currently working on her masters thesis in the area of guidance and counseling.

Sabatino is the Dean of Education and Human Services.



Dean of Education and Human Services, David Sabatino sat contemplatively for a moment prior to the opening of a hearing filed against him by student Kristen Hoffenberger. Committee members unanimously agreed to close the hearing. (Stoutonia photo by Todd A. Nelson)

After the 2 p.m. hearing was called to order by committee chairman Donald Osegard, Admissions Director, both sides were asked if they wished the hearing to be open or closed to the public.

Hoffenberger replied that she wished the hearing be open to the public, but Sabatino requested that it be closed. In keeping with the guidelines stipulated in Wisconsin's open meeting law, the committee then voted on whether or not to close the hearing to the general public.

The five committee members decided, via a unanimous hand vote, to close the hearing. All spectators were then asked to leave.

When later asked why she requested that the hearing remain open, Hoffenberger replied "I cannot give any comment to that at this time."

In addition to chairman Osegard, the other members of the committee are Ron Fry, Jerry Kirsling, Dr. Marian Marion and Dr. Richard Miller. All were elected to this particular positive action committee, through faculty senate elections, for two year terms.

Fry is Assistant Director of the Stout Vocational Rehabilitation Institute Material Development Center; Kirsling is an assistant professor of the Stout Vocational Rehabilitation Institute Vocational Development Center; Marion is an associate professor of Human Development, Family Living and Community Educational Services; and Miller is a professor of mathematics.

> Our next meeting is going to be to try and come up with the recommendations.
> Don Osegaard
> Positive Action Committee Chairman

The committee's jurisdiction is to preside over any complaints brought by students against faculty members or grievances filed by faculty members against their colleagues.

The university guidelines dealing with student complaints state that "A complaint is an allegation that a faculty member has violated a rule or policy of the university, or is engaging in conduct which negatively affects his or her university performance."

After the committee has initiated their investigation into the matter they have 35 calendar days to submit a written recommendation to Chancellor Robert Swanson.

If the complainant has not met the burden of proof and the committee believes that insufficient evidence exists, the complaint will be dismissed. Yet if the complainant has met the burden of proof and the committee recommends disciplinary action be initiated against the faculty member, Swanson then has 14 calendar days to accept or reject the disciplinary recommendations.

According to John Enger, Director of University Relations, if the faculty member is resultantly disciplined he or she can then ask the board of regents for an appeal. The regents may grant an appeal or let the Chancellor's decision stand by refusing an appeal.

As outlined in the state's open meeting law, all committee recommendations and final decisions involved in the complaint must be made available to the public after the complaint has run its course and final resolution has been reached.

After the closed hearing adjourned approximately four and one-half hours later, Osegard indicated that the committee would not need the full 36 calendar days to formulate recommendations by stating that "It isn't going to be nearly that long."

"The committee has the right to call witnesses back and question them," Osegard said. "That may happen at [the] next meeting. Our next meeting is going to be to try to come up with the recommendations."

Both Hoffenberger and Sabatino had several witnesses testify on their behalf.

Stout's job placement remains extremely high

Nitin Nadkarni
News Reporter

UW-Stout's job placement rate is extaordinarily high as Stout graduates expand their horizons beyond Wisconsin to increase their chance at success from their initial ventures into the job market.

The job placement rate of 93.8 percent is a very promising figure for students preparing to graduate. This figure, along with the equally high placement rate of 93.7 percent for the 1983-84 academic year, gives Placement Director Bob Dahlke a motivating frame of reference from the past from which to strategically outline goals for the future.

Dalhke is pleased with the recent placement results considering current softness of the job market. "I feel quite good for what I perceive as a mediocre job market," he said. He explained that the soft job market particularly is true in the middle west of the United States. As a result he said, "More of our graduates are going away from Wisconsin for jobs and are successful."

Stout graduates have found jobs in 43 states nationwide with Wisconsin employing the highest percentage of the graduates at 40 percent. Minnesota employs 28 percent of Stout graduates, Illinois is a distant third, employing 8 percent of recent graduates. Of those graduates who found employment, 92 percent were working in fields directly related to their major course of study.

Since its inception, Stout has attracted students who have well defined career choices, Dahlke said. In addition he said, these students establish a solid work ethic prior to or during college. These attributes coupled with the types of programs offered by the University make Stout graduates attractive to employers, he concluded.

Campus recruitment is one of the outstanding features of Stout, according to Dahlke. Campus recruitment increased by six percent this past year. "What's remarkable about this increase," Dahlke said, "was that companies nationwide are becoming extremely cost conscious of campus recruitment expenses."

Dahlke pointed out that, through these somewhat sluggish employment years, employers nationwide are saying they will visit approximately 4 percent fewer campuses and hire about 2 percent more graduates. Travel and other associated expenses are forcing the employers to cut down on campus interviews. "Inspite of this, we have companies coming on our campus to recruit our students and this in itself is quite an achievement," Dahlke said.

These five students sit stoically anticipating their upcoming interviews at the Career Planning and Placement Office. Recent data shows that more Stout students are opting to leave Wisconsin in order to help their chances of getting the career of a lifetime. (Stoutonia photo by Brad Kautzer)

Around 300 companies are involved in campus recruitment here. There was a total of 3156 interviews in 1984-85 compared to 2980 the previous year.

The numbers show that on-campus interviews continue to be a positive experience for most of the graduates. Fifty-six percent of the graduates registered with Career Planning and Placement participated in one or more interviews. Inspite of this, there is still a disparity in the attraction of the companies from certain fields participating in campus recruitment.

Cooperative programming will benefit all students

The University Student Senate (USS) of the Stout Student Association (SSA) was responsive to the needs of its constituents this week when it formally approved the concept of cooperative programming, a policy which allows similar groups to co-sponsor events, and a 1986-87 budget to support it.

We applaud the senators for taking decisive action by implementing a policy which will not only initiate and improve cooperation among SSA recognized and funded organizations, but also increase the benefits to the students of this University via more cost efficient and creative programming.

Even though cooperative programming was a volatile issue and generated a great deal of debate in areas never before touched upon, dissenters should now respect the wishes of the democratic process and strive to make the newly enacted policy work to the benefit of all.

Similarly, members of the finance committee should insure that the procedure for securing funds for cooperative programming is as detailed and clear as possible to facilitate financial cooperation between eligible organizations.

The students of this University deserve to have both sides go to great lengths to make cooperative programming a success.

To do otherwise would not only deprive them of programming they are entitled to through their payment of the student activity fee, but also cause them to justifiably question as to whether their elected leaders deserve the position they currently hold.

Crash and Burn

Attack floundering WVSS, hurl bombs

Matt Kalina

A bomb should be dropped on WVSS because they have been strifing us with unprofessionalism for just too long. It's main plug should be pulled indefinitely.

Master-minding a massive rip-off of their listeners, WVSS is sliding into a new low in amateurism. WVSS is unquestionably the worst excuse for a college station that I have ever layed ears upon.

With the emergence of the compact laser disc player's repetitive attacks on the listeners, things at WVSS are falling off the cliff. The CD player must be quickly torpedoed before it takes over the station. But a coup d'etat is gradually breaking through; three more CD players have arrived at WVSS and are plotting to grasp in its mighty conformist grip, absolute control, taking no survivors.

Watch out. A bloody conquest by the killing CD player is threatening WVSS, bringing the last morsel of creativity and originality to its knees.

The CD player does to creativity what a hammer does to lead; it flattens it. It is nothing more than robotic formulation of the mundane.

WVSS is at its best when jockeys flog and bludgeon the irritating, nauseous Top-40, slamming mediocrity and mindlessness by creating their own mind-bending jams.

The campus station WRST at UW-Oshkosh has live DJ's on the air from 9 p.m. to 6 a.m. every day. WVSS does not have the guts to go on all night with live DJ's. Instead, they weasel-out by playing laser razor discs from 1 a.m. to 8 a.m.

WVSS dies when it becomes more and more programmed. The use of the CD player will eventually lead to more automation and less time left to the spontaneity of live jockeys on the air.

Just listen to the station now. WVSS was once a student radio station, not a CD programmed radio station. Lots jockeys will learn by loading up the old CD player like idiot savants.

Getting down to nuts and bolts, discs cost WVSS large stacks of bills while regular albums cost nada. WVSS must buy each disc, but it receives up to 1000 promotional albums free from recording companies each year. Their total collection of albums is estimated at 12,000 and the total collection of laser discs is, get this, 28.

The money could be better utilized by getting down to the basics and cleaning up their shoddy act by scouring their cavernous disorganization, replacing junk equipment, obtaining a wire service to improve its news broadcasting and upgrading the content of public service announcements.

Playing them like perpetual encores, WVSS has the most obnoxious p.s.a.'s on the FM dial, offending the cerebrums of unsuspecting listeners tuning in to the clown of radio, WVSS. One is played repeatedly, explaining Social Security retirement benefits and the eligibility of Medicare for 65-year olds. Not a lone pupil breathes at Stout who cares one bit about decomposing tips on retirement.

Hey, use some intelligence WVSS. Be a public service for us instead of just playing a p.s.a. for the sake of playing a p.s.a.

In a sample of campus radio stations that I have contacted, (Green Bay, Oshkosh, Stevens Point, Superior, Eau Claire, Madison and Whitewater) all use wire services for regular news programs. On the other extreme, WVSS pitifully has no news service, and listeners never know at what time WVSS will toss something they call news over the air.

The WVSS news department is a complete joke. It is nothing more than a bulletin board. Student news programmers are forced to glean and pick over kibbles and bits of information from scanty press releases, including worthless bits of corporate publicity from R.J. Reynolds and NSP and tame scraps from congressional newsletters.

Instead of reporting the dramatic increases in tuition or the riotous effects of the Phillippine election in their news program, WVSS announces sales on withdrawn books at rental resources.

Yea, maybe the sound of the razor disk is clear, and maybe it is clean, and maybe it has all of those other wonderful benefits, but the station still sucks.

Bombs away WVSS.

Subject: Opportunity to study overseas is an enriching educational experience for students

Text by Tim Hopkins

John Stevenson

Dr. John B. Stevenson is the director of International Programs at UW-Stout. Stout will be participating in the Wisconsin in Scotland program for the first time this fall. This foreign study program in Edinburgh, Scotland allows students to enjoy the benefits of studying in Great Britain, while earning full resident credit for courses taught by UW-Faculty and British Adjunct professors. The program is housed in an 18th Century palace which was used as a royal residence by Queen Victoria. Applications are being accepted for fall and/or spring semesters from sophomore level students or above in good academic standing. Space is limited to 25 Stout students each semester.

STOUTONIA: WHAT WOULD YOU SAY TO THE STUDENT WHO'S BEEN INTRIGRUED BY THE INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS BUT HAS YET TO APPLY TO THE PROGRAM MERELY DUE TO THEIR FEAR OF THE UNKNOWNS INVOLVED?

STEVENSON: I look at it from the stand point of opportunity, from the standpoint of the interdependence of the nation's of the world. Have you thought about your origins? Do you want a real challenge? Do you want to become ten feet tall? Do you want something that's going to stretch your mind, and your social growth process as well as your intellectual growth process? I almost dare them you know, and that seems to have a positive effect on them. I don't want any student going over there unless they feel, a.) this is what they want, and b.) it is their decision. Without either of those I don't want the people to go overseas. If they're doing it because Mom and Dad are pushing them to do it. If they're doing it because they want to go with a buddy or a girlfriend or a boy/girl type of thing, then I don't think that they would derive the most out of it. If they look at it as an enrichment opportunity, an opportunity to grow, an opportunity to gain independence in the very positive sense of the word, then they should become involved in the program. The other thing is, if you can show an international experience on your resume, it's worth ten points in the interview. What's ten points? Given two applicants with

Public disclosure, legal pressure should force offenders to leave town

The writer stated that such a neighbor should confront the offending person "head on," and, that is a good idea--but, who is "name withheld upon request?"

One can be amused by the unsigned letter you titled "Clean up; stop grumbling" which appeared in the 2/13/86 edition of The Stoutonia. The writer chastised neighbors for calling the police to correct well known infractions for the law i.e. uncontrolled dogs, unnecessary noise, uncovered garbage and snow covered walks.

Well, we may never know. Hopefully that person(s) has or will learn how to behave in a community. Should the offender(s) elect not to comply with the local mores, maybe the public disclosure and legal pressure will encourage the offender(s) to leave this community.

Of the 13,600 Menomonie inhabitants of which 7,400 are students, 99.8 percent are good neighbors. One could not find a better place to work and live. Because of the many good things about Menomonie, it is important for citizens regardless of their occupation, investments, or hobbies to draw public attention to those who deliberately offend the citizens of Menomonie by their lack of manners.

Religion floods campus

Well, we seemed to have been deluged with religiousity in the last month or so. I for one have really had my fill of Josh posters, Crusade for Christ signs and other religious paraphernalia. Isn't it high time we heard some type of rebuttal from the other side? After all, we do still live in a pluralistic society and hopefully it will never become a homogenous group. My suggestion would be to have Anne Gaylor or Madaline O'Hare come to speak to the student populace. They are very dynamic women and I'm sure they would be able to find time in their schedules to speak at UW-Stout. The subjects of "separation of church and state" and "freedom of thought" are intensely important in the 1980's and particularly on a University campus.

Jenny Dombrow,
Junior,
Early Childhood Education,

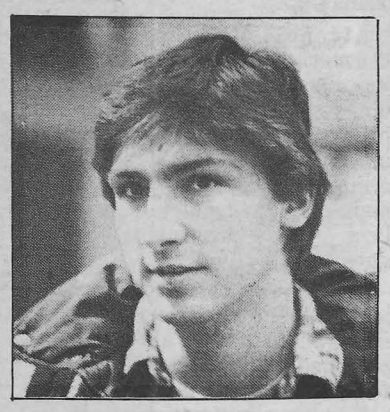
I don't believe it's fair at all. They should even it out some other way and not push a lot of it on the students. I think its unfair because the students want to keep everything going for the future and when tuition is raised, it makes it harder for the students to go to school and make it a better future.

Dale Gross,
Junior,
Hotel Restaurant management

It's kind of like taking and giving. They (State government) are taking away from the students but their trying to give it back to them more or less. It will make a difference on me. I think it will make a difference on anybody.

Peggy Lemke,
Sophomore,
Psychology

I will probably not be able to come back to school next semester, because right now I am really low on money. I had two jobs over the semester in order to come back to school. The increases will be very substancial because I have problems right now with tuition.



Brian Smith,
Junior,
Industrial Technology

If they (State government) can't find anyplace else, then they have to cut someplace. Next year it shouldn't effect me, because I'm going to get a student loan. This year it didn't affect me either because my parents pay for it. I'll just have to cut down on some extra things.

Kelly Baker,
Junior,
Graphic Design

It's not fair to the students and it's not fair to the tax payers. They are going to lose students in education, and they are going to see diminished enrollment because some students can't afford to go to college any longer. It is unfortunately that we are not funded by the government more for educational purposes.

Josh inspires large audiences

Pat Miles
News Reporter

"Josh...Who is he?" That has been the common question among many UW-Stout students for the past month in response to advertising done by Campus Crusade for Christ. Josh McDowell was here and spoke on the "Resurrection: Hoax or History," and the ever topic of "Maximum Sex."

Josh McDowell is one of the most popular speakers at universities today. He has spoken at more than 600 universities in 62 countries and during the last 20 years has spoken to more than seven million individuals. When asked how he became so popular, McDowell stated five major ideals he always follows:

- I do my homework.
- I be myself.
- I tell the truth.
- I love my audience.
- I give enough evidence so that my audience can make a decision.

Josh, as he is known, attracted nearly 600 people Tuesday, Feb. 11 for his talk on the resurrection. Attendance nearly doubled to 1200 for his talk on "Maximum Sex" Thursday night, Feb. 13.

Asked if he was concerned about the far greater preference students had for the topic concerning "Maximum Sex" McDowell said, "Definitely! People are probably hurting in relationships more than anywhere."

McDowell began his "Maximum Sex" talk by establishing two points. First, he stated "I'm not here to shove anything down your throat. I'd like you to take what I say and weigh and evaluate it."

Second, he warned that he may irritate some of his listeners. "I'm really going to tick some of you off. That's your problem, not mine."

McDowell jumped into the subject saying that most people have two fears: that they'll never be loved, and that they'll never be able to love. He continued to express that our society has not been through sexual revolution, rather its been in a revolution in the search for intimacy. McDowell said, "Most people don't want sex so much as they want intimacy."

McDowell then turned to the Christian perspective of sex. "The main purpose of sex, according to Christianity, is the unity factor, for a man and a woman to become one flesh, secondly for procreation."

McDowell believes that mar-

Josh McDowell spoke to combined audiences of nearly 2000 students on his two nights here. Typically, his first lecture on the Resurrection drew only half as many listeners as the intriguing topic of Maximum Sex. The Bottom Line

I'm Joshing

Rich Brueckner

Next year's UW-system budget cuts are going to be dramatically apparent. The number of class sections will be reduced, so some students may have trouble getting enough credits for a full load.

Fear not, this problem has been anticipated. A newly proposed block of classes will be taught by students. These courses will be interchangeable with any that a student may deem as being a pain in the ass.

Principles of Phillipino elections——101 This 3 credit course will explore various political genocide and intimidation topics. AV materials will include news clips featuring the outrageous antics of the Marcos Brothers. The student will get an opportunity to hear the arguments of those in power vs. those various of Aquino-supporter corpses.

Senatorial Driving Seminar——007 Guest speakers will include Bob Kasten on the advantages of driving on the wrong side of the road with the shoes full.

Tap Survival Practicum——501 This course will ready the student for the corporate world of three martini lunches. PREREQ: 30 semester hours at triple-cripple.

Vindictive Writing——505 Topics to be explored include: "Libel evasion," "Telling the utilities where to go," and "Ambiguous caricatures." This two credit class will be graded pass/fail based on the students tolerance of those with no sense of humor.

Product Tampering——666 This course will emphasize the rationale of putting razor blades in children's hot dogs in the name of union solidarity. The film, That'll teach the little bastards to cross picket lines!, will be featured. Opposition guest speakers from Hormel will speak to anyone brave enough to show up for their interviews on campus.

Dog Shit Ethics——101 This course will attempt to sniff out the most controversial topic to hit the Stoutonia in years.

Media Advertising Policies——000 This course is an attempt to explain the inane bulletin board policies at Stout. The student will find out why different boards are controlled by different factions and why the Vets Club practically needed a court order to get their "Speed-Run" posters up.

Alcohol Regulation——241 Formerly entitled "Prohibition," this class requires the student to understand why CMP can't sell beer at concerts and usually wind up with poor attendance as a result. Topics include the great buck-pass of who dictates whether beer can be served at football games.

Marketing Josh——666 This course will teach everything you ever wanted to know about the biggest media blitz since the "Herb" ads.

Last year's gimmick for Rusty was Dynamic Sex. This year it was Josh with Maximum Sex. God only knows who they are going to get for next years'slogan——Excruciating Sex.

I doubt that instructors would tolerate any non-religious philosophy adorning their chalkboards. Otherwise someone like my old roommate would put up posters exclaiming Maximum Sauce!

The Maximum Sex slogan may have been the reason that Speaker Series refused to sponsor Josh. This is odd since Josh brought in more people than anyone they did sponsor. But then we wouldn't want our student activity fees to be used in such a way as to benefit the most students possible, now would we?

Josh must be effective because one girl I talked to downtown informed me that, "Sex without love is a empty experience."

I didn't get to see him but I heard that he is an excellent speaker with a positive message.

It is the posters promoting Josh that I find to be a rather sleazy method of promoting a religious zealot. I should know, having used sleazy tactics myself on occasion.

"True," I responded, "but as empty experiences go——it's one of the best!"

Where she got her line is arguable; I got mine from a Woody Allen movie.

That last one is not meant to discredit Josh McDowell, the man.

the same credentials, one with an international experience and the other without, the one with international experience will be hired. That's documentable. So I think there's the social aspect of it, that the student really needs to be challenged with the independence, the pyschological aspect of it. I think there is the economic aspect of it. What it means to the individual in the long run. Our students are pretty intelligent. If you prese nt a case to them they can tell when they're being told a story and they can tell when it's a straightforward kind of thing. I would like to see the vast majority of our students be able to present upon graduation as part of their credentials an international experience. I think that this would really be great for them.

If you can show an international experience on your resume, it's worth 10 points on your interview.
—John Stevenson

STOUTONIA: PREVIOUS ARTICLES ON THE PROGRAM HAVE MENTIONED THAT LIBERAL ARTS CLASSES AND ELECTIVE COURSES PREDOMINATE IN THE PROGRAM. DOES THIS MAKE IT DIFFICULT AT ALL TO ATTRACT STOUT STUDENTS TO THE PROGRAM?

STEVENSON: That's a hard question to answer. Students go overseas for a variety of different reasons, anything from a three month vacation to trying to locate course work specifically related to the technical part of their major. As a rule, most overseas programs are general education. To define an overseas program that has course work like you would expect to find at the junior and senior levels in majors unique to Stout is difficult, very difficult. The exception would be that in Europe there are a lot of language programs. People go over there and spend a semester in which they would be immersed intensively in say, studying Spanish or French or German. But technical programs like industrial education or some of the technologies, packaging engineering or hotel and restaurant, something like that are hard to find.

STOUTONIA: WHAT ARE THE MOST REMARKABLE AFFECTS ON THE STUDENTS WHO PARTICIPATE IN THE INTERNATIONAL PROGRAM?

STEVENSON: One of the things that stands out about returning students is the fact that they are a lot more sure of themselves. They have a higher degree of independence than when they left. They have matured significantly in my opinion. A young lady might go out of here thinking that she's pretty sure of herself and she comes back and you can see the difference in her. Gentlemen will go out of here kind of cocky and arrogant and when they come back they just smack of confidence. I think that this is one of the things that employers look for. When the individuals can explain to the employer that he or she has had an overseas educational experience, that in this process they've met these kinds of people and visited these kinds of businesses and industries, it means a lot as far as potential employment is concerned.

STOUTONIA: WHAT ARE SOME OF THE COMMON QUESTIONS AND CONCERNS OF STUDENTS WHO COME IN TO LEARN MORE ABOUT THE PROGRAM?

STEVENSON: What courses can I take? How much is it going to cost? Will there be travel opportunities for me before, during or after the educational experience? Surprisingly enough, is there a language problem? Most of our programs, except for the one in Japan, are all in Great Britain, where English is the common language. Generally, they want to know about the climate. Very few of them ask questions about the rate of exchange, the difference between the dollar and the pound. As we get closer, as they finally receive their letter of acceptance and they realize their study abroad experience is for real, then they start getting concerned about such things as, "Hmmm, I heard that my hairdryer won't work with the electricity that's in Great Britain. What'll I do about that? What kind of clothes do I take. I heard that it's damp and rainy over there. What's the climate like? What's the food like?" It's basically mechanical type questions. They don't seem to concerned too much about the academic aspect of it like, is the studying hard? Is it different? What's the content of the courses? Are the instructors going to be teaching in a different fashion? Is the grading system any different?

STOUTONIA: WHAT ARE THE CHOICES I WOULD HAVE AS A STUDENT CONCERNING THE HOUSING SITUATION?

STEVENSON: It would vary with the program. The Scotland program is a self-contained program. All the housing will be in the Dalkieth House, as well as their instruction. In the program in North Wales, you'd be living in a dormitory with some differences, like it would be single occupancy rather than double occupancy. They have a maid that comes in and tidies up the room each day for the student. They become spoiled rotten. The program in London, the student's do not live in university housing. They live in the community. So it varies.

One of the things that stands out about returning students is that they're a lot more sure of themselves.
—John Stevenson

STOUTONIA: TO WHAT THE DEGREE IS THERE A FOCUS ON GETTING THE STUDENTS TO PARTICIPATE IN THE LIFESTYLE OVER THERE SO THERE'S LEARNING NOT ONLY INSIDE THE CLASSROOM, BUT OUTSIDE THE CLASSROOM AS WELL?

STEVENSON: The students have a way of finding their way into the community. The program we have in Scotland that's just getting off the ground, there is a course that's required of all students called "Introduction to British Civilization," which will be taught by a British professor. That will serve as an orientation to Great Britain, primarily to Edinburgh and Scotland but, also to Great Britain in general. The program we offer in North Wales has a two week orientation program in which they visit many of the points of interest, examine the culture, history and tradition of the Welsh people. There is a serious attempt to incorporate the cultural dimensions of the community and of the country into the student's experience. We try to structure it in rather than letting it happen haphazardly. Incidental acquaintance with the culture does take place. They're there. They're in another culture and they have to learn how to function, and they do. And quite effectively.

Chancellor to tour Malaysia

UW-Stout Chancellor Robert S. Swanson will be part of a delegation of 12 state college and university heads to visit Malaysia March 8-17.

The group will participate in a joint conference on trends in higher education with the Malaysian ministry and the American Association of State Colleges and Universities.

Swanson will be chairman of a section in the conference dealing with "Contemporary Issues in Institutional Management." While in Malaysia, he will be meeting with officials from that country who send students to Stout and will visit with Stout graduates from Malaysia. He will also work on a possible faculty exchange.

Chinese seek teachers

The Northwest Institute of Light Industry in Xian, China is seeking two staff members for the fall term from Sept. 1-Jan. 20. The institute needs one teacher in English and a second from one of the following disciplines: foods, packaging, computer science and machine engineering (design). Round trip air fare, housing, car and other benefits are included with an appropriate finacial arrangement. For more information, call the Office of International Programs at Ext. 1896.

Club racing for members

The Stout Antique Auto Club is designed to organize activities which promote enthusiasm in the many aspects of car crafting. The clubs present goal is to reestablish the club's size since the recent graduation of many club members.

Stout Antique Auto Club membership is open to all Stout students. Members need not own an automobile. Anyone with an interest in cars, old or new, is encouraged to join. A new members meeting will be held Monday, Feb. 24 at 8:30 p.m. in the Pioneer Room of the new Student Center, and will feature a free movie.

Club sponsored events include: a tour of the Ford Motor Company in St. Paul March 20, trips to Rock Falls dragway and the 19th annual Car Show/Swap Meet April 20.

For more information, phone Gary at Ext. 3132.

women's locker room will be added.

The new south end will contain four racquetball courts, a physiology laboratory, a wrestling room, classrooms, storage area, and a multipurpose room much like the current gymnasium on the north end.

The multipurpose room will house an 880 yard track, five or six tennis courts plus basketball and volleyball courts. The room will probably measure 44,000 square feet and the entire addition will total 75,000 square feet at the cost of almost $56 per square foot.

Besides the addition, there will be some extensive remodeling to several areas. The current training room will be made into a visitor's locker room. The locker rooms themselves will be remodeled, along with several other small areas such as the current wrestling room, which will be done over. The current gymnasium will get new bleachers. The cost of the new bleachers is seperate from the $5 million project.

"We feel confident that we can keep expenses within the $5 million budget," Bowlus said when asked if there might be difficulty staying within the budget, "because UW-River Falls and UW-Eau Claire are just finishing up similiar construction." Since there is equipment already near here, those contractors will bid low because they won't have as much expense in moving the equipment.

The proposal sent to Madison contained a list of estimated costs that is subject to change. The building itself is estimated at $4,079,300. The sitework will be about $40,000, and the cost to move the Butler buildings is $52,000.

Other expenses include total designing and supervision that cost nearly $441,900, movable equipment is estimated at $44,200, a seven percent contingency fee of about $294,600, and two-tenths of one percent is calculated for required art work, comes to nearly $10,000.

When completed, it is anticipated the Fieldhouse will accommodate a student population of 500. "Next year enrollment might be cut back by 200," Schuknecht said, "and projections for the following school year is an enrollment of 7300 students." Therefore, there is not much worry for outgrowing the Fieldhouse renovations planned for completion the Fall of 1988.

The area between Johnson Fieldhouse and the weight rooms is where the $5 million dollar rennovation of the Fieldhouse is expected to get under way early this fall. Changes will include a half-mile track, up to six tennis courts, four racquetball courts, a physiology lab, a wrestling room plus basketball and volleyball courts. Placement

Dahlke said "Some students wonder why more companies from a certain field come for campus recruitment than companies from certain other fields. This depends entirely on the needs of the companies and the demand for graduates. We invite as many as we can. In fact, I invite students to give me a list of companies so that I can write to them and call them for campus recruitment."

Currently, graduates in Hotel and Restaurant Management are experiencing the best job market. More than 60 hospitality companies recruited on campus for 176 graduates. "Jobs for those in this field abound at all levels and a wide variety of geographic locations," Dahlke said.

He said that the retail field enjoyed a 98.7 placement success. Jobs for applied math graduates and industrial technology graduates were strong, with most offers going to graduates with co-op or intern experience. Graduates willing to relocate had more job opportunities.

While the placement percentage remains steady, it is significant to note that nine out of ten business-industry programs had average salary increases. Six of the nine programs have annual average increases of more than $1000 with applied math, general business administration and industrial technology majors enjoying the largest increase and highest starting salaries.

"Applied Math graduates earn a starting salary of $ 25,347," Dahlke said. Idustrial technology graduates earn a starting salary of $ 23,407. Compared to these figures, the salaries in the service field are considerably lower he said. A hotel and restaurant graduate earns a starting salary of $16,219 and a business administration graduate earns $19,000.

"I expect that the salaries and demand in the service industries will continue to increase because of the greater demand for graduates in the service industry," Dahlke said.

For those who don't get recruited on-campus the Career Planning and Placement Office holds workshops to train students to find jobs. These workshops are held at the beginning and end of each semester.

These workshop groups are kept as small as possible so individual attention may be given to the students. Recently developed services for the student at the Placement Centre include a video service on the various companies which the students can watch instead of reading brochures. Computers are also installed, which can be run by the students. These computers provide students with all the necessary information regarding the company, Dahlke said. They start by providing a brief description of the company and other details about whom to contact for recruitment, etc.

Placement studies show that students who are already employed are happy and satisfied with their jobs. Dahlke said the whole placement picture for the Stout graduates seems to be promising and improving day by day. As Dahlke said, "We are now on a plateau as far as placement rates are concerned and this reflects the market and the whole business economy, interest rates and inflation."

riages provides an environment in which a relationship builds into a maximum oneness. He said unity is needed in three areas to maintain a maximum oneness, the physical, the soul or psychological, and the spiritual dimensions.

"In the physical dimension, a good sex life is the result of a good relationship, not the cause of it," McDowel said.

He explained the second dimension was psychological in its basis. "Your most important sex organ is your mind," Dowell said. The mind can have three attitudes toward love, he explained. The first two are conditional types of love. "I love you if..." is a love that has requirements such as "I will love you if... you go to bed or if you marry me," he said.

A second conditional type he defined as, "I love you because..." He descibed this love as teing wealthy or providing some type of security.

The third kind of love he described as, "I love you...Period." A love that asks only what it can give, he said. McDowell believes only fullfilled people can experience this type of love because they're complete and free to give.

McDowell then took his audience to the third dimension of maximum oneness. McDowell said that people who experience "love...period" for a long time are people who are Christ-centered. "Jesus Christ is a complete individual, and knowing him gives the fullfillment necessary to be able to give," he said.

McDowell took his audience down memory lane in a comic pantomime of his first dates. He used this pantomime to answer the question people ask themselves concerning how far to go in sex before marriage.

He illustrated how the "law of diminishing returns" can make us go farther than we want. He said that as a person makes his or her moves it becomes less satisfying and makes it easier to go farther until the person may have gone farther than they desired.

McDowell closed stating the need for parents to teach their children about sex. "Don't let someone else do it. Don't let the schools do it. Don't let other children do it," he cried. "You do it. Teach your children all about sex before someone else does. You'll be happy when you do," he promised.

In McDowell's talk about the Resurrection he spoke of the historical proof that supports the fact that Christ came back to life three days after his death.

McDowell gave the audience some background on his own life and how he came to research the resurrection. He said that when he began college he was very much against Christianity. "I thought that when people went to church they left their brains outside," he quipped.

In a conversation with some Christians, he was challenged to prove that Christ was not resurrected from the dead. McDowell researched for two years and came to the conclusion that it actually happened.

He said the New Testament is "the most accurate book of history." He supported this explaining that all facts of history must be supported by manuscripts and the closer to the date of event a manuscript is, the more accurate it is.

McDowell said the New Testament is supported by 27,000 manuscripts. He also said that the manuscripts in the New Testament come as close as 30 years within the actual occurrence.

McDowell went on to explain his perception of what happened. He listed the precautions taken to keep Christ's body in the tomb.

He told how Christ was encased in a cement-like mixture, how a one ton boulder was placed in the opening of the tomb which was at the bottom of the hill.

Other precautions included a Roman seal around the boulder to seal the tomb and a 16 man Roman guard unit placed in front of the tomb.

After all these precautions, Christ still came from the tomb, as the boulder was found at the top of the hill and the casing that was around the body was not broken, according to McDowell's research.

McDowell said because of his research, "I became intelectually satisfied and accepted Christ."

A number of students said they enjoyed the talk on "Maximum Sex." "I respected him for telling us that he wasn't here to shove evangelism down are throats," one student said, "I was then able to relax and enjoy the speech."

Special Olympics benefit all participants

Tim Hopkins
News Editor

For most of us skiing is a recreational event. For participants and volunteers in the Indianhead Special Olympics, alpine skiing taught them a lot about themselves as they mastered the challenge of the slopes at Deepwood Ski and Golf Saturday, Feb. 15.

The Area Coordinator for Special Olympics, Terry Gehrke, said the first ever apline skiing competition in this area was an attempt to see if there would be any interest in a competition. Judging from the turnout, she said, "Next year I'm sure we'll be able to offer a competition."

Gehrke is a junior majoring in vocational rehabilitation at UW-Stout. With more than a half dozen volunteers from vocational rehabilitation assisting Special Olympics as coaches for flatland and downhill skiing, CESA 11 board member said. "Primarily, Stout has given us the most help."

Undergraduate Program Director for Vocational Rehabilitation, Gretchen Russert was pleased by the students' interest in helping with the various aspects involved in publicizing and organizing. "It was a major success," she said. "Everyone we talked to had a great experience."

Gehrke stressed how much the Special Olympics program has grown. "It no longer is just recreation for the mentally retarded. Special Olympics now involves year long quality sports training for the mentally retarded."

Indianhead Special Olympics offers sports training and athletic competition for mentally retarded individuals in 16 sports. There is a swimming tournament scheduled at Stout on March 15.

The popularity of Indianhead Special Olympics has grown to the extent that, "There are in excess of 800 Special Olympians in the 11 county Indianhead area," Gehrke said. Gymanstics, volleyball abnd basketball were the only sports offered in the wintertime Special Olympics prior to the Alpine Skiing Olympics.

Gehrke hoped that the organized format of instruction for downhill skiing would encourage parents of the developmentally disabled to further pursue downhill skiing for their children. "Families, parents and siblings have been doing these things at home," she said. "But, they're just not trained enough to be coaches.

At the alpine skiing event, coaches instructed participants from 9 a.m. to 12 noon. After a break for lunch, participants could choose between cross country and downhill skiing.

"We wanted to teach them that downhill skiing is not as dangerous as they,ve ben led to believe," Gehrke said. The hope was to give participants organized instruction, which parents and siblings simply could not provide at home, she said.

Gehrke said that Special Olympics helped parents "to see that their children can do so much more. Without parents knowing what their kids can do, they're hesitant." Tom King echoed these comments when he said, "The Special Olympics focus is on participation rather than competition."

King said he saw the chance to expand the Alpine Skiing Special Olympics next year into a four-day event involving a full day of training and two "Downhill Fun Days." There would be a basic giant slalom race the final day.

Parents and volunteers at the Special Olympics said the event was eye opening in the sense it made them aware of many things that otherwise they never would have learned.

Dawn Wirth, a sophomore majoring in vocational rehabilitation at Stout, showed she was impressed by the days events. "Some of these people are better than me at skiing. They're cooperative, talkative, they're willing to do it, and they don't want to quit," she said as she attempted to catch her breath.

Sue Jenkins, a volunteer coach for Special Olympics who teaches the mentally retarded in Lady Smith, Wis. said, "I'm just amazed how fast they're learning."

Sharon Carlson of Amery, Wis. said her whole family learned from their participation with Kyle, her son, in the Special Olympics. there are very skilled in another," she said.

What impressed her most about the activities she said was, "There's such a positive attitude. It's exciting to do all these different things."

She said it was important that, "kids with these kinds of handicaps to do this this." She was aware that, "Even though they have a handicap they have to learn to live in this world."

She liked the way Special Olympics brought her whole family together. "It's a nice way to enjoy and share the experience with my family," she said. She was certain that, "Had I not had a handicapped child I would not have grown in this area."

This Special Olympics volunteer coach lends a hand to this youngster trying the slopes for the first time. The first time event in the Indianhead area was helped in a big way by Stout Vocational Rehabilitation students. (Stoutonia photo by Todd A. Nelson)

Fraternity hosts seminar

Dewey Rothering
Contributing Writer

The tri-state regional conference of Sigma Tau Gamma national fraternity experienced a weekend workshop at UW-Stout on achieving "Purpose and Committment through Planning," hosted by Stout's Alpha Kappa chapter.

Seven university chapters from Wisconsin, Minnesota and Michigan sent 150 delegates to participate in the two-day event at the Memorial Student Center this past weekend.

The workshops featured extensive study of goal setting and planning strategies in order to achieve one's purpose and committment.

Keynote speaker Kenneth Applehans outlined the goals for this workshop when he said, "Through the planning process, goals are defined which promote the principles on which an organization is founded."

Applehans, Stout's Alpha Kappa chapter advisor, continued to outline the effectiveness of goal setting and planning when he said, "These goals reinforce an organization's purpose and establish the reason for its existence. The subsequent activities are organized to achieve the goals, develop member involvement and elevate committment."

The afternoon session used these ideas to help put together chapter plans on how to reach their goals. Stout's Alpha Kappa chapter developed plans for a pledging period and to plan their annual Parents' Weekend brat fry.

Vice President of Membership, Chuck Veglia said that, "The conference was very educational. We have become much more organized in planning our campus and community events."

The semi-annual conference dates back to the early 1960s, with each chapter taking their turn as host. The last conference held at Stout was during the Spring of 1983. Chapter participation has almost doubled since that time.

Workshop Chairman, Dewey Rothering said that not only had the group become more organized but, "We have learned what it takes to prepare for and organize a major conference and banquet."

The next conference is scheduled for Oct. 1986 at Michigan Technical University.

Large voter turnout expected when residents choose form of government

Maria Wagner
News Reporter

A large turn out is expected for the April 1 election featuring two binding referendums that, if passed, would introduce many changes to the present form of the Menomonie City Government.

One referendum requests that a representative be elected from each of Menomonie's 11 wards instead of the at-large election of seven city council members that occurs today.

The second referendum asks that the city's form of government be changed back to the mayor-council plan which would allow Menomonie residents to elect this city mayor. Menomonie's city manager position is appointed by the city council. The city council adopted the city manager form of government in 1967.

Some Menomonie citizens distributed petitions requesting direct legislation. Each petition contained more than 1,200 signatures. The minimum required by state law is 597 signatures.

The construction of the $1.2 million library along Lake Menomin was approved by the city council. A citizens group was concerned that the City Council approved the library construction despite what this group sensed as citizen opposition to the library.

According to Menomonie Alderman and UW-Stout senior Jay Schroeder, citizens have not changed their minds since a 1982 referendum that resulted in a 2-to-1 margin against construction of the new library.

If the first referendum is approved, the 11 aldermanic seats would be filled by the April 7, 1987 elections. The present seven member council would continue until then.

According to City Attorney James Solberg, the three members elected to two-year terms in the 1986 election would be eligible to serve those terms if they did not choose to seek re-election in April of 1987. This could result in the council having as many as 14 members for this one year.

The second referendum, if passed, would abolish the office of city manager on April 3 and the office of mayor would then be created. However, according to Solberg, state status provides that the term of office for mayor and alderman begins on the third Tuesday of April in the year of their election.

There would be no position of mayor until April 15, creating a gap with no legal executive or administrative head for at least 12 days. The new council would elect a council president who would serve as mayor until a mayor can be elected.

In reference to the referendums, Solberg said "My best judgement is that if the general public reads and bears in mind the facts regarding the mayor versus the city manager form of government, the majority will support the city manager position."

According to Schroeder, the referendums are important opportunities to the citizens of Menomonie and should not be ignored. He said that with the election by wards, Menomonie residents would be able to have their positions on issues represented as the wards would be broken into approximately equal divisions. He also feels that Stout students would benefit as they would be represented, most likely, in more than one ward.

Shroeder also encourages a full-time mayor that would be elected by residents. A mayor would have to work with students and residents or would lose the position as mayor and would not be re-elected. Schroeder sees the present form of government as "really a problem." "With the passing of these referendums, a system of checks and balances will result," Schroeder said.

Menomonie's present form of government will hang in the balance when voters go to the polls to decide the issue on April 1.

Arts

Theatre execution provides comic relief

Karen Heagle
Arts Reporter

What do you get when you take two minor characters from Shakespeare's play Hamlet and make them into stars of their own play? The answer is quite simple, Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead, of course. This week the university theatre will present this delightful play which Director Jim Miller refers to as Hamlet done sideways.

Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are two insignifigant pawns of Hamlet. In fact, in several productions of Hamlet they are cut from the show. But in this show playwright, Tom Stoppard, has taken these minor characters and made them the main characters.

What is so signifigant about the insignifigant, Rosencrantz and Guildenstern? When a letter is sent out ordering the execution of Hamlet it is interrupted, and the victim's name is switched to the names of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern .

My intention was comic,
—Tom Stoppard
Playwright

In the early sixties Stoppard developed a fascination with these guys. He wrote festival productions, and experimental shows in England. All the shows were variations of an idea about these background characters from Hamlet. The titles ranged from Rosencrantz and Guildenstern meet King Lear to the hit Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead.

In 1967 the show came to Broadway after years of festival productions. This established Stoppard as a playwright, and established Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead as a Broadway hit.

Currently Stoppard's latest hit production is at the Guthrie Theatre in Minneapolis, On the Razzle. This is one of Stoppard's first hits since Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead.

The play consists of much more than just Rosencrantz and Guildenstern. The play has supplied its cast with soliders, musicians, and several familiar faces from Hamlet. Often from backstage lines from Hamlet are declared, or a whole group of Shakespeare's major characters quickly rushes on with lines and rushes off.

Director Miller believes that this play was meant to be comical. He recalls reading of two unsuccessful productions of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead, both played the show as a serious drama.

Stoppard wrote this comment in his script, "Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead whatever else it is, is a comedy. My intention was comic. If the play wouldn't have been funny I would have failed."

Cast member, Dennis Crawley (Guildenstern) agrees with this. "The humor is great." Stoppard was from the same generation as the Theatre of the Absurd, and the guys in Monty Python. Director Miller believes that the play has the flavor of Monty Python.

The play gives us credit for knowing a little bit about philosophy, and a little bit about Shakespeare. "It doesn't insult the audience, "says Miller.

Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are easy to identify with. As Miller puts it,"There is a lot to laugh at in Shakespeare. If we were in Hamlet we wouldn't be the king." Crawley added that "even as a student we are all pawns we have very little power over many things." The show draws reference from everyday life.

Not only is the show relatable, but there is a lot of fun in the show. Rosencrantz and Guildenstern in their boredom awaiting orders for a mob fromHamlet to deliver their lines, find themselves flipping coins and 'playing verbal tennis.'Miller added, "This is a well written show-very witty and very funny." The play on words which Stoppard has mastered highlights the show.

The cast is made up of many talented students including Crawley, and his partner Rosencrantz (Troy Bystrom). Crawley is a sophomore who has done alot of theatre in his hometown. This is his first lead at Stout. Bystrom, a senior, has extensive theatre experience also. At Stout he is best known for the role of Renfield in Dracula. This is just one on a long list of credits. The entire cast deserves credit for the hard work they've put into this show.

The stagecraft in the production is bordering on the abstract. Miller notes that the script left much leeway, "I like working with abstract things. Its very good for a director to make choices ... to create staging that suits your needs." Bystrom highly believes that the stagecraft is one of the shows strong points. He describes it as "surrealistic."

Miller also commented,"There's nothing particular about the space that's important, its just how you play with it." In Stoppard's efforts to help the director design a set he wrote,"Two Elizabethians passing the time in a place with not much visible character."

Miller creates this place with a modified version of an Elizabethian stage with a platform and stairs, and large draping clothes in the background. The stagelighting adds an eye pleasing, colorful effect.

Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead has been five weeks in the making, and this enthusiastic group of players has quite a show to offer. Tickets are $2, and performance dates are Feburary 20, 21, and 22 at 8pm. Tickets are available at Harvey Hall.

King's autobiographical paintings now displayed at Furlong gallery

Amy Pagel
Arts Reporter

Starting Wednesday, the Furlong Gallery will be featuring the works of Clive King from Wales. The main exhibit is his autobiographical work.

King, an art instructor, is at Stout through an exchange program for the 85-86 school year. He was influenced to come here by the book Wisconsin Death Wish. The winter here has brought him closer to understanding his ancestors. King said, "Now I understand the hardships, I just narrowly missed, of my relations."

Among the works to be included in the show are paintings of the Magical Gardens in England. King describes these paintings as prime evil. They are three works of what will be a nine piece work when finished.

"Color is used in these paintings to give it a sort of double sentuality, to make the work a whole piece," King explained.

Most of the other works are small working drawings for the large autobiography. They are from a sketch book about four by six inches that King carries with him. "I pull it out when I'm sitting in the pub or cafe to put ideas down," King said.

Parts of these works might appear in the final work but seldom as they are.

The main exibit is pencil drawings. It is called "Cwmgwrach" which translates to "valley of the witches." This is about the village which King lived in as a child.

King explained, "The piece is about superstition and discipline of the place I was raised." It is an ongoing piece where each part is an individual work that will become a part of the whole picture.

The piece is now about 50 feet long, when finished King estimates at least 300 feet. He hopes to add another 10 feet by the end of the semester.

Scenes in the drawing are a collage of memories for King. These are feelings that he has half realized for the past twenty years. The work itself becomes almost abstract. He describes it as anecdotal.

The work appears like a dream. Only various details are depicted which become a story. The personal element is the most interesting part of all the works exhibited.

One event drawn is when a pig killer goes through the village and bleeds the pigs everyone keeps in their backyard. Portions are the hanging of the pig parts, the burn-

Jax co-authors book for junior high students

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

"Books are your best friends." You have probably heard these words to the wise from parents or teachers sometime in your life. Friend or foe, books, especially textbooks, have been an intergral part of our lives as students.

Dr. Judy Jax, Administrative Associate for the Department of Human Development, Family Living and Community Educational Services and Program Director for Home Economics Education, is an author of the recently published textbook, Resources for Living. This book is described as, "the home economics approach to life management." This book is designed for middle and junior high school home economic students.

Resources for Living was written by three authors; Jax, Pat Thompson and Janet D. Kiser. Thompson is a professor at Herbert H. Lehman College, the City University of New York. Kiser is the Cooperative Extension Chairperson at Washington State University.

Roger Egan, Vice President of Knight Publishing Company brought these three people together. Egan had met each of them at various conventions and saw similarities in their interests. The authors did not know each other before writing this book. The writers worked together at their initial meeting but mainly worked independently.

"I saw a need for an appropriate text for this level of student because it has been an area that has been neglected in home economic programs," Jax said. Middle school and junior high students are required to take home economics. Resources for Living is designed to be a comprehensive textbook for that course.

Resources for Living is not just a book but an entire program. The textbook is the core. It has seven units; You - A Human Resource, Your Family - A Social Resource, Caregiving - A Resource for Children and the Elderly, Knowledge - A Consumer Resource, Food - Your Health and Fitness Resource, Clothing - Your Resource for Self-Expression and Housing - Your Environmental Resource.

At the end of each chapter there are activities, exercises, a glossary of terms and charts and tables. The book also provides a career chapter after each unit to examine home economic related occupations.

More extensive exercises and activities for hands-on experience is included in a workbook. Microcomputer software is included in the entire program. This software provides simulations and tutorials. A teacher's edition is also part of the package.

It is a very time consuming venture,
—Dr. Judy Jax
Author

Jax became involved with the book in 1981. The project required extensive research. "It is a very time consuming venture. It takes hours and hours and my dining room was filled with books for a long time," Jax said.

Areas covered by the book were split up among the authors. Jax wrote the housing and environment unit, the knowledge and consumer choice unit, the you - a human resource unit and several of the career chapters.

The book has a copyright of 1987. Jax received her first copy a few weeks ago. Publishing the text took longer than expected. The book went through the hands of three publishers due to firms selling and changing owners. The final publisher was Changing Times Education Service, a division of EMC Publishing.

The publishing process was educational for Jax. She learned the business and legal aspects of publishing. Jax said, "I've been in academia for a long time and I think of the academic part but the whole business and marketplace has been brought to my attention."

Jax believes the book has a good potential selling market. The publishing company is trying to market the book to textbook adoption states. Not all states have adoption programs. An adoption program state has a department of public instruction which chooses the text that will be used in all the schools throughout that state.

The focus on resources for living makes the text unique. There is a unit on family heritage and family change. The caregiving units not only concentrate on child care but also the caring of the sick and elderly.

"In my consumer resource unit I have emphasized economics, the marketplace and how it works very strongly. It is not just buying as consumers as traditional thought in home economics," Jax said.

The book is colorfully designed and has vibrant pictures. Photographic attention has been paid to minority groups and ethnic groups.

The written word is directed to young men as well as young women. "The most difficult thing is writing at the level. I was being very cautious to count words and the length of words so I would have it at the appropriate reading level. One thing I never had done before is write at a very personal level. The book is very 'you' oriented," Jax said.

Resources for Living is Jax's first book. She likes the fact that "The School of Home Economics, University of Wisconsin-Stout" is printed in the book. She said, "I think that is good visibility for our university."

Jax began instructing at Stout in 1966. She has a masters and bachelor of science degree from Stout in home economics education. She also has a doctorate in education from the University of Minnesota.

The author is interested in writing about other subjects in the future. "I would like to write something about curriculum development. That is a favorite area of mine."

ing of remnants and a pig in an abstract fence.

The most recent addition pictures the digging up of graves in an old grave yard. As a child King and his friends use to dig graves and sell skulls to drunks that passed by.

King's grandmother even appears in the collage.

During the year and a half King has been working on the piece he has changed his style. The first work is solid with figurative images. Recent work is much more abstract and less defined. King attributes, "In the beginning I was only thinking about the piece, now I'm getting more into the theme."

"People have said I'm a Welch depressionist but I feel I'm more of an optomist." King said. He works with his Celtic gut feelings.

An interesting painting also to appear in the show is one about Wisconsin. It is all very dark to show how dark it is during the winter.

The days are started when it is early and still dark and finish with little daylight between. "Nights are very dark here." King feels.

Of course parts of Kings experience here will appear in his autobiographical piece. Just as the Wisconsin painting is part of a four works set of his time here as well as a visit to Florida and New Orleans.

"This is a totally alien experience for me. I've never had to deal with things like sun burn on New Year's Eve," King recalls from his visit to the south.

King has visualized the show for some time now. He has seen exactly where the autobiography will be and built the rest of the show around it.

The audience will be very different for King here because they will not have a reference to the subject matter in contrast to his audiences in England.

Clive King is very interested in the reactions of the audience here at Stout. There is a cross cultural affect that will be intriguing.

A talk will take place on Wednesday, February 26 to explain the works and answer questions.

Easter Seals funding aided by Air Jam V

Beth Reid
Arts Reporter

What is Air Jam? No, it's not the latest thing to spread on your sandwich with peanut butter. It's a unique form of entertainment for everyone, in which groups of students get together and "perform" their favorite song. The groups create costumes, instruments and attempt to act out how the original group performs the song by use of lip sync.

The Annual Air Jam has been taking place for the past four years, and has been proven to be a very popular activity. The groups enjoy having the chance to get on stage and the audience gets the opportunity to hear their favorite songs.

The Fifth Annual Air Jam, sponsored by Circle K, is being held on Thursday, Feb. 27 from 8 p.m. to 11 p.m. in the Great Hall. Advance tickets are on sale for $1.50 and can be purchased from any Circle K member or in the Cobblestone Court on Thursday. Tickets can also be purchased at the door for $2.00. Proceeds will go to Wisconsin Easter Seals Society for the pavement of wheelchair paths at Camp Wawbeek and Camp Pioneer in Wisconsin Dells.

"We will have at least 12 bands performing," Darien Schaefer, Air Jam Chairman said, "and we may get a few more for a total of 15." Some of the songs to be performed include: "Would I Lie to You" by the Eurythmics, "Count On Me" by New Addition, "I Love A Bazaar" by Sheila E, and "Good Lovin'" by the Rascals.

The bands will be judged on lip sync, authenticity of instruments, timing, appearance and originality. "The bands will also be judged on crowd participation and reaction," Sharon Oncken, Circle K President said, "so we're hoping groups of friends will come and support their favorite group."

Each band will perform once, the scores are then tallied and the top four bands will be announced. "These top four will perform again and then their second scores will be added to their first scores," Schaefer said, "the final scores will be calculated by dividing the group's total score of the two performances by two to obtain an average score for each group."

Prizes will be awarded to the top three bands, with first prize being $150, second prize is $75 and third prize is $50. "The top winning band will also be invited to perform at the Spring Fling, which is sponsored by the Chancellor's Advisory Board," Oncken said.

Anyone interested in playing emcee for the show can contact Sharon at 232-1877, Darien at 232-3128 or Kathy at 235-8980.

"The show has always been a hit," Oncken said, "last year we had over 300 people attend and we are expecting to have approximately the same number of people this year." Be sure and see this unique and entertaining show. Where else can you see 12 different bands performing in the same room?

Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead

The University Theatre, UW-Stout will present Tom Stoppard's award winning comedy Rosencrantz & Guildenstern are Dead Feb. 20, 21, and 22 in the Harvey Hall auditorium. The play has been called "a work of fascinating distinction" by the New York Times, which also cited Stoppard as "among the finest English-speaking writers of our stage."

The production marks the area directorial debut of Dr. James M. Miller, Stout's new technical director of theatre. Miller describes the play as "an imaginative and original twist on Shakespeare's well-known Hamlet as seen by two of its less well remembered characters."

Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are old friends of the young Hamlet who have been summoned to Elsinore by the scheming King Claudius to investigate Hamlet's sudden case of lunacy. They little suspect that they have become entangled in a complex web of intrigue, double-dealing and subterfuge. All they know is that every time they try to have a quiet moment to themselves, someone comes barging in and orders them to do something else that they do not fully understand.

While they wait for the next noisy intrusion, they pass the time playing verbal tennis and contemplating the meaning of life. Occasionally, we catch word or phrase that drifts over from the offstage action of some very familiar scenes–"to be or not to be," etc. It is, in a sense, Shakespeare's Hamlet played sideways.

In addition to Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, the cast features cameo appearances by several of Hamlet's - dramatis personae, including Hamlet, Claudius, Gertrude, Ophelia and Polonius. Little do Rosencrantz and Guildenstern realize that they too have their counterparts in this play within the play, where "between tragic irony and just deserts" nearly everyone is dispatched before the final curtain.

Rosencrantz & Guildenstern Are Dead performs at 8 p.m. in the Harvey Hall auditorium. Adults $3, Faculty and students $2. Tickets may be reserved by calling (715) 232-1468.

Sounds of Blackness

On Thursday, Feb.27 the Sounds of Blackness will perform at the Harvey Hall auditorium at 7 p.m. After the performance by the 25 member choir and band there will be a reception at 8:30 p.m. in the Crystal Ballroom of the Memorial Student Union. The event is free and open to all.

Oklahoma auditions

University Theatre is having their spring musical auditions Monday, Feb.24 and Tuesday, Feb.25 beginning at 6 p.m. in Harvey Hall auditorium. Everyone is encouraged to participate. Production dates are April 17-20, Parents' Weekend.

Oklahoma, a Rogers and Hammerstein classic, is a love story about Laurey and Curly and has wonderful music.

There are over 10 lead parts and many supporting parts in the show. "No experience is necessary. We welcome anyone interested in having fun to join us" says director Natalie Bothwell. "Those who work on the show can earn a credit in 'Theatre Practicum' so we encourage lots of participation both on and off stage. We need actors, actresses, dancers, musicians, and technicians. Anyone interested in being a part of the production should come to auditions. We will discuss their background and potential for being a part of the show."

Participants will be asked to sing any song of their choice at auditions. A song from the show is ideal, but not necessary. "Any song which enhances your voice and can help us determine your vocal range is welcome," said Bothwell. Script readings will follow the vocal auditions.

Dance auditions will be led by choreographer, Kaleene Kenning. A brief dance routine will be taught and then participants will try to follow it. No advance preparation is necessary.

Individuals may come one or both nights. Anyone desiring more information should contact Natalie Bothwell, 117C Harvey Hall, x-1420

ADVERTISE IN THE STOUTONIA

Syndicate fall portrayed in British film

Jef Maynard
Arts Editor

To the glory of gangsters, and the power of the underworld The Long Good Friday dedicates itself. This is one tough, full-strength film.

The story shows the undisputed London crime boss, Harold Shand, from Good Friday through a bad Saturday. There will be no resurrection of his empire.

Bob Hoskins, who plays Shand is a gruff, tough cockney muscleman, funny and sharp, yet he is a holdout from the gangland mobster style of another era.

That is his fatal flaw. He is vulnerable, he is a merchant of menace. He is trying to reach the height of "legitimate" gangsterhood by way of an impending deal with the U.S. Mafia. The deal involves the Mafia financing of a London waterfront development, apparently destined as the site for the 1988 Olympic games. The property would be a developer's wet-dream.

The beginning of the gradual disintegration of Shand's control seems to come from no where for no reason. I had a difficult time relating the dialogue-free opening of a payoff in a hideout, a militia roust, a double-cross, kidnap, and murder to what finally transpired, but it all becomes clear by the time the fat lady sings.

The beginning of the film features all this action filmed in sweet synch to a soundtrack by Francis Monkman, noted jazzman. The payoff house is beautifully photographed in the late evening. The sky is filtered into the beautiful Crayola Midnight Blue, blending lighter to the horizon.

Set in the harbor, hinting at the safety of all harbors, Shand comes on the scene. I'm convinced that Hoskins is playing with the all-too-famous James Cagney, "you dirty rat" schtick in his opening on the dock. There's a lot of humor in this film but it is tough, and hidden in the dry British delivery.

One worthwhile image flashes by rapidly, and the significance might be lost. Two scenes make a sentence, the outstretched arms of the sorrowful Crucifix and the outstretched arms of the diver.

This leads into another tumbling pillar in Shand's temple. A homosexual cat and mouse game at the pool leads to another snuff and it's the mouse with the big claws. Shand's man Colin has his plug pulled, and he drains into the bath, which is drained like Shand's empire.

Shand can't see the connection to the empire. Another hit on Shand's mother's car while she's in church puts Erick the driver in chaffeur's heaven, and the roughed up Rolls in the used car-bomb lot.

After the American Mafioso arrives, Shand tried to rally his troops to "exude efficiency." The American is played by the blue-steel, cult actor Eddie Constantine. His lawyer is a polished, restrained Ivy league type, calculating, while Shand's lawyer, Harris is a nervous, babbling drunk, who knows the ship is sinking.

Another bomb at one of Shand and company's pubs, right in front of the Mafia envoy on their way to dinner, leaves the impending deal on thin ice.

Shand wants to find out who the enemy is so he dredges up all the neighborhood crime bosses and drags them literally by their heels, into the freezer warehouse, where the body of Colin is really chilling out.

Another murder and some spilled beans lead to the identity of the enemy and it is bad news for the Shand band. They are in over their heads. Shand and what is left of his forces demand a fight to the death which is just what they get.

There are some strange scenes which seem to be a symbolic sort of gangster passion play. There are the forces crushing the one who has done them no harm. There is denial and a Judas device.

The acting pushes this film beyond the ordinary, into the rich and artistic extremes. Hoskins is nothing short of superlative, admirable and evil, vulnerable and venomous. Helen Mirren plays Shand's woman Victoria with subtle sexual verve and intelligence. The main supporting cast is each given a scene to play up and there are no flat tires on this death wagon.

The movie ends with two powerful scenes. One is set at a demolition derby. This is a perfect choice for the metaphor of the world as the players know it. Endless crashing conflict, and a battered winner pulls in a prize for being the champion of mayhem.

The last scene is where Hoskins steals the show. He is allowed to tell his story with a soliloquy of facial gestures as rich and genuine as any in film.

The Foreign Film Society sponsors this film to be shown Thursday, and Friday, Feb. 20 and 21, in room 321, Applied Arts.

For Those About to Rock

Who rocks Menomonie?

David Chase

How many of you Stout stumblers know Norton? Norton is the guy whose party you stumbled to one night only to find him serving Red White and Blue beer. He's also the guy that has a stereo that looks similar to the phonographs you used in elementary school. But worst yet he's the guy that has a complete collection of Captain & Tennile albums and a few hard to find bootlegs of KC and The Sunshine Band.

It's not a pretty situation, and I'm a concerned citizen. No man, friend or foe, should have to go through the sheer hell of drinking bad beer and listening to Muskrat Love at the same time.

It's inhumane and there ought to be a law to stop it. Many of you may feel it is not your problem because it hasn't happened to you yet. But it is your concern also, after all, you may be Norton's next victim.

So whose fault is it? It isn't Norton's fault, he can't help it if he's a geek. It isn't your fault the guy having the party is a geek. So whose fault is it? I suggest we forget about whose fault it is and try to come up with a solution.

This is why I have taken it upon myself to do something that is long overdo. I intend to find out which houses rock Menomonie. It's a rough job, but someone has to do it. Let's face it, a party is not complete without rock & roll.

For the next two to three weeks I will attend as many house parties as possible. I will spend a couple hours or so at each house to get an idea of what type of music they play. After covering as many parties as possible, I will tally my results and come up with five houses that I feel best represent the rockin' houses of Menomonie.

Some of you may be wondering what type of guidelines I will be using. Well in order to be fair, I will attend each party in a similar state of mind - intoxicated. Why? In case you haven't noticed, the more you drink, the better the music sounds. It wouldn't be fair to attend one party drunk, and another one sober.

Here is what I will be listening for...

: Rock & Roll : Musical Variety (within certain limitations)
: peoples reactions to music (dancing, singing)
: stereo set up
: volume and sound clarity

Now some of you may not give a damn bit about whether or not I care for the music you play. Some of you may not care if you are on my Top Five Party House list. But whether or not you care is not my concern, my concern is only for those who attend them. If I can save just one student from attending a "Norton" party, it will have been worthwhile. So dust those needles and clean those heads, let's see who rocks Menomonie.

Volleyball court dominated by Carleton

Wendy Johnson
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout men's volleyball team was defeated by Carleton, who won the conference last year, 7-15, 8-15, 15-13, 12-15.

Carleton started the first game by making seven straight points. Stout was hitting flat and was unable to rally Carleton from behind.

The second game went back and forth. At one point of the game it was tied up eight to eight. Carleton capitalized on Stout's passing errors and ran off seven straight points to win the game.

The third game was a different story for Stout. Freshman Dave Conant started serving and he made the first seven points of the match, while Senior Mike Bajczyk controlled the nets. Carleton tried to make a come back when they came as close as 14-13, but Stout pulled it off by winning the match 15-13.

In the fourth game Stout started out strong, but as the match went on Stout slowly faded as Carleton took charge. The game was won by Carleton 15-12. Mike Rollins, a freshman starter commented, "It took us awhile to get started but the team overall did well."

Stout lost four starters from last year, and one was an all-conference player. The only players back from last year are sophomore, Mike Dressin and John Wise who is a senior captain and was all-conference last year. Wise's personal goal, he commented, "To be all conference again this year."

On the roster this year, Mike Bajczyk, the other senior captain, has played some competitive volleyball in the past. Mike Rollins also has played competitive volleyball, however, he was out last year with a broken foot. The rest of the roster are players who haven't had much or any competitive play. Wise said, "This years team suffers from inexperience in top level competition."

This year is also going through another change, for the first time they are having a coach. Wendy Morrow, a member of Stout's volleyball, team is their coach. Wise really likes this idea because, "It's easier for me because I'm on the floor and its hard for me to see what's going on and what the problems are. Also then I can concentrate on playing the game."

The team is doing about the same as last year. Their record last year was 0-12 and this year's record in the middle of the season is 0-5. Conant feels, "The record doesn't show the good qualities of the team."

"We need improvement on passing, because without passing we can not have good offense," Wise said. Being a new team they need to practice to work together, and to learn when to pass the ball at the right time, according to Wise. Also Wise feels that these things all take practice, which is a problem because they only get the court on Sunday afternoons and if they have a game they don't get to practice at all.

Last Saturday, Stout competed in Eau Claire where they lost four games to Eau Claire and St. Thomas.

Friday the men will be on the road to go against St. Thomas and then they will be back on home court this Sunday. They will be facing North Hennepin, who is a new comer into the sport, but is a tough team in the conference.

At 2:30 they play the University of Minnesota, who is a highly competitive team according to Rollins. Wise said, "All the teams in the conference are very even in talent."

Out of Bounds

Rock 'em sock 'em sleds

Rochelle Buhr

There are a bunch of guys that live in a house in front of a snowmobile graveyard.

Their house is appropriately named The Wild Kingdom. The beasts they tame are their snowmobiles.

A few dwellers of The Wild Kingdom, Karl Kastner, Scott Shaver, Mark Betz, and Jim Ziemer, sat down with me one evening and reminisced about their beloved beasts, their sleds.

Between them, they have ten snowmobiles. While I was there, only one was working, and when I had a spin on it in the backyard, it ran out of gas. It ran, for a short time, and that was all that mattered.

The guys have made a hobby of buying and fixing up snowmobiles, then they run the hell out of them, sometimes blowing up entire engines. (They have blown up four.)

"I ran off a cliff once," Jim Ziemer commented, "I had a headache after that, probably from the Hamm's (beer)."

I was shown a picture of that fiasco, and gasped at the snowmobile with the whole front end torn off. "There are parts of it still on the fence," Ziemer said.

There have been other accidents too. Like the time that Scott Shaver ran head-on into a kid on a snowmobile, requiring him to have five stitches in his arm. Or the other time, when Mark Betz dislocated a shoulder. Every one of them has run into barbed wire.

"No one has died yet," Shaver added.

Injuries do not stop these guys, and neither do sick snowmobiles. When one stops running, or is damaged, they just work on one of the other dead snowmobiles in the cemetery and bring it back to life.

"We rebuild carburetors on the kitchen table, and there are parts always laying around," Ziemer said. "We have enough parts in the basement to build a whole snowmobile."

After seeing their used piston collection, I was not surprised to hear that all of the guys were IT majors.

"We are all mechanically inclined," Ziemer said, "rebuilding these snowmobiles really keeps our mechanical minds tuned."

Dormant but not dead. This is the scene behind The Wild Kingdom, a sometimes peaceful sanctuary for snowmobiles.

Obviously, Ziemer's mother does not feel the same way about snowmobiles that her son does. "My mom doesn't know I have a snowmobile, and I have three of them. When I'm out on the trails and my mom calls, my roommates tell her I'm at the library," Ziemer snickered.

The guys belong to the Diamond Area Snowdrifters, a local snowmobile organization. They explained to me that most of the club trips involve taking a bunch of people from bar to bar. For these club outings, they have a special beer trailer with skis on it so the trips between bars will not seem so long.

Snowmobiles and the up-keep of them cost more than throwing a wild party. The guys have figured that they have forked out about $1000 this year just for parts. They valued their snowmobiles at between $400-$3000 apiece.

They like to buy snowmobile junkets, fix them up,and test drive them on their makeshift snowmobile test course located in their backyard. As Mark Betz stated, "We fix them, ride them on the weekends, and then spend all week fixing them again."

Wasn't it a bit much to have ten snowmobiles laying around? "No," Betz exclaimed, "we have to have that many so when we wreck one we have two backups."

This past Saturday, the Wild Kingdom house of snowmobile riders was slated to participate in the Snowmobile races held on Lake Menomin. They didn't enter, claiming that the $15 entry fee was falsely advertised. There were just too many other added expenses they had said, and also they were turned off by all the professionals taking all the fun out of snowmobile riding.

Who needs high tech $30,000 sleds when you can pick one up for 400 dollars, trash it, fix it, and not care, is their motto.

Do these guys have fun? Hell yeah. Anyone that had enough guts to tell me their analogy of snowmobiles to women, has to be fun.

"Snowmobiles are a lot like a girl. You work on them for six hours and then you get to ride them for three minutes." -Scott Shaver

Bodine races to Daytona 500 win

Geoff Bodine, from Chemung, N.Y., beat runner-up Terry Labonte by 11.26 seconds to win the Daytona 500 Sunday. It was Bodine's fourth victory in six years of racing on the National Association for Stock Car Auto Racing's Winston Cup circuit, and he took the 192,715 purse for winning it.

John McEnroe, top pro tennis circuit player, recently petitioned the Men's International Professional Tennis Council to release him from commitments for at least 60 days. Tony Trabert, a former Davis Cup captain, commented on McEnroe's vacation, "He's in love with a girl (Tatum O'Neal). They're going to have a baby. He already has all the money he needs. There's a danger he'll lose his single-mindedness for tennis."

Bird jinxed

Larry Bird, forward for the Boston Celtics, is in a free-throw shooting slump, and he says it's because he shook hands with Georgia Tech basketball player Mark Price. "I should have just patted him on the back, because I've shot a lot of bricks from the line since," Bird said.

Quote of the week

"If you can't figure him out, don't ask me. He has been a mystery since day one," Roberta McMahon, mother of Chicago Bear's quarterback Jim McMahon, said when asked by a columnist what makes her son tick.

Spirits remain high for gymnasts despite recent loss

The UW-Stout women's gymnastics team, who was once again plagued with injuries and illnesses, competed in the Sweetheart Invitational last Saturday and placed fifth without a full team.

Northern Michigan University captured first with a score of 139.95. Minot State College took second and the University of North Dakota took third. UW-Superior and UW-Stout finished fourth and fifth respectively.

Stout had five people compete in the meet. These people were Tammy Dennis, Joyce Alger, Carolyn Bjerke, Kim Nelson, and Nancy Schlener.

"It's important to keep the girls in competition so they don't start feeling like the season is over," Head Coach John Zuerlein commented. "Almost everyone hit their hit scores at the meet."

Carolyn Bjerke had a good meet receiving a 26.95 in all-around. Coach Zuerlein said that Bjerke did a real good job, scoring higher in the all-around than she usually does. "Carolyn had a beautiful vault and did extremely well on the floor exercise," Zuerlein said. On vault Bjerke scored an 8.25 while on the floor exercise she received a score of 7.4.

Kim Nelson also had a good meet scoring well on the uneven bars. Coach Zuerlein is real happy with her score on the bars and said that she has been doing real well on her floor exercise. Nelson said that it was the best meet she has had so far.

Nancy Schlener competed in everything but the floor exercise. On the vault Schlener earned an 8.0. She also did well on the balance beam with a score of 7.05. She has not been able to compete on the floor because of an ache in her back.

Also competing in Saturday's meet was Tammy Dennis. On the vault Dennis received an 8.05. She also competed on the uneven bars and the balance beam. Coach Zuerlein said that it was not one of Tammy's better meets. "Tammy just didn't hit her hit scores," Zuerlein commented.

Another factor for the teams loss was the absence of Pam Fujioka. Coach Zuerlein said that she was released from the team because she was not meeting her goals or the team goals. "It just wasn't working out," Zuerlein commented.

Cosmas Whitten will hopefully be working bars by Saturday but probably will not be on the floor exercise due to her knee injury. Joyce Alger is also off the floor exercise because of shin splints. In Saturday's meet she was able to compete on the balance beam.

This Saturday the Lady Blue Devils have their Conference meet at UW-Superior. Coach Zuerlein said that they could have almost everyone back unless others get sick or the people who are sick don't recover soon enough. "It's hard to make predictions on how they're going to feel," Zuerlein said.

"Patti Roenitz is looking good. She seems to be very strong in practice," Zuerlein commented. Coach said that Roenitz should be competing in the all-around on Saturday and that should help with the scores.

Zuerlein is also hoping that Lisa Hille will be back for the meet on Saturday. Hille was sick while she was in Superior last Saturday and was not able to compete in the Invitational.

Zuerlein said that it is important that they keep their spirits up and hope that everyone gets over the flu soon.

Snowmobile sets world speed record

Louie Filkins
Sports Reporter

Marv Jorgenson of Minneapolis, Minnesota broke the old snowmobile world record of 158 when his sled screamed to 159.03 mph on Lake Menomin last Saturday.

The second annual "Beat the Pros" speed race was sponsored by the UW-Stout Vets Club and Bill's Distributing Inc. and was sanctioned by the I.S.R. (International Snowmobile Racers).

The first speed run was held on upper Lake Tainter last year on Feb. 10. Race organizer, Brad Dishno said, "We had over 110 paid runs last year."

Dishno was the backbone of organization for the race, he started working on the event last May. He commented on the enormous amount of time and effort that went into the race. "We had to create a 6 inch layer of new ice on the lake, this meant pumping close to 1 million gallons of water up on to the old ice," Dishno said.

The hard work paid off, many racers commented on the excellent condition of the track. "This is by far the best ice we've raced on; the track conditions were much better than the Winter Carnival in St. Paul," world record holder Marv Jorgenson said.

The track itself was over one half of a mile long. Racers attempted to reach their maximum speed in a 1000 foot long "speed trap." The I.S.R. provided the timing equipment used. There were four major categories which divided up into 23 subdivisions: Modified Stock, Stock Racing, Open Modified, and Unlimited.

The following is a list of winners and speeds in each division:

Modified Stock
- 1- Bill Buboltz, 71 mph
- 2- Deam Gerdes, 77 mph
- 3- Jeff Simon, 86 mph
- 4- Kerry Shilts, 103 mph
- 5- Ted Haines, 107 mph

Stock Racing 1- Scott Riley, 60 mph
- 2-Scott Riley, 66 mph
- 3- Jim Larson, 67 mph
- 4- Roger Rivard, 71 mph
- 5- Todd Britz, 81 mph
- 6- Rod Spindler, 80 mph
- 7- Jerry Britz, 79 mph
- 8- J. Scott Simons, 82 mph
- 9- Steve Wann, 88 mph
- 10- Brad Hammonn, 90 mph

Open Modified 250- Scott Kinneman, 60 mph
- 300- Scott Kinneman, 71 mph
- 340- Tommy Zeller, 99 mph
- 440- Rick Bates, 110 mph
- 540- Rick Bates, 112 mph
- 660- Randy Breimer, 103 mph
- 800-Tommy Zeller, 118 mph

Marv Jorgenson, 159.03 mph

Jorgenson broke the speed record with a custom built sled that cost him about $60,000. The snowmobile is equipped with a Mariner (Mercury) V-6 motor which is capable of over 500 hp. He took home a $600 first prize and a $200 check donated by the Greater Menomonie Area Chamber of Commerce to anyone who broke the world record.

Duane Bauer, Executive Director of the Chamber of Commerce said, "We estimate that over 3,000 spectators came to the race on Saturday, I think the race, as well as the entire Winter Carnival, was a big success." Bauer also stressed an effort for more coordination with UW-Stout's Winter Carnival.

The Budweiser Sno-King was without a doubt the center of attention. However, many spectators were disappointed with the Sno-King's performance. Stout student Jeff Kay said, "I was a little disappointed watching Bud's first run." One reason the Sno-King may have had problems is because on its first run it started off crooked and couldn't correct its position. The Sno-King had a much better second run reaching 113 mph.

For all you motor-heads, the Budweiser machine has a 481 Chevy "Big Block" V-8 and is capable of 1400 hp, 1700 hp when the nitrous-oxide is introduced. Nitrous-oxide is much more powerful than gas, and it is used when the driver wants that extra boost of speed.

This was the first time this engine was used in the Sno-King and the crew was pleased. However, driver Dwight Regelman said, "It's hard for me to swallow 113," referring to his speed. He felt there may have been a problem in timing.

Sig-Tau ran the beer tent, they sold about 80 cases of Bud to thirsty spectators. The UW-Stout Ski Club ran the food stands. Micheal Oliver, Vets Club Public Relations Director said, "We (the Vets Club) would like to express big thanks to everyone who helped out or played a part in this event."

Oliver also commented on compliments given to the Vets Club by the racers. "The Bud team was so impressed with the quality of the track, they may use it(the track) for practice runs in the near future," Oliver said. According to Duane Bauer, racers from out of town were very pleased with the hospitality of the people of Menomonie.

Overall, the event was viewed as a big success. All of the proceeds made by the Vets Club will be donated to the Heart Fund and local food banks. After a short break, the club will begin work on next year's race. They plan for expansion in all areas and shoot for a two-day event in 1987.

A participant in the second annual "Beat the Pros" rode way behind his snowmobile during his run. Duane Bauer, Executive Director of the Chamber of Commerce said that a crowd estimated at over 3,000 came to the race this past Saturday. All of the proceeds from the race made by the Vets Club will be donated to the Heart Fund and local food banks. (Stoutonia photo by Dan Banach)

Hoopsters can't 'hang on', lose close one

The UW-Stout men's basketball team was suprisingly stunned by UW-La Crosse Tuesday Feb. 11 52-50.

The Blue Devils had a slow start. Three minutes into the game Ron Hunter had a technical foul for not checking in before going onto the court. Glen Fischer started the Blue Devils rolling when he sank two points, Stout then scored the next four baskets which put the Blue Devils ahead for the first time in the game. The first half ended in Stout's favor with a score of 25-18.

The second half of the game started well for the Blue Devils. They kept the lead and were even 10 points ahead at one time. La Crosse slowly crept up to the Blue Devils and with eight minutes left in the game La Crosse took the lead for the second time. Brian Ellingson commented, "We were flat, we weren't into the game."

Chuck Dugger, who made a three point play with three minutes and 15 seconds left in the game, put the Blue Devils ahead once again. They couldn't hold the lead. Seconds later La Crosse came right back and took the lead and were able to hang on to it for a victory.

Dugger said, "The team played in spurts, they played good offense and good defense at times then they played bad offense and defense at times."

The lead shooter for Stout was Rick Stephan with 11 points and John Patterson put in 10 points. Stephan took charge of the boards by rebounding eleven. La Crosse's Paul Kuske was the closest player to Stephan with six rebounds. Kuske sank 16 points and Lee Stahl added 10 points to La Crosse's score.

Stevens leads the team for the most points with 206 and Patterson has added 189 points. Stephan rebounded 170 rebounds up to this point in the season and Stevens rebounded 137.

UW-Stout men's basketball Head Coach Dwain Mintz felt he hadn't prepared the team tough enough for the game. Stephan, a six foot 8 inch senior center , was named the player of the week for the Blue Devils. He also is 12th place on Stout's all-time rebounding list and needs 28 more rebounds to reach the 500 milestone marker.

UW-River Falls is Stout's final season home game which will be played Sat. night at 7:30. Stout won 70-60 against River Falls earlier in the season which gave them their sixth win in a row. Mintz commented, "This is a key game we should win."

Ellingson said, "We are more up for the rest of the games, we have had the best practice this week all year." Dugger also commented, "The team has decided to work hard and they are preparing to win."

Looking at other teams in the area, UW-Whitewater looks like they will be the number one team for the seasonal games, but in the playoffs they will be one less team for Stout to worry about because they are in another conference. The two real threats will be UW-Stevens Point, who will most likely have the home court advantage and UW-Eau Claire. Dugger said, "Eau Claire lost some games last weekend and their down, we would like to beat them."

VET CLUB'S 2ND ANNUAL SPEED RUN

Recreation talent displayed at weekend regional tourney

Louie Filkins
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout men's bowling team won another all expense paid trip to Illinois by capturing first place at the Regional Recreation Games Tournament in Chicago, Feb. 7-8.

The Memorial Student Center belongs to the association of College Unions - International (ACU-I). Stout is located in region 8. There are 15 regions throughout North America.

The Recreation Center at Stout held preliminary competitions to select the 20 students which they would sponsor at the tournament. In all, 24 universities competed in Chicago.

The men's bowling team did exceptionally well by winning the team bowling event. They will now move on to sectionals in Rozelle, Illinois on March 21-22. The team was lead by Mark Shady, who also placed 3rd in singles. "The lanes were a little spotty, fortunately I was able to control my hook and end up with some good games," Shady said.

Shady rolled a team-high 237 game as well as having two other 200-plus games. Shady attended nationals last year and is an alternate this year for the singles competition.

Glen Senger was another member of the five man team. Senger also commented on the poor lane conditions, noting that he was surprised about the amount of fine teams, and the fact they did not score as well as he thought they would. "I'm looking forward to sectional competition in Rozelle, we can concentrate more as a team there because no one will be bowling singles events," he said.

Jeff Barth, Bil McFarlane, Keith Andes and Rich Laudreman were the other members of the Stout team. Barth and Shady lead the team with 193 averages.

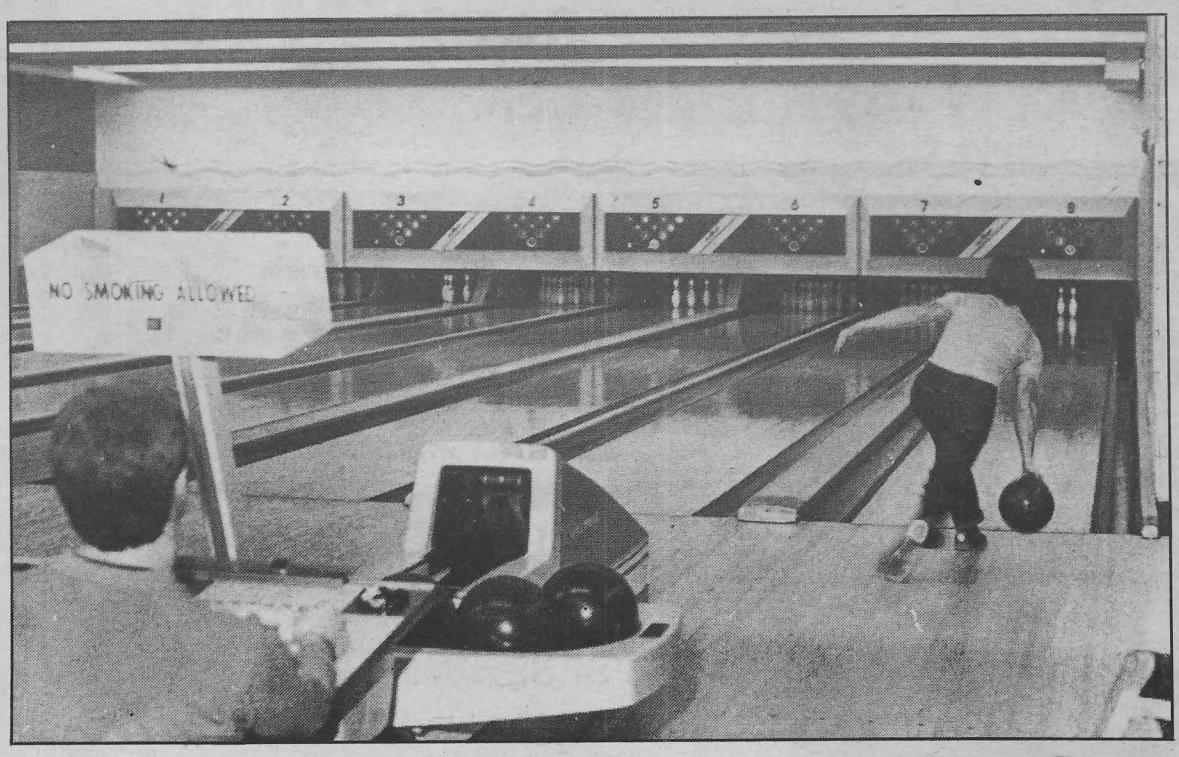
The women's team also did well in Chicago by placing 8th. One very bright spot was Cindy Cherek who captured 3rd place out of a field of 70 in the singles event. Cherek is also an alternate for the national championships.

Crushing bowling pins was only part of Stout's success at the tournament. Bill Hermes and Ted VerHaagh placed 2nd in doubles foosball. VerHaagh said, "We faced a very tough Madison team and they eventually ended up winning."

John Langsdorf was Stout's representative in the hacky-sack division. Scoring is simply based on how many consecutive "hits" the sack is kept up in the air. John took 3rd place with 25 hits; however, in the competition here at Stout, he scored 79 consecutive hits. John said the following about the tournament, "It was really neat being able to hack with students from other schools."

Mark "Zim" Zimmer was Stout's dart-man. Zim placed 5th in 301 dart competition. Although overall he was pleased with the tournament, Zim said, "I'm a pretty tough guy, but leaving for Chicago at 4 a.m. was not only a drag, but it may have affected my game. I think it would have been a better trip if we would have left the night before."

Two other outstanding Stout competitors were Bobby Khan, who placed 3rd in men's table tennis, and Jim Peterson, who took 5th place out of a field of 35 in men's billiards. If there are any questions about entering next year's tournament, contact Anne Buttke, Recreation Center Supervisor, X-1328.



The UW-Stout bowling team hauled home a first place finish after competing in the Regional Recreation Games Tournament that was held in Chicago Feb. 7-8. This first place finish allows them to move on to the sectional tournament to be held in Rozelle, Il. Mar. 21-22. (Stoutonia photo by Dan Banach)

Six Stout tracksters qualify for nationals

Kim Steger
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout men's track team placed in fifteen out of the eighteen events last Saturday at the Titan Open hosted by UW-Oshkosh.

Dashing to victories for the Blue Devils were Paul Bons in the 1000-yard run with the time of 2:15.4 and Joe Prestigaicomo in the triple jump with a leap of 13.33.

Second place finishes went to Eric Bretl in the 880 and 1000-yard run, which he lost by three seconds. Del Johnson placed second in the 60-yard dash, missing first place by only one second with a time of 6.5. Scott Romenesko tied with two other tracksters to place second in the pole vault with a jump of 14-0.

The only third place finish for the Blue Devils went to Bob Hackley in the one mile run.

Johnson took third place in the 300-yard dash with a time of 33.2 and Prestigaicomo placed fourth in the long jump with a jump of 21'1"

Fifth place finishes went to Mike Today in the 880-yard run with a time of 2:01.2 and Steve Hoeschele in the 600-yard run with a time of 1:16.5.

The times are coming down and I feel that we're doing pretty good overall. On the most part, we're running better.

—John Miller
Head Coach

Lower place finishes went to Todd Fox in the 3-mile run, Chuck Klann in the high jump., Larry Sorenson in the 440-yard dash, Romenesko in the 60-yard high hurdles, Chris Berg in shot put, Brian Kohls in the 220-yard intermediate hurdles and the one mile relay team.

Setting a new Titan Open and Kolf Sports Center record in the three mile run was Arnie Schrader of UW-Stevens Point. His time was 13:57.1, breaking the old marks of 14:07.9 and 14:07.4. Schrader was also voted most valuable performer.

Next week the Blue Devil men will send four tracksters to the NAIA Indoor Nationals in Kansas City. The two individual qualifiers are Bons in the one mile run and Bretl in the 1000-yard run. The 2-mile relay team of Bons, Bretl, Hoeschele and Today will also compete.

On Feb. 22, the men's team will travel to UW-La Crosse to compete.

Saturday the UW-Stout women's track team competed in the 9th Annual UW-La Crosse Roonies Invitational. Stout placed sixth out of eight teams, with La Crosse taking first with a total of 284 points, a new meet record.

Highlighting the meet, were the first place finish of Sue Meyer and the second place finish of Sheila Geere in the one mile run. UW-Stout women's track coach John Miller commented that this was the first time the women's team has placed two people consecutively in the one mile event. Unfortunately, Geere lapped the field which went unnoticed by the judges, costing her at least several seconds.

Taking fourth place for the Blue Devil women was Sue Schaefgen in the shot put with a put of 11.75.

Sixth place finishes include the 880-yard relay team which dropped their time by four seconds with a time of 2:01.06. Also placing second were the one mile relay team, Ann Meyer in the 2-mile run and Barb Peterson in the pentathlon. Coach Miller felt she could have placed fifth, but she lost points in her last two events.

Miller recognized Schuller in the 300-yard dash, commenting that she had a good time of 41.7 and missed placing by one second. Other participants in the 300-yard dash include Terri Holzhueter and Michelle Ennis.

Competing in the 50-meter hurdles were Barb Peterson and Lynn Luedke.

Holzhueter and Tammy Schaller competed in the 60-yard dash.

Miller said, "The times are coming down and I feel that we're doing pretty good overall. On the most part, we're running better. I'm pleased with the overall performance." Miller also pointed out that Stout only finished five points behind Whitewater, which is a strong team.

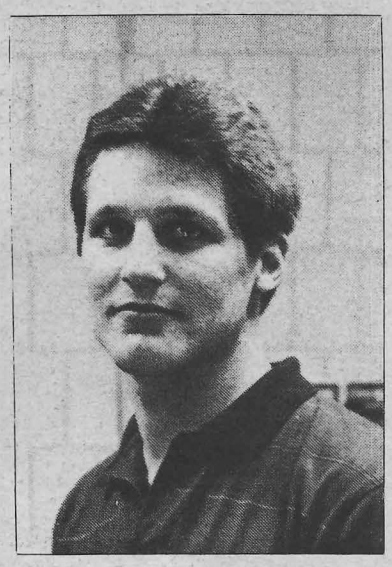
The women tracksters who have qualified for nationals next week are Geere and Sue Meyers in the 2-mile run.

The women's next team meet will be the Oshkosh Invite on Feb. 22.

Student returns to baseball team following recent personal triumph

Paul Wehking
Sports Reporter

It was the diagnosis of Hodgkin's disease last March that forced UW-Stout baseball player Jeff Kloes to quit school and immediately undergo surgery and chemotherapy treatments. Kloes has returned to Stout this semester to resume his education and athletics.



Jeff Kloes

Kloes, who is from Appleton, WI., is considered by professional baseball scouts as being one of the best catchers in the state, was unable to play baseball last season. While having a routine physical for baseball, doctors discovered a lump on Kloes' neck. Upon further investigation it was determined that Kloes had Hodgkin's disease which is a cancer of the lymph nodes.

With this diagnosis, Kloes left school and was admitted to St. Elizabeth hospital in Appleton, where he underwent surgery to remove several cancerous lumps and found out exactly how far the disease had progressed. After the surgery, Kloes started on chemotherapy treatments, which made him very sick for several days afterward.

He's a good ballplayer and he is beating this thing.

—Chris Fasnacht
teammate

When asked how this diagnosis affected him, Kloes said, "I was very depressed at first but then my attitude began to change." To this date, Kloes is still receiving chemotherapy treatments. For two more months, he must go twice a month to the University of Minnesota hospital to receive the treatments. Then, the disease will hopefully be in remission and Kloes will be called "safe at home."

Kloes, who was a captain on the Blue Devil squad, was missed by the team. Kloes was an All-Conference selection in 1984. After playing only two seasons, Kloes was achieving such records as most career RBI's and his .331 batting average put him tenth on the list for career batting averages.

Head Baseball Coach Terry Petrie said, "Baseball was my least concern when it came to him (Kloes). I was more concerned with his health. You have to do just what Jeff did, take it on the chin and go fight it."

"We missed his experience and leadership last year. He's a good ballplayer and he is beating this thing," teammate pitcher Chris Fasnacht said. Fasnacht commented on the fact that Kloes is a good catcher with an ability to control pitchers.

In a recent season preview, Petrie said, "Jeff is probably the best catcher in the state. He is a pro prospect with a good arm, good speed and hits with power. Recently discovered he has Hodgkin's disease. His status is questionable. If he plays he'll bat clean-up for us."

Kloes does not question his status. He feels that he can step back into the Stout lineup and pick up where he left off one year ago. "I played baseball all summer while having the treatments so it should be no problem now. It doesn't seem to affect my playing," said Kloes.

The Blue Devil baseballers have been practicing since the beginning of the second semester. Kloes has had no problem with th workouts with the exception of the days immediately following his treatments.

Over the quarter break the Stout squad will be taking their annual southern trip with games scheduled with teams in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama. The team will play 22 games on their southern trek, most of which will be double-headers. Petrie was concerned with Kloes' ability to catch in both games and Kloes responded that he felt he could.

Kloes is not expected to start for the Stout squad down south as Coach Petrie tries to look at some of the new talent on the team. Stout's 31 player roster includes one senior, five juniors, 14 sophomores, and 11 freshman.

Affected groups ponder co-op funding

Charles Keller
News Reporter

After protests, some confusion, and much heated debate the Stout Student Association (SSA) passed the guidelines for Cooperative Programming on February 18, 1986.

The rules for the program state that any funded organization may co-program with one or more SSA recognized organizations. This other organization does not necessarily have to be funded by SSA.

A Co-op board consisting of the Finance Committee and two other members with previous programming experience will review applications making sure they meet certain guidelines. Any event which will most inform, entertain and/or in some way benefit the student body at large is eligible. This committe will serve for one year on a trial basis and will be reviewed during the November allocaton hearings. At this time comments for modification of the program will be considered.

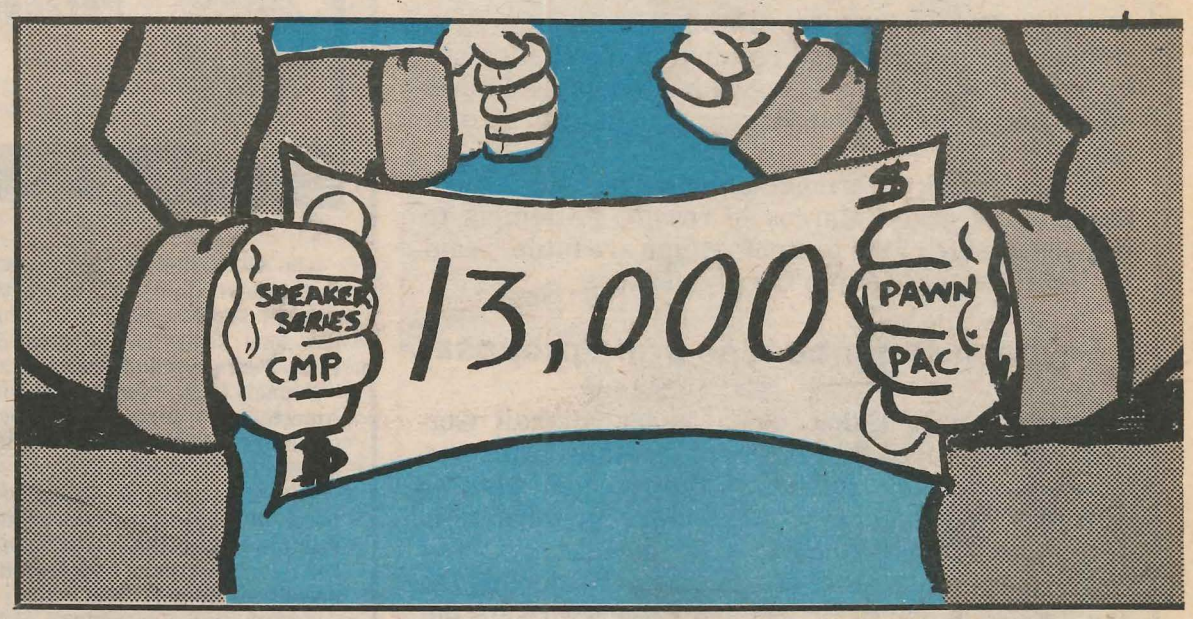
The goal of Cooperative Programming is to stretch the spending power of student segregated fees, and to reduce the duplication of programming on campus. It is also hoped that funded organizations on campus will work together to provide better quality programs and events.

One of the main arguments against the program is the $13,000 that it takes away from other organizations budgets. The organizations that are affected most are the Univesity Programing Board (UPB) commissions including the Speaker Series which showed a $4,100 loss from the 1985-86 allocation to the 1986-87 budget, and Advertising Promotion which budget which was cut $2,855 for the same period.

Though these organizations have lost some of their operating budgets, it doesn't neccesarily mean that they oppose Cooperative Programming. "It will definitely strengthen UPB" said UPB Chairperson Doug Muahar.

"It will give us a greater chance to work with the Finance Committee and for us to understand them better, and for them to understand us better," Muahar said. He expressed confidence li the long run benefits to come from Cooperative Programming when he said, "Hopefully, somewhere down the line the process will benefit the Budget Committee and the Board (UPB) by building a lot more trust and cooperation between us."

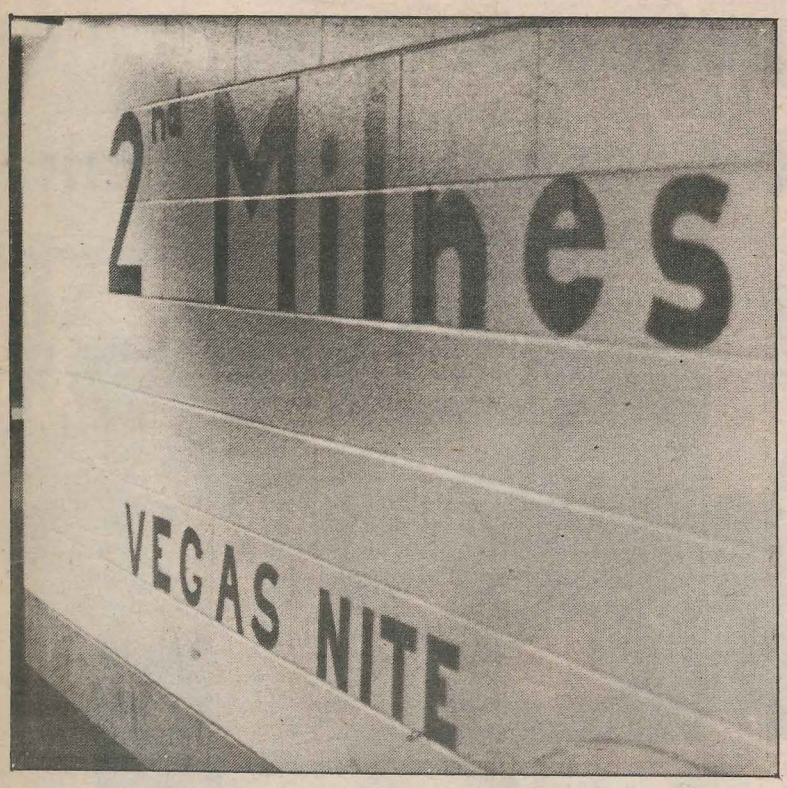
"The biggest concern that we have about Cooperative Programming is the time element involved" explained Christa Sanicola, Contemporary Music Productions (CMP) chairperson. "The time limit offered for deadline date may affect our ability to book acts because of the way the acts are routed. A band may plan a tour through our area after deadline and we would be unable to get the needed money to book them. If we book a band a semester ahead of time, there is the possibility that they may break up."



Other cons of the program CMP sees include the paper work involved, loss of flexibility in purchasing, and being unorganized when there are too many groups and people to work with.

The Program offers some advantages for CMP such as being able to book bigger shows with better known national acts such as the The Firm, Violent Femmes, and Paul Younge. A Co-op concert may result in a greater requirement for human resources for security and other production needs, which may help establish positive rapport be ween the involved organizations.

The issue of autonomy has als come up in association with th Cooperative Programming. Trac Lea Landis, Women's Affair Representative for SSA, vigorous ly opposed the program becaus she feels it alters the structure c checks and balances by giving ac ditional power to the Executiv Board of the SSA. She said, "If th system isn't broken you don't nee to fix it."



Second Milnes came up a loser when their charity fundraiser, Vegas Night was found in violation of state gambling and lottery laws. The 11-year tradition had been scheduled in The Great Hall Wednesday, Feb. 26.

HKMC's Vegas Night canceled; violates gambling and lottery laws

Tim Hopkins

The 11-year tradition of Vegas Night at Second Milnes came to an abrupt halt late last week when the Dunn County District Attorney informed the group that the non-profit fundraiser violated Wisconsin gambling and lottery laws.

Dunn County District Attorney Mike Furnstahl said that Vegas Night scheduled for Wednesday night, Feb. 26 in the Great Hall was first brought to his attention by Student Center Director Bob Johnson when he asked Furnstahl about the legalities involved.

Johnson said he asked the questions because several people had been asking him questions after seeing the Vegas Night promotional literature posted in the Student Center.

According to HKMC President Mike Beranek, this was to be the first year that Vegas night would be put on outside HKMC. "It has been kind of a low key thing in the past," he said. "This year we had a big sponsor, Miller Beer, and we decided to go campus-wide and have it in the Great Hall."

Beranek stressed that Vegas Night was "to make money for a charity." He said that the past two years all the money left over after paying their production costs went to Kinship which is a division of the United Way.

After 11 years of having Vegas Night in the basement level of HKMC, this sudden halt to the event was especially difficult for the residents of Second Milnes who invested both their time and money in the project.

Dunn County District Attorney Furnstahl expressed surprise at the fact that Vegas Night has occurred the past 11 years. When asked if the hall could legaliz Vegas Night by making the $2.5 entrance fee a voluntary donation Furnstahl said, "Unfortunately, i wouldn't make any difference. Th Attorney General's opinio specifically says that."

District Attorney Furnstahl said "The opinion that the Attorne General was asked to address en compasses both those situation where a person is asked to pay a entry fee or make a contribution a the door. The Attorney Genera concluded that in either instance i would be in violation of the gambl ing statute."

After mentioning gambling Furnstahl brought up what h perceived as a shift in attitud among state legislators towar gambling. "There has been som movement towards legalizing ac

The long road to freedom

Compiled by Paul D. Nelson

The Glienicker Bridge, located in the divided city of Berlin, is a 420-foot architectural span which has long served as a point for East/West personnel exchanges.

Francis Gary Powers, a downed American U2 pilot, passed Soviet superspy Rudolf Abel while crossing it on Feb. 10, 1962.

The bridge was again the focal point of cooperation when four Eastern bloc spies were exchanged for 25 Western intelligence operatives in June 1985.

And the most recent use of the Glienicker was when the West secured the Feb. 18 release of famed Soviet dissident Anatoli Shcharansky. He was one of nine involved in the exchange of which some were convicted spies.

After crossing the mid-point of the bridge, leaving the confines of his KGB escorts and entering the open arms of Western officials, Shcharansky was transported to Frankfurt where he was placed aboard an Israeli executive jet for his ride home to Israel.

When he arrived at Israel's Ben Gurion Airport, located in the city of Tel Aviv, Shcharansky saw his wife for the first time since 1974.

Shcharansky's wife Avital emigrated from the Soviet Union to Israel the day after their 1974 wedding. She left on the assumption that he would be allowed to follow in a few short months. But his 1978 conviction, based on Soviet charges that he had been engaged in "espionage activities" designed to benefit the United States, prompted Presidents Carter and Reagan to call for and eventually negotiate his release.

While in the custody of the Soviet authorities, Shcharansky spent a total of 3,255 days in the Soviet penal system, commonly referred to as "the Gulag."

Shcharansky related some of the conditions he experienced, while he was incarcerated, in the Feb. 24 issue of Time magazine. Selected excerpts follow:

"To be so small is a great advantage in camp. The prison clothes you get are always much too large. When you are put in a freezing-cold punishment cell, as I was for a total of 430 days, the extra material helps a little to keep you warm.

"The Soviet authorities hate any kind of solidarity among independent-minded people. In prison this becomes even clearer than it is in ordinary life. Prisoners are forbidden to write collective letters of protest. You are punished if you write to the authorities on behalf of another prisoner -- say a sick man who is not getting any medical attention."

Soviet General Secretary Gorbachev indicated that Shcharansky's release in no way means that Andrei Sakharov will also be allowed to emigrate in the future because Sakharov, the father of the Soviet hydrogen bomb, "is still in the possession of state secrets and cannot leave the U.S.S.R."

Shaw says students face difficult times

Kelly Cohorst
News Reporter

Kenneth Shaw, the new president of the UW-System, addressed the current budget limitations facing the UW-Sytem in his first time visit here since taking over the system presidency.

Shaw told his audience of students and faculty members in the Great Hall that, "Wisconsin is very education oriented state and more emphasis has been put on education. Wisconsin is presently third in the nation for funding of higher education through state taxes because more people are willing to pay the expense of higher education".

Shaw said it would be difficult to make up the difference between the increase in tuition and the decrease in state funding. "There will be no tax increase or a change in the economy to make up for the loss," he said. Shaw suggested two alternatives to the problem. "We can reduce the number of students that are to enroll in the system," or he said, "We could shut colleges so that fewer students could enroll but they would have good funding."

He also stated that the University system has to set priorities that can better the coordination of the financial situation. Shaw said "Since federal dollars don't look good, many students will have to have a part-time job or take a year off to accumulate enough money for their education". There is no easy solution to the funding problem facing students today according to Shaw.

Vice President of Legislative Affairs, Chuck Keller asked President Shaw why transfer students have so many problems getting their credits to transfer from from one university to the next in the University System. Shaw's responded, "There are too many specialized schools in the system and it's difficult to get program directors to allow courses to transfer when credits are not in the same type of field."

> Many students will have to have a part-time job or take a year off to accumulate enough money for their education.
> —Kenneth Shaw
> UW-System President

On the subject of faculty pay he said, "The catch-up plan is a major commitment to the improvement of salaries to the faculty. It consists of paying the faculty an increased salary for the time that they haven't had a raise."

Shaw said, "It takes time to study the program and to analyze the outcome to see if it would benefit the faculty. It's unlikely to change this program overnight and if it is done overnight and if it is done overnight and not looked into it could do more harm then good".

While he was on campus he toured the university and met with the faculty and student leaders.

The fourth president of the post-merger UW-System, Shaw took office on Jan. 23, 1986, and is the eighteenth state university leader, when counting those who headed the former University of Wisconsin.

Prior to accepting the position, Shaw served six years as Chancellor of the Southern Illinois University System. He has held positions such as Assistant to the President of Illinois State University, vice-president and dean of Towson State University, Baltimore, and the president of Southern Illinois University at Edwardsville.

When Southern Illinois University's Board of Trustees established system governance, Shaw was named the system's intial chancellor.

A native of Granite City, Ill., Shaw earned his B.S. degree from Illinois State University, a Master of Education degree in guidance and counseling from the University of Illinois and his doctorate from Purdue University. Shaw and his wife, Mary Ann, have three children: Kenneth W. Susan and Sara. Mrs. Shaw is a native of Northfield, Ill.

United Council reviews tuition hike; Swanson addresses delegates

Tim Hopkins
News Editor

The United Council of UW-Student Governments met at the weekend of Feb. 21 and 22 at UW-Stout to review student's immediate concerns such as tuition increases.

With the upcoming tuition increase in excess of $200 for each student in the UW-System, United Council members listened closely to Stout's Chancellor Robert Swanson as he outlined the goals of the Board of Regents Study Group. Swanson is the vice chair on the Study Group which is expected to complete its study in six months.

Chancellor Swanson explained that the rapid growth in enrollment the past six years throughout the system was never expected. In 1979, the Board of Regents appointed a study group titled, "Planning for a decade of decline."

He said, the decline was expected as the baby boomers aged beyond college age. There was a decline in 18 year olds but more of them are going to college while there has been a significant increase in non-traditional student enrollment and an increased emphasis on minority and international student enrollment.

The group is asking all the chancellors in the system, "What would be a good size for your institution in terms of the money available to you, the quality of the program that you have and many other factors as well," Swanson said.

> It's always easier to have input before something happens then to come in complaining about something that is in the report.
> —Robert Swanson

The group will compare the information they receive from the chancellors to "what the predicted enrollment is in the free market. If there's a gap in there, obviously we have a some sort of problem; either of getting more money, reducing enrollment or something of that sort."

Swanson encouraged students give their input on the subject to either their United Council members or to their chancellor now before the group makes their report. "I think it's always easier to have input before something happens than to come in complaining about something that is in the report," he said.

When asked about the affects on UW-System enrollment resulting from the tuition increases, Swanson replied, "I think it will have an affect, but I will guess it will be (in) a couple of years because students who are juniors or seniors, while they don't like the tuition increase, probably most of them would not just drop school because of the tuition increase."

Swanson mentioned that there are no plans for closing any of the campuses. He acknowledged that Stout's enrollment would drop by approximately 200 but he indicated there was

SSA ignores minority student representation

When our peers are chosen to hold elected office in the Stout Student Association (SSA) they are not compelled to represent only those of us who supported and voted for them, but are morally obligated to work in the interest of all students.

In 1984 the student senate, in order to meet the affirmative action guidelines required of member schools in United Council, created the two voting positions of Minority Affairs Senator and Womens Affairs Senator.

And in the spring of each year when the United Council delegates from the ten UW-member schools choose officers for the next academic year, they must attend that particular session with fully staffed delegations, including Minority Affairs and Womens Affairs.

Yet because the SSA has not had someone to represent the minority constituency on this campus and voice their concerns, they had to appoint someone temporarily so Stout would be able to vote in the upcoming elections.

We believe that the senate found themselves in this predicament because they have never, since the positions were created in 1984, made an honest effort to bring the minority viewpoint into campus politics via the student senate.

Not only are minority students being denied the opportunity to have an impact on campus politics, but the student senate is no doubt denying itself the resource of different points of view which could have inevitably helped to solve the myriad of problems it has faced all year.

The SSA is not an association unless it represents all students, not just the loudest and most aggressive.

Crash and Burn

Pulling the all-nighter

Matt Kalina

You have sat witness to TV stations signing off the air with the "Star Spangled Banner," but you still haven't begun to study for the big exam. You know your past the point of no return. You're entering no-man's land. You have no choice. It's a last ditch survival trip. You're on the late shift, buddy.

It's going to be an all-nighter.

Actually pulling an all-nighter is an inexact expression. Instead of pulling, it's actually much more like pushing. You have to cram days of study into a single, late-hour block of time.

You can't brush off feeling lightheaded and slightly dead. Focusing becomes a chore as your handwriting begin to waver. It is difficult to read and you attempt to convince yourself that you're not going blind. You fade in and out as you momentarily nod off and on. Hey, you're getting wiped-out; it's one of several side effects. Call yourself dopey for now.

You hit the wall after 3 a.m.

All you want to do is check into slumber motel. If you could only catch a few winks you'll be alright. You comtemplate setting the alarm for a brief nap. But don't try it. If you sleep between now and the test, it won't do you any good. You'll only feel drowsier. You devise numerous exuses to close the books and dive into comfort and oblivion, hitting the saneness of your mattress, forgetting the exam. "Yea, I'll wake up early and study tommorrow." But you can't because once your light's out and your body falls into a world of dreams, you're in a coma for 19 hours.

Everything is in slow-mo but your heart is racing from swigging cups of cold, straight java.

Some guidelines do exist for all-nighters. Don't study in bed. Get as uncomfortable as possible to stay awake. Sit in a hard wooden chair. Wear street clothes. Forget the sweatshirt and robe, pal. You have to pay the price.

The best you can do for yourself is get some big-time eats. Food will keep you awake, even if you have to resort to peanut butter sandwiches without the bread.

If you made it to 3 a.m. then you're over the edge. You've paid your dues. You have red, puffy eyes, blotched skin and your eyelid twitches involuntarily. Consider yourself a freak of nature. You are numbed and mummified. You're a numb mummy. There's a buzzer imbedded deep inside your scalp. You're a numb, buzzing mummy.

Playing with pencils and paper clips becomes a fascinating diversion, but mind games set in quickly after 4 a.m. You begin humoring yourself with unending insults, profanity and jokes. You begin to probe the ridiculous as your mind wanders. "Yea, this is the pathway for success. Keep it up you half-witted pinhead, and they'll boot you out Stout quick-like. Why did you have to stay up and watch Letterman open his bag of Late Night Tricks?"

The room is cold, way too familiar, and its air is extremely stale. A feeling familiar to all-nighters is the haunting fog of emptiness and loneliness. You're an abandoned zombie on a desert isle. Peering out the window and seeing no lights on, you wonder if you are the only person awake. The middle of the night becomes an unfortunate time to ponder your very existence. "What am I doing in college? What am I proving by forcing myself to remember positive integers, variable costs and the effects French Revolution at 4:23 in the morning?"

All-nighters are cruel punishments for delay. Take your medicine you moronic cretin. It's your own fault. When are you going to learn that procrastination is a chum of all-nighters? They hang out together. A dull ache of the brain turns to periodic sparks of cranial pain. You try to think of a more punishing torture for the mind and body: Throw yourself in front of a high-speed train? No, that's too quick and painless.

As dawn approaches, panic escalates, driving you half-mad as you realize that night doesn't last forever. You are on your last legs, and its T minus three hours until exam.

Riding out an all-nighter may be a living nightmare, but surviving the after-math is even worse.

Your head feels disconnected with the rest of your corpse as you stumble around campus on your way to the exam like an extra from "Night of the Living Dead."

After the exam you ask yourself if it was worth the self-inflicted punishment. You vow on a stack of Do-Doze that you will you never do it again.

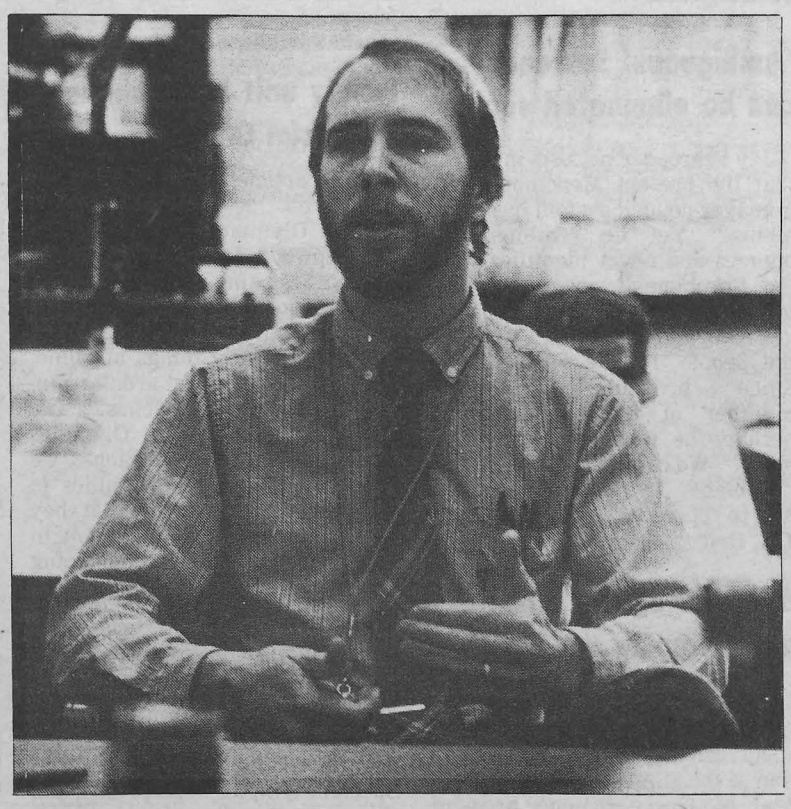
Subject: University theatre technical director brings varied background to Stout shows

Compiled by Tim Hopkins



Dr. James-Michael Miller

Dr. James-Michael Miller is Technical Director of University Theatre. He attended school at Concordia College in Moorehead, Minn., majoring in speech and theatre. He acquired his Master's at the University of Maine, and his Doctorate in Speech Communication, with a theatre specialization at the University of Southern Ill., at Carbondale, which he completed in 1985. He had a sub-specialization in technical theatre and scene design, along with studies in literature, criticism, dramaturgy and playwrighting.

STOUTONIA: DID YOU DO PROFESSIONAL THEATRE WORK BEFORE COMING TO STOUT?

MILLER: I taught for a year at Concordia College before I began my doctoral program....I was designer, director and technical director there. I did a production of "Jesus Christ Superstar" in the spring of 1982. And I've done some work in summers between school sessions. I acted with a Shakespearean company in Maine during my doctoral work. It was a professional company and we did a full summer of Shakespearean repetoirie.

STOUTONIA: HOW DID YOU END UP HERE WITH THE THEATRE PROGRAM AT STOUT?

MILLER: The usual job search. I wanted to work in this part of the country because I'm from Minnesota, I went to school in Moorehead and I lived in the Cities. So when I was finishing up my doctorate, I was looking for either technical director/designer or speech teacher positions. I wanted to stay up here in the North, and Stout was looking for a technical director/designer which was appealing to me.

STOUTONIA: EXACTLY WHAT IS A TECHNICAL DIRECTOR?

MILLER: It varies depending on how elaborate the department is. If you have a theatre department, in which you have very specialized instructors of theatre, covering different areas, you will probably have a staff of designers and then a technical director. What the technical director's job is, is to execute the technical production of the show. That means there are costume and scene designers, and he will take their drawings and models, and he will assign crews

Kalina takes cheap shots, attacks WVSS unfactually

In the interest of Matt Kalina, we believe he should report the facts rather than his opinionated version of the story. In comparing WVSS to seven other university stations, he seemed to forget one small fact. All of these stations mentioned have a communication major or minor, something Stout does not have. He should also remember that our budget for 1985-86 is $6,200. The budgets for the other seven stations range from $12,000 to $50,000 and have a minimum of five full-time employees. WVSS has one full-time employee and two part-time employees. We would also like to say that we play more rock than any other university station. In concerning the laser rock show from one to eight in the morning, if we didn't play CD's we would be back where we were a year ago, dead air.

Matt should realize that our DJ's aren't paid for doing their shows, where Matt Kalina is paid for writing unfactual attacks on the Stout community. We invite Matt to take over the shift from 1 to 8 a.m., five days a week, so we can have live DJ's, and so the rest of our staff can sleep.

In concerning the criticism of our public service announcement's, WVSS provides a service free of charge to any organization or member of the Stout and Menomonie community. The Stoutonia receives $22,000 from the SSA plus its revenue from advertising. If WVSS received that amount of money from SSA we could have that wire service that Matt thinks we so greatly need. The wire service alone costs $3,800 per year, which is over half our budget.

We understand that Matt would like us to take a giant step backwards by suggesting that we get rid of our compact disc players. Compact disc is currently the state of the art, would Matt like us to go back to the crank photograph? Sure CD's cost more, but the sound and longevity make them cost effective. Currently we have 28 CD's, but we have 500 dollars allocated to buy new compact discs and set up a CD library. Matt, next time you would like to take cheap shots at WVSS, come to the station between 3 and 7 p.m. weekdays and find out the real facts and write those. If you have enough intelligence behind your sunglasses you will write us back.

Stout's campus radio station has been receiving a lot of criticism lately. Most of the outbursts stream right out of The Stoutonia. Admittedly, WVSS is not what it used to be. I know, because I've worked there for seven years now. WVSS has fallen from spontaneous live radio to mediocrity.

But things could be much worse for WVSS. Let me start from the beginning. When I first started working at the radio station some seven years ago, the station was a great place to learn radio broadcasting. Except for the problems with the control board constantly cutting in and out, the station was an updated and well-furnished facility. Not only did we have a news wire service, we also had an audio linkup to the Pawn to broadcast shows live.

There was no record vault in those days, so that any song requested could be played on any show. Finally, we had quality programming with quality people doing that programming (Frank

Yes, because it has been proven to save lives. So I think it's good.

Amy Kolb,

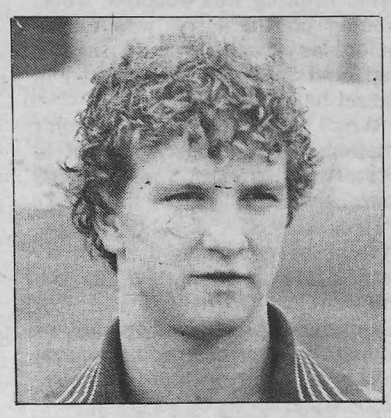
No, because probably no one would follow it. If they tell us to wear seatbelts, they will tell us to do whatever they want us to do. As a driver I would personally wear my seatbelt.



Chris Iverson,

Hotel Restaurant Management

I wouldn't mind. It wouldn't bother me at all because I usually wear it myself. It all has to deal with the voice of the public itself, because it's their choice if they want to wear it or not. It is more or less their right. Overall, I think it would help a lot with limiting the number of fatalities.

Nancy Bestul,

Yes, I think it would be safer all around. I was in an accident, and seatbelts saved my life for the most part.

Yes, because back home in Singapore they implemented it two years ago, and it has cut down on the accident rate. I think it is a really good idea that they should.

Neid with the "Today Show," Ace Mathews and Bell Tower Players with comedy shows airing daily and Dick Price with the Good Morning Menomonie show).

But the radio station ran into problems. One or more of the loyal employees stole thousands of dollars worth of records out of the station. I spent three weeks of my Christmas vacation constructing the record vault that stands today. On the last day, I asked myself why someone could be so selfish to deny everyone else the right to open record shelves.

The problems continued. Soon students found unique pleasure in vandalizing the equipment at the station. Working as an engineer, I found myself constantly repairing smashed turntables, broken tape machines and microphones ripped from their wires. I also found stickers pasted over controls, magic marker trails over new tables and chairs, and initials carved into equipment and desktops. Worst of all was what I couldn't find. Workers took their liberties at taking things. Microphones mysteriously disappeared along with expensive turntable cartridges. Most infuriating of all was the gradual disappearance of my own tools that I stored at the station for my constant repairs.

Soon the solution became clear. Since we didn't know who the culprit was, we had to suspect everyone. The station had become a fortress. The production rooms were locked, every loose item in the station was nailed down to make occasional checks on the DJ's. With no other choice, the actions of a few took the freedoms of everyone away.

Even then the problems continued. The expensive newswire was constantly abused and broken. That had to go. Students became reckless with equipment when not under careful supervision. Night shifts had to go. Finally, with all the freedoms taken away, the talented students producing the quality entertainment and public affairs programs lost all ambition in continuing to work their craft. With none of the freedom left, the enjoyment of the job was taken away.

Please tell me, what other choice does WVSS have but to use the CD player and taped automation when the irresponsibilty, selfishness and childish actions of a few have forced WVSS to all but shut theirs doors forever? I appeal especially to Matt Kalina. Sir, if you have all the right answers, I wish that you would please come down the basement of the Communications Center and lend us a hand instead of handing us a pile of "Crash and Burn."

James Falkofske

Real Kalina is a 'dummy,' 'pseudo critic' with shades

You sly devils. I've discovered the real Matt Kalina. It's a computer program on a disk at the Stoutonia offices.

I found the file MATKLNA. cmd (I had to crack the protection password which was...PSURCRTC?--Pseudo Critic) and called up the column producing program. The menu presented me with some choices. I picked: REACIDIAT. clm, which means, reactionary/diatriabe-column, (late 60's version).

I didn't have time to investigate the HUMSAT.clm or SATRELV01.clm because I didn't want to get caught finding out how you really ran The Stoutonia.

I typed in WVSSCD.neg, WVSS Compact Disk.negative (60's version). The computer wouldn't accept a positive extension.

Then I fed it some phone numbers and asked it to call off and on campus to get listed information.

At the REJECT menu, I told it to reject any information that was not reactionary, diatribe, negative (60's version).

Finally, I pressed print and out came a column, CRASH AND BURN.

By the way, I've seen the dummy in the theatre costume shop with the dark glasses on. Very clever of you to make Psdueo Critic look like a human being.

Unfortunately, its artificial intelligence module is pretty defective.

Have you tried entering PIG and FRKAWD, freakish awards? Might result in another inexpensive way to fill up space. Then you can spend the freed up money on real reporters.

Kalina's trash shames, shocks, mocks WVSS news department

First of all, let me start out by saying how ashamed I am that The Stoutonia has a managing editor who is using his position as a "writer" to print his own slanderish opinions. As news director for WVSS, I was shocked to see that one of my former news broadcasters used his poor writing skills to try and make a mockery of the WVSS news department. I will mention one thing in the defense of my department, the reason why we do not have news such as the Phillippine election dilemma is because WVSS does not have the funding for a national news service. The cost for such a service is $3,800. And that is because the SSA is too stubborn to allot the extra funding to WVSS so we can broadcast such news events. If the WVSS news staff were to broadcast such news events, we could lose our license.

So next time Mr. Crash, get all of the facts before you print your TRASH! In a final word let me say BOMBS AWAY TO MATT K!

Schroeder's naivete reveals lack of knowledge

Please inform Jay Schroeder a mayoral form of government does not provide a system of checks and balances. It would provide one individual (a mayor) with veto power over any council decision and one individual (a mayor) who, in order to retain his position, must respond to those who elect him by providing positive consideration to their political pressures. This does not provide impartial, objective government.

Additionally, an individual untrained in management on even a simple level simply couldn't manage a community the size of Menomonie with it's plus $7 million dollar budget, multitude of services, departments and employees.

Mr. Schroeder's naivete reveals his lack of knowledge regarding government, his lack of intelligence to ask questions and, perhaps, to learn.

'Ambiguous' Schroeder can be eliminated soon

Jay Schroeder persists in saying that the present Menomonie city manager-council system has "problems." Yet he remains ambiguous and never identifies what the "problems" are other than tossing off some old cliches such as "checks and balances," and "of the people, by the people," etc. Since Schroeder is a current member of the City Council, perhaps he is part of the "problem?" We can thus eliminate this "problem" by electing someone else to represent us come April 1.

Alternatives to cooperative programming needed

Do Stout students know what "cooperative programming" is all about? Do they know that this decision of the SSA hands over a great deal of power to one area of government, i.e. the Finance Committee? The Cooperative Programming Board will be made up solely of the Finance Committee and two other people who will be recommended by the vice president of financial affairs.

This board will have control of $13,000 of the SSA budget. (They originally wanted $35,000, but were turned down by the SSA.) This board will say yes or no to requests for events by campus groups such as CMP (Contemporary Music Productions) and Speakers Series. Both of these groups opposed the cooperative programming proposal as it stands and wished to find other alternatives which, by the way, do exist. UPB (University Programming Board) came up with several suggestions which would foster cooperation between campus groups without disrupting the system of checks and balances so vital to our democratic system of government.

However, no other suggestions seem to have been considered seriously by the SSA. I attended the meeting where cooperative programming was adopted. Questioning on the issue was closed before any real discussion occurred, and the votes were taken in secret ballot.

Why a secret ballot? Don't students at Stout have a right to know what, and if, their elected members are thinking?

Does the SSA feel that their system of government is as irresponsible and impotent as the present administration in Washington? The adoption of cooperative programming seems to be a Gramm-Rudman coup, Stout-style.

The SSA meeting reminded me of children seated at the dinner table being told by their parents to "Eat! This is good for you." And they ate just like good boys and girls. But perhaps SSA members forgot that they are supposed to be adults who think and question. Perhaps they don't realize that the world is not full of wise and nice mommies and daddies who do their best and don't you worry your sweet little head about it.

This issue needs rethinking. Or, in some cases, just plain thinking. As a Stout student, I did not elect SSA members to let the Finance Committee dictate to me what I can see and hear. If this is democracy in action, then the Politburo must be laughing up its sleeve.

Family unit is backbone in Special Olympics

In an article last week, (Thursday, Feb. 20) concerning the Special Olympics Alpine Ski Day at Deepwood, I was seriously misquoted. Speaking about parent and family involvement, I stated to you that "Families and siblings have been doing these things at home, but they feel they just aren't trained enough to be coaches." The families of the Special Olympics are some of the best coaches we have. By inviting the families to the Ski Day, it was hoped that they would become more confident in the excellent training and coaching they already provide their son or daughter.

Family involvement is important in Special Olympics. The entire concept of Special Olympics was started by one family and the family unit remains the backbone of the program. Indianhead Special Olympics takes pride in the fine work that the parents of the special athletes do and all the skill they provide in our local training programs. The coaching begins at home and the parents are to be congratulated for their fine efforts and encouraged to continue the support of their children in Special Olympics.

I regret that this information was misrepresented in The Stoutonia.

Terri Gehrke,
Area Coordinator,
Indianhead Special Olympics

Editor's note: Last week's Special Olympics story which incorrectly quoted Terri Gehrke as saying, "But, they're just not trained enough to be coaches" should have read, "But they feel they just aren't trained enough to be coaches." We regret the error.

Play is far from dead

Great Job! We saw a great play at Harvey Hall this weekend, along with many fellow students and staff. Rosencratz and Guildenstern are Dead was entertaining and very thought-provoking.

To you exceptionally talented students, and obviously talented teacher-director, Jim Miller, thank you much for a stimulating and memorable evening.

Discriminating ways

Patty Strassman

"Boycott Biased Landlords" was the headline of The Stoutonia editorial Feb. 13.

Apparently the discrimination based on gender is "widely practiced by a significant number of student housing landlords in this community."

Am I the last to hear about this widely practiced discrimination, or worse, does this mean it has been going unreported and the landlords are on to an apathetic student body?

Here is an explanation of tenant's rights in Wisconsin, published by The Tenant's Resource Center, Inc. in Madison, Wis. 1985:

How discrimination works

Although laws at all levels of government prohibit many types of discrimination in the sale and rental of housing, it is a discouraging fact that these laws are violated frequently. Tenants may indeed encounter illegal treatment, so it is essential that they understand their rights and options under the fair housing laws.

While housing discrimination still exists in Wisconsin communities, it is increasly sophisticated and subtle in its methods. Rarely will landlords state an illegal reason for refusing an applicant. Instead, many landlords will simply give other leagal reasons for not renting to an individual. For example, income level, number of persons to live in a unit or children might be used to exclude tenants the landlord considers "undesirable."

Since these reasons appear legitimate, or at least legal, tenants may not realize they have been descriminated against. Applicants should be aware that the reasons given for their denial should apply to all of the present and prospective tenants in a building or complex. If you are provided with a reason for denial that, although legal, is not universally applied to all tenants, it might be that you were denied housing for another reason that is prohibited by law.

Landlords may also discriminate by telling individuals that the unit has been rented when it is actually still available. Some landlords discriminate according to race by using the telephone answering machine which ask callers to leave their name address and phone number. Addresses and phone numbers which are located in predominantly minority neighborhoods may never be called back. Waiting lists also serve the function of allowing landlords to put off people they do not wish to rent to.

All of these examples demonstrate the difficulty in determining when and if you have been illegally descriminated against. To identify discrimination, it is essential to understand:

1. Your rights under fair housing laws.

2. What you can do if you feel that you have been discriminated against.

3. Where to file a complaint.

If you feel that you have been discriminated against and are interested in pursuing justice, contact me for information. My desk for landlord tenant representative is located in the SSA office.

Diversionary Tactics

Goons on parade

Tim Hopkins

The greatest theatrical road show in America packed its bags and headed for Grenada to honor once again the 19 American servicemen who gave their lives so we might eliminate the Red Menace from this tiny Carribbean island.

News headlines boldly proclaimed, "Reagan gets hero's welcome in Grenada." The Grenada invasion was nothing more than a three-day media event that gave overkill a favorable interpretation.

President Reagan launched verbal missiles toward communists and communism when he proclaimed the meaning of democracy in Grenada: "When people are free, their rights to speak and to pray are protected by law, AND THE GOONS ARE NOT RUNNING THE JAILS, THEY ARE IN THE JAILS."

Despite Menomonie's recent controversy challenging the city manager form of government, I would't count on a Grenada-like invasion, not until the votes are counted.

America must need uplifting events such as the Grenada invasion. It occurred more than two years ago, yet we choose to celebrate a victory where it took 7,000 American servicemen three days to defeat 679 Cubans. A two-day weekend probably broke up the event.

America revelled as well in its vehemently negative response to the Palestinian terrorist attacks that killed tourists in the Rome and Vienna airports.

I hear that an immediate theatrical success in Beirut was the play Who is Ronald Reagan and why is he saying such awful things about me?, starring Colonel Kaddafi with Ronald Reagan in the supporting role.

President Reagan reacts thoughtlessly to terrorist acts, lashing out at the most convenient target. He zeroed in immediately on Kaddafi although there was no proof that Libya was involved in these attacks.

All we know for sure is that Kaddafi luxuriated in the media attention President Reagan lavished on him with his breast beaten declarations of unsubstantiated accusations against the Libyan leader. If President Reagan succeeded in anything, it was unifying the American people in their hatred of Kaddafi.

Then the space shuttle Challenger explodes shortly after launching and I hear normally sane individuals expressing their suspicion that Kaddafi might have ordered the shuttle shot down with lasers.

We can all relax now with the knowledge that the space shuttle was launched despite advisories issued concerning the possibly hazardous conditions caused by the abnormally cold weather at launch time.

Although President Reagan is considered the media master, I'd say he was outdone by Colonel Kaddafi his last time out. Kaddafi is a former journalist who knows what makes good newsprint. It was hardly surprising to see the glint in his eye each time he was surrounded by a corps of reporters wanting to know his latest response to President Reagan's charges.

President Reagan lost his chance this week to put one of the all-time goons in jail. Ferdinand Marcos winged his way to the states to collect on the real estate investments he acquired under questionable circumstances at best while chairing his American supported dictatorship in the Philippines.

It's too bad we can't reward Marcos for his successful guidance of Ferdinand's Fresh Fertilizer Firm (FFFF). Marcos has been known to convert his enemies into Philipine fertilizer for years. Now, it's dubious the world could get lucky enough to see Ferdinand made into his own fertilizer.

Since Ferdinand will no longer be making his fertilizer, now's the time we should open our eyes to the daily atrocities in South Africa. The State Department claims that America has no role there since the South African problems are strictly internal matters.

So we practice "Constructive Engagement." Sounds like building a house with your fiance. A better title for our policy concerning South African affairs would be, "Nothing New."

What prevents America from enforcing economic sanctions against South Africa is the heavy price American companies would have to pay. Our investments in South Africa are clear. The question we should ask ourselves is, should we ignore human rights in order to assure our own prosperity?

MILLIONS OF PEOPLE HAVE BEEN CURED OF A DISEASE MOST PEOPLE SEEM TO THINK IS INCURABLE.

Today, one out of every two people who get cancer will survive.

With early detection and prompt treatment, the survival rate for Hodgkin's disease can be as high as 74%. Childhood leukemia: as high as 65%. Colon and rectal cancer: as high as 75%. Breast cancer: as high as 90%.

As far as we've come, we still have quite a way to go. And for that, we'd like your help.

Co-ops, internships and summer jobs provide benefits for students

Bridget Record
News Reporter

Time is running out. The semester is half over and the time is now to inquire about internships, co-ops, and summer jobs. UW-Stout's Career Planning and Placement Office, is located on the first floor of the Administration Building for the purpose of assisting students in finding internships, co-ops, and summer jobs suitable for them.

"Now is the time," stresses Robert Dahlke, Director of Career Planning and Placement. "The quality of a job now will have a direct affect on the job that the student gets after graduation."

Dorothy Dale, Director of Cooperative Education explains that it is important that students are aware of the differences between summer jobs, internships and co-ops.

A summer job doesn't have to be related to the student's major, Dale said, while an internship or a co-op job must be directly related to the student's major. "There are rigid controls on internships and co-ops and the student receives college credit for them."

Dale explains that the main difference between internships and co-ops is that co-ops can be obtained as early as sophomore year and may continue through college. An internship is a one time experience usually done before or after senior year.

> The quality of a job now will have a direct affect on the job that the student gets after graduation.
> —Bob Dahlke
> Director of Career Planning & Placement

Dale says that there are not co-op programs in all the majors. In the Home Economics program the majors that include a co-op program are: Hotel Restaurant Management, Food Service, Home Economics in Business, Fashion Merchandising, and Clothing, Textiles and Design. In the Industrial program, the Business Administration, Industrial Technology, and Applied Technology majors are affected by the co-op program. In the Liberal Studies program the majors including co-op programs are Applied Mathematics, along with Graphic, Interior, and Industrial Design.

"There are many sources of information on co-ops, internships, and summer jobs," says Dahlke. "Most of these openings are posted outside the Placement Office. Also a student can find out information from their program advisors and counselors," she said.

Dale emphasizes that the responsibility lies directly with the student. "Spring break is right around the corner and then is the time to look."

SSA regrets lack of minority involvement

Kelly Cohorst

News Reporter

President Joann Prange of the Stout Student Association (SSA) praised the new president of the UW-system, Kenneth Shaw, who spoke here on Monday. She was said she was impressed with his awareness, "Shaw is a very well informed president." Shaw has recently visited most of the schools in the system.

United Council director Dave Kester reported that everything went well last weekend at the UC meeting.

A major problem that came up was the lack of participation of the minority groups at Stout. The minority groups have had a hard time getting a representive for the SSA.

Kester believes that this is such a problem because the minorities feel intimidated by the SSA. "The minorites have always been underepresented and they don't feel they could play an active role in the organization." Kester said.

Administrative Assistant Vic Sundvall announced that the SSA will be accepting petitions for the 1986-87 school year elections. Petitions are available in the SSA office.

The elected positions are as follows:

President- The presidents job is to oversee the workings of the University Student Senate. Acts as a liason between the students, faculty/academic staff, administration, and the Menomonie Community. Paid Position.

Vice President- Academic Affairs- Represents student's interests on issues concering the academic side of student life. Paid Position.

"The minorities have always been underrepresented and they don't feel they could play an active role in the organization.

—Dave Kester
United Coucil Director"

Financial Affairs-Represents student's interests on issues concerning the acidemic side of student activities fees, a sum of more than 200,000. Paid Position.

Legislative Affairs-Responsible for keeping students informed on issues that concern them in the legislature on the local, state, and federal level. Paid position.

Off-Campus Senator-Representative to the University Student Senate-for those students residing in off campus locations. 11 positions availible. Voting member.

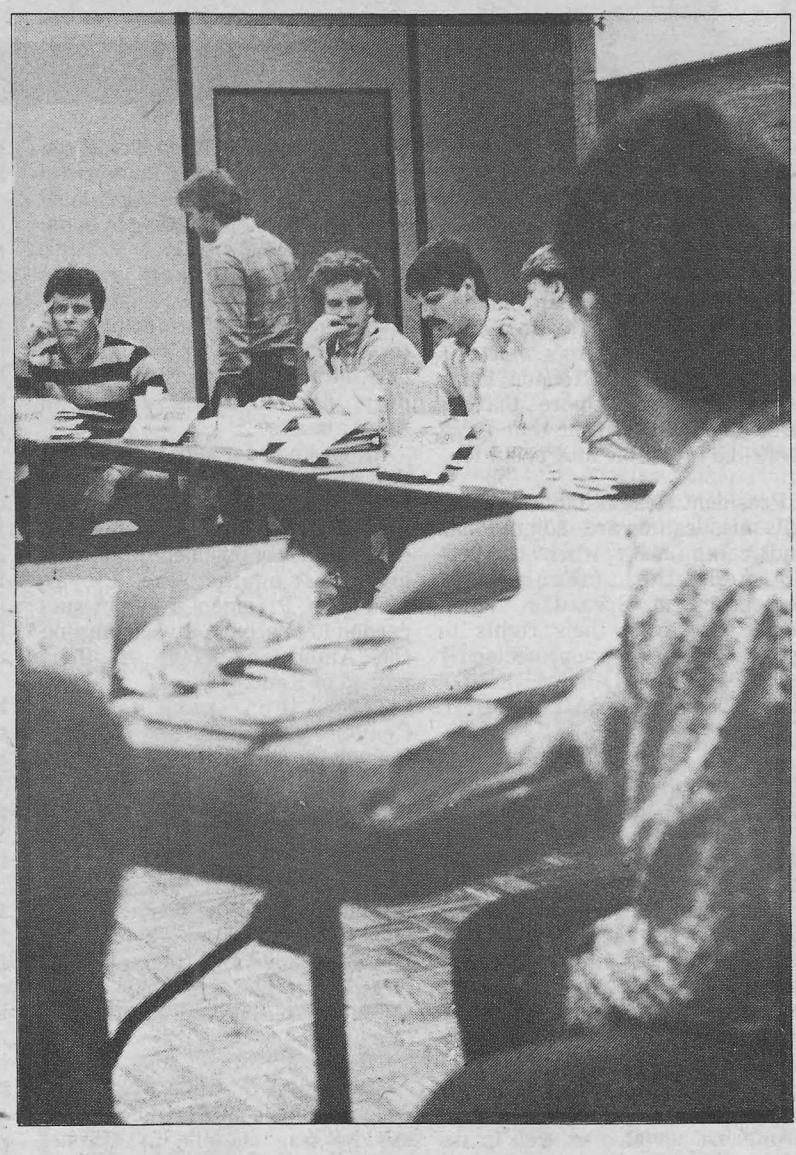
There are also a variety of appointed positions: The Administrative Assistant, Media Advertising Coordinator, United Council Director, Landlord/Tenant Representive, And the Executive Secretary/Constitution Committee.

The Medallion Awards are due Feb. 27th at 4 p.m. Between 20 and 30 awards will be presented. Graduating seniors are encouraged to apply.

Speaker Sue Noye gave a presentation on the Kinship program during open forum. Kinship is a program that is geared to help a child that has family problems.

Most Kinkids come from broken families and need a stable adult figure to look up to and to guide them. The program matches adult volunteers with boys and girls ranging in age from 5 to 17. The main goal of the program is to befriend children, who, for a variety of reasons, need a special relationship with adults who care.

The program has been in Menomonie for seven years. Sue Noye encourages students to apply for the volunteer program. It is good for the participant for a variety of reasons according to Noye. She said, it looks good on resumes and shows that the participant cares enough to reach out to others.



United Council Director Dave Kester brought up the topic concerning the lack of minority representation in the SSA as the Student Senate considered what to do about filling the vacancy for the minority affairs representative. (Stoutonia photo by Todd A. Nelson) and personnel to construct and build them. He'll hang the lights and focus the lights according to the lighting designer's designs, or build the costumes according to the costume designer's designs....The technical director then, is usually also responsible for getting all the production crew heads, the running crews for the show, the stage manager, the backstage people who work during the show, and also responsible for purchasing and budgeting, materials, upkeep of shops and sometimes as a consultant with designers.

In smaller operations, and this is a smaller operation...the technical director/designer is in charge of all the execution from the design through the production phses...virtually everything except the casting of the show and the direction of the show. And in the case of "Rosencrantz and Guildenstern," I was also doing those.

STOUTONIA: HOW WELL DO YOU THINK THE SHOW WENT?

MILLER: I was very surprised. When I first announced I was doing the show, there was some skepticism that we could present this challenging show. The play is a lot of poetry, there is a lot of ambiguity. It is a difficult play to get a handle on.... We really couldn't begin casting until January seventeenth, until we came back, so we had just four weeks to rehearse the thing. I was anxious about it.... It came off very well.... I thought the actors really rose to the occasion. They were stretching themselves.... Everyone of them was a better performer after they finished the show.

STOUTONIA: WOULD YOU LIKE TO SEE THESE PEOPLE RETURN TO THE NEXT AUDITION?

MILLER: It would be nice if they would continue the growth now and try something else. It would be a bit of a let-down if they grew as actors but never got on stage again.... "Oklahoma" is a challenge for people, if you're not a singer, it's a challenge to be able to sing your way through a show, dance and then turn around and carry off a scene. "Oklahoma" is another kind of challenge altogether. It's energy and speed. If you go off on a wrong line in a straight show, you can make up something. If you are in the middle of a dance routine in "Oklahoma," and you forget what you're supposed to do next, it can't stop and wait for you. You have to learn to keep up with the show, and that's a special thing for actors to learn.

STOUTONIA: ARE YOU LIMITED BY HAVING NO THEATRE PROGRAM OR MAJOR?

MILLER: We don't have a theatre major. We have a speech minor and some theatre courses, so there aren't any students here who are committed to doing four years of nothing but theatre. Just as there are no four-year students majoring in music or that sort of thing, so everything is avocation with people with passing interests or happen to have the time.... It's always your best guess, "Will there be enough people who want to do this show to fill all the parts?"

STOUTONIA: WOULDN'T YOU LIKE TO BE AT A SCHOOL THAT HAD A THEATRE MAJOR AND LARGER GROUP OF PEOPLE TO TAP FROM?

MILLER: Honestly, yes. There is a trade-off. When you have a very large program, sometimes you find yourself compartmentalized. If you do like to direct shows, but you were hired as the technical director in a large program, they already have seven or eight people who direct shows.... If you like to have a lot of freedom, if you like to design and direct, then the larger programs may could be a bit restricting....

STOUTONIA: WILL YOU BE LOOKING FOR SOMETHING IN THE FUTURE, AND WILL YOU BE HERE NINE YEARS FROM NOW?

MILLER: I personally don't think I'll be here a very long time. The track record for this position is amazing. There have been new technical directors here every other year for as long as people can remember.... Also, as I say, often this is a steppingstone kind of position in which you get a lot of designing, directing and teaching out of your system, before you decide that being compartmentalized in a university isn't all that bad. If I could paint my own picture, and put myself in it, educationally, my philosophy is liberal arts oriented.... I'm sold on it. Philosophically, Stout is not very closely aligned with my own beliefs and feelings. It's very much of a technical career orientation here and not much on arts for arts sake, or arts preparation, or the arts as something which is more than a thing to entertain the technical people before they leave school....

Ideally, I'd like to be at a small liberal arts school that has a very strong emphasis on philosophy courses, arts courses, those kinds of things that aren't necessarily tied to employing people at Sperry-Rand when they graduate. They might be concerned with development of things like human potential, stretching minds.... Since Stout doesn't even have a speech major, it's unlikely that somebody with that inclination would come here to begin with....

Deaf/blind conference features Maxon

Beth Reid
News Reporter

The featured speaker at Monday's conference on the deaf/blind, B.J. Maxon stressed the importance of not limiting the deaf/blind by failing to allow the deaf/blind the chance to perform. Maxon spoke at the morning conference on the deaf/blind Feb. 24, in the Crystal Ballroom of the Student Center.

The conference, attended by approximately 120 people, was sponsored by UW-Stout's School of Education and Human Services, the Department of Rehabilitation and the Vocational Rehabilitation Club. Maxon is a specialist at the Rehabilitation and Training Center on Blindness and Low Vision at Mississippi State University.

A group of students began the conference by performing the song "That's What Friends Are For" in sign language with the music accompanying them.

Maxon's presentation, entitled, "Deaf/Blind Persons and Implication for Their Successful Rehabilitation" offered a wide range of background on deaf/blind persons. Beginning with basic facts on the deaf/blind, Maxon presented the four basic types of deaf/blind and some basic characteristics of each group.

The material given included generalizations on the deaf/blind, but Maxon stressed that she didn't want people to take the information to heart because "no two deaf-blind people are exactly alike and each case needs to be handled separately."

Topics covered included: basic etiology of deaf-blindness, tips on communication with deaf-blind persons, careers and work for deaf-blind persons and integration of community resources.

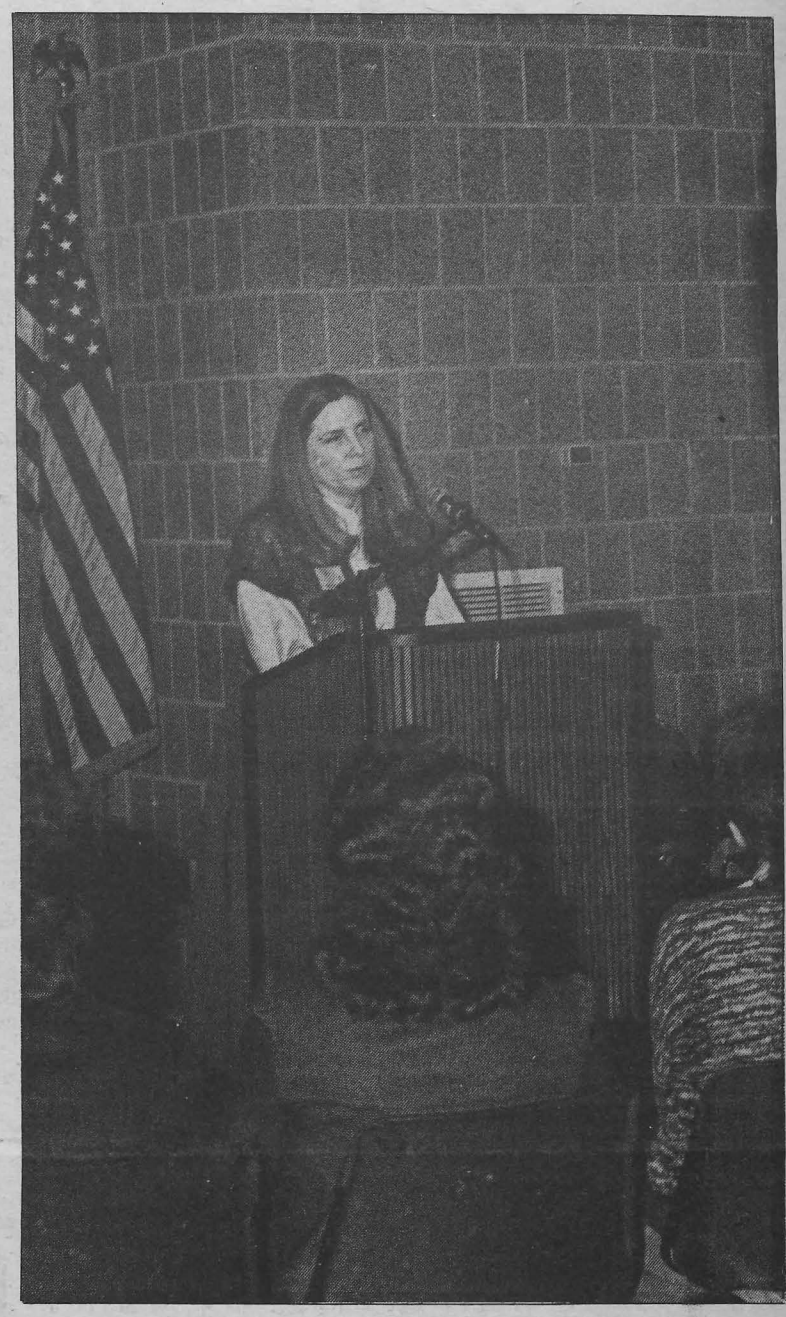
The message that Maxon is trying to get across through her presentation is "that deaf-blind people can," she said. There is a lot of things they can do if just given the opportunity. Most of them are people who are very anxious to meet other people."

She also encouraged the audience to consider career opportunities in working with deaf/blind people. "They (the deaf/blind) are a fun group to work with," Maxon said. "It is not a depressing atmosphere and can be a very exciting and challenging job."

Maxon spent 11 years getting her undergraduate degree. She got involved in a program working with elderly blind people. "I didn't have my degree yet," Maxon said, "I was hired for this program basically for my effervescence and outgoingness." Through her work on this program, she became more interested in the field and returned to graduate school and has been in the field for 15 years now.

Working now as a rehabilitation counselor, she primarily does research in rehabilitation and also travels across the country giving presentations. "Right now in terms of rehabilitation of deaf/blind, I am one of the few people doing research," Maxon said. She is currently working on three research projects and is involved in an intensive training program on how to use computer technology.

Some of the many areas of Maxon's expertise include rehabilitation counseling and teaching, academic accommodations,and program development and evaluation. Maxon is also an affiliate of the Helen Keller Institute.She has completed over 60 presentations in the field of rehabilitation and education of visually impaired persons, specialized sensory and technology and service to deaf/blind children and adults.



Speaker B.J. Maxon exploded the myths that stereotype the deaf/blind when she told listeners that there is alot that the deaf/blind can do if given the chance. (Stoutonia photo by Brad Kautzer)

Rococo Dorm Rivalry violates lottery statute

Patrick Miles
News Reporter

Rocky Rococo apologizes to all the students who participated in the locally promoted "Rococo Dorm Floor Rivalry." Members of Rocky Rococo said they did not realize the illegality of the contest when it was being developed.

The Rococo Dorm Rivalry violates Wisconsin's lottery law. There are three elements that make the contest illegal: offer of prizes, chance, and consideration. The contest would have been legal if any one of these elements had been left out.

The prize offered was a pizza party to be delivered to the winning floor, recognition in The Stoutonia, and a dorm trophy. The chance was that only one floor could win. The consideration was that in order to win, people knew they had to purchase products of Rocky Rococo.

The contest began on Jan. 20 and was scheduled to end on March 7. About three weeks into the contest, the question of legality was brought to the attention of the district manager of Rocky Rococo. The manager immediately asked for the contest to be cancelled.

A similar case occurred in Eau Claire. Domino's Pizza of Eau Claire was notified by the Consumer Protection Bureau that their advertisement of "Dorm Wars" violated the Wisconsin lottery law. The owner of the Domino's Pizza of Eau Claire, Lori Lannier, pointed out that Rocky Rococo of Menomonie was running a similar ad campaign.

"We honestly had no idea that it was illegal," campus representative for Rocky Rococo Joseph Melli affirmed. "We just hope the students understand it was an honest mistake."

No charges were brought against Rocky Rococo. After the business realized their mistake, they issued an ad in the Feb. 13 issue of The Stoutonia expressing their apologies to all the students who had participated in the hope that they would win the pizza party.

Since the ad did not refer to the legal problems leading to the cancellation of contest, students were confused about just what exactly happened. It is the hope of Rocky Rococo according to Melli that all is forgiven.

Rocky Rococo still plans to further its involvement on The UW-Stout campus. "If it wasn't for this community, Rocky's wouldn't be here," Melli said, "and we hope to sort of repay the favor through our involvement with clubs on campus."

ing and putting together a lottery. They just discussed that within the last two weeks I think. So there's movement towards becoming more lenient on these gambling laws."

Furnstahl viewed HKMC's initial plan to have Vegas night as someone given the task of enforcing the law. He said, "In the situation that we're talking about here, I really don't see any harm with it. I don't see any criminals at work per say, but my job is to enforce the law."

He added, "My job is not to question whether or not the law's a good law or a bad law and enforce only those laws which I think are good laws to be enforced." In direct reference to the state gambling and lottery law he said, "It wouldn't break my heart if the legislature would see to it that these kinds of nights were not illegal. As a matter of fact I would support that."

Furnstahl advised that any group planning a Las Vegas night of any kind contact his office prior to investing their time and money in the project so they might avoid the situation that befell Second Milnes.

He said that the Second Milnes case was not unique in that, "A number of times, groups have contacted us regarding having Las Vegas nights and we had to give them the same answer that based on the Attorney General's opinion and based on the statutes, it's not legal.

was opposed to the tuition increase. But, he said, "The cuts reached such magnitude that tuition just could not be left out."

Schenian said his immediate priority was to make students aware of the process involved in determining the tuition. "What I've learned is that students have to be better prepared in the way they interact in the system and with the Board of Regents and the system administration, also with the state legislature," he said.

Schenian lamented the lack of participation by students in their student government when he said, "They just don't realize that they have the opportunity to get directly involved in decisions that affect their lives on a day-to-day basis."

He stressed that students must become aware of their political power via their votes. Schenian said, "Unless students start voting and they start organizing themselves both at a local and a state level, students are always going to be the ones that get kicked."

The next UW-System wide meeting of United Council members will be at UW-Parkside in Kenosha next Friday and Saturday, March 8 and 9.

Dining Services dinner prepares seniors for future job interviews

Shelly Flaherty
Contributing Writer

A job, and how to land one is definitely on the mind of every graduating senior. On Monday, February 24, many graduating seniors living in the residence halls were able to partake in the first senior interview dinner.

This is the first year that the Residential Dining Services has held such an event, and it is definitely not the last. "It went great, the overall turnout was fantastic," Colette Kolker, Chairperson for the Residential Dining Service Committee, said. The purpose of the dinner is for the students to become comfortable with luncheon or dinner type interviews.

Every graduating senior living in a residence hall was sent an invitation to attend the dinner. Interested students responded and sent a resume to the Residential Dining Committee. The resume was then given to a program director, chancellor associate or administrator in the same field as the student. These people played the role of the interviewer. Two students were interviewed by one faculty member to get experience and to feel comfortable interviewing.

"It was a great experience, especially if you've never done anything like this before," Michele Fox, a graduating senior, said. "I feel I really benefited by coming," she added.

"We really received a lot of positive response and feedback," Kolker said. She said she would like to see this event occur every semester, possibly for all seniors living on or off campus. "It was a lot of work planning and organizing, but it was worth it," she stated.

"The Residential Dining Service Committee members need to be thanked for all the work and effort they've put in. Also, the Dining Services and Housing need to be thanked for paying for the student's meals, as well as the Residential Dining Services for paying for the faculty's meals," she added.

Topping off the evening was speaker Julie Haas, Personnel Director of the Amfac Hotel in Minneapolis. She gave tips on how to handle yourself in an interview that takes place over a meal.

Appearance is the number one concern she said. "The way you look is the first impression you give, and you want to be sure that it is a good one," Haas said. Suits are recommended for both males and females, as looking professional is very important.

Her main suggestion is to plan ahead, and to be prepared. Being on time is also of crucial importance. Having a good, firm handshake is needed also. "It doesn't have to be a bone-breaker, but have some initiative," she commented.

She suggested that you not forget to bring your resume, and to learn as much as possible about the company prior to your interview. Also, know exactly what position you are looking for.

When ordering off of the menu, remember to keep it simple. For lunch, she feels no cocktails or wine should be ordered; however, a glass of wine is acceptable at dinner. "If you have a cocktail or two, it may be easy to get free with the words," Haas said. In closing she said, "Tell the interviewer that you are interested, you can never tell them that enough."

Ann Pearce, Dining Service Committee advisor hopes to see the dinner/interview idea expanded upon. "It would be nice to have this available to all seniors," she commented. "Another possibility is for the freshmen to have something similar to this, so they can meet their program director and advisors," she added.

"It was definitely a success, so plan on more in the future," Kolker stated.

The Personnel Director of the Amfac Hotel in Minneapolis gave graduating seniors valuable tips on how to make a winning impression at a dinner interview. The Residential Dining Service Committee put together the informative dinner. (Stoutonia photo by Dan Banach)

Business profits from foreign policy

Eric Johnson
Contributing Writer

Jonathan Kwitny, an author, and a reporter for The New York Post and The Wall Street Journal, will voice his opinions on U.S. foreign policies and the dominant role business enterprises play in the forming of these policies next Tuesday night at UW-Stout.

The Speakers Commission Series presentation is scheduled 8 p.m. Tuesday, March 4 in the Great Hall.

Tracing the history of U.S. foreign policy being tied directly to American business interests, Kwitny goes back to 1958 where he claims the United States government effectively overthrew the legitimate government of the Belgian Congo. At that time, the Eisenhower administration, which did not concern itself with the legality of its actions, implanted a new government in this region we now call Zaire. Kwitny believes the new government was thoroughly corrupted by western business interests in a format that set a precedent for future U.S. foreign policy.

This seizing of power without legal authority has continued to this day, Kwitny claims. In his most recent book, Endless Enemies: The making of an unfriendly world, Mr. Kwitny deals with the questionable U.S. doctrines of intervention in the affairs of foreign governments, and denounces the world banking system as a coalition of international loansharks.

Citing his extensive world travels, he illustrates numerous examples of the manipulation of the press by the U.S. government in order to justify American military actions and foreign economic supports.

In short, according to Kwitny, financiers, under the veil of democracy, take control of third world economies by propping-up a chosen regime with loans which allow these regimes to purchase military power. Once established, these third world governments are forced to "squeeze" their nation's economies so they can make loan payments and keep their good credit rating in the eyes of the banking industry. The bankers then dictate how the borrower will run the economy, often pushing unneeded national development projects on the already poor nations.

The contracts for these projects are often awarded to associates of the bank supplying the loan. As Kwitny puts it: "By defending these countries from communism, it has become the odd role of the United States to deny (a captalistic system) to hundreds of millions of people the world wide."

Jonathan Kwitny will present his views on March 4th at 8 p.m. in the Great Hall of the Memorial Student Union.

Hotel corporation CEO shares wide array of lodging experience

Kelly Cohorst
News Reporter

President and Chief Operating Officer of the Marcus Hotel Corporation, Lee Berthelsen spoke Friday to the Lodging Administration Class on his career in the hotel industry which has covered a wide range and led him to many interesting areas.

Being a New York native, Berthelsen said he had a lot to work for in his educational learnings. After high school he was awarded a scholarship to Princeton University from which he graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree.

During his college, career he took a variety of jobs at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel in New York to pay his additional expenses.

Enjoying what he viewed as the glamorous life of the hotel business, he said he decided to pursue his interest further. After his graduation from Princeton, he immersed himself in many different aspects of the hotel business.

In his career in the hotel industry he has been associated not only with Hilton Hotels at the Waldorf Astoria, but with Loew's Hotels and Holiday Inns, Inc. , among others. His career has taken him all over Europe and in to Africa and the Middle East.

He and his wife moved to Calgary, Alberta, Canada, in 1975 from Europe, so he could become Vice-President of Villacentrea Limited, a diversified Canadian public company.

He was President and founder of the Alberta Long Term Care Association, and been involved in various nursing home associations in other Provinces across Canada.

Berthelsen is currently working in Milwaukee, Wis. , for the Marcus Hotel Corporation. He came to Milwaukee in 1984, from Canada to assume the post of president.

The Marcus Corporation started in 1935 as a movie house. The company then expanded into other move theaters. Ben Marcus bought his first Hotel, the Pfister Hotel in Milwaukee.

The Pfister Hotel was originally built in 1893 and was successful in it's time. The hotel suffered during the depression and in the late 30's Marcus built it up into a successful hotel once again.

Today, Marcus Corp. owns several establishments including Marc's Big Boy, the Budgetel, and the Kentucky Fried Chicken franchise.

Bertherlsen expressed his pleasure from working with the Marcus Corporation. He said "The Marcus Corporation derives from the theory that they believe in all people." He explained that their philosophy means Marcus Corp. has everyone's interest at heart, the employee as well as the guest.

"Working for such a corporation is very comfortable," Bertherlsen said. "It has a very solid financial backround and has established a recognized name in the hotel field."

Bertherlsen also stated, "Trends are continuing to move in a very positive way for the corporation and the active pursuit for growth in the industry is at a high point in todays market."

Berthelsen said this was good news for college students interested in building their own business. The market in the hotel business is active and open, he said.

He said that one of the disadvantages within in the Marcus Corporation is it is located in Milwaukee and the businesses have to compete against themselves. The original founders of the Marcus Hotel Company are currently managing the corporation and Bertherlsen said,"In the future, the experienced staff will have to be thinned out, because of retirement of the older employees in the company."

Berthelsen encouraged younger people to fill the positions in The Marcus Hotel Corporation in the years to come.

Support group helps victims of bulimia

Catherine A. Schneider
News Reporter

For some women, it begins as a way to keep their weight down. For others, it is a way to deny their feelings and hide their anger. For all of them, it is an obsession that controls their lives.

This obsession is bulimia. Bulimia is an eating disorder which affects primarily young women. It is estimated that five percent of college-age women suffer from this disease. Pickney Hall, a psychologist at the UW-Stout Counseling Center, said that while about 20 to 30 students suffering from bulimia come into the center, the actual number of victims could range from 120 to 180 students.

According to Nancy Rasmussen, a graduate student who is studying bulimia, a person suffering from bulimia eats a large amount of food in a short period of time—usually two hours or less. After the binge, the bulimic usually vomits or takes large quantities of laxatives to keep herself from gaining weight.

There are many theories that attempt to explain bulimia. In her study, Rasmussen is attempting to prove what she calls the "Shame Theory." This theory states that during the bonding period to the parents or some other significant person, there was some degree of separation. Because of this, the person believes that there is something innately wrong with them and shame becomes a part of their identity. Rassmussen will be using surveys to discover whether or not women who are bulimic also score high on the "s" or shame scale.

Rasmussen said that there are many reasons for the high incidence of bulimia among college-age women. One of the main reasons she gave was society's push for thinness. She said, "They (women) are given the message that if they are fat they are not acceptable."

She also added that the high availability of food, separation from the family, and added pressure from classes helps make college women more prone to bulimia.

Bulimia can cause many problems for its victims. Dental caries, swollen glands, a ruptured esophagus, electrolyte imbalances, and heart damage can all be caused by self induced vomiting. Excessive use of laxatives can create electrolyte imbalances, excessive fluid loss, and a dependence on laxatives.

The support group, which will be led by Hall, is beginning this week. It has been designed to serve both the educational and support needs of the members. The format is a prepared program from the Arizona State University and covers topics such as society's pressures on women, body image, and dealing with anger.

The group will be meeting on Thursday afternoons between 2 and 4. It will run for 7 weeks and is open to anyone who wishes to join.

In treating bulimia, Hall said, "The first step is admitting that they have a problem and making the decision to deal with it. A group like this can be the second step. It can show them different ways of dealing with their problems."

When someone does decide to face bulimia, it is not just a matter of becoming cured. Hall said, "Bulimia doesn't just stop. In a sense, it is a little bit like smoking. Their is a habitual aspect and it's difficult to break."

For a friend or relative of a bulimic, Hall advised, "The best thing to keep in mind is that this is the way they have chosen to deal with their stress. You are going to face some resistance. Remember, it's hard for people who don't do it to understand it." He said that the best thing to do was to support them without threat and to encourage them to get an outside opinion.

For someone who suffers from bulimia, Hall gave this advice, "The most important thing is don't panic or despair. It is something that one can come to terms with even if it may take time." He also recommended that they call the counseling center if they wanted more information or to talk about their problem.

City council committed to aiding airport; raises feasibility question

Dave Chase
News Reporter

There is little question that the Menomonie airport will benefit city business and industry, but, several have questioned whether the city can afford the new airport. The city council of Menomonie unanimously voted to contribute $40,000 to help pay for the operating cost of the Menomonie airport. Do they know what they are committing themselves to? Why would city council vote to aid the airport? To understand this, one must first know how the airport was acquired.

The land that the airport is sitting on was once owned by Menomonie Industrial Development Corporation (MID Corp). MID Corp. leased the land out to the airport group for one dollar a year. Six months later, the city of Menomonie bought most of the land MID Corp. owned for $387,350 at $4,000 an acre. According to City Manager George Langmack, the land had been appraised at $6,000 an acre and it was in the city's best interest to buy the land.

When the city bought the land, they were required to honor the lease previously made to the airport group. The lease is good until March 11, 1990. In five years there will be an airport on the land. Questions remain about what Menomonie will do with the land and the airport.

City Manager George Langmack says the city will most likely buy the airport but, he said, "Whether or not there is a future transfer of assets to government, the city council decided to see if the airport would work."

Eugene Heyman, treasurer of the airport group, reportedly told city council that Menomonie would be eligible for financial aid through the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA). He told council that the assets and the value of the land itself were enough to show sponsorship and would go towards the ten percent needed to acquire FAA funds once the city owned the airport.

According to city councilman Jay Schroeder, the city council was misinformed. In order to get improvement finances from the FAA, the city must first send in an application, which has not been done yet as of January 22, 1986. The application is followed by a trial hearing to determine the eligibility of the airport.

If the city is found eligible, it still must come up with enough money to show sponsorship. The previously given money, including the $40,000 voted on by city council and assets are not considered part of the sponsorship, according to Schroeder.

If the city is not found ineligible for FAA assistance, it must pay for all the operating and improvement costs. These costs will come out of the tax payers dollar. It is unclear whether Menomonie's City Council would have voted in favor of the $40,000 contribution if they would have been informed of all the facts ahead of time.

Do the citizens of Menomonie want to pay the maintenance and operating costs of the airport? It would take a binding referendum to overule the city council's decision. But according to Schroeder, binding referendums have been voted down by city council.

When asked what his thoughts were on people who say they do not want the airport because they'll never use it and do not wish to pay taxes on it, Heyman said, "Some of these guys can't read to begin with, but we still have a library."

It may take up to four years before anyone knows what actions the Menomonie City Council will take toward the airport. The airport's impact on the city of Menomonie remain up in the air until that time.

Shakespearean play confuses audience

Beth Reid
Arts Reporter

The University Theatre's production of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern may have been well performed, but due to the rapid fire dialogue, many audience members were confused. The comedy is a take off from Hamlet, but since many people are unfamiliar with Shakespeare, much of the meaning behind the play was lost.

Review

I didn't really begin to understand what was happening until after the intermission,
—Kelly Cohorst
audience member

"I didn't really begin to understand what was happening until after the intermission," Kelly Cohorst said. "I enjoyed the two leads, but otherwise it was hard to follow." This was the feeling of many who attended this past weekend's performance.

Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are old friends of the young Hamlet who have been summoned by King Claudius to investigate Hamlet's sudden case of lunacy. The leads, played by Dennis Crawley (Guildenstern) and Troy Bystrom (Rosencrantz) were performed with skill and energy. Their conversations were rapid and they should be given credit for the hard work needed to learn the difficult dialogue used in Shakespeare.

The games of verbal tennis and questions were entertaining to watch as well as listen to. As they contemplated the meaning of life and death, they provided comedy and merriment to the show. To pass the time, Bystrom pondered what it would like to be dead in a box, or if it would be better to be alive in a box. His obscure way of reasoning had the audience laughing and added a bit of lightheartedness.

The cast also consisted of a band of tragedians, described by Guildenstern as "a comic pornographer and his prostitutes." They made their first appearance during the first act and continued to drop in unexpectedly throughout the play. The group adds humor to the play and does an excellent job of dramatizing. The Player, Dennis Crawley, executed his character exceptionally well. His performance brought life to the play as he explained the meaning of tragedy and death from his point of view.

Other members of the cast, including King Claudius, Gertrude Ophelia, and Polonius were performed with talent, but their dialogue was often difficult to interpret.

Ed Perne did a superb job of playing Hamlet. His talent shined as he pretended to be going crazy, talking to himself and talking nonsense.

The stagecraft in the show was somewhat abstract with a platform and stairs. This also made it more difficult to understand where the play was taking place. "They should have changed the stage around a little bit to help the audience know where Rosencrantz and Guildenstern were," a member of the audience said. "I didn't catch on that they had switched places between the first and second act."

Maybe if there had been a narrator at the beginning of the play or some information given in the program, it would have been more enjoyable and less confusing. "They should have given some background on what had happened prior to the play's beginning," Denise Hoeft said. "I didn't enjoy it because I spent most of the time trying to figure out what was taking place."

Overall, the cast did an excellent job of performing their characters. Shakespeare is difficult to produce and they should be given credit for their hard work. It is unfortunate that much of the meaning and entertainment was lost due to misunderstanding.

Popular pasta

Linda Konkol

Oechi di lupo ("wolf's eyes"), linguine ("little tongues"), and vermicelli ("little worms") sound like things that belong in a witch's cauldron, but they're actually names for that Italian specialty, pasta. The names may sound awful, but they haven't kept pasta from gaining worldwide popularity.

Pasta is the Italian word for "paste." The term has come to mean products in the spaghetti, macaroni, and noodle families. The simplest pastas are made only from duram wheat flour and water. "Noodles" are usually made with eggs and flour.

There is controversy over pasta's origins. Legend has it that Marco Polo took macaroni home from the Orient in the thirteenth century. However, many Italians argue that ravioli was eaten in Rome long before Polo even set out on his extended journey.

Regardless of the origins, Italians do get the credit for developing the hundreds of different pasta forms and for spreading a liking for pasta around the world. Italians are so enthralled with pasta that they even have a museum in its honor: the Storico degli Spaghetti.

Part of pasta's appeal is probably its variety. There are currently over 200 shapes of pasta. There are even different colors of pasta; spinach, beet juice, and tomatoes are used to make green and red pastas.

Different shaped pastas can be used interchangeably in recipes as long as the cooked volume is the same. Most pastas, like macaroni and spaghetti, double in volume when cooked. Noodles, which are made with eggs and which come in only three sizes — fine, medium, and wide width — are the same size cooked as they are dry.

Pasta should be cooked in large quantities of water. If the amount of water used to cook pasta is insufficient, it can't expand properly and shed its excess starch. Eight ounces of pasta to three quarts of water is a good ratio.

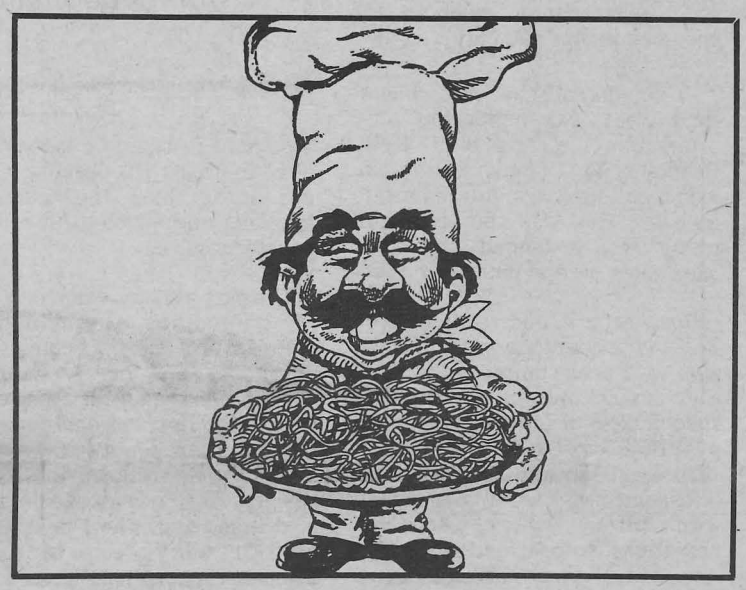
A small amount of cooking oil added to the water pasta is boiled in will reduce splashes and prevent the pasta from getting sticky. Frequent stirring during cooking also prevents stickiness.

I've heard of some creative ways of testing when pasta is done. One is the "wall test": a strand of spaghetti is thrown against the wall, and if it sticks to the wall, it's done.

I think a more reliable test is simply tasting the pasta. Italians like their pasta more firm than most Americans do. They cook it just until it's "al dente," tender to the touch but still firm when you bite into it.

When you taste test pasta, notice the flavor as well as the texture of the pasta. A starchy flavor indicated that it's not sufficiently cooked.

If the pasta is to be used in a recipe that requires further cooking, shorten the boiling time by one-third.



Noodles are very easy to make from scratch. The following recipe makes egg noodles which are especially good in soup. All-purpose flour may be used in the recipe, although bread flour and pasta flour work better.

If you don't have a rolling pin, a dowel or a large plastic drinking glass can be used to roll the dough.

Noodles

2 eggs
2 tsp. salt
1 1/2 cups flour (approx.)

Beat eggs slightly in a medium-sized bowl. Add salt and mix. Add flour and stir until mixture forms a ball. Knead dough slightly on a floured surface. Roll out until very thin. Let dry, rolled out on a flat surface, for a day or overnight. Cut into noodles and leave out to dry another day.

A good way to use up leftover cooked pasta is in this Pasta omlet. The contrast in textures makes it an interesting dish.

Pasta Omelette

2 cups cooked pasta
fine breadcrumbs of plain flour
4 tbsp. butter or margarine
4 eggs
grated parmesan cheese

Chop the cooked pasta and coat with breadcrumbs or flour. In a skillet heat 3 tbsp. of butter; add the pasta and fry until crisp and golden. Remove to a bowl.

Melt the remaining 1 tbsp. butter in the skillet. Slightly beat the eggs. Spread the beaten eggs over the bottom of the skillet. Stir once or twice with a spatula. Shake the pan gently back and forth to prevent the omelette from sticking.

When the omelette is cooked and soft on top, spread the pasta over one half and fold the other half over the top. Serve sprinkled with cheese. Makes 3 servings.

Mellow singer puts Pawn in the mood

Beth Reid
Arts Reporter

Those fortunate enough to be at Stout Community Talent night had the opportunity to hear one of the finest talents on campus. Singer Patrick Garry performed a 45 minute medley of mellow music at the Pawn on Friday Feb. 21.

Review

Accompanied by pianist Laurie Meyer, the show began with the song "Hello" by Lionel Richie. Garry performed with feeling and emotion as he continued his performance with the songs "Your Song" and his favorite "The Greatest Love of All." Garry likes this song because, "it has a lot to say. It talks about learning to love yourself, something which lots of people don't know how to do."

Garry was joined by Jackie Johnson and Tracy Lucas for a three part harmony of "The Rose." He enjoys singing with other people and has often thought about getting started in a band. "It's hard to find people that are really serious about music," Garry said, "but if I could find a good pop or rhythm and blues band, I'd like to try working with a band."

Most of the songs Garry sings are mellow, more romantic types, which he selects because "they're the types of songs that sound best with just one accompanist." Other songs performed during Friday's show included "You Mean More to Me" and "Against All Odds."

Garry has been performing at the Pawn since he began at Stout, when a friend encouraged him to get involved in Stout Talent Night. Since then, he has made several appearences at the Pawn, at basketball games and sang the National Anthem at the last Homecoming game.

Friday night's show was excellent and the audience showed their feeling through much applause. Garry felt the performance went well and "it was the first time my knees didn't shake. It gets better each time." Performing at the Pawn is a good opportunity for Garry to develop his talent and he loves having the chance to look out over a group of people and see them all focusing in on what he's saying.

"We practice hard before a performance," Garry said, "and it's a great feeling to have people come just to see you perform." To prepare for a show, Garry says he doesn't eat and is cranky all day.

> ... it's a great feeling to have people come just to see you perform .
> —Patrick Garry Singer

"My worst fear all day is that no one will show up or they'll come, but then they will think I'm terrible. But once it's over, all the worrying and hard work is worth it and I wouldn't give it up for anything."

Although he is majoring in Fashion Merchandising, Garry's dream is to have a career as a singer. "I like to sing and it's what I do best," Garry said, "It's a good career option to have, but you have to have the desire. If you have the talent, but no desire, then you're just another pea in the pod." He has not made any definite plans for after graduation, but is going to see what opportunities lie ahead.

"I guess the bottom line is that I love to sing," Garry said, "and I'm lucky to have a place like the Pawn to express myself." Garry considers himself lucky, but it's those who have the opportunity to hear his voice who are the lucky ones. Garry may be performing once more during the semester over Parents' Weekend, so watch for his name. It's a show you don't want to miss.

Local radio stations survey listeners

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

When you turn on the radio you tune into a station. In turn, the station tunes into you. A common question directed to radio stations is how they decide what to project into the air waves. Both local radio stations, WMNE-WMEQ and WVSS observe their audiences to please and attract listeners.

Although both of these local stations are situated in Menomonie their goals and philosophies of radio production are very different. At this time of year they are both polling and surveying the habits of their audiences.

Mike Phillips, owner and general manager of WMNE-WMEQ said, "We are not narrow casting, this is not programming to a specific group because we appeal to large numbers. We can't be all things to all people but we can incorporate the elements most accepted."

Programming at this station is middle-of-the-road. A radio station in a small community such as Menomonie needs to attract large numbers of the population in order to survive.

WVSS is the UW-Stout campus radio station. Ace Matthews, general manager of WVSS said, "Our appeal has been an alternate source of variety in a whole field of people playing the same music over and over again. Our middle initial is 'V' for variety." This radio station is directed to the student population. It is run by students who are free to experiment with programming.

Listenership is measured at WMNE-WMEQ by observing the audience reaction to station contests, monitoring results reported by advertisers, by audience reaction to announcers, mail received and with interviews and surveys.

In the radio industry Arbitron of Control Data Corporation is a professional survey company which provides stations with survey data. This type of data has its limitations. Because Arbitron is nationwide, only a handful of listeners are contacted within Dunn County. A radio station needs more detailed information.

WMNE-WMEQ conducts its own in-depth survey. Approximately 300 telephone calls, lasting 15 to 20 minutes. Questions are asked about what people like most and least about the station's news, weather, sports and music. This information is compiled to make graphs and percentage scales. These graphs plot times listened to, number of people listening, AM/FM listening, age group data and other pertinent information.

"The 18 to 24 age group is the most viable of all groups," Phillips said. This group tunes into a variety of stations all over the dial.

At WVSS surveys are distributed to Stout students. Information from this yearly survey is currently being compiled. From their mailed surveys, the station finds out who their listeners are, what stations are listened to the most, what type of music is popular and if the student population is aware of the station's services.

Matthews pointed out that from the survey data, the lowest listening time was midnight to 8:00 a.m.. That is why the Laser Rock Show was introduced to fill that time period which was once dead air. The prime listening time is 3:00 p.m. to midnight.

In the past, surveys have shown that students don't like dialogue on the air more than every 15 minutes. These surveys also pointed out that a time for audience requests was demanded. WVSS has an audience penetration of about five to six percent of the Stout community. According to Matthews the highest radio station penetration is 14 percent.

Disc jockeys at WVSS are required to play two new released albums, two top albums, two oldies and two special records in two hours. The jockeys are also required to broadcast public service announcements.

Since the station is public, it cannot charge for advertisements. In programming WVSS has to be aware of federal regulations. Commercial stations don't have the same legal restrictions. Due to these restrictions, jazz, classical and old-time folk music is played for public service requirements. Rock and roll is not considered a public service.

> A radio station has a very difficult time appealing to a large audience anymore,
> —Ace Matthews WVSS

At WMNE-WMEQ news, weather and sports is acquired from news wires, radar and the latest in technology. At WVSS this is not the case. With a budget of $5200 a news wire costing $3800 yearly is not affordable. Matthews said, "Our news is strictly what we can pick up on hand-outs. It's not what you like, but it's what you have to work with."

Based on information from surveys, WMNE-WMEQ makes improvements and changes in programming. They have found out that the people want more local news. People tend to acquire national and international news from other sources. Survey information has also revealed trends in listenership.

A national trend is to listen to FM rather than AM. Adult contemporary music is listened to the most in the United States. Country music is the second most popular type. At WMNE-WMEQ adult contemporary is played on the FM dial and country on the AM dial.

Phillips said, "We augment this programming with local news, sports and weather. This is our basic formula for reaching people in the area."

Although WMNE-WMEQ is the largest station in the county, the competition is tough. Phillips said, "We unfortunately are under the umbrella of 35 stations in Minneapolis and St. Paul and seven stations in Eau Claire. We have to be much sharper than if we were out in the middle of nowhere."

Keeping up with music trends is tough for both general and segmented radio stations. Due to cable and MTV influences, musicians are accepted at a faster pace. Radio stations must keep up with this trend.

"A radio station has a very difficult time appealing to a large audience anymore. The music market is fragmenting," Matthews said. According to this station manager top 40 hits is a dead issue, rock album cuts is old and it is hard to please the variety of musical tastes that exist in America today.

The WMNE-WMEQ station is a familiar site. The station concentrates on local news and programming, frequently polling listeners seeking areas of improvement. (Stoutonia photo by Dan Banach)

For Those About to Rock

Guitars and Rock'n'Roll

David Chase

"I listened and I heard - music in a word and words when you play'd your guitar - the noise I was hearing - was a million people cheering and a child flew past me riding in a star."
—Peter Townshend

I have this guitar at home that sits in the corner of my den. I very rarely pick it up these days, the layer of dust that covers it is a not something I'm proud of. Yet it's not something I feel badly about, it's been a while since I've wanted to be a rock star.

Perhaps you have a guitar at home, some of you play, but I would be safe to guess there are quite a few dusty guitars out there. Two things held me back from really learning how to play, one was that I hated guitar lessons. The other was I was too busy to find the time and dedication to practice.

That is why this week I've decided to write about the people that did take the time to learn. People that were both serious about their guitar and dedicated to playing. Though some of their styles may be different, each have mastered their workmanship to the point were they are famous for their abilities on the guitar.

Jimi Hendrix: Hendrix is considered by many to be the best rock & roll guitarist who ever lived. This is a great compliment considering his untimely death early in his career. The sounds he created with his guitar were phenomenal and no one was said to be better.

Hendrix created most all of his sounds using nothing more than sheer volume. With as little as a Stratocaster and fuzz tone he was able to create feedback sounds that today's guitarist still can't create without the use of special equiptment. Know one can really be sure how far Hendrix would have taken the guitar, one can only wonder.

Jeff Beck: Beck started out his career as a guitarist for the Yardbirds. He later went on his own to create the Jeff Beck Group with Rod Stewart and Ron Wood from the Stones. Beck is an innovative guitarist, always trying to create new sounds. If I were asked who I thought was the best guitarist in rock today I would choose Beck.

Becks music varies from blues/rock to a jazz- rock sound. He is lightning quick with his fingers and is a master at feedback. Though Beck is not real well known with today's listeners, he is a top pick with fellow musicians. If you are interested in hearing some of Beck's work I suggest his Live With Jan Hammer album. Hammer is the writer of the Miami Vice theme. Check it out, some of the guitaring will blow you away if you don't mind a little jazz.

Eric Clapton: In the early 70's there was a saying that was being written all over the walls of England, 'Clapton is God'. Now this may be somewhat of a radical statement, I would hate to think that my God was best known for his ability to play the guitar. But if you were to look at Clapton's career, one could not help but think his career was blessed.

Clapton played for such bands as Cream, Derek and the Dominoes. the Yardbirds and Blind Faith. His solo career was extremely successful and he became reknown for his masterful works with a Wah-Wah guitar. Though not as fast as he was in his early years with Cream, Claptons guitaring is top notch on any scale. His nickname is 'Slowhand', a reference to his layback style of play. If you were to listen to Clapton play you would know he is not interested in speed, just quality.

Robin Trower: Trower plyed for the band Procol Harum in the late '60's and early '70's, but most of his success has come from his solo efforts. His guitaring is somewhat on the same wavelength as Hendrix but his albums are unique in every way. If you haven't heard much of Trower's work, check out his Bridge Of Sighs album - it's a classic.

Joe Walsh: Walsh has played with both the James Gang and the Eagles, as well as having his own solo career. Walsh is especially well adept with the 'talk box' and is one of todays most prominent guitarist. Look into his early works with the James Gang and I think you'll be impressed. I would like to see him form another band, I guess we'll have to wait and see.

Jimmy Page: Page is undoubtedly one of today's most accomplished guitarist. He has played with the Yardbirds and Led Zeppelin, not to mention his countless studio works. Page has played on albums by the Stones, Kinks, the Who and much more. In fact, between the years of 1963 and 1965, Page filled in lead guitar positions for over 50 percent of all the albums released in Europe.

Page has a sound all his own, a range that expands fom hard driving heavy metal to classical arrangements. He was a great deal responsible for making Led Zeppelin into one of the biggest bands ever. He loves to play a double necked guitar and will often use a bow when playing. Currently Page plays for The Firm but rumors have it there will be a Led Zeppelin reunion.

Neal Schon: Schon is one of the most under- rated guitarist in rock & roll. Why? Look who he's played for, he started playing for Santana at the age of 15. Santana was not going to to be shown up by anyone, especially a 15 year old guitarist. Schon also played for Journey, a band who saw most of their credit for success go to the lead singer, Steve Perry.

Schon is a great guitarist who is both quick and precise in finger work. If you really want to hear how good of a guitarist he is, check out some old Journey albums. You might also look into his albums with Jan Hammer.

Peter Townshend The Who was one of rocks most successful bands greatly due to the part of songwriter/guitarist Townshend. He is known for his great speed and windmill style of play. He is a wonder on stage, jumping about without missing a chord.

I'm sure most everyone is familiar with songs from the Who, but if you were to listen closely you will notice that his arrangements of his songs are nothing less than spetacular. If you want to hear some of Townshend's best works, listen to the Who's Next album, it's damn good.

Dale Evans Evans plays for U2 and is also an underrated guitarist. His talent is best seen live but he's no slack on the U2 albums either. Check this guy out, he is new talent that will be around for a long time.

Chuck Berry Chuck Berry is the father of the rock & roll guitar. Almost every guitarist I have listed was influenced greatly by Berry's energetic style of play. He created a mania that created great emphasis on the guitar in rock & roll.

Artist such as Townshend, Angus Young of AC/DC and Keith Richards of the Stones use many of the same basic sounds in their music as Berry did. Berry also created a shuffle that is used by many various guitarist. Not enough can be said for Chuck Berry, but if your ever interested in hearing what influenced the guitarist of today, find yourself a Chuck Berry album.

I realize I have not mentioned many great guitarist, but it would be impossible to list them all. I left out such greats as Steve Howe (Yes), Van Halen, Neil Young, Santana, Brian May (Queen), Ritchie Blackmore (Deep Purple and Rainbow), Duane Allman, Frank Zappa, Frank Marino, Peter Frampton and many others.

But if it was up to you, could you come up with ten to represent all of what the guitar has meant to rock & roll? Try it, it might be more difficult than you think. So pick up your guitar and practice, with a little dedication, you may be titled as 'one of the best'.

P.S. Hey you party houses, let me know who you are. I want to make it to your party but you'll have to let me know. I want to find out who's all rock and who's all talk.

All-expense paid trip to Florida main draw for suitcase party

Dave Chase
Arts Reporter

For the cost of $2.50, two U.W. Stout students were able to vacation down to Florida last weekend. Tracey Hannula and Karl Populorum were the lucky winners at the CKTO sponsored Suitcase party last Thursday night at the Great Hall.

Three hundred students showed up for the party dressed in Hawaiian or summer clothing. The party offered food, beverages (non-alcoholic), dancing, small prize giveaways and a big prize drawing for a weekend in Florida.

The big prize was an all expense paid weekend in Florida. The two winners each received $100 in spending money and were given free tickets to Disney World and the Epcot Center.

The party involved a great deal of dancing with the help of an Electra Sound disc jockey. There were flashing lights and strobes to set the mood for dancing and the floor was rarely left empty.

Though the party had a fairly good outcome, over 85 percent of the people there were women and 90 percent were from CKTO. Many of the people that attended the party felt that more people would have attended, if the party had offered alcoholic beverages. CKTO was not allowed to sell alcohol due to the ages of some of the dorm residents.

Valerie Clark, the person in charge of organizing the party, was pleased with the support she received from all the dorms on campus.

"The reason that CKTO was able to pull off the Suitcase Party was because of a team effort. Everyone helped out, it was really fun."

The party was a non-profit event and all the money made was donated to Kinship of United Way.

"We're giving one hundred dollars to Kinship," said Clark. "The rest of the money made is given back to the halls according to percentage."

This opportunity was made possible by the third annual CKTO Suitcase party which took place last Thursday in the Great Hall of the Student Center.

Forensics improves various speech, communication skills

Karen Heagle
Arts Reporter

In a student's quest for a successful career he searches for as many valuable skills as he can get his hands on. Skills in resume writing, getting an interview, leadership, and of course specific career skills are just a few. Another of these skills is the skill of communicating with speech.

One of the best places to gain good speaking ability is through forensics. There is hardly a career that doesn't call upon the ability to speak. Whether you are selling yourself to a potential employer, or selling a product to a customer, or doing a presentation at a company meeting, speaking is a valuable skill.

Stout has its own forensics team, and its members recognize the importance of the skill they are developing. Member Cindy Meyers, a senior who has been with the squad for three years, commented,"It helps you a lot. Once you've stood up in front of people and actually been judged it makes facing an interviewer a lot more comfortable."

Meyers is just back from a first semester internship. She has joined this forensics season late, but she as well as the rest of the team is still making progress.

The group is pleased with it's most recent tournament in Eau Claire. Coach Mike Nicolai found the team come through strong. The team found the opposing team was fairly tough. Stout placed 7th and 9th among 100 competitors. Nicolai believes, "That's real positive, exciting. I don't just concern myself with winning trophies, but a good test on how these people are comparing to the overall rankings."

Since several members have graduated, and two of the squad's members were gone on internships the team consists of several new members, including many freshmen. Nicolai believes that this factor has created a tendency not to have any one member recognized more than another. Nicolai finds this to be good for the team. Although some members have been more successful than others in placing, the experiences have been beneficial to everyone on the team.

"It's really been a planning for the future season," says Nicolai in regards to the high number of new members. One new member is Vernon Daniels, an international student from Trinidad. Daniels competes in impromtu speaking. Coach Nicolai finds himself proud and pleased that a foreign student can also participate in such an activity. Daniels placed 5th in his competition.

Another member Paul Peltier, a sophomore, competes in persuasion, after dinner speaking, informative, and impromtu. Coach Nicolai believes he is one of the most veteran members of the squad.

Peltier finds that not only does forensics enhance his communication skills on the career level, but he has found it fun, and intellectually stimulating."I've made so many friends in it at Stout and other campuses. I've learned alot from both writing my speeches and listening to other speeches."

One of Peltier's categories is after dinner speaking. This is a type of speaking which is associated with banquets, and brunches. The speaker chooses a topic that is serious but presented humorously. Peltier speaks of eating, and enjoying food which you don't enjoy eating.

Recently in St. Cloud, Peltier placed 6th in persuasive speaking. Persuasive speaking is one of Peltier's specialty events.

Peltier began forensics in high school, and has dedicated himself to it ever since. Team member Meyers was introduced to forensics as a freshmen at Stout. She joined the team as a sophomore. This season Meyers started late, but she has still found success.

Meyers competes in rhetorical criticism. This is probably one of the most difficult areas of forensic competition. In this event the competitor selects a significant event and using a rhetorical tool analyzes it. Meyers chose to compare wrestling to theatre.

She placed 4th among 18 competitors at the Eau Claire tournament. Since this is a tougher area there are fewer competitors, but most of them are quite well prepared.

Stout's forensic team is preparing for national competition. Peltier believes,"Stout has a decent chance of qualifying 2 or 3 members. That's a chance not a commitment." Coach Nicolai believes that Peltier has an excellent chance of qualifying.

The National Forensics Association Championships are the first and foremost on the minds of this squad. They are preparing for the upcoming district tournament in which 10 percent of the competitors will qualify for nationals.

After spring break they will compete in three major regional tournaments. Nicolai feels this is a real busy time for the team. "It's a real pressure time — a good test for these people who aren't use to doing this."

The forensics team is always looking for new members. Nicolai says,"Our approach is anyone who likes it can come and try it." There is no set number of how many can be on the team like in athletics.

Forensics at Stout is especially open to anyone since there is no Speech major here at Stout. The team consists of all different majors,and all types of different speaking experience levels.

Stout offers a speech minor as well as an introductory course to forensics. If you've considered involving yourself in forensics, why not start now? Since there is some work and planning involved in writing and preparing a speech the team strongly recommends visiting them this spring.

Peltier explains,"We need to get them interested in college forensics. One meeting yet this spring would make a world of difference as far as how they'll be able to achieve during the year."

Have you been considering forensics? The skill of good verbal communication is extremely valuable in everyday life as well as a successful career.

Third year forensics team member Cindy Meyers explained that forensics judges are a good preparation for the pressure of interviews. (Stoutonia photo by Todd Nelson)

Netters drop four on season-opening trip

Louie Filkins
Sports Reporter

Even though they opened up their season with a 0-4 record, the UW-Stout men's tennis team had an excellent road trip to Reno, Nev. last weekend. They competed with two Division I schools, the University of Nevada-Reno and the University of British Colombia.

"I was very pleased with our performance out West," Head Coach Bob Smith said. He also stated that the team lost two close matches (5-4) that would have given them a 2-2 record. "We hit the ball very well considering we haven't played outside since October," Smith said.

The team had two matches on Friday and two more on Saturday. The temperature was in the mid-50's on a beautiful sunny day at Lakeridge Tennis Club in Reno.

Stout started out cold by dropping all six of their singles bouts in their first match with UNR. Bill Johnson beat Bobby Davies of Reno, but he was the 7th man so it did not count towards the team score. Doubles partners John Leehy and Mark Paine recorded the only Stout victory in this match by defeating number one seeded Matt McDonald and his Swedish partner Ernst Larsson.

UBC, one of the best schools in Canada, was Stout's second opponent. Rob Oertel and Joel Vogler both had victories in the singles category. Stout added two more wins in doubles but UBC edged them out 5-4. "Two matches in one day basically killed us. We were not ready to play two matches outdoors at 4,500 feet," Smith said.

The altitude, unfamiliarity of the courts and playing outside all affected Stout in some way. "It was difficult at first to adjust to the altitude. The ball has a tendency to float more, especially on lobs," Rob Oertel said. Bill Johnson said the following about playing outdoors: "It's harder to judge depth and speed outdoors because there is no background. Fortunately I adjusted quickly and it didn't affect my game that much."

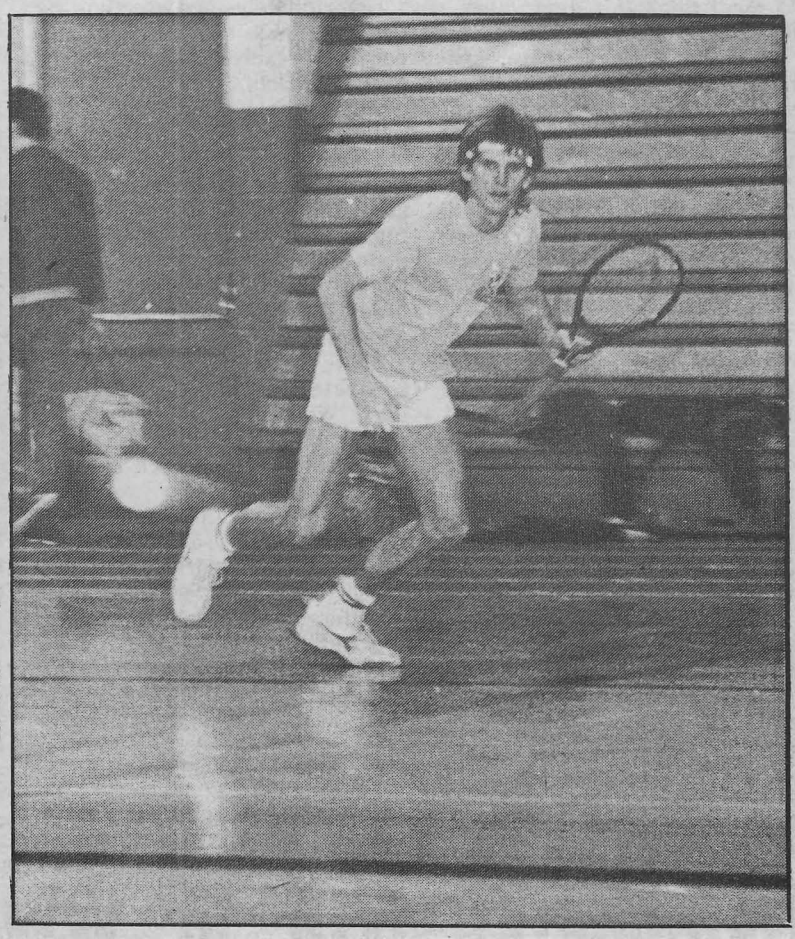
UNR, Big Sky Conference Champions last year, defeated Stout again on Saturday. Vogler and Johnson teamed up again to take a doubles match. Johnson also won singles to give Stout only two wins on the day. Later that afternoon, Oertel, Leehy, Mark Paine and Mike Friedman compiled four wins against UBC in singles. However, they dropped all three of the doubles matches and lost 5-4.

Although this may sound like a dismal report, it is far from it. All of the games were non-conference and the coach and all of the players were very happy to have done so well against the much bigger schools. "We now know what we have to work on the most, such as approaching and passing drills as well as hitting on the run," Smith remarked.

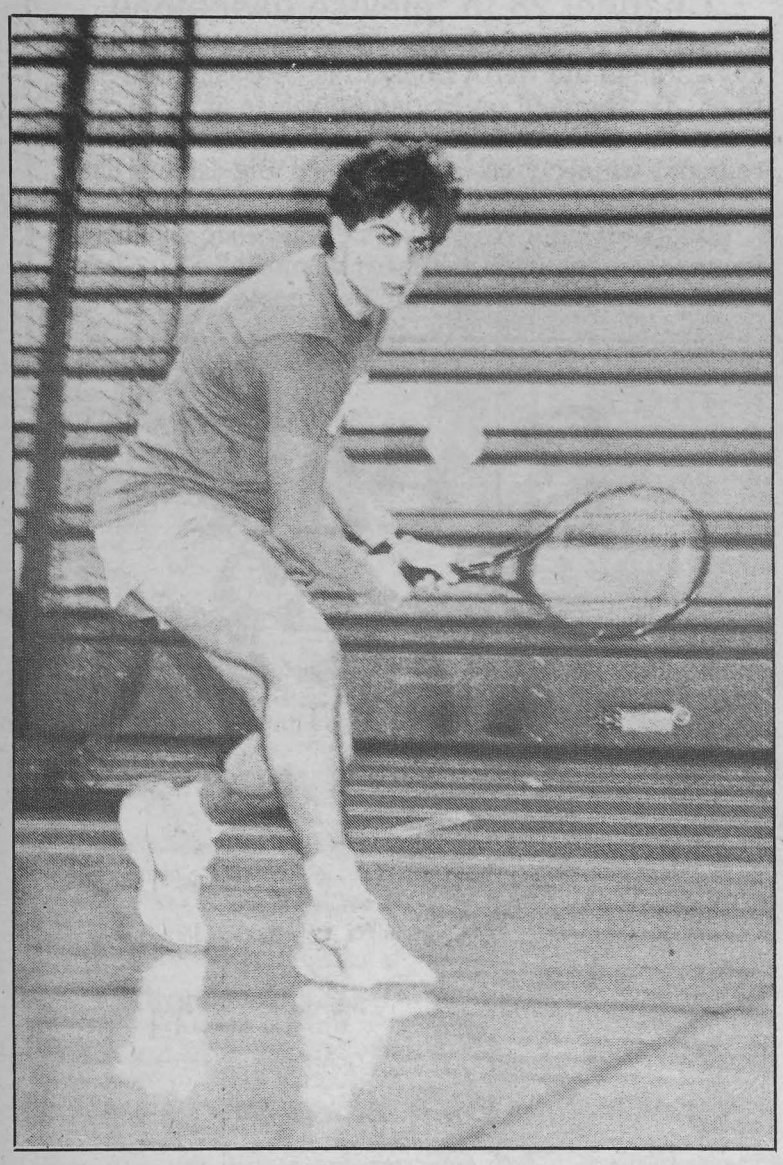
The tennis team is looking forward to an excellent year with 8 returning lettermen. Oertel is ranked 17th in the nation, and he and his partner, Mike Friedman, are ranked fourth in the nation in doubles. The team will be shooting for its fifth consecutive NAIA District 14 Championship, as well as its fourth consecutive WSUC title, a feat no other team in the history of Stout athletics can boast.

"Whitewater should be our main competition, they have basically the same team back from last year. Oshkosh has a good number one singles player, and Eau Claire is much better this year. We should win our fourth WSUC championship in a row barring any injuries," Smith said about the 1986 season. He also said the team has an "outstanding schedule, our best ever."

The tennis Blue Devils will be at the La Crosse Invite this weekend. From there they travel to California over spring break to play such powerhouses as Redlands and the University of Oklahoma.



Rob Oertel chased down a ball in practice before traveling to Las Vegas to face the University of Nevada-Reno and the University of British Columbia. The Blue Devil netters came home without a team win against the two strong Division I schools. (Stoutonia photo by Brad Kautzer)



In an earlier practice, Mike Friedman worked on his backhand. Friedman compiled four wins against UBC in singles, and with doubles teammate Mark Paine, lost three matches. (Stoutonia photo by Brad Kautzer)

Grappler to represent UW-Stout at national tourney in New Jersey

Louie Filkins
Sports Reporter

Heavyweight Dave Witt will represent UW-Stout's wrestling team at nationals in Newark, N.J. this weekend. He earned this honor by taking first place in a regional tournament held in Whitewater last weekend.

Wayne Hendrickson and Chris Iverson also qualified to compete in Whitewater by placing second and third respectively in the conference match Feb. 8. However, their dreams of nationals faded as they both dropped their first matches.

According to Head Coach Walt Perkins, five other schools from the conference and one university from California competed in the tournament. The schools were: UW-Oshkosh, UW-Whitewater, UW-River Falls, UW-Platteville and California Technological Institute. Informally referred to as "Cal Tech," the southern school did not win one match.

Freshman Chris Iverson was the lightest of Stout's matmen at 126 pounds. He lost one of his matches to Tony Schaff of Whitewater. Like the last time these two met, Iverson was pinned in the second period. "Schaff is a tough wrestler. He beat me in a dual meet a week before conference," Iverson said.

Wayne Hendrickson was denied a trip to nationals by Whitewater's John Wetherell. Wetherell, a junior, had a 15-5-2 record compared to Hendrickson's 15-7-1 record. These two had met twice earlier and Hendrickson won both, the first meeting 4-1 and the second time he won by one point.

"We were tied 1-1 with 10 seconds left in the last period. I went for a throw and it didn't work out quite the way I had planned," Hendrickson said. Wetherell was credited with a quick takedown and a near fall to seal a 6-1 victory.

Dave Witt earned a bye his first match and then defeated Bruce Rivard of River Falls in his second match 8-6. "Dave controlled the match throughout," Perkins said. Witt had never wrestled Rivard before, and was surprised with his skill. "Coach Byron James of River Falls did a very good job coaching Bruce. He seemed to know what moves I was going to try," Witt said. Witt only has one loss with a 18-1-1 record this year.

Witt also commented that it was not one of his better showings. "I think I was a little overpsyched for the match. I made some mistakes, but my conditioning pulled me through in the end as my opponent tired," Witt said. Overall, he was pleased with the competition at Whitewater and is looking forward to nationals.

All three grapplers had already qualified for NAIA Nationals, however the decision to try to make NCAA Nationals was made about at mid-season according to Chris Iverson. Coach Perkins said that this decision was made by the entire team. However, Wayne Hendrickson said, "I was disappointed that we didn't go for NAIA instead of NCAA, I was unaware of when and by whom this decision was made."

Hendrickson will get another shot at nationals next year when he returns as a junior. Iverson is planning to move up a weight class to 134 pounds when he returns in the fall. Witt will be the only loss to the Blue Devils as he is the lone senior on the squad.

Perkins and Witt leave for Newark on Wednesday and competition begins on Friday. "Dave can expect about 30-50 wrestlers in his bracket," Perkins said. Like any tournament of this size, Witt will be facing some very tough matches.

Out of Bounds

Wrestling mania

Rochelle Buhr

Guys hauling ass on each other is how my neighbor describes wrestling.

I don't think this description is nice, but I tend to agree with her.

Basically, I believe there exists three types of wrestling. These types exist separately, but have in common a few elements that lean to the perverse.

For instance, the first type of wrestling, and most traditional, is amateur wrestling. Amateur wrestling can be observed by stopping by a high school or observing a college tournament.

It involves serious athletes who train all year round perfecting numerous crotch holds to render their opponents in fetus-like positions.

An amateur wrestler works to pin his opponent, and he doesn't achieve this by having his challenger say "Uncle." He muscles his guy to the mat with brute bulk.

Ooh, is how many people react to this, but the guys who do this stuff really get into it.

The second type of wrestling is what Cindy Lauper made big, pro-wrestling.

Presently, pro-wrestling is amazingly popular. Pro-Wrestling used to be a sort of quiet joke on Sunday morning TV. It was accidentally flipped to when there was a commercial break on "Meet the Press."

Unfortunately pro-wrestling is now big-time, even occasionally occupying sacred Saturday Night Live time slots.

Some people believe this bogus machoism. It always amuses me to see the crowds at pro-wrestling matches throw vegetables at personalities like the Iron Sheik actually believing that his phoney dedication to Iran must be stopped by the "good guy" wrestler in order to keep the United States free from Arabian terrorists.

Those wrestling crowds are a separate psychology paper in itself. Where else can you go and see a mother, little kids and a grandmother yell, "Kick his butt in, Hulk!"

But all this fan worship, and show biz whiz, and elaborate costumes, and corny identities cannot hide the fact that pro-wrestlers are a bunch of old, overweight, foul-mouthed men who insult each other outside of the ring, and beer belly whop in the ring. Yeah, and do crotch holds too.

The third type of wrestling is also the most mysterious. Mysterious to women, and commonplace to men.

It is spontaneous wrestling, also known as wrastling or tackling. One of those physical type play periods that are always fun until somebody gets hurt.

Boys learn this type of horseplay when their parents suddenly leave the house. They realize that it doesn't take much skill to twist up their little brother and break a few pieces of furniture all before mom and dad get back.

What's puzzling is why do boys and men have these urges to constantly pick and maim each other's bodies? And why does this wrestling seem to always surface after the boys have had a night on the town? Will guys ever grow out of this?

Apparently not. Just this past weekend I witnessed a few guys scuffling. One of the scufflers admitted to constantly wrestling with the guys but remarked that he hated to wrestle drunk noodle types because, he said, "they never give up."

I suppose that guys will always greet each other with head locks, hammer locks and nipple twists. They keep this up so if they ever have the opportunity to guest appear on All-Star Wrestling to face the Iron Sheik and preserve American democracy, they will be ready.

Gymnasts sixth in WWIAC meet; prepare to host NCGA Nationals

Suzanne Schroeter
Sports Reporter

In last Saturday's WWIAC Conference gymnastics meet UW-Oshkosh once again captured first place. UW-La Crosse placed second with a score of 132.55 which put them very close to Oshkosh. UW-River Falls took third place while UW-Eau Claire placed fourth and UW-Whitewater gained fifth place. The UW-Stout gymnasts finished sixth with a score of 105.35 and UW-Superior finished last.

Head Coach John Zuerlein said that the girls had their hearts in the right place but that they just couldn't put things together. "They're starting to get things together after getting the flu and having injuries," Zuerlein commented.

On the vault everyone scored fairly high. Lisa Hille received an 8.35 with Patti Roenitz close behind with a score of 8.2. Nancy Schlener obtained an 8.0 and Tammy Dennis earned a score of 7.9.

Hille received All-Conference and All-District for her performance on the vault. To earn these honors she had to place in the top three in that event after any all-arounders who had placed were eliminated.

On the floor exercise Hille received a score of 7.9. "I missed a move on the floor exercise that cost me six tenths of a point," Hille commented.

Roenitz also did well on the floor scoring an 8.05. Roenitz was not happy with her meet as a whole, saying that she was still feeling tired from having the flu the week before.

On the uneven bars Tammy Dennis obtained a score of 6.9. Kim Nelson also did well on her bar routine with a score of 6.25. Others did not fare as well on their bar routines.

The beam routines were also a problem for the Lady Blue Devils. Dennis had the team's high score of 5.9 followed by Roenitz with a score of 5.6 and Schlener with a score of 5.5.

"The flu seemed to drain everyone of their energy," Zuerlein said. "Lisa had a rough meet since she was coming off the flu and Patti had a bad meet probably because she has not had enough intense practice time recently."

Hille commented that she felt really weak for the meet and that she wasn't expecting a lot after being sick. For this weekend's meet she is working on getting all the requirements for her floor routine. Hille is going to be going for the score on the floor exercise this weekend. "I would like to score a 9.0 on the floor but even a high eight would be great," Hille commented.

Roenitz has also set some goals for herself for this weekend's meet. She is working on her Tsuk vault this week in practice and will be doing it this weekend if all goes well. Roenitz also wants to do well in the all-around. "I would like to hit all of my routines," Roenitz said.

Zuerlein is confident that both Hille and Roenitz will finish strong this year. He said that Lisa is in better spirits and that Patti is on her way. "She (Roenitz) is starting to develop consistency and more importantly getting confidence," Zuerlein said.

Cosmas Whitten is also recovering from her knee injury. She competed on the bars in Saturday's meet and should be back on the beam, and hopefully the floor exercise by this weekend.

Along with this good news comes some bad news. Tammy Dennis and Carolyn Bjerke both have the flu. Dennis probably won't be competing and Bjerke might be able to compete but only in the vault. Joyce Alger is also limited to the beam due to shin splints. Alger started off the season as an all-arounder and has now become a specializer on the vault due to her shins.

This weekend the Lady Blue Devils will host the NCGA Nationals. Preliminaries start Friday at 6 p.m. in the Johnson Fieldhouse. The prelims will determine the team champions and the all-around champions. Then on Saturday at 2 p.m., the best of all the teams will compete for individual titles.

As a team Zuerlein says that they probably won't score real high due to the flu and injuries, but individually they will do well. "Individually we have something to prove and I think we will do it in this meet," Zuerlein commented.

Softball tourney held on Lake Menomin

Paul Wehking
Sports Reporter

It was the playing of the Seventh Annual Ice Softball Tournament last weekend that enticed eight hearty softball teams out onto the frozen landscapes of Lake Menomin where they engaged in some fiery softball competition.

The tourney, which took place on Saturday and Sunday, was sponsored by the Kappa Lambda Beta fraternity and the Tap Bar. Trophies were awarded along with cash prizes for the first three places. First place claimed a $200 purse, second pulled in $100 and third was worth $50. A beer drinking trophy was also awarded.

When asked about the tradition of the tournament, frat Vice President Scott McLean said, "F.U.B.A.R.," which he defined as meaning Friendship, Unity, Brotherhood, Athletics, and Recreation. "The tournament is a fun time and also serves as a fundraiser for our fraternity," McLean said.

Jac Shimshak, a player on the Who Cares squad said, "It's a bunch of people out having a good time. People who aren't here are missing out on a lot of fun." Most players agreed with Shimshak's viewpoint saying that the tournament was well-organized and the weather (all 25 balmy degrees of it) was good.

First place was captured by The Swamp, second place went to The Sauce Kings and the team Who Cares found a home at third.

The Swamp, a team comprised of some determined Stout students, stole first place out from under The Sauce Kings who had beaten The Swamp boys 13-11 in earlier tourney action. "We didn't play well the first game (against The Sauce Kings). We didn't hit well and made a few errors," responded some Swamp players. Later in the tourney, The Swamp mounted an impressive comeback playing through the losers' bracket and then eventually meeting up with the Kings in the championship event.

In accordance with tournament regulations, already having been beaten by The Sauce Kings once, The Swamp had to defeat the The Sauce Kings twice in order to grab championship honors. This they managed to do.

Playing with ice in their veins, The Swamp pulled off both games pummeling The Saucers 12-3 in the first game and 5-2 in the second. Steve Sandin of The Sauce Kings commented on their lame championship performance saying, "We didn't hit well and we had trouble with errors. We should have drank more."

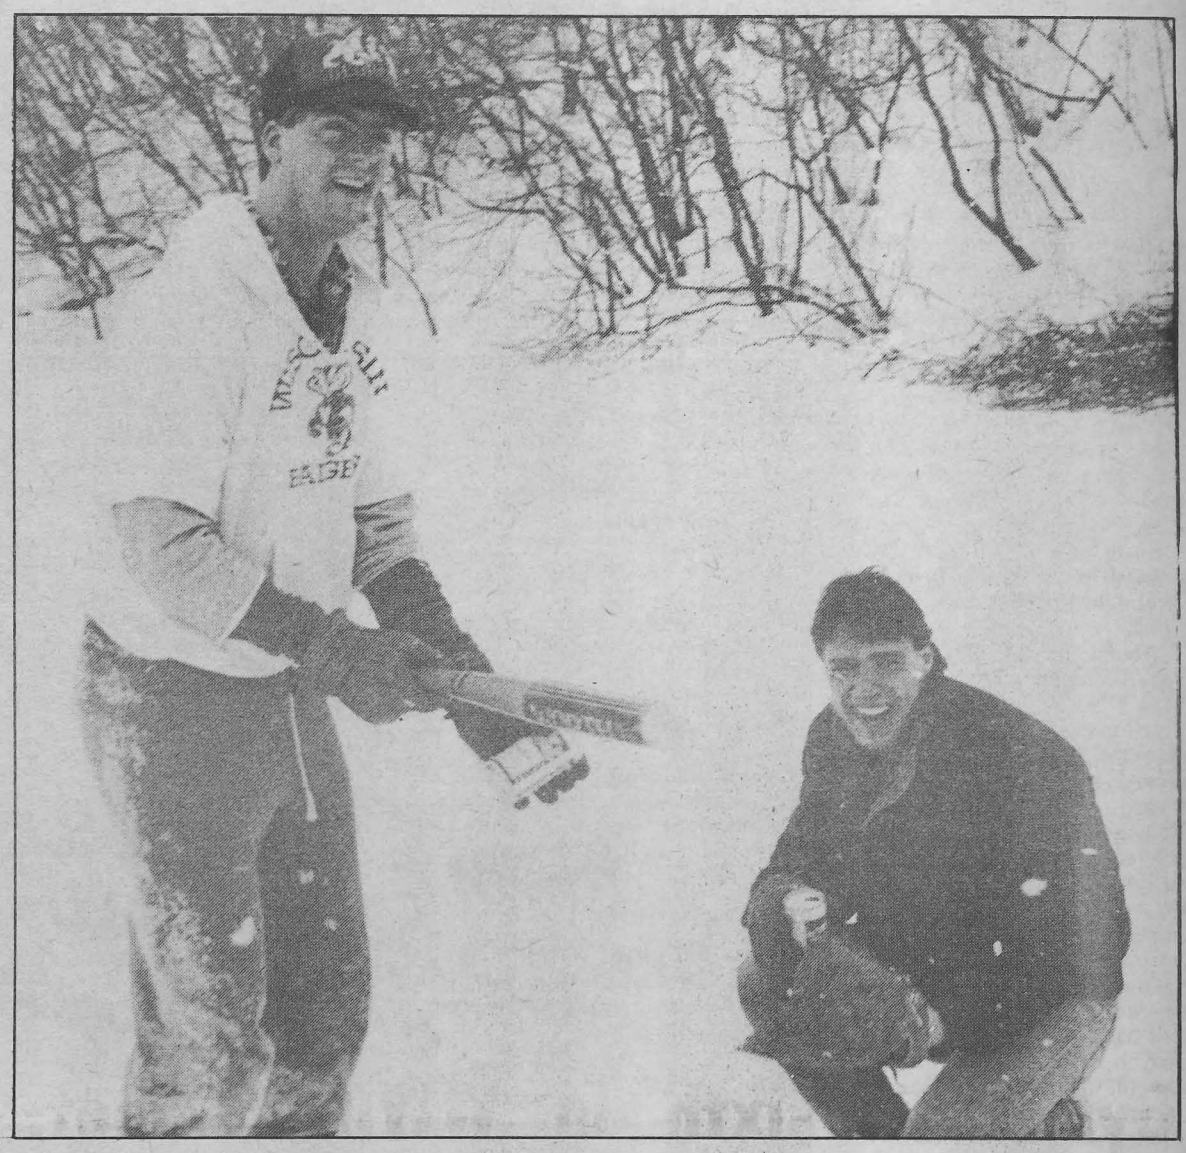
Players encountered some problems while playing this sport, which is usually associated with summer, during the winter. A frozen and snowed over Lake Menomin created less than ideal playing conditions for the enthusiastic participants. The eight inches of crusty snow served as a good excuse for errors and the players' inabilities to gain maximum speed on the base paths or while chasing balls in the outfield.

The North country weather had some players complaining about numb appendages and crummy field conditions but these factors were anticipated by the eight squads. Aside from a few minor injuries, most participants survived the ordeal by having fun and maintaining an intoxicated attitude.

After championship play concluded, the teams retired to The Tap where some of the fiercest competition of the tournament took place. The teams immediately sprang into action putting their prize money on the line.

The third place Who Cares team battled against the Sauce Kings for the right to claim the highly-coveted beer drinking trophy. The Sauce Kings, true to their name, guzzled their way to the beer swilling trophy with a last minute purchase of four cases of 16 ounce Budweiser's.

After realizing his team's defeat in the beer quest, Who Cares team member Mike Haines asked, "Who cares?"



Denny Vercauterew (with bat) and Ron Weise (on knee) didn't mind the cold at the Ice Softball Tournament. The Swamp captured first place. Second place went to The Sauce Kings, who also guzzled their way to win the beer-drinking trophy. (Stoutonia photo by Eileen O'Neill)

Swimmers place 4th in conference meet

Kim Steger
Sports Reporter

"This was the best meet we've had this year and it was the best team performance I've seen in three years," John Miller, head coach of UW-Stout's men's and women's swim teams said.

Both the men's and women's teams placed fourth in the three-day conference meet hosted by La Crosse. Conference is the second most important meet with Nationals being the first. Eau Claire placed first overall in both the men's and women's meet.

Steve Kostrova highlighted the men's meet by breaking two conference records. Kostrova swam the 200-yard butterfly in the record breaking time of 1 minute, 56.72 seconds. He also broke the record in the 100-yard butterfly with a time of 0:51.94. Kostrova also placed second in the 200-yard individual medley with a time of 1:59.65.

Third place finishes went to Stu Boese in the 200-yard IM, the 400-yard medley team and the 300-yard relay team.

Fourth place finishes went to Mark Kukuzke in the 1650-yard freestyle and John Lerbs in the 200-yard backstroke. Lerbs commented that team members Kostrova and Boese had outstanding swims. "Our team did the best we could considering the small size of our team. We're really psyched for Nationals and we hope to place within the top fifteen," said Lerbs.

Placing sixth for the Blue Devils were Brad Stark in the 50- and 100-yard freestyle and Boese in the 100-yard butterfly.

Bob O'Reilly placed eighth in the 1650-yard freestyle and Craig Nelson placed 11th.

Kukuzke placed ninth in the 500-yard freestyle and O'Reilly placed 12th.

Stark took tenth place in the 200-yard freestyle.

Coach Miller stressed the fine performances of Nelson, Kukuzke, Boese and O'Reilly, who had a great meet and dropped a lot of time. O'Reilly said, "The meet went really good and everyone did a good job. I was really happy with the time I dropped in my event."

Wendy Heineke led the women's team by swimming to three individual victories. She placed first in the 100-yard backstroke with a time of 1:03.37, the 200-yard backstroke with a time of 2:19.70 and the 100-yard butterfly with a time of 1:02.81.

Placing second for the Blue Devil women were the 400-yard medley relay team with the time of 4:19.57 and the 800-yard relay team with the time of 8:24.64.

Third place finishes went to Heineke in the 200-yard IM, Jackie Gilbert in the 200-yard freestyle and Cheryl DeBaker in the 100-yard backstroke.

The 200-yard free relay team placed fourth and the 200-yard medley relay team placed fifth.

Terri Peterson placed ninth in both the one and three meter diving events. Lisa Bjerkelund placed tenth in the three meter event and 14th in the one meter diving event.

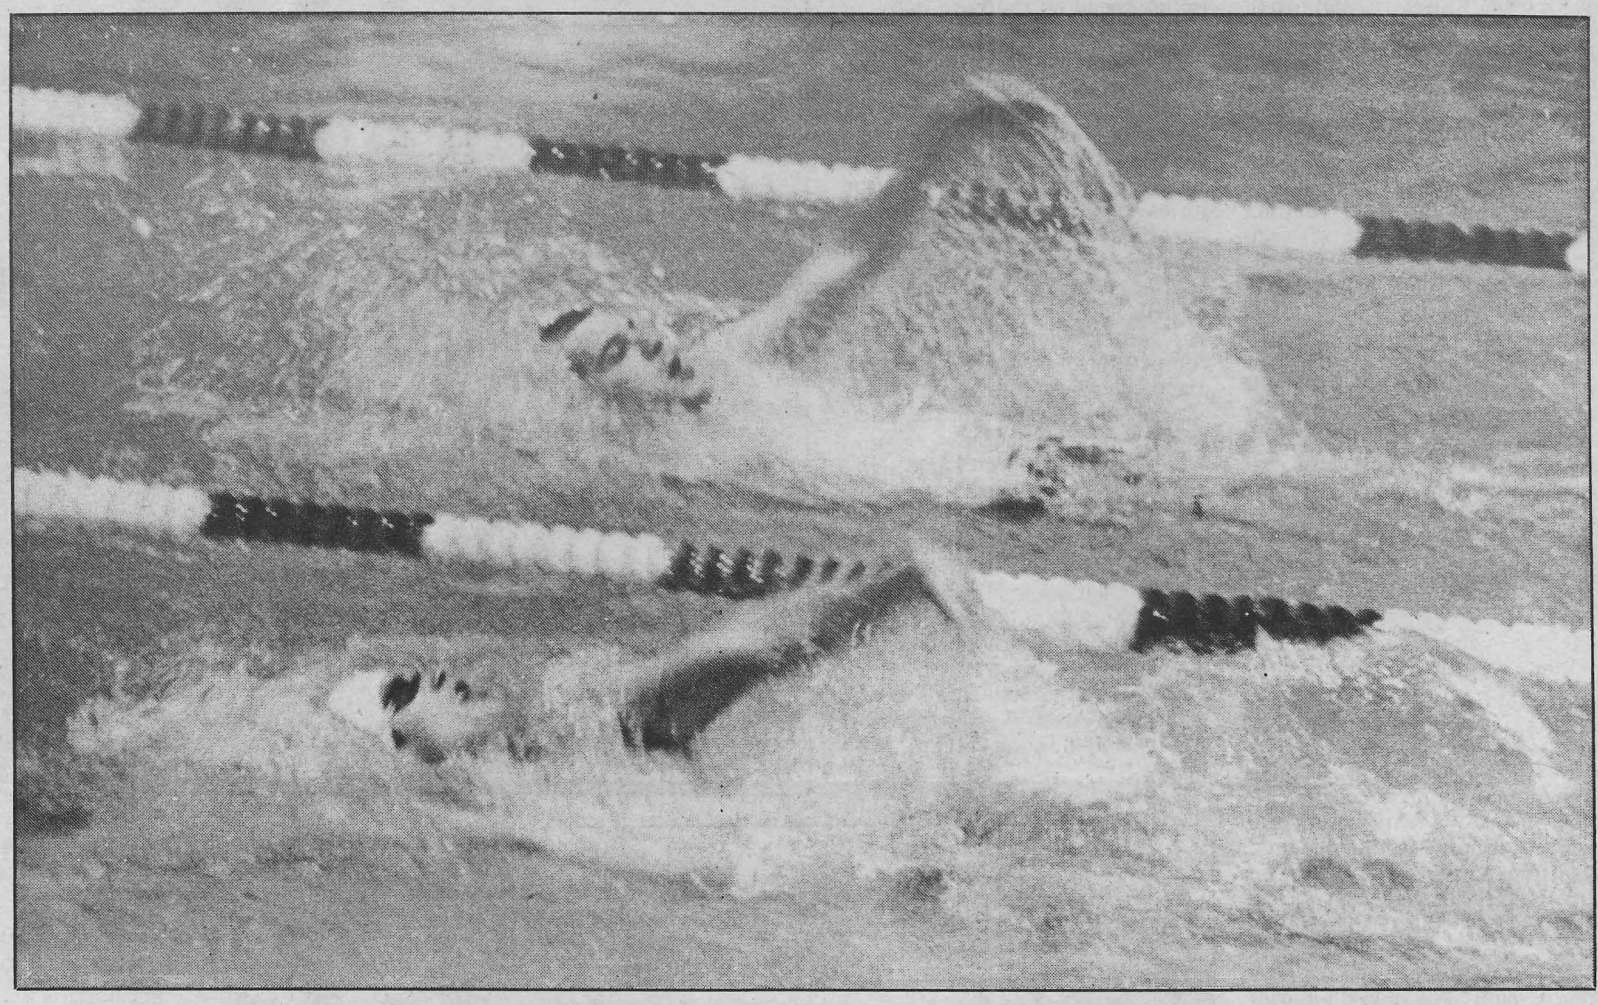
Jackie Gilbert placed seventh in the 500-yard freestyle and eighth in the 100-yard freestyle.

Taking ninth place in the 200-yard backstroke was DeBaker and Stephanie Weiss in the 200-yard freestyle.

Anne Branson swam to tenth place in the 100-yard breaststroke and Laurie Potter placed eleventh in the 100-yard butterfly. Weiss took 11th place in the 100-yard freestyle.

Coach Miller felt that there were no real disappointments in the men's and women's meets. "They gave 95 percent of their personal best," Miller said. Miller feels that both teams are very strong in the butterfly events and that Stout has been referred to as Butterfly University.

The Blue Devils will compete in Nationals next Tuesday.



The UW-Stout men's and women's swim teams both placed fourth in the three-day conference meet hosted by La Crosse. Steve Kostrova highlighted the men's meet by breaking records in the 200-yard butterfly and the 100-yard butterfly. Wendy Heineke led the women swimmers with three individual victories. "This was the best meet we've had this year and it was the best team performance I've seen in three years," Head Coach Miller commented. (Stoutonia photo by Brad Kautzer)

YOU CAN FIGHT CANCER BEFORE YOU GET IT.

OR AFTER YOU GET IT.

It's a lot easier to fight cancer before you get it.

Scientists estimate that up to 60% of all cancer could be prevented.

By simply making a few changes in your lifestyle.

By not getting too much sun. By not smoking cigarettes. By not overeating. And by following a diet high in fiber and low in fat.

By simply doing these few things, you could drastically reduce your risk of getting cancer.

Sure, you could still get cancer.

But why not give yourself the odds against it?

Sophomore Kasten leads lady cagers

Paul Wehking
Sports Reporter

She may not be able to brag about her team's 2-21 record, but Renee Kasten, center for the UW-Stout women's basketball team, has had another fine season.

Kasten hails from Schofield, Wis., where she captained the D.C. Everest girl's basketball team to the conference championship in 1984.

Last year as a freshman, Kasten, a 6-footer, was named to the WWIAC (Wisconsin Women's Intercollegiate Athletic Conference) All-Conference team while averaging 12.9 points and 14.3 rebounds per game against conference opponents. Her overall averages for that year were 13.8 points and 14.2 rebounds per game. She was also named to the Kodak Fast Break All-American squad in her freshman year.

Kasten, now a sophomore at Stout, was one of the co-captains for the struggling Lady Blue Devils this season. Despite the team's record, she managed to have almost a repeat performance of her freshman basketball season. Kasten had an overall average of 13.8 points and 13.3 rebounds per game which is barely off her mark set last year.

Kasten has been nominated for All-Conference honors again this season and will probably receive the award, but finding a spot on the Kodak All-American team may be a little tougher this year. The reason for this is that for this award, freshmen are judged separately from upperclassmen. Being a sophomore puts her in the sophomore through senior category where she will be judged equally with all other nominees in this category.

As soon as statistical red tape can be sorted out, Kasten will find herself ranked 14th in the nation in Division III for rebounds with her 13.3 rebounds per game average. Kasten's teammates find comfort in her rebounding ability. "I'm confident that when I put up a shot Renee will be there to get the rebound. She works well under the boards," Co-captain Patti Cook said. "She is a good leader."

Even with her successes Kasten has remained humble, although that could be associated with the team's record. "I go out there (into games) looking for us to do well as a team, not for myself," Kasten said. Teammate Lisa Blume seemed to agree with this saying that Kasten is, "definitely a team player."

During games, Kasten tries to concentrate on basic fundamentals. "I try to stay in control, concentrate on my shot and position myself for rebounding," Kasten said. Kasten has an aggressive style of play that puts her at the top of the foul list for the team.

Kasten said she has mixed feelings about the potency of the women cagers. "It's tough coming from a good high school and then having two losing seasons here but if everyone comes back next year our experience together will help us do well."

The Lady Blue Devils are a young squad with only two seniors on this year's roster. The rest of the team is made up of primarily freshman and sophomores with Patti Cook being the only junior on the team. "We have the talent but we need more experience. There's a lot of individual talent on the team," Kasten said of her teammates.

The women's basketball team concluded their season last Saturday with a loss to conference opponent Platteville, 80-66.

Renee Kasten (34) leaped high in the air as she tried to bank the ball off the board for a basket. Kasten had a fine season this year, averaging 13.8 points and 13.3 rebounds per game. Last year Kasten was a WWIAC All-Conference player and was also named to the Kodak Fast Break All-American squad. (Stoutonia photo by Dan Banach)

Hard work pays off for All-American tracksters

Wendy Johnson
Sports Reporter

After many long and consistent hours of training, the UW-Stout men's and women's track teams' dedication finally paid off. On Feb. 21 and 22, at the NAIA National Indoor Track Championships, Sheila Geere placed second with a time 10 minutes, 47.95 seconds and Sue Meyer placed fourth with the time 10:49.77, both competing in the two mile. The Blue Devil men's relay team placed sixth in the two mile relay with a time 7:57.07.

The six runners made history, because it was the first time that all the Stout runners that went to nationals came back as All-Americans.

On Feb. 21 in Kansas City, Mo., the Stout women and men both had to race in the semis to qualify for finals the next day. Both Geere and Meyer broke school records just to compete at nationals. They also beat their personal records over the weekend.

Geere completed the race on Friday with a time of 10:50 and Meyer finished with a time of 11:07 in a different heat. Both made the finals on Saturday.

The next day the two Stout women started the race in the back of the pack. After the one mile mark, they had a time of approximately 5:27. Geere made a move through the pack, and gave leader Lynn Bouch, from UW-Milwaukee, some competition. The last half-mile they ran shoulder to shoulder, but Bouch finished first by less than a minute. When asked how she felt about her accomplishment, Geere commented, "It still hasn't hit me. I was surprised and happy. I never expected to challenge the first place runner."

Meyer made her move during the last three laps. She pulled ahead of five runners to move into third place, but lost the spot at the finish when Erin Gillespi leaned over the finish line two tenths before Meyer.

UW-Stout Cross Country Head Coach Dr. Louis Klitzke commented, "The women ran extremely well and finished very strong. It is a real accomplishment to run that hard two days in a row when usually we at least wait one week."

John Miller, UW-Stout women's head coach, commented, "It was a major accomplishment for both girls. We are very proud of them." This is the first time Stout has placed two girls in the top four in indoor track.

Meyer and Geere qualified for the NCAA Division III meet. This is the first time that Stout has had women in indoor track qualify. The women's indoor WWIAC finals is scheduled for March 21 and 22. Geere's personal goals for the conference is to win the two mile and place in the one mile. She hopes the team will place in the top six.

Meyer commented, "I'm concentrating more on the NCAA Division III meet, which is a week before, then on the conference meet."

The Blue Devil men placed sixth in the two mile relay with a time 7:57.07. Last year, the men also placed sixth in this relay. In the relay was Mike Todey, Steve Hoesschele, Eric Bretl and Paul Bons. They missed the school record by one second.

Doubling up, Bretl ran the 1000-yard race where he placed second in his heat. Unfortunately, he did not qualify for the finals on Saturday. Bretl said, "I'm not disappointed with my race. I felt I ran good, but I was disappointed with my heat because it was a slow heat."

Bons ran in the mile on Friday and his time in this race placed him in the finals. In Saturday's mile final race, he placed eighth with a time 4:18.4. The winning time was 4:08. Bons said, "I had hoped to have done better than eighth but I can not complain because I ran a good time. I enjoyed going to nationals and I would encourage anyone to set this as a great goal for themselves."

Students cite mall development proposal

Beth Reid
News Reporter

The proposal by a group of UW-Stout students to develop a mall area south of the Student Center received a wide range of response Thursday afternoon, March 27.

The proposal would develop the pedestrian mall by closing 4th St. and constructing parking areas north of Jarvis Hall. The Campus Grounds and Facilities Committee heard the proposal developed by Ann Huhn, Theresa Lembezeder and Steve Micoley who were working on an independent study under the advisement of instructor Magdalena Laszkiewicz.

A model of the area and several drawings were by the students to demonstrate the number of changes they recommended. The primary idea was the closing off of 4th St. "Our rationale for closing 4th St. is that right now it is quite a congested area," Micoley said. "We feel it poses quite a safety hazard with the amount of pedestrian traffic and cars driving through."

To replace the parking that would be lost by closing 4th St., the plan included the construction of a parking lot north of Jarvis Hall, which would contain 54 parking stalls.

More parking and convenient access to the nearby buildings would be provided by widening 13th Ave. and 3rd St. to provide angular rather than parallel parking. "Overall, our proposal would increase the available parking by 26 additional spaces," Micoley said.

Off-campus Senator Wes Stead found the proposed change unfeaseable. "It is unrealistic to close off 4th St. because it provides quick access to the surrounding buildings," Stead said. He suggested possibly reducing the amount of time that people are allowed to park there and increasing the turnover of cars allowed to park.

Student Center Director, Bob Johnson had no objection to closing off 4th St. while he recognized the need to maintain parking convenience in the area. "You can't say 'Don't close 4th St.,' because the street is not the issue, it's convenient parking we're concerned with. If they can close the street and still provide enough parking, then that's how you should look at the problem."

A second part of the plan was the addition of several pathways between buildings. "The pathways were designed in such a way as to create a sweeping effect," Lembezeder said, "rather than having the straight line paths." They also included the option of using different types of surface textures to make the pathways more attractive.

Lighting would be used along the pathways to offer additional safety at night. The lights would be approximately six feet high and would be used along all the paths. A change would be made in the type of street lighting that is currently used. A more angular type of light design was proposed, which the students thought would provide a more natural look.

> We tried to keep in mind the organic concepts. We didn't want to use a lot of heavy structures and concrete, but instead wanted to keep it free flowing.
> —Steve Micoley

A small two-level pond was the major addition proposed for the mall area. The upper level of the pond would be approximately five feet higher than the lower level and a slow waterfall would flow between the two levels.

The pond would be 12 to 18 inches deep, and would include a circulating and filtering system to help keep it clean. "Water provides a nice environment," Micoley said. "And by having two levels, the lower level offers sort of an escape from the surrounding activity."

The pond would include an open shelter area next to it for seating in the spring which would be closed in the winter and used more as a warming house for ice skaters. Additional seating would be added all around the pond area.

Additional seating in the mall would be to the southwest of the pond. The plan used this open greenspace to create natural seating, which is cut into the landscape and used wooden benches at various levels in the slope of the land.

"The natural seating was designed very well," Johnson said. "It makes good use of the open space

The student proposed pedestrian mall as shown in this model would close 4th St. to traffic, create a parking area north of Jarvis Hall and create a two level pond with a small waterfall. The proposal emphasized the organic concept. (Stoutonia photo by Jeff Bartels)

Scabies incidents reduced due to Health Center's treatment program

Karen Smith
News Reporter

UW-Stout's Health Center has significantly reduced the number of students suffering from scabies here this semester due to their treatment program.

Doctor Phil Schleifer of the Health Center said that the treatment program has gone beyond treating only those students having scabies. He said, "We have been trying to get roommates to come in as a precautionary measure and I think it has helped cut into the spreading of scabies."

He said the tricky part of treating scabies results from the fact that individuals have different tolerance levels for the disease. You could be infected for one month before you know you have it.

Schleifer said that last semester they saw four to five students a day who had scabies. This semester, the number is down to a couple of students a week.

The image of uncleanliness ascribed to all those suffering scabies is unaccurate according to Schleifer. "It does affect people who are very clean. Often it has nothing to do with cleanliness," he said.

Schleifer said of scabies patients themselves that, "A lot feel they are not clean. That isn't always the case. They'll still pick it up if they are clean," he said.

According to information distributed by the Health Center, scabies is a skin disease caused by an almost invisible organism, the "itch mite" (Sarcoptes Scabiei). The female mite burrows under the outermost layer of skin where she lays one to three eggs daily. In a few days the eggs hatch, and the larvae travel to the surface of the skin. When the female mite reaches maturity, she mates, burrows into the skin, and the cycle begins again.

The itching eruption on the skin is most likely to appear between the fingers, on the wrists, above the elbows, and along the beltline. Other areas can also be involved.

Scabies is highly contagious. It often spreads among school children quite rapidly, due to their close contact. In addition, family members, roommates, and intimate friends are all candidates for spread of scabies and infestation.

Usually scabies spreads by direct contact with another person who is infected. Exchanging clothing or sharing a bed or towels is also a means of spreading scabies.

The scabies do not "jump" from one person to another and does not survive very long in clothing or linens. However, any contact with someone who is afflicted is almost assurance of transmission.

Violence plagues West Bank

Nablus, West Bank-Violence broke out again on the West Bank as Zafer al Masri, the Israeli appointed Mayor of Nablus, was assassinated while on his way to his office. Two radical Palestinian factions, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine and the Abu Nidal group have claimed responsibility for the assassination. It is believed that Masri's assassination is the latest action in a series of struggles for control of power of the Palestine autonomy.

Racial violence continues

Johannesburg, South Africa-Racial violence continued as five blacks were found dead after riots, stonings, and firebombings. One black male approximately 26 years old was found charred beyond recognition with a burning tire around his neck in a Robertson ghetto approximately 60 miles east of Cape Town. Another black was allegedly killed by police shotgun blasts as he was throwing stones at their vehicle in Clermont.

Benzene found in seized cocaine

Washington D.C.-Benzene, a known cancer-causing agent that has been linked to leukemia, has been found in nearly half of the cocaine siezed in Florida raids in the last quarter of 1985 according to a report from the federal Drug Enforcement Agency (DEA). The benzene is being used to replace ether in the manufacturing of cocaine. Early in 1985 the DEA implemented steps to stop the sale of ether to drug manufacturers.

Defector's identity questioned

New York, New York-The Soviet sailor who jumped ship, and the Soviet sailor who said he had changed his mind about defecting may not be the same person according to photographs taken by a U.S. Navy lietenant. Miroslav Medvid, the seaman who jumped from the Soviet grain ship into the Mississippi River on Oct. 24, may not have been the man who said he wished to return to Russia. Sixty members of Congress have demanded a new investigation into the case.

Perspective

Welles is dead, yet Kane lives

Compiled by Paul D. Nelson

Anyone who has seen the movie Citizen Kane or is familiar with the story line would have to agree that press magnate Rupert Murdoch is probably the leading contender for the title role of Charles Foster Kane if a remake of the classic is ever done.

Murdoch, 54, a naturalized American born in Australia, started an exodus from London's legendary Fleet Street last month which will forever change the relationship between labor unions and the corporate structure in Great Britain.

The stage was set in the early 1980's when the Thatcher government passed two laws which reduced the power and influence of British labor: workers do not have to belong to a union to be employed and a union on strike cannot enlist the support of other unions.

Another British publisher, Eddy Shah, was the first to test the new revisions in the labor laws when he emerged the victor in a labor battle between his newspaper and several printers who walked off their jobs at his Northern England plant. The same tactics used by Shah were employed by the National Coal Board to break the lengthy miners strike which ended in the beginning of 1985.

Shah's newest literary endeavor, Today, will be Britain's first four-color and completely electronically produced daily newspaper. The entire staff of Today, including those who deliver the newspaper, will number a paltry 600.

After the successes Shah and the National Coal Board had in dealing with organized labor, Murdoch used the new precedents to justify the firing of his 6000 striking printers who worked on his four newspapers: the Times, Sunday Times, Sun, and News of the World. After the unprecedented treatment of Britain's powerful press unions, who have opposed the introduction of new technology for years, Murdoch moved his four London papers to an ultra-modern $140 million plant at Wapping, located a mile from Fleet Street.

Quoted in the March 3 issue of Time magazine as to how he felt after the controversial move, Murdoch said that he "[felt] like a man who has been on a life sentence and has just been freed. I feel wonderful."

Murdoch's bold move has cleared the way for many of his colleagues to shed similarly bloated staffs and modernize their operations to improve the quality of their publications and increase revenues. Thirteen of Britain's other major dailies and Sunday papers may follow suit and modernize in order to stay competitive with Murdoch and Shah.

Murdoch doubled the size and scope of his media empire last year when he purchased seven Metromedia television stations for $2 billion, a set of business-oriented magazines from Ziff-Davis for $350 million, and 20th Century-Fox for $575 million.

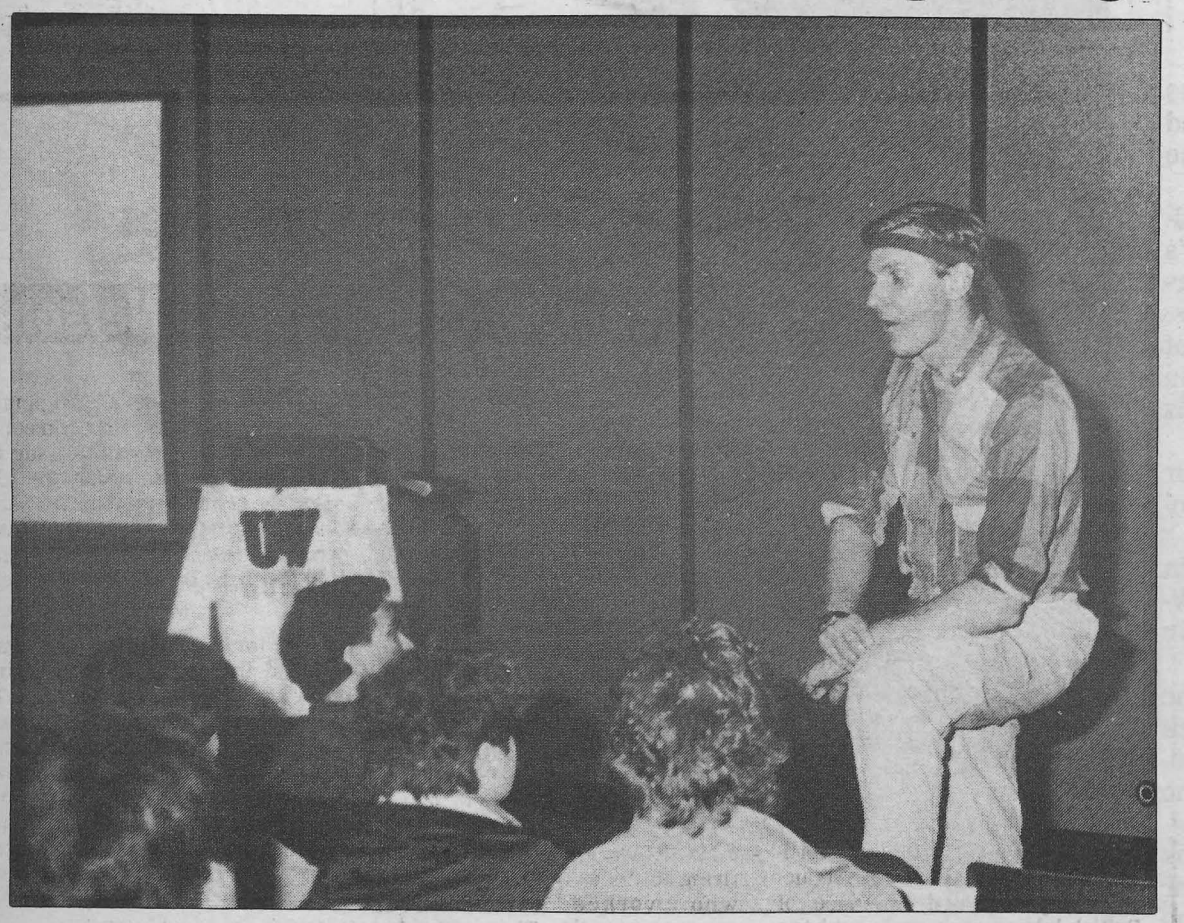
Muscala defines spring break behavior



Bob Muscala offered his expertise on sex and altered states to Stout students looking forward to an out of this world experience during spring break. The talk was designed to give students enough information to protect themselves during the week long revelry. (Stoutonia photo by Brad Kautzer)

Pat Miles
News Reporter

Robert Muscala's presentation "Sun, Sex, and Other Altered States" was a chemical triptik for students anticipating orgies and chemical over indulgence during spring break.

The event, sponsored by Stout's Alcohol Program, informed students how to have fun and be safe while on spring break. Robert Muscala is the founder and Clinical Services Coordinator of the Muscala Chemical Health Center in Minneapolis.

Muscala claims credit for coining the term "chemical health" in 1975. Since that time he has researched the basis of the existence of chemical health/illness and clinical applications to healing disabilities in this area.

Muscala was invited to Stout by Judy Tomesh who is the Program Coordinator of the Alcohol Program and also a counselor in the Counseling Center.

"I asked Bob to come and approach the subject in a non-preachy way," Tomesh stated, "We recognize that students will go to 'Sun Country' and be faced with choices about drugs and sex. The presentation will give them good solid information to help them make choices about drugs and sex."

Muscala expressed that people use drugs to alter their state of mind. He continued to explain that people can chemically alter their state in two ways. People can alter their state by use of exogenous chemicals or by manipulating endogenous chemicals.

Muscala defined exogenous chemicals as drugs that come from outside the body. Such things that must be swallowed, injected, and so on. Whereas, endogenous chemicals are chemicals produced inside the body. Muscala believes we can control these chemicals with our minds.

With that thought in mind, Muscala began the audio-visual portion of his presentation. The slides consisted of pictures of beautiful vacation areas and activities. The pictures showed sandy beaches, blue sea, palm trees, and people sailing and having fun in all sorts of ways. The music that was played simultaneously was the type played often during parties. The closing song was Huey Lewis and the News' "I Want A New Drug."

Muscala used the slides and music to set the mood for vacationing. He proceeded to describe things to take and gave hints of what to watch out for on trips. With this, he handed out a check list of items for a spring break trip for both men and women. The list included things from lotion and clothing to types of contraceptives to take along.

Reaction to nonexistent enemies American foreign policy tradition

Catherine A. Schneider
News Reporter

Calling it "stupid, self-defeating, blind, and dead wrong," Jonathan Kwitny proceeded to voice his displeasure with the past 35 years of U.S. foreign policy in his speech Tuesday evening.

In his opening remarks, Kwitny said that U.S. foreign policy is devastating to other countries and to the citizens of the U.S. He believes that the policy is set up to serve a very small, yet powerful group of businessmen and political leaders.

Kwitny stated that our foreign policy is based on a "Soviet or Chinese threat that just isn't there." He went on to say, "No country has been more dominated by the Soviet Union than the United States because every move we make is based on what we anticipate the Soviets are doing."

In his first example of business manipulating government to protect it's own interests, Kwitny cited the government of Iran in 1953. At that time, Iran was experiencing its' first and only democracy. The president of Iran was trying to develop a free market. This move would have benefited both Americans and Iranians, but it would have cost the large oil companies such as Exxon and Mobil to lose a fortune, Kwitny said.

According to Kwitny, Exxon and Mobil persuaded the government to intervene and to rationalize their actions to the American public by telling them that the Iranians were revolting against their president out of love for their former Shah. In the end, the unpopular Shah was returned to power and the large oil companies retained their monopolies. Kwitny believes that if the U.S. had not intervened, the oil crisis and the loss of Iranian oil would not have occurred.

According to Kwitny, one of the leading reporters who first reported the situation the way the government wanted, later wrote a classified report that contained proof of the government's deception.

Kwitny also used the example of the United Fruit Company and the government of Guatemala. When the president of Guatemala wanted to permit free trade unions, establish a minimum wage, create a competitive electric utility, and break up the land monopoly, United Fruits bribed the undersecretary of state to persuade Eisenhower to overthrow the president of Guatemala. When the American backed invasion began, the president of Guatemala begged the U.S. for assistance. When he was refused, he turned to Czechoslavakia for supplies. The U.S. then used photographs of these transactions to convince the American public that the Soviets were backing the government of Guatemala, Kwitny said.

Kwitny cited the U.S. involvement in the 1957 Lebanon elections, the fabrication of the Northern Vietnam Gulf of Tonkin resolution to get America into the Vietnam War, and the El Salvador "white pages" as further incidents in which the public was deceived by the government.

Kwitny believes that we must rethink our entire approach to foreign policy and quit basing it on an imaginary Soviet threat. "We must look at what our legitimate interests are," he said. According to him, those interests are securing ourselves from attack and establishing peaceful commerce.

To strengthen the U.S. as both a domestic and an international power, Kwitny said that the U.S. should place itself in a postion to become a "trading power that any country will want to deal with." To help insure this, he said, "We should make sure that their leaders haven't been shot at with an American gun."

Writer Jonathan Kwitny told his audience how American business intervened in foreign policy decisions for the past 35 years. He pointed out how America has continually been responding to a threat that just isn't there. (Stoutonia photo by Jeff Bartels)

When less is more

The $100 million in real cuts the UW-System budget has suffered the past decade has led students, faculty and university administrators to seriously consider the detrimental effects on the System.

Combine these budget cuts with the System wide enrollment increases experienced these past 10 years and it's easy to see where the stress is coming from which is hurting morale amongst both faculty members and students.

UW faculty members have complained for years about their low pay and many fine professors have left Wisconsin in search of an academic climate which properly rewards them for their efforts.

UW students didn't speak up on the topic until their pocket books were threatened by the announced tuition increase for next year.

The question heard from students throughout the System is, "Why pay more to receive less?" As consumers of UW-System education we have the right to demand more in relation to our increased tuition rates.

A new system of goals is in order which emphasizes the quality of the education over the quantity. It's hard to tell if System President Kenneth Shaw recognizes these problems when he says, "We have too many students who want our services. And that's a good problem to have."

It's a good problem for the System if it wants to overlook students' needs. The problem is far from a good one for students. Students must make System administrators and the state legislature aware of how this problem has damaged the quality of their educational experience.

The decline has been especially bad at UW-Stout since the faculty pay scale here is among the lowest in the system. Not surprisingly, it has become awfully difficult to attract talented young professors. The attrition of Stout professors to better paying schools has also been documented.

A method for attracting the skilled professors needed here may result from redefining the methods used for determining if a professor is doing an adequate job.

An accurate review of faculty performance by faculty members with the help of student input would allow for an effective streamlining of Stout faculty opening up faculty positions to those who meet Stout's need to help complete the students total education.

Students must communicate with faculty members and administrators to reach an agreement on the educational purpose at Stout. Students need to assert their rights to experience an educational process that not only will help them advance in their careers, but also helps them assume a valuable role in the decision making processes that determines their destiny.

The major concern that Wisconsin legislators and administrators need to address isn't so much the tuition increases but rather the perception among students that they are receiving a lesser quality education than they had bargained for.

The Bottom Line

The rest of the story

Rich Brueckner

Hello Americans. You know what the news is. In a moment you'll see the rest of the story. But first, a word from Columbia.

"These perfectly ripe coffee beans are hand picked by Juan Valdez. The result is pure Columbian coffee served by the finest restaurants and snobbish French trains."

Did you ever wonder what Juan Valdez does during the off season? It turns out that he moonlights as a member of the US-backed Contra forces in Nicaragua. The Reagan administration has been searching for a gimmick to get Congress to give the "freedom fighters" 100 million dollars in additional aid. Now they have just the kind of hero they need. Imagine a soon-to-be-tortured civilian's delight at being hand picked by Juan Valdez.

You might have seen one of those The Most Debated Question of Our Time: Was There Really a Holocaust? pamphlets around campus this week. I had always thought that the most debated question of out time was: Does Bruce Springsteen suck?

The Supreme Court handed down a defeat to anti-pornographers this week. It was ruled that communities can't legislate against X-rated theaters on the grounds of sexual discrimination. The victors celebrated by projecting an old Sylvester Stallone porno flick on the side of Phyllis Schafly's house.

Closer to home, the United Council recently recommended a "sin tax" to the state legislature. It is logical to assume that much revenue could be generated by taxing sin. IRS confessionals could be the biggest craze since compulsive drug tests.

Civil liberties seem to be questionable in Merton, Wis., where high school students suspected of alcohol or drug use get a choice of undergoing a urine test or enrolling in a counseling program; those who do neither are suspended.

This is the kind of thinking that reactionary individuals really get into. Kids should be thrown straight into detox the first time they burp or say something like, "totally awesome".

What's worse is that the Wisconsin Marijuana Political Action Committee had the audacity to distribute pot legalization propaganda outside the school. The principal confiscated the material on the premise that free speech has nothing to do with demon weed.

Meanwhile, the State Senate is considering gambling and lottery resolutions. Current laws hit home last week with the cancellation of Milnes Vegas Night, the proceeds of which were to go to the Kinship program.

District Attorney Michael Furnstahl was right to put the kibosh on this heinous crime. If those Kinkids get the help they need, they might not turn into the skum-of-the-Earth delinquents that provide him job security.

It's a good thing that Rocky Rococo's "Dorm Floor Rivalry" also fell to this state law. It was getting to the point where the term "dorm butt" was reaching epic proportions.

Rock bands like DCver and Slant are now playing downtown on a regular basis. This is great news for those of us who enjoy our music with massive dosages of gin and quinine.

MTV recently showed every episode of The Monkees. I asked non-trad News Editor Tim Hopkins what the program meant to his generation. His recollection of its impact seemed to be overshadowed by that of Lancelot Link: Secret Chimp.

As you bask in the sun this spring break, remember that Ferdinand Marcos is on his own beach in Hawaii. This may only be his first stop since the wrinkled despot owns a lot of real-estate in this country that he doesn't pay taxes on. Who ever said that nice guys finish last?

And now you know the rest of the story. Richard Brueckner——Good day.

Subject: Spring break and other alternatives are necessary outlets to release pent-up stress

Sten Pierce, 48, assistant professor of physical education and athletics has taught at UW-Stout for 21 years including the psychology of stress and self defense. He has coached various sports for 27 years including football, wrestling and track. He has been the golf coach for the past five years.

STOUTONIA: DO YOU FEEL THAT THERE IS A REAL NEED FOR SOME PEOPLE TO TAKE A SPRING BREAK?

PIERCE: I think so. Everybody handles their task, which with college students is learning, differently. Everybody's lifestyle is different. Some are working. Some are just going to school. Everybody is different and so are their needs for buffers or stress management. I'm certainly sure that you'll always have a percentage of students that generally need to get away.

STOUTONIA: WHAT ARE SOME OF THE NEEDS?

PIERCE: We Americans get bored easily. If the things [we do] get routine, like maybe school, then to do something to relieve that boredom, we need a change. Some people will go out and buy something for themself.... I think the spring break comes along really to solve that. We need a little change in pace, even though our stressors, let's say our learning process, and our schooling has been okay.

STOUTONIA: WHAT DOES A TRIP AWAY PROVIDE FOR A PERSON WHO HAS STRESS?

PIERCE: Well, some people would probably say that it's an escape from reality. Sometimes we just get away not thinking about our problems and our stressors for a while. That might be an advantage. I think our egos sometimes are scratched a little bit, with just the fact that we have gone south to Florida, we come back with a tan and parade the tan. Some people's egos need those scratches. We still have a system. People still need to be recognized. They need to have their share of wins and successes and achievements. Ego is a factor. You have to pay attention to it. I think many kids probably go, so that they can say that they went to

Replace Kalina's 'Crash and Burn' with comics

I'm writing you in response to Matt Kalina's article criticizing the Stout radio station WVSS.

I believe his article did have some points to be taken seriously. The news department at WVSS does leave something to be desired. This week I found out the limited budget of the station might prevent the campus from getting the news wanted. Also I can see why he would think that the compact disc player would be the only thing on the air. It is awfully easy to put a disc in and just let it play. I hardly feel this would happen though.

This is where I stop, for the rest of his article was totally uncalled for. In saying that WVSS is "striving us with unprofessionalism for just too long" is total hypocrisy. Who is he to say that they are unprofessional? The article sounds like it was written 15 minutes before the deadline was due. After an article like this, it seems his credibility is in question. I think it would be an improvement if The Stoutonia replaced his weekly segments with a section of comics.

SSA not to blame for lack of filled minority positions

In your article "SSA Ignores Minority Student Representation," you declare that minority students and women students are "being denied opportunity to have impact on campus politics." That's absolute bull. While it could be said that the SSA's promotion of the positions of minority affairs and women's affairs hasn't been effective in the past; it is not fair, nor accurate to say that the SSA hasn't "made an honest effort to bring the minority viewpoint into campus politics." Your article implies that the SSA has deliberately avoided promotion of these positions and their associated issues. Documented evidence just does not support that allegation. The editor of The Stoutonia, as well as the student body as a whole, (especially minority students and women students) should know that the SSA has attempted to promote these positions (with little assistance, barring last weeks editorial, from The Stoutonia.)

The minority affairs and women's affairs positions represent a unique opportunity for women students and minority students to actively pursue promoting their special concerns and perspectives. With exception to Tracey Lea Landis, and Andrew Kumar's dedicated involvement, active participation could be questioned despite SSA promotion of these key positions. Despite this lack of participation, I have witnessed the members of the SSA make deliberate efforts to consider issues as they affect women and minorities on campus. Is this representation adequate? It appears that it is since an atmosphere of complacency by the groups addressed here seems to prevail.

It's easy to point the finger at members of the Student Senate when one believes issues aren't being addressed on campus. But the Student Senate, like any other form of democratic-type representation relies on active participation by those it represents. I urge all students, not only minority students and women students, to actively participate in your student government. Keep in mind that the SSA is a formally recognized mechanism for promoting student concerns and it is as effective as its active membership! In the "big picture," a weak student

Switching channels

Tim Hopkins

As the puppies (post urban professionals) begin making their mark on the world, it's time to step back, review the facts to make needed corrections in our chosen lifestyle.

Television has inundated our lives to the extent that sleeping and working are the only common day events having greater prominence.

Television was invented more than a quarter century ago with the hopes of many fantastic things to come. What we continually get is the inanity that works like a detergent washing all serious thought out from our minds while letting us chew on something meaningless. "Chewing gum for the mind" is what Woody Allen aptly called television back when he created Sleeper.

Sleeper told America about its dangerous addiction to television. The world was ruled by a leader who pervaded the airwaves. Reminds me of Ronald Reagan except in this case the leader was dead, but was made to look alive for the people since chaos was feared in the event his death become public knowledge.

Ronald Reagan has been intellectually dead for years so the similarities may be greater than I first thought. All I know about the man is that he enjoys weekly vacations in California, the state where TV comes to life.

Back to the movie. Sleeper showed people becoming insensitive to one another as we were ruled by the TV dictator. Sex as we know it was legally reduced to a 30 second experience in the orgasmatron. Human intimacy was viewed as a threat to order.

Today the focus is on sexual performance rather than on emotional closeness. When was the last time with a guy/gal that you sat down and had a friendly discussion with them for a long enough time that you can feel, "I really know that person?"

Sex has come to be used as a drug in many cases where individuals temporarily get to forget their problems. Television performs the same role in most lives today.

Watch the busy students in the Student Center who don't have time to do much more than study and party. You'll see a group who spends at least five hours a week watching their favorite soap opera(s). Soap opera is an apt title since these daily dramas merely wash your mind of relevant thought.

A large crowd showed up to observe the news on the Space Shuttle Challenger explosion but this minor event was outdone by the popularity of watching Tad and Hillary's wedding on All My Children.

The average American doesn't know who their own Congressman is. We do know a lot about Larry Bird, Joe Montana, Pete Rose, et al. Why can't we focus our attention on the consequential people in the world rather than on the multitude of talented athletes presented before us each weekend?

Television has made us passive as a people and that's scary. There are more than 30 channels to choose from. There has got to be something to watch on there. Just turn the tube on, open a beer and sit back and vegetate.

Television is nonparticipatory and we are becoming nonparticipatory as a people. We don't vote. We can't afford to go out. We can only afford to be entertained. We've even got an entertaining national newspaper, USA Today, which hardly informs but it sure looks pretty.

Films these past years haven't been artistic but rather they have been violently entertaining such as The Terminator and Rambo.

My friends are left feeling empty after viewing sensitive films that explore the depth of human emotion. They can relate to the cyborg Arnold Schwarzeneger killing people efficiently as any good cyborg would. It's when people stop shooting and killing and start talking and relating to each other that they change the channels.

My fear is that we are unaware of how passively uninvolved television has made us. We will continue wasting valuable time and energy watching shows that deprive us of our greatest human qualities while making conformists of everyone.

Dunn County Kinship a success; Stout students a valuable asset

Karen Smith
News Reporter

Dunn County Kinship, a program designed to help chilren coming from troubled homes, relies greatly on UW-Stout students for it's success.

Kinship is an operation similar to big brothers. Volunteers are matched up with children who come from single-parent families, are troubled, or that just need a friend. Volunteers agree to a year commitment to see the child every week, and engage in some activity that both enjoy.

There are no costs involved since 40% of the budget comes from United Way, and the rest from activities such as a food stand.

The children are between the ages of 6-17, with the average being 10. Most are brought in by their parents, although some are referred by their teachers, school principal, or by social services. Yet, everyone is there because they want to be.

Volunteers undergo a screening test before they can work for Kinship. Once accepted, they are matched with a child that has similar interests, and who he/she can give the most guidance and support to.

80% of the volunteers are Stout students. Couples sometimes volunteer their time as well, which can be very beneficial to children who come from broken homes. There are presently 62 matches, yet, 33 children are presently waiting for a volunteer.

Sue Noye, the director of Kinship, has a very positive attitude about the program, although she wishes it could receive more recognition. "Kinship provides a one on one relationship for a child with a special need," Noye says. "The volunteers can make quite a difference in a childs life". Yet, she also mentioned that volunteers are desperatly needed.

Kinship is very beneficial to the parent, as well. Most of the children are troubled in some manner, and they are being given special help with no cost to the parent. It also gives the children a chance to participate in activities that the parent doesn't have time to do with them. "The parents have been very supportive," Noye mentioned.

Noye also mentioned that most of the children stayed in Kinship. "The kids love it". "It's special attention just for you," she added. "The children and volunteers develop a very special and close relationship."

Priscilla Schmidt, a junior at Stout, is presently volunteering her time for Kinship. She works with a

Spring break in the bargain basement

Matt Kalina

For those of you who are not invading the two collegiate meccas of spring break hedonism, Daytona Beach and Fort Lauderdale, or plundering the partying havens of South Padre Island, Texas or somewhere in California to embrace yourself in heaps of merciless festivities in the unbeatable combo of surf and sun, beaches and bars, you can do the next best thing. You can have your fair share of mucho bueno times too, for cheap.

You can blueprint a simulated spring break and remain at home for less than the price of a beach ball.

The cheap route may have a style all its own, being sans prestige and leaving no favorable impressions on your friends, but it's cheap.

First bolt over to the nearest hardware store and go dumpster-diving for large sheets of cardboard, preferably from corrugated shipping boxes for major appliances, like refrigerators. Cart them home, and slice them up to resemble palm trees. Plant this tropical foilage in stategic areas outside the house in the snow. If this grove of synthetic vegetation does not astound your neighbors and strike them with deep admiration, it's guaranteed to make them take notice.

For a low-budget thrill, find another straggler who couldn't afford a real spring break, and toss a Frisbee with the destitute among the glaciers melting in your backyard. Try not to let the six inches of slush bother you — pretend it's the lap of the ocean surf. And if you can't afford an authentic Hackey-Sack for some satisfactory outdoor fun, kick around an old bean bag chair.

Don't forget, you're a cheapskate, and it's nothing to be proud of. You're on a meager shoestring budget.

Next, while you're pitching bread crumbs to sickly pigeons and to stray blackbirds that were too stupid to fly south for the winter, pretend you're on a choice beach feeding seagulls.

You can imagine the fun that will commence as you spread some sand in your shower to add that ocean shore realism to your house. Do anything to keep your mind on the big break. Plaster the walls with posters of Florida.

While you are on your phony break, it is considered customary to send some postcards to your buddies. Glamourize the tackiness principle by sending a picture of the Menomin Lake with the caption, "Wish you were here."

For a Caribbean effect, twang out some Bob Marley — "In this life, in this oh sweet life, we're coming in from the cold."

Lavishly smear your body with suntan oil. If you don't have any fancy lotion, Crisco will do.

Grab your shades and sandals, whip on some shorts, a cut-off tee, run outside to the cardboard palm trees and the stupid blackbirds, and set yourself down in a lawn chair.

Go to the local mall and hang out. It's just like the beach — crowded. Let the suburbanite masses gawk, point and drool just like at the beach. Which way to muscle beach? Eighteen hundred miles south, bud.

Because all your friends deserted you to worship the sun elsewhere, you'll have to resort to inviting some townies over for a party, a beach party. Tell them that they can get in to your beachfront condo absolutely free if they bring the beer.

Appoint yourself as the sponsor and judge of a wet T-shirt contest. Here's how you do it. Right as the townies enter the tropics of your house, douse them with pitchers of their beer. If they get steamed, just tell them, "Hey, I can do this, it's spring break."

Obnoxiousness will become the norm as the townies drain the beer and virtually level your ocean side pad. Expect a high jerk count, and assume full responsibility for broken windows, all because you're a cheapskate. But stay cool, this is the tax that is levied upon you by not taking a true blue break. The best you can do is snag a cool beer (if there's any left) and fantasize about going south next year.

What really are you losing anyway by kicking back in the Northland? Although you are missing out on the barroom contests in genuine spring break territory, where revelers pour it down and take it off, you have the technology to create your own disorderly social behavior. You can still drink too much and pass out on the hood of your car just like some do on the beach. If you have a balcony, you can fall to your demise just like four breakers did in Daytona Beach last year.

Unbelievably, there is an actual benefit to a counterfeit spring break — you don't have to adjust to the culture shock like some people do when they return to the North.

SSA fails to represent minorities, promote posts

In the last issue of The Stoutonia (Feb. 27) you had two articles, one in the editorial which was good, and one entitled "SSA regrets lack of minority involvement." The second was a bit misleading if one expected to find out about minority involvement, since there were only two short paragraphs that spoke about the title. I think that the article should have been expanded to indicate "why" there is a lack of minority involvement in SSA or anywhere else in campus-sponsored committees.

Take the position of the affairs representative for instance. First of all, the students have never been approached by the SSA president to be convinced that this position is one that will have support of the senate.

Secondly, the procedure for appointing a minority affairs representative is questionable. Was there minority involvement in setting up the criteria to select such a person, or was it assumed that "you all" knew what was best for minority students? As I told Miss Prange when she approached me about the minority affairs position, I would rather she approached the students directly and sell them on the idea. She sent a letter.

Another factor of why minority students do not become involved is that when students attempt to become involved in leadership positions via their own organization, they are continually harassed and told they are ineffective leaders. This, without anyone bothering to find out about these leaders. Is it then to be assumed that these remarks are made because they are minority? The Rainbow organization has been under fire since the academic year began, for one thing or another, mostly what we consider petty things. Our funds were frozen in the most important month that we make our contributions, namely Black History Month.

For the sake of carrying out our activities, we compiled with the demands on us by representatives to the SSA, and as of this date, our funds have not been unfrozen, or if they have, no one had acknowledged this fact. This is the kind of stuff that our students have to put up with, and communication is always one-sided — they demand, we comply. Frankly, our students, as well as we at the Center, are fed up with this discriminatory attitude. The student government should be ashamed of themselves for not representating all of the students! We will be watching you Mr. Editor to see if you are truly concerned about the lack of minority involvement in SSA, or merely paying lip service before you throw in your bid to become the next SSA president.

Defeat council by ward

To the Editor:

I'm going to vote "No" on the "Councilmen by Wards" referendum.

Why? I have five reasons.

1. I want to have an equal voice in government. The 1982 and 1984 elections for county board ward 7 had no candidate and the election was won with three write in votes.

In 1984 Ward 4 had no candidate and the election was won with 13 write in votes.

In both years, the candidates in wards 1, 2, 9 and 10 needed over 175 votes to win election.

(Two elections have been held since redistricting. The vote for County Board was the only local issue in every ward. The voters in wards 3, 4 and 7, many of whom are students, have expressed little interest in local affairs. Therefore, they seldom vote for candidates for local office.)

I would like to emphasize that I am not trying to say that the Supervisors elected as write in candidates are inadequate, they have served responsibly in an often thankless job.

My argument is that the Supervisor from Ward 7 represents, through no fault of his own, three voters. My Supervisor in Ward 10 represented 341 voters in 1982 and 175 voters in 1984.

This is not equal representation!

Would this same situation be true if the race were for City Council?

There is one factor which might make a change. City Council pays $100 a month whereas County Board members get only per diem for meetings (and some committees.)

However, before we went to an "at large" council representation there were not only problems in finding people to run for office but there was a similar voting pattern. One alderman would represent 60 voters, while another would represent 250 voters. We have no reason to expect a change.

2. At present, if I have a problem, all seven council members feel they should listen to me if they want my vote. Under a ward system only one council person would consider she/he had to listen. I would be out of luck if she/he did not approve of my idea.

3. An 11 member council will cost an additional $6,000 per year in salaries.

Premarriage seminar offered for couples

Maria Wagner
News Reporter

Three quarters out of each school year the Ministry offers a Premarriage Seminar for engaged and dating couples. The latest of these six-week courses was just completed last week by a group of 46 engaged people.

According to Bill Siedlecki, a member of the training team this quarter, the course gives couples the opportunity to go through premarriage "training" to strengthen their present relationship. Also, a premarriage course is required by some of the churches involved in this community such as, Our Savior's Lutheran Church, Peace Lutheran Church, Christ Lutheran Church and St. Joseph's Catholic Church. Most Catholic dioceses also require the course.

The group traditionally meets two hours each week for six weeks, however because Super Bowl Sunday fell on the first Sunday this quarter, they only met five weeks.

The sessions are conducted by a group of six people with a married couple typically from Our Savior's and St. Joe's. Rev. Tim Megorden, a leader of the seminar and member of Campus Ministry, said that the married couples are diverse; some being married for a short time and others for a long time but all being at different stages in their relationships. Therefore, couples attending the sessions are introduced to different role models other than their parents and have different ideas, thoughts and prospectives shared with them.

The seminar is broken into sessions, each addressing different issues within a marriage such as understanding of self and partner, dialoque in marriage, financial issues, in-laws, family planning, children, sexuality, spirituality, and the actual wedding ceremony.

Each session begins with basic comments and discussion from take-home questions that the couple was to fill out together and discuss after the last session. The weeks discussion is conducted by a different group each time to introduce different attitudes and points of view. Each session has an opening and closing prayer, but, according to Siedlecki, the sessions are not highly religious.

> Some have to struggle with issues but it usually brings them together.
> —Father Al Slowiak
> Campus Ministry

According to Megorden and Father Al Slowiak, also a seminar leader and member of Campus Ministry, the motivation requiring a premarriage course was due to the difficulties families were experiencing, illustrated, for example, by an increasing divorce rate. Approximately 10 years ago a premarriage course of some type was made a state policy for Catholics in Wisconsin. Protestants now strongly encourage premarriage counseling.

Megorden said the seminar is to be "proactive; prevention oriented- not to answer slick, clean, clear-cut questions, but so they can question themselves." Megorden also feels that the seminar helps couples discover what they really need from each other as well as each others hopes and dreams.

According to Megorden, the wedding is to celebrate the marriage relationship that has developed for a couple and to affirm God's presence in their relationship, but it does not make the marriage. A misconception is that the course is a "test" that the couple must take to see if the church will marry them. Instead, it gives couples the opportunity to discuss and, if necessary, struggle with issues they may not have addressed otherwise.

Slowiak said "Couples get out what they put into it. Some have to struggle with issues but it usually brings them closer together." According to Megorden, the seminar highlights love, forgiveness and commitment, but is not to try to market a formula for everybodies happy marriage.

Scabies

Schleifer indicated that scabies is as easily treated as it is acquired and he urged that anyone suffering from the symptoms related to scabies not delay treatment.

The only way to find out whether or not you have scabies is to see a physician. A red, itchy rash, typical of scabies, is very common in other skin disorders, too. In addition to the linear burrows that appear between the fingers, on the elbows, hands, wrists, or other susceptible areas, intense itching occurs particularly at night.

The treatment for scabies is effective and easy. A lotion or creme is prescribed by the doctor along with antiseptic soap for bathing with. Treatment is so effective that scabies is almost always diminished within twelve hours. However, the itch may last four to six weeks.

Unfortunately, there is no immunity from scabies. However, with a second infestation the symptoms show up much faster, so it will be easier to diagnose and treat before the disease may spread undetected to others.

The easiest way to keep scabies under control at Stout is to follow a few simple precautionary measures. These include good personal hygiene, wearing clean clothes, and not sharing clothing with others. The most important thing to do is to see a physician immediately if any skin irritation begins to occur.

child who comes from a single-parent family. She is very happy with what she is doing. "Kinship is really good for a small community. It gives the kids something to do," Schmidt said. "It's a lot of fun," she added. Some of there activities include going to concerts, ice skating, and going out to eat.

Jeff Schaus, another Stout student volunteer, also enjoys his work. He works with a boy who is having a hard time growing up, and just needs some guidance and confidence. "We always do activities that both of us enjoy," Schaus says. He also thinks very highly of the Kinship program. "People take a lot of care in working with the children," Schaus said. "We don't do it because it's a job, but because we want to."

There is also a Kinship club here on campus, made up of student volunteers. They meet the first Wednesday of every month, and plan two to three activities a year for the kids.

There are also monthly activities, such as going to the ice capades or having a rollerskating party. Each year Circle K puts on an excellent Christmas party for them, as well.

Advertising heats up with Dr Pepper blitz

Kelly Cohorst
News Reporter

If you have been looking for an out of this world advertising campaign, the Dr Pepper Company has just come up with a year long campaign that combines entertainment and advertising. Dr Pepper is known for some of the soft drink industry's most "Out of the Ordinary" advertising.

It is breaking new ground with this year's campaign. Dr Pepper is trying to build on the "Hold out for the Out of the Ordinary" equity while sharpening its focus on the 12-to 34-year-old audience for brand Dr Pepper, and women 12-to-39 for Diet Dr Pepper with a dynamic, contemporary approach.

An important focus of the company's efforts is their push for the newly renamed Diet Dr Pepper (formerly Sugar Free Dr Pepper). The product also has a new theme line, "Diet Dr Pepper, the taste for Out of the Ordinary Bodies." The theme ties in with advertising for brand Dr Pepper while conveying product benefits to a diet-conscious target.

Among Dr Pepper television commercials airing this year viewers will see company President John Alvers in a television "burst" this month where he offers to give away millions of cans of Diet Dr Pepper with a toll- free telephone number.

In the "Godzilla Too" commercial, the Godzilla character, who made a successful debut in 1985, returns with a girlfriend: a tempermental femme fatale monster named Ms. Zilla. Naturally, he wins her affections with a Diet Dr Pepper.

Another unique twist is found in the Out of the Ordinary persona of Dr. Ruth Westheimer, noted sex therapist and talk show host. In a spoof of her trademark format, in a series of "Good Soda" spots she responds to callers with some unusual diet soda problems.

> Within a two week period we are extending this unprecedented offer to 45 million families, half of all the families in the United States.
> —John Albers

Fans of Fritz Lang's classic 1926 movie, "Metropolis," will enjoy the commercial in which the adventurous Space Cowboy and his side kick are searching for something different on Colapolis, a planet where the boredom of cola has become a way of life. After a colabot attack and an encounter with the Cola Wizard, the two discover the long lost secret of Colapolis and the secret of never being bored again. . . Dr Pepper.

In another spot, titled "Cola Wars," based on the popular Mad Max movie, has Space Cowboy and his sidekick stumble upon the planet Dullzon, a vast wasteland with nothing but the remnants of a fast-food restaurant.

They are confronted by a gang of cola-drinking warriors engaged in their favorite pastime: drinking Clone Cola and harassing the innocent waitress. Luckily, our heroes give her the courage to stand up for her convictions and go for something different . . .an ice-cold Dr Pepper.

The year long advertising strategy will stress continuity with commericals slated for top-rated radio network programs, women's magazines, MTV and movie theaters, in addition to the company's own syndicated television program, the "Canned Film Festival," filmed for late-night viewing. The series, hosted by Larraine Newman of "Saturday Night Live" fame, features the "best of the worst" genre of movie classics.

Dr Pepper is not a cola or a root beer. It is a blend of 23 flavors which creates a distinctive product that no other company has successfully copied in over a century.

As America's number-one-selling non-cola soft drink, Dr Pepper comprises about seven percent of the total U.S. industry share of soft drink sales. It is the undisputed leader in the category of pepper-type soft drinks and commands a 93 percent share of that segment, (according to Beverage Industry and Beverage Digest).

In Dallas, Texas the Dr Pepper Co. wants the 63 percent of all Americans who have never tasted Diet Dr Pepper to discover it. So, in the boldest marketing step ever undertaken by the Dallas-based soft drink manufacturer, the firm is offering to give away 45 million cans over a two-week period.

"Within a two-week period, we are extending this unprecendented offer to 45 million households, half of all families in the United states," says Albers. "This campaign is the single largest effort in the history of the Dr Pepper Company. We are convinced that once consumers try Diet Dr Pepper, they'll buy it," Albers said. He indicated the offer may be expanded to reach a total of 85 million households.

With its' new name, Diet Dr Pepper becomes a more clearly positioned brand in the diet category. It will be interesting to see if the new brand name combined with the intense advertising campaign has the desired effect.

Florida. In some people's case, they feel that that makes them somebody. We have to go away and do those things to go be somebody. It's something that isn't on a daily basis. It gives us a chance to bring that tan back or maybe go and meet somebody down there, strike up a new relationship. I don't think any young person rules that out. You might meet somebody that you haven't met before and that would be stimulating and exciting. Even though it might not last, it was part of the process of our development, of our personalities, of our relationships that I think we all need.

STOUTONIA: HOW LONG DO YOU THINK A VACATION WILL RELIEVE THE STRESS SOMEONE HAS BUILT UP?

PIERCE: There is always the reality that you have to come back. What you do is you put a break in the continuation of the stressors that you experience in school. You break them away so that you go and do other things. That trip to Florida might be very stressful. You might have car problems. The weather might be lousy. You might get in a fight with somebody down there. You might, with uncivilized behavior, end up in jail. It may cost you a hundred and fifty bucks more than you anticipated, and you haven't got it, so you got a money stress problem when you get back. How am I going to pay my rent? It can really cause you some delayed problems when you get back. Hopefully I think everybody goes in the spring hoping that everything is going to be rather pleasant. You could come back feeling very tired, very broke, very upset. So there is no real guarantees that when you decide to do something that's a little change inyour lifestyle that the results are always going to be positive or pleasant. It's a different stimulus on you, and it takes you away from your other concerns and stresses. It frees you up a little in your life. The experience might have been rather negative, but you could still cope with this problem because it's [far] away, unless it was severe problems like injury or money problems.

STOUTONIA: HOW CAN POSSIBLE LETDOWNS BE AVOIDED?

PIERCE: I think people should keep everything in perspective. Plan properly so that you almost try to insure that your experience will be a pleasant one. Don't just go down and wing it, so to speak. Plan your finances. Even though you need to get away and your egos need all the various stroking, still plan an organization, as is a part of anything. Try to insure that the experience will be as pleasant as can be. Try to minimize the degree of the stressors. You can't control all of them. If your car is going to break down in Georgia, it's going to break down in Georgia. There's not a thing you can do about it. But we learn to adapt to those, we roll with the punch. If you're having fun and everything else, people don't get as up-tight about it as much. They just get it fixed and say, "Let's get going. We got someplace to go, people to see." We seem to be a little more lightened up when we decide to do something like that and have fun. It doesn't hit us as hard as it would here fighting the snow. You really have to leave some to the unknown because that's really kind of the excitement of it. You got to let a few things happen. You don't plan everything. You're going to have some time down there when you let what happens, happen — that's part of it.

STOUTONIA: WHAT ARE SOME OTHER ALTERNATIVES TO RELIEVE STRESS?

PIERCE: It depends on what kind of stress they have. Some students will go and work during that week to relieve their money problems. If they got money problems, that's a stressor. That's really a worry to a lot of students and it can interfere with learning. So the fact that they can go and work nine days in a row and work a lot of hours and put a little money in their pocket when they come back is going to make their last eight weeks here a little more pleasant because they can meet their financial obligations. Mini trips...are a good diversion away from your problems. I think everybody has their own way to get away, to control their level of stress. If they can afford it, and they don't have money problems, they can go shopping. It's nice to dream a little. Even though you can't afford to buy something it's nice to see what's happening and what's going on. I am a believer that when we have these opportunities, we should do something even if it turns out we do something that's a little change of our routine to stimulate us a little. I think it motivates us to come back and finish that last eight weeks strong. As a student you have to have a strategy as a learner. I think these diversions, let's call them ego trips, should be part of the strategy because it really frees you up and keeps your mind functioning. That's the way Americans live too. That's the way we all like to live. Sometimes we can go and sometimes we can't. Money is a factor. Definitely do something. Like they say, "Do something even if it is wrong." If you don't have money, do something that doesn't cost money. If you have a good recreation model or diversion it simply has to be created by yourself. Do something spontaneous, that you haven't done before. We seem to do enough of the isolation-type things. There should be times when we come back together. We're basically dependent on other people. The sooner we realize that and get back together and do things with people, it makes us stronger. It makes us cope with our stress with that support. I think so many times we don't let ourself free up and have a good time and make something out of nothing. There is no way you can standardize fun. Everybody has their own idea. I think we have to keep our minds freed-up and constantly work on our stressors. We can't avoid them. They only people who have stress are dead. Stress isn't permanent, whether it's a disaster, catastrophy or a death in the family. It's going to heal. We learn to adapt to those things. Maybe work on a project that is really a positive thing. Maybe it is actually more schoolwork. If it is that stimulating for you, if it is that pleasant, and it provides a good outcome and rewards, then there is nothing wrong with that. I think you are going to feel good when you achieve, and get it done and feel a good positive re-inforcement from it. Some people have to get away and beachcomb, others could probably handle a project. This is a bad time of the year. Nationally a lot more suicides occur. We are coming off Christmas, it's tax time, money is starting to run out, relationships get strained. I think everybody feels that. Some cope with it more than others do. Take the positive attitude that the sun's warm and spring is right around the corner. I've hung in there this long I can hang in there a few more weeks. I think our positive attitude works. Busy people, well-organized people don't have time to worry about things they can't do any thing about anyway. Why worry about something that you can't change? You have enough things that you can modify in your life that you can work on.

Do you have something to sell?

Vietnam War support linked Marcos with US

Pat Miles
News Reporter

In an exclusive interview with The Stoutonia Johnathan Kwitny answered questions about American interests involving the Phillipines.

Kwitny is a writer for the Wall Street Journal who came to UW-Stout via the University Speakers Series Commission to speak about the direct affect on U.S. business interests on American foreign policy decision making.

Kwitny, who was in Manila about three years ago, has written several articles about problems in the Phillipines and Ferdinand Marcos' rule.

The government decided it didn't need Marcos any more and that's when the Phillipines became big news.
—Jonathan Kwitny Writer

The Stoutonia presented Kwitny with questions referring specifically to the Phillipines in an attempt at satisfying people's curiousity about America's role there and why the subject of the Phillipines has dominated the headlines of American newspapers recently.

According to Kwitny, America's relationship with Marcos began with the U.S. involvement in the Vietnam War. At that time, most nations did not support the U.S. action in Vietnam. "In actuality, Marcos just became a puppet for the U.S. as do many third world leaders," Kwitny said.

Marcos publicly supported the U.S. and allowed America to build strategic military bases in the Pillipines. Two such bases are the Clark Air Force Base and the Subic Bay Naval Base.

In return for the favor, Kwitny said the U.S. aided the Phillipines with military equipment and strategic development. In fact, $195 million in aid had been requested for the 1987 fiscal year by the Reagan administration.

The U.S. continued its relations with Marcos, even though he conducted a fraudulent election in 1969 and declared martial law in 1972, according to Kwitny. Martial law was lifted in 1981 after the Carter administration applied pressure to make military, economic, and social reforms.

After predictions of violence, and possibly civil war, Kwitny said the Reagan administration began to lessen its support of Marcos. "The government decided it didn't need Marcos anymore," he said, "and that's when the Phillipines became big news." He pointed out that, "The press has written about the Phillipines before. It became big news when the government decided it was big news."

Marcos, who has found refuge in Hawaii, is accused of stealing money from the Phillipine government. When asked what he thinks should be done with Marcos, Kwitny replied, "If the Phillipine government has criminal charges against Marcos, I think the U.S. should extradite him."

"The future of American ties in the Phillipines is up to Corazon Aquino," Kwitny said. The lease agreement for American military bases in the Phillipines expires in 1991. Kwitny said it would be up to the administrations of the United States and of the Phillipines to renegotiate at that time.

When asked what the American government can learn from this situation, Kwitny answered, "Idealistically the government should learn not to get so involved that it begins to support one faction."

Lone program advisement center strives for student independence

Bridget Record
News Reporter

Room 211 in the Home Economics Building houses the only program advisement center at UW-Stout. The hundreds of home economics students who pass by room 211 everyday on their way to class, stop in to get answers to the questions which arrive their first day in the school and don't end until they graduate.

Carolyn Barnhart and Mrs. Jane Henderson said that room 211 was the lone advisement center for a program on campus owing to the 3000 students enrolled in the School of Home Economics.

Barnhart says that she and Henderson must be knowledgeable of all the activities occuring in the Home Economics program. They provide information on summer jobs, scholarships, and summer school. They are also a service for distributing information for all degree programs in the school. Students get help in selecting courses to meet their program requirements and discussing the effects of adding and dropping courses.

An informational pamphlet outlining the advisement center's services states that the center also aids prospective Stout students. The center provides prospectives with information about the university and arranges tours of the campus.

In addition, the advisors coordinate Round Table Discussions. These discussions held in Room 211 are described as meetings that center around future careers, how to find meaningful summer work experience, and how to convince an employer of one's self-confidence and enthusiasm.

Barnhart says that the advisement center handles both internal and external public relations for the college. "We publish and distribute the Cross Currents newsletter for the students and a newsletter called This Month to keep the faculty updated on program activities."

She said that the center maintains the academic telephone line, monitors the bulletin boards in the Home Economics building, and posts course information. They also support the organization of parent's weekend. In dealing with external public relations, the advisors attend college fairs and schedule company recruiters to visit the college.

Barnhart describes the center as a place to go for a quick answer. It is a place where all the information a student needs about his major is in one room."The Advisement Center's main purpose is to make the student more independent," says Barn- hart."We provide the information and let the student make a decision about what they want to do. Most students like our services because we reduce a lot of the red tape."

and provides a more natural, less formal look. Also, it won't require any additional maintenance other than lawn mowing."

The natural seating would provide places for students to go and study or gather in small groups, or it could be used for informal gatherings or presentations.

Other ideas presented included the use of shelters at various spots to be used for seating and the installation of large pieces of sculpture.

"We tried to keep in mind the organic concept," Micoley said. "We didn't want to use a lot of heavy structures and concrete, but instead tried to keep it more natural and free flowing."

The model and drawings will be on display in the Cobblestone Court during the week of March 17. Students and faculty members will be asked to fill out comment cards giving their opinions.

The Campus Facilities and Grounds Committee will be holding a meeting Thursday March 20 in the Cedarwood Room of the Student Center, which will be open to the public so that they may voice their ideas and concerns.

SSA reviews drinking age legislation

Kelly Cohorst
News Reporter

The Stout Student Association (SSA) was updated on the Wisconsin legislature's attempt to pass into law the 21 year drinking age which the federal government has been pushing for.

Chuck Keller, the vice president for legislative affairs said that the legislators major concern was the loss of the federal highway funds. Wisconsin could lose up to as much as $21 million over a two year period if the state fails to raise the drinking age.

Keller said, Wisconsin's Department of Revenue studied the issue and found that the state would lose $10 to $12 million each year in state and local taxes if the drinking age was raised to 21. The Tavern League estimated the loss could be as much as $15 million.

The drive to raise the drinking age was based on the desire to save lives, but Keller said that new studies show that drinking-related deaths increase when the drinking age is raised. Now the fight for the 21 year old drinking age has lost its punch.

But the Coalition remains actively fighting for the drinking age to be raised to 21. The Coalition, which includes members of Mothers Against Drunk Drivers, plans to invite national experts to the hearing.

> United Council can make a difference in this state, but we must all be committed to our missions as student leaders.
> —Bryce Tolefree Student Association President

Some the Wisconsin legislators are attempting to push the bill through the State Assembly that would raise the legal drinking age from 19 to 21. There will be a hearing on the proposal March 10, in Madison at the Capital Building.

United Council Director Dave Kester announced that the United Council(UC) presidential elections will be held at the Parkside Hotel in Milwaukee on March 8. Two of the candidates that are running are Bryce Tolefree of UW-Oshkosh, and Ed Emerson of UW-Milwaukee. Both candidates are currently student government presidents and they have been active in their respective student governments for at least two years.

Ed Emerson of UW-Milwaukee is majoring in education. If elected president of the council he said that he will work to "remain firm in the present position for an affordable, diverse and high-quality university system, while at the same time recognize that the art of politics is compromise."

Bryce Tolefree of UW-Oshkosh says that as U.C. president he will lobby legislators to make them aware of how students feel about the issues. Tolefree said, "I feel that I have the experience to serve the students of our system in an effective and respected manner. I believe that United Council can make a difference in this state, but we must all be committed to our missions as student leaders."

The SSA wrote to NASA expressing their sympathy in the loss of the Space Shuttle Challenger crew members, Francis R. Scobee, Michael J. Smith, Judith A. Risnik, Ellison S. Onizuka, Ronald E. McNair, Gregory B. Jarves and S. Christa McAuliffe.

In response to the SSA's efforts, NASA sent a letter back, reading:

Dear Students and Staff at UW-STOUT,

Thank-you for your kind expression of sympathy in the loss of the space Shuttle Challenger crew members.

These courageous men and women will always be remembered for their exemplary lives, and unselfish contribution toward the expansion of our horizons. Remembering what these pioneers of today set out to discover and accomplish, we now turn to the future with new resolve to continue the expansion and use of space for the benefit of all mankind.

Sincerely,

James M. Funkhouser
Deputy Director,

Break schedule

Spring break at UW-Stout begins at 10 p.m., Friday, March 7, also marking the end of the third quarter. Classes will not be in session until 8 a.m., Monday, March 17. Most administrative and service offices at the university will remain open during the break.

Africa experience

Jackie Banaszynski and Jean Pieri, award winning journalists from the St. Paul Pioneer Press and Dispatch, will deliver a lecture on Africa at 8 p.m., Tuesday, March 17 in the Great Hall of the Memorial Student Center.

Open to the public free of charge, their appearance is sponsored by the Stout Psychology Club and the University Speakers Series Commission.

Banaszynski, a reporter and Pieri, a photographer, journeyed to Africa and prepared a supplement to their publication, "Trail of Tears," based on their experience in that continent.

Nutrition conference

"New Markets for Nutrition Services" is the theme for UW-Stout's 16th annual continuing education conference in nutrition to be held Friday, April 11 in the Great Hall of the Memorial Student Center. The event is sponsored by the department of food and nutrition in the School of Home Economics.

Morning presentations will include "Sports Nutrition: Career Possibilities and advances in Knowledge," by Ann Grandjean, Omaha, Neb., associate director of the Swanson Center for Nutrition Inc. and "The application of Sports Nutrition to the Diabetic Individual," by Marion Franz, Minneapolis, director of nutrition, International Diabetes Center.

The afternoon session topics will include "Nutritious Goes Delicious: How to Market Healthy Concepts," by Donna Haverstock, Camden, N.J., a senior manager in Campbell Soup Company's Consumer Nutrition Center; and "The Role of the Dietitian in the Hospitality Industry," by Amelia Catakis, Washington, D.C., director of professional services in Marriot Corporation's health service division.

Fees for the general public are $30 with lunch or $25 without. Student fees are $12 and $7. After March 29, there will be an additional $5 registration and lunch reservations will not be accepted.

Additional information can be obtained from Linda Jarosz, conference chairperson, Home Economics Building, Room 204, Phone (715) 232-1994 or (715) 232-2183.

Mind Olympics

A dozen schools in northwest Wisconsin will complete in a regional Olympics of the Mind tournament to be held at UW-Stout Saturday, March 22.

Activities will take place from 10:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. on the first floor in the Technology Wing of Jarvis Hall. Participants will have worked on long-range problems in teams of five to seven people before presenting their solutions at the tournament. About 200 students, coaches, parents and teachers are expected at the regional tournament. Winners will go on to state competition at UW-Green Bay.

"Remember, my purpose is not to condone or encourage you to use drugs," Muscala reminded his listeners, "but is to inform you of what to be careful of if you do." Muscala then gave the audience some hints. For example, "Buy drugs only after you've seen a dealer sell to other people without getting busted."

Muscala said he was concerned that society fails to teach people about drugs. "Our schools aren't allowed to teach how to use drugs," he said.

Muscala made his point by telling stories centering his own experiences. He applied what he called morals to each. The morals, in actuality, were suggestions. The suggestions are:

• Employ a mentor. If a person is going to use drugs, then they should have someone who will take care of them if things get out of hand.

• Don't throw up into the wind.

• Just watch your ass. If people decide to go out of the country, they should be careful of what they bring back. A person going through customs has no rights if caught with illegal substances. The DEA is very rough, according to Muscala.

• Drugs don't give an OK to go to bed with someone. If a person has to alter their state with chemicals in order to get involved in a relationship, or a one-night-stand, then they shouldn't get involved at all.

Muscala ended the evening with a question and answer session. The crowd itself was small. That same evening many people were across the hall altering their states at the "Air Jam" contest.

including guitar, banjo, piano, and of course her strong voice.

Greenstein is a native of New York, she currently resides in New York. She performed two years ago at the Pawn. The brand of music she performed was pleasant and easy to listen to. The lyrics left a message for everyone.

Her songs mentioned simple things of everyday life including "Sweet Imperfections," a song about coming to terms with yourself, and another enjoyable song was dedicated to man's best friend in "My Dog Howard." The song focused on the kind of dedicated companion a dog can be.

Other memorable songs included "Remember," a love song, "New York City Blues," a song about being overwhelmed by the huge city. One of the songs she performed was dedicated to her sister and her sister's husband who lost their first child to a rare disease. The song was called "Happy New Year." It was a song of hope.

She also performed songs by Randy Newman, and Bob Dylan. Greenstein performed a wide range of music, as she put, "Broadway to banjo, that's just the kind of versatile performer I am."

There was a trace of a New York accent in Greenstein's voice. In some of her songs her voice was reminiscent of Joni Mitchell. Her stage presence was similar to Juice Newton (without the long locks or a band). Her style was also comparable with Rosanne Cash.

One audience member commented on the quality of Greenstein's voice, "I really loved her clear 'bluesie' voice. I wish she would have sang 'Basin Street Blues.'"

There was a certain ease in her style that invited the audience to relax and enjoy the performance, whereas some performers create a real distinction between who's the star and who's the audience. She frequently invited the audience to participate in the music.

In an effort to classify Greenstein's style she said, "acoustic oriented pop — to kind of put a label on it. I love folk, rock and roll, blues, everything."

Greenstein has found a lot of musical inspiration in James Taylor, specifically in her guitar playing. During Friday's show she played one of his songs as a dedication to him.

There was time when Greenstein performed strictly her own music, but has since found including songs written by her friends adds a great deal to the show, especially their humorous material. She said, "I don't write many good humorous songs. I think that it's good to have

> I'd like to be making albums and touring...
> —Robin Greenstein

that especially when you're playing for college students."

Greenstein believes that her interest in music began when she was in 5th grade. Her mother bought her a guitar, and paid for lessons. She took to it quite well.

Her family also owned an organ which probably aided in her piano playing skill. Although no one in Greenstein's family before her was professionally involved with music, they were all fond of good music. Greenstein's mother was a painter, and her artistry served as an inspiration to the promising young musician. Greenstein was grateful for her parent's support.

During her education as a music major at Stony Brook State University in New York, Greenstein travelled to England for a year. She was fascinated to have a teacher who was a genuine native of England, instead of Americans, for her music education. "It was a new experience. [There is] nothing like leaving the country to get a world view of things. America is very isolated."

Greenstein also added, "Foreigners love American music. When they hear an American singing they like it just like they like American pop."

Greenstein has been playing professionally for about eight years. Since she does work days, she hasn't been able to make a full-time commitment to being a musician. She has done some recording with a musician's club called Speakeasy. The club releases mostly albums. Greenstein has performed on several of these including the upcoming March edition.

Greenstein would prefer doing her own albums. She commented on being famous, "I'd like to be making albums and touring, and it's hard to do that without being somewhat famous."

This fall Greenstein's career was slowed down a bit do to an injury. She tripped (ironically at a health club) and ripped some ligaments in her index finger. This injury kept her career still for four months. But Greenstein believes she is in an 'up' period now, since she is now touring the midwest.

The midwest has become one of Greenstein's favorite areas to perform in. She has played Wisconsin and Illinois extensively. She is currently on a tour that has included campuses such as Ripon, River Falls, Minneapolis, and Stout.

Stout audiences have always pleased Greenstein. This is her third appearance at this campus. She said, "I really enjoy playing here in Menomonie. I like the people here. I've been here a lot and it just seems very comfortable here." She is of course comparing it to the hustle of New York. Not only does she find Menomonie comfortable but she also believes, "people support this kind of music here."

Greenstein was not completely impressed with the acoustics of the new Pawn. She was amused to be watching bowlers, unable to see the pins fall, but quite able to hear them, while she was performing. She also found the sounds of Rambo blowing up Vietnamese (on the television also across the hall) distracting. She still insists, "I like coming out here."

Although there were still seats available during the show, Greenstein's soothing vocals and musical abilities were fabulous to listen to. The show was well worth seeing

'Healthy golden glow' achieved by practicing tanning precautions

Beth Reid
Arts Reporter

Tomorrow marks the beginning of the campus wide coloring contest. For one week, students heading south for spring break will bask in the sun in order to "color" their bodies with a "healthy golden glow." The competitive tan is a basic necessity of everyone's summer wardrobe, so many people are getting a head start by going to tanning parlors before hitting the beaches.

Local tanning parlors have been booked up all week with students preparing themselves for the southern rays. Alma's Beauty Salon and Tanning Parlor has people coming in round the clock and most other local tanning salons are completely filled.

But, do these artificial tanning methods actually condition the skin for sunlight? "No," said Dr. Richard Grange, assistant professor of dermatology at Harvard Medical School. "Although the tanning parlors UV rays might produce a dark tan, that tan won't protect you from the kind of burn you get from sunlight."

The American Medical Association says it has something to do with the way a UVA-tanning booth tan forms. Sunlight stimulates the production of melanin in the bottom layers of the skin. The cells that produce melanin move up to the outer layers of skin, distributing protective pigment through all layers. Tanning bed rays don't cause this movement of the cells; the pigment stays on the bottom layers, leaving the outer layers unprotected.

The Food and Drug Administration suggests that: "if people are planning a mid-winter vacation, they shouldn't rely on tanning booths to protect them from burning. Instead, they should treat their first day in the sun as though it were their first day out."

This includes taking various precautions to prevent burning, sunstroke, heat exhaustion and also skin cancer. No one is immune to the sun's dangers, but there are ways to minimize the damaging effects and obtain a great-looking tan safely.

Short of staying indoors, sunscreens are the single most effective method of blocking the sun's burning rays. They are also a way to start conversation with a beachside stranger, by asking them to put a little lotion on your back.

The Sun Protection Factor (SPF) of suntan lotions range from two to 19. To chose the proper lotion for your skin check the protection level; an SPF of six, for example, means that the sun can be tolerated six times longer than if no sunscreen was used. The Food and Drug Administration suggests starting with a high SPF in order to obtain a tan gradually. Not only will it produce a more even tan, but it will protect the skin better. As your tan develops and gets a little darker, then you can switch to a lower SPF.

"People should also be particularly careful to cover extra sensitive areas," Dr. Grange said. These areas include: eyelids, nose, ears, shoulders, and especially lips. A higher SPF screen should be used to increase protection from burning.

Another tanning factor to consider is the time of day. The intensity of the rays are at their peak and the harmful burning rays are strongest between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. Also, don't be fooled by cloudy or hazy skies. Damaging rays can penetrate through the clouds and cause a harmful burn.

If tanning on the beach or by a pool for a long period of time, remember that water doesn't protect the skin from the sun and wet skin may actually burn more quickly.

After coming out of the sun, there are a few tips that will help protect the skin. Start by showering with a good cleanser to remove the oily residue, then to keep your tan from flaking or peeling, apply a good moisturizer or baby oil.

By taking these things into consideration and taking some precautions, a healthy tan can be obtained and you can "win" the coloring contest.

Air jam provides varied entertainment

Amy Pagel
Arts Reporter

The many hours of work that was put into Air Jam V shown through as Mick Jaggar, S.L.A.M., Sheila E, Jellybeans, to name just a few, "jammed" in the Great Hall last Thursday.

The annual event was sponsored by Circle K and all proceeds went to Easter Seals. Sharon Oncken, president of the Menomonie Circle K and Air Jam co-chairperson, was pleased with the way everything flowed.

"A bigger crowd would have been nice but at least security was not a problem." Sharon observed. "Security was provided by Chi Lambda and they certainly had no problems with the audience."

Circle K did all they could to attract as many people as possible. Fliers, posters, newspaper ads and banners were among the advertising media used. Oncken wondered, "I don't know what else we could have done and I still heard people say 'I didn't know it was tonight.'"

The audience participation improved as the performances progressed. The band T&T commented, "We thought the audience was great!"

Rivertone members remarked, "It would have been nice if more people had stayed after the top four bands were announced."

Darien Schaeffer, also co-chairperson, and Sharon had been planning the Jam since last year. Sharon remembers, "I reserved the hall right after last year's Jam, before this building was even finished."

There were 12 bands performing a wide variety of music. The Doctors performed "Good Lovin'," Blasting Zone exploded with "Ballroom Blitz," Lips (Mick Jagger) mouthed "Lucky at Love," Breath Heavey and the Hang Ups dialed in "Mr. Telephone." Other bands were Sheila E., S.L.A.M., Locker Room and Jellybeans.

After all groups performed, the top four bands performed again. These were The Pointless Sisters singing "Jump," T&T with "Don't Stop Runnin'," The Human Touch feeling out the "Human Touch" and Robby Bridge and the River tones jamming out "Mony Mony."

The bands were judged on their stage presentation, lip sink, creativity and dress, and audience reaction and participation. Cash prizes for first, second and third were $150, $75 and $50 respectively.

Was it live or was it Memorex? It was hard to tell that the performers were not really singing.

Stage performances were the most interesting part, from lip licking and butt wiggling Lips to lusting patients, dancing nurses and flirting doctors to a jump into the audience by Rick Springfield. Some bands even had great roadies to get the audience involved and celebrate success.

First place went to the Rivertones from Eau Claire. Second to The Human Touch and third to T&T, both from Stout. "The winners were excellent but it was disappointing that someone from here didn't win," Rob, of T&T, said.

Instruments and props were made from various items. Ice cream containers and foil formed most drum sets. Cardboard boxes were the basis for guitars. Even curling irons and telephone receivers became microphones.

T&T would like to thank local merchants for their card board contributions. Most of the time preparing for the competition was devoted to constructing instruments.

Selecting a song and rehearsing was another time consuming element. "It took a lot of time just deciding what song we wanted to do," David Johnston, of Robby Bridge, said.

For other performers the song was a natural choice. "People always tell me I look like Mick." Tom Payne recalled, "I do him all the time in my hall."

"We all really had a lot of fun," a Jellybean member stated. All contestants were in it for the fun but prizes were some incentive.

The fluency can be attributed to the evenings Master of Ceremonies, Mike Fenton. Fenton is a D.J. at Q92 of Menomonie. He gave away hats and albums to the audience while bands moved on and off the stage leaving never a dull moment.

We can look forward to new angles and even more creativity next year. Certainly new songs and great performances will be present.

Fine Line

Don't bits

Jef Maynard

Dear readers, and Bill Toge,

Sometimes you come across snatchits and tidbits which change the way you think about something, or give you the proper perspective. Here's one: "Journalism largely consists in saying 'Lord Jones is dead' to people who never knew Lord Jones was alive." -- G.K. Chesterton. Well fine.

Since we are nearing spring vacation, I thought it might be appropriate to unload some of the out-takes from recent issues of The Stoutonia, items and bits from the paper that didn't quite make the press. A partial list of corrections that you, dear reader, never saw: s, s, s, s, s, s, a, Violet Femmes, beat juice, compact dick, WVS ' ' ' " " !!!!!, there, their, or, of, a, an, an, an, alphabits, lazer discs, lazier discs, laser dicks, Eilleen O' Neel, Eileen O'Neal, Eileen O'Neil, Eileen O'Neilll, Dire Straights, Bang a Gang, "his music had an outdoor odor," [flavor], Comedian Mason cements audience, Student robs snow bank-steals cold cache, Folk singer performs well before empty Pawn audience.

"Nowadays, the illiterates can read and write," -- Alberto Moravia,

"Bad spellers of the world, untie!" --graffito

"A life spent making mistakes is not only more honorable, but more useful than a life spent doing nothing," --George Bernard Shaw.

All this week, I've had to listen to those affluent sun-buzzards who are going to Florida, South Padre, Jamaica, and so on. Myself, I'm going to alter my state, and watch Pat Sajak and Tom Kennedy give away highly taxable, glamorous hot tubs, "modern art etchings," and Pontiac Sunbirds. I'm doing a case study on the depiction of the forces of good and evil, Sajak as Good, Kennedy as Evil. Stay tuned.

"Modern art is what happens when painters stop looking at girls and persuade themselves that they have a better idea," -- John Ciardi. Hey lady, wait here, I'll bring my etchings down.

I would like to say a few words about gravity and its opposite, comedy.

Probably only a handful of you fossilized readers ever heard of Fred Allen. For us spring chickens who missed the radio era, we'll never know just how deprived we really are. Allen knew what humor was. Imagine live vaudeville shows before radio and tv. One joke could last you a whole season, or career. You played different halls and different towns, and few people ever heard your joke more than once. You could weed out the bad material.

That generic, bland-x excuse for a comedian, Johnny Carson, has to have new material every night, sitcoms need new one liners by the ton. Are there that many good jokes? What's so funny?

I only told you that story, so that I could tell you this one: "He was the world's only armless sculptor. He used to put the chisel in his mouth and his wife would hit him on the back of the head with a mallet," --Fred Allen.

As for gravity, there is no such thing as gravity, the earth sucks.

Here is a little known fact: foosball was discovered in 1970 by my sister and I on a family vacation in Montana. We were collecting firewood and found an abandonned mine shaft. Inside was an ancient foosball table. We played until we were out of quarters.

And my critics say I am reaching...

Inside my wallet I found these printed messages: "Inspected by number 28. Sure he's a good inspector but would you want him to marry your sister?" "Yes, you can use my name if I win." "Jef, Kris called again. It's a boy, five months, call her back."

The best desktop message this year reads: "Jef, I couldn't reach Lonnie Anderson on the phone about homecoming and the interview with the 80 year old man is off because he's deaf... Do you have any other ideas? Helen."

"I was thrown out of college for cheating on a metaphysics exam; I looked into the soul of the boy next to me," --Woody Allen.

My friend Jacque says sometimes my column jumps around and doesn't exactly go in any order. Madame, you could be right.

Musical murder mystery an Agatha Christie satire

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

A musical murder mystery — what a strange combination. At the Mabel Tainter Theatre there was nothing strange about how this musical entertained and made its audience laugh. This murder mystery, "Something's Afoot" was simply delightful.

"Something's Afoot" was presented for the past two weeks by the Mabel Tainter Theatre Guild. There was not one murder in the play, but several, even the detective died. In general, the play was a satirical off-spin of an Agatha Christie murder mystery.

Guests were invited to an English lord's estate for the weekend. Of course, this estate was on an isolated island. None of the guests knew why they were invited. The bridge to the island was washed out in a thunder and lightning storm.

The chain of mysterious murders began. The first to go was Lord Rancour, the owner of the estate. All blame was pointed toward the butler, but he died too.

These events prompted the guests to sing a lovely rendition of the theme song. This song had humorous lyrics such as, "Something's afoot and the butler didn't do it."

As the play progressed characters dropped like flies. The doctor was poisoned by gas exploding from the telephone. The colonel was stabbed with tribal poisoned arrows. The outspoken maid was swallowed by a huge vase. Others died by more conventional means like poisoned wine, exploding kitchens and electric shock.

As all these murders were committed the detective, Miss Tweed, tried to sort it all out. Unlike Agatha Christie's Miss Marpole, this detective made fumbling mistakes and delighted in passing her suspicions upon everyone.

As the curtains closed for intermission the audience mingled and conversed, but they didn't talk about the weather. It seemed as though everyone was discussing, "Who done it?"

Miss Tweed thought she had revealed the real murderer. Enthralled in her success, she and two young characters, Hope and Geoffrey, sang and danced to "I Owe It All to Agatha Christie." Soon the detective was proven wrong. The entire cast was murdered.

Lord Rancour knew his guests all too well. This wealthy man killed himself, but first left murderous traps behind for his guests to walk into.

Music for this play was most enjoyable. It was light-hearted and had a jazzy swing. The entire cast did dancing and singing productions moving all over the stage and up and down the stairs.

All of the cast members had strong and unique roles to carry out. Miss Tweed, portrayed by

> I've been in lots of musicals at home. It is in my blood,
> —Brenda La Malfa
> Stout actress

Karin Falkofske, wore, of course, a tweed suit and had a typical British satirical flare. Falkofske said, "Agatha Christie's detective doesn't make mistakes like this woman does. She goes crazy when she finds everyone suspicious." Falkofske has directed over 100 plays. She says she has acted in three plays since her high school days. Falkofske has been involved with the Mabel Tainter Theatre Guild since the 1960's.

Three of the characters in this play were portrayed by UW-Stout students. One of these characters was Hope Langdon, one of the last to die on stage. With her sparkling eyes and blonde hair, Brenda La Malfa played the innocence of her character quite well. La Malfa has had lots of theater experience and plans to be in more Mabel Tainter productions. She said, "I've been in lots of musicals at home. It is in my blood. It is like a disease and I can't get rid of it."

Ray Rivera, a counselor in ethnic services at Stout, played Nigel Rancour. This character was the money-hungry nephew of Lord Rancour. Rivera said,"Loose morals and character . . . sometimes I enjoy playing parts like that because it allows me to cleanse my soul and get rid of all the negative things."

Rivera has been in other plays at the Mabel Tainter such as "Fiddler of the Roof" and "Arms and the Man." He plans to enter more serious roles in the future.

The cast of "Something's Afoot" have been working together for a month. Technical aspects, such as the murderous props, was a challenge. Due to the nature of the play many entrances and exits had to be smoothly finished.

Although the entire cast died, the grand finale was uplifting. After the curtain call, the cast sang together "I Owe It All." This left the audience with the sentiments of "God Bless Agatha Christie."

Was it the exploding phone or poison arrows? This complex, funny, musical murder mystery entertained audiences for two weekends at the beautiful Tainter Theatre. Talented Karin Falkofske (not pictured) played Detective Tweed. (Stoutonia photo by Eileen O'Neill)

For Those About to Rock

Stardust

David Chase

What would you think if I were to tell you that you have what it takes to be a rock & roll star? No, I'm not on drugs. I honestly believe that most people are qualified in one way or another to be a rock star. But who chooses who is qualified and who isn't?

In some cases a big executive assigns scouts or judges for himself. Such was the case with the Monkees. The Monkees were brought together through try outs with a studio. The four that were selected had never met before and were chosen out of hundreds of entrees.(Even Stephen Stills was turned down for the part.) How did the people at the studio decide who was qualified?

The fans are the biggest decision makers by far, but there seems to be no specific qualification needed in the eyes of the audience. Now you may be thinking that I'm wrong, but let us take a closer look. Below are a list of traits or skills that one might associate with a rock star.

1.) A good vocalist 2.) A skilled musician 3.) A good perfomer 4.) A skilled writer 5.) A gimick of some type 6.) Good looks

The traits listed are probably the most common requirements, yet none are a must. Even if you have only one of these traits, you may still have what it takes to be a rock star. There is always an exception for every requirement.

1.)A good vocalist

No, being a good vocalist is no longer a requirement. I think many bands have proven this time and time again. Take Bob Dylan for example, he is one of the greatest song writers to ever live. But is he a good singer? Not unless you like people who sing through their nose. Don't take me wrong, I love to hear a Dylan tune as much as the next guy, but the man cannot sing. Can Brian Johnson of AC/DC sing? No, but he's an excellent screamer. To me, a good vocalist would be the likes of Elvis, Robert Plant, Roger Daltrey and Neil Diamond. Yet not being able to sing good has not stopped Dylan or Johnson from being rock stars.

2.)A Skilled Musician

There are many exceptions in this case. I would not consider the guitarist for the Go Go's a skilled player. I also wouldn't claim the drummer for the Stray Cats to be very talented in his trade. Yet these two musicians have achieved rock star status. Did you know that Elvis could not play the guitar when he first became a rock star? He would fake it and no one cared, after all, he was the King.

3.)A good performer

To be able to perform well on stage is not always necessary. I saw Twisted Sister once and hope I never have to again. They were lousy performers that relied too much on an unintelligent crowd. Rush is an excellent band with great musicians, but their concerts are dull and predictable. Elvis Costello has been known to spit on his audience, I don't find spit to be entertaining.

4.) A skilled writer

Have you read the lyrics to the song Wake Me Up by Wham? Do you know the words to the song De Do Do Do De Da Da Da by the police? No, not every thing Sting writes is bad, but the song was a top ten hit. I love the song Wild Thing by the Trogs, but I wouldn't say it was a skillfully written song. Groups like Twisted Sister, The Go Gos and The Romantics are prime examples of inadequate writers, but never the less are rock stars. Did you know Elton John wrote very few of his songs? The same goes with Elvis, but who cares? Elvis was King.

5.)A gimick

In the early and mid seventies, a producer might ask a band one question. What's your gimick? If the band said they had no gimick they were led to the exit. But the days of Alice Cooper and Kiss are gone. You no longer need to depend on a gimick. I feel that the bands of today that have gimicks are doing nothing more than trying to compensate for their lack of skills as musicians. When a musician dresses up in a showy outfit and does things on stage the average human wouldn't do at home, the performer is only distracting the audience from listening to what they are playing. I like a good show, but it's not necessary to have one.

6.)Good Looks

Mick Jagger is a homely person. I know this, you know this, the whole world knows this. I remember hearing a girl defend his looks by saying he had a nice ass, but does this make up for the size of his lips? Have you ever looked closely at Bob Dylan? What about David Bowie? I could not think of a better person to play the part of the Elephant Man. Grace Jones has many traits, most of them masculine. Her hair is so flat on top you could land a space shuttle on it. Looks are not a requirement by any means.

Gymnasts finish seventh at Nationals

Suzanne Schroeter
Sports Reporter

This past weekend the UW-Stout women's gymnastics team placed seventh in the NCGA Division III National Tournament.

"It was a fun meet for us. The girls were hitting their routines and we scored the best score of the year," Head Coach John Zuerlein commented. "We're finally back on track after battling with the flu and this meet was a good morale booster for us."

Zuerlein also said that the meet itself ran very smoothly. "All the coaches were happy with the meet. It was a good display of athletic ability."

On the vault Lisa Hille and Carolyn Bjerke both received a score of 8.0. Nancy Schlener followed close behind with a 7.9. Also competing on the vault was Patti Roenitz with a 7.7 and Cosmas Whitten with a score of 7.6.

Hille felt that the team did very well. "We had spark in us and all the other teams were also up for the meet," Hille commented. As for her own performance she said she felt kind of weak and that she had a few bad falls that hurt her scores. For this weekend she just wants to do the best she can do.

In the uneven bar competition Kim Nelson pulled in a score of 7.75. Nelson was very happy with her bar routine. "My routine flowed really well with no stops," Nelson said. Nelson said that her scores on the bars keep getting higher and that she wants to continue raising them. "I want to shoot for an 8.0 for this weekend," Nelson commented.

Also competing on bars was Tammy Dennis with a score of 7.55. Roenitz earned a score of 7.5 for her routine on the unevens and Schlener also did well with a score of 6.70.

On the floor exercise Hille had a score of 8.15. Roenitz and Whitten also put on a good performance scoring 7.8 and 7.6 respectively.

Zuerlein commented that Hille is getting stronger but that the flu has really kept her endurance down. "Lisa has the ability to get an 8.9 to 9.0 on the floor but has not had the strength lately due to the flu," Zuerlein said.

On the balance beam Roenitz scored an 8.2 and placed sixth in the preliminaries. This enabled her to compete in the finals on Saturday where she scored a 7.15 and placed seventh. Roenitz said that she felt very strong on the beam and was extremely happy.

Also competing on the beam was Dennis who scored a 6.5. Schlener scored a 6.35 and Joyce Alger received a score of 6.05.

Roenitz, Schlener, and Whitten competed in all-around with Roenitz placing ninth with a score of 31.2. Schlener finished with a 25.95 and Whitten received a 26.35.

"If Roenitz would have scored one-tenth higher she would have made All-American in the all-around," Zuerlein commented.

Zuerlein was really pleased with the team as a whole. "They all hit close to their hit scores and many surpassed them. No one person can make or break us, the whole team counts and the team depth was good for this meet."

Having most of the team back in shape also helped their score. Bjerke was back after having the flu as was Hille and Roenitz. Whitten also competed all-around after injuring her knee.

Whitten said that her knee feels fine but that it's scary knowing that she could hurt it again. Her goal for this coming weekend is to get back to what she was doing before she hurt her knee and to get a score of 28.0 in all-around.

Another highlight of the meet was when Hille was awarded the Outstanding Senior Gymnast Award. She shares this honor with Beth Hvambsal of UW-Superior. The award, given by the coaches, is given to the athlete who best represents what an athlete is supposed to be.

Coach Zuerlein also received the award of Coach of the Year. This award is also given out by the coaches.

Zuerlein said that the meet was successful not only because of the athletes but also because of the faculty and students that helped out and made the meet run smoothly. "Tom Pahl, the announcer, did a fantastic job keeping the meet running smoothly," Zuerlein commented.

This weekend the Lady Blue Devils will be traveling to Eau Claire to compete in the NAIA Nationals. There will be 14 schools competing. "We're going in with one of the lower qualifying scores. If we place in the top ten, I'll be happy," Zuerlein commented.

Lady tracksters fifth in tourney; prepare for WSUC meet & Nationals

A dominant UW-Stout women's track team placed fifth out of eight teams at the Ole Indoor track meet. UW-La Crosse placed first with a total of 217 points and St. Olaf came in second with 105 points. UW-Eau Claire took third place with 40 points and Concord placed fourth with 38 points. Stout had 35 points.

Participating in the 60-yard dash trials were Terri Holzhueter, Sara Zoll and Tammy Schaller. Making it to the 60-yard dash semis were Holzhueter with a time of 8.06 seconds and Schaller with a 7.73 time.

Dawn Kreuziger leaped to a fifth place finish in the long jump with a leap of 4.88 meters. She also placed sixth in the triple jump at 9.80 meters.

In the shot put, Sue Schaefgen placed fifth with a put of 11.46 meters.

Taking sixth place in the 1000-yard run was Lisa Heimerman with a time of 2 minutes 57.43 seconds.

Sue Meyer raced to a victory in the 1500-meter running her personal best with a time of 4:41.95, cutting twenty seconds from her last 1500-meter race. This race has already qualified Meyer for the 1500-meter run at outdoor Nationals.

Sheila Geere placed third in the 1500-meter run with a time of 4:52.03 and Ann Meyer took eighth place in 5:05.97.

The women's 4x100 relay team placed third with a time of 1:31.74. The two mile relay team also placed third with a time of 10:05.68.

In the 300-yard dash, Becky Reidi placed seventh and Tammy Schaller placed eighth. Zoll and Michelle Ennis also competed in this event.

Sue Meyer, a graphic design student, spent her first two years of college at Parkside where she was doing serious running. This is her second year at Stout and after suffering from a bad back, decided to start out a little slower by running cross country.

Meyer's eligibility to compete in track ends after this season. When asked what she plans to do next season Meyers replied, "I'll continue to run. Coach Lou Klitzke asked me to assist with next year's team and maybe I'll even compete in a marathon."

Meyer has qualified for the upcoming NCAA National meet at Bethel College and is currently in the process of deciding whether to compete in the 1500- or the 3000-meter run. She has mainly been working on the 3000-meter run and was surprised when she qualified for the 1500-meter run. Geere will also be competing in the NCAA National meet.

Meyer commented that at the last National meet, she and Geere were only one and two seconds from placing first and second in their events. "Being that close has made me hungry for something. I'm raring to go," Meyer said.

Already planning ahead for Conference, teammates Geere and Meyer are planning to surprise a few people with their preformances in the two-mile run for Geere and the one-mile run for Meyer.

"Friday was our best team meet of the year. It really pulled us together as a whole team. We stretched as a team, warmed up as a team and we cheered as a team. We're all excited for everyone to do well," Meyer said.

Both the men's and women's track teams will travel to La Crosse on March 5, to compete in the La Crosse Dual meet. They will then compete in the WCAA III Indoor Nationals hosted by Bethel College.

Amazing Bird

Rochelle Buhr

What is 6-foot-9, weighs 220 pounds, and resembles an albino albatross?

Larry Bird, the star forward of the Boston Celtics. A man whose surname, befits his appearance completely.

Lately, Larry has to be mighty happy. Because not many professional or amateur athletes are named a "living legend" by Sports Illustrated.

In the seven seasons that he has played professionally, he has amassed a .494 field goal percentage, a 10.6 rebounding average, and a 23.8 average point total per game.

I had the pleasure of watching Bird in action during a playoff game in which the Celtics took on the Philadelphia 76ers. What I remember of Bird was that he was pale. He looked like Big Bird of Sesame Street with the stomach flu.

He was good though, pumping in long jump shots effortlessly. Incidentally, Bird and his boys lost that game, thanks to a fantastic performance by Charles Barkley of the Sixers.

Sports Illustrated went through a list of reasons why Bird is the best player in professional basketball today, and maybe the best player ever.

They named: shooting, pump fakes and step backs, ambidexterity, passing, rebounding, performing in the clutch, playing hard, and possessing a good mental game.

I agree that Bird is great. But he will never make my list of "Best looking men in the NBA" if he continues to let a blonde caterpillar rest on his upper lip.

What's this junk about the Twin Cities wanting to have a NBA franchise located in their town?

Haven't they ever noticed that there is a jinx on professional sports in Minnesota?

For example, take the illustrious Minnesota Viqueens, who are the only team in NFL history to go to the Super Bowl four times, and blow it four times.

How about the Twins. They are a bunch of losers too, although it looks like they are somewhat shaping up.

Recently, the North Stars are playing well, holding third place in their division. Unfortunately, they will probably blow it soon. It's inevitable.

Remember when Minneapolis had a basketball team a long time ago? The team was called the Minneapolis Lakers, and they packed their bags and headed to California. They knew about the jinx, and realized they had to bust this brat stand fast.

I always have thought it queer that the Lakers never changed their name. I think they should have re-tagged themselves a more fitting name like the Los Angeles Freeways, or perhaps just simply The Smog.

The Blue Devils are ranked number one in college basketball.

That is the Blue Devils from Duke University.

Ha Ha fooled you.

Wouldn't it be neat. Think of it. Our team being ranked number one in the country. We would have big games complete with national TV coverage, screaming fans with painted faces, and exitement surrounding the whole campus.

Big, wild parties.

This past weekend I attended an Investigative Reporter's and Editor's Conference held at Ohio State University.

It was particularily interesting to hear what two investigative reporters had to tell about their two big stories reporting on the scandals and direct NCAA violations of the Memphis State and University of Kentucky basketball programs. I was shocked there could be that much cheating in college athletics.

Among their stories of big scoops and threats while completing their investigations, they also told the reporters present of a few ways in which to investigate collegiate athletics.

Aha. Athletics everywhere beware.

I have been armed with knowledge.

Netters dominate foes; improve record to 4-4

Louie Filkins
Sports Reporter

A dominant UW-Stout men's tennis team won four straight matches last weekend in La Crosse to even their record at 4-4. Stout competed in a quad match against UW-La Crosse, Bradley College, Luther College and the University of Northern Iowa.

Outstanding performances were turned in by Stout's top three players: John Leehy, Mike Friedman and Mark Paine. They all completed the weekend undefeated in singles (4-0) as well as doubles (4-0).

The tennis Blue Devils achieved these wins without their number one player, Rob Oertel. He sat out because of a pulled hip flexer muscle. "I could have played if it would have been a really important match like conference playoffs. I didn't want to risk really hurting myself bad and ruining the rest of the season," Oertel said.

Stout started out with the University of Northern Iowa (UNI) on Friday. Head Coach Bob Smith said, "They gave us a good match, very close."

UNI forced the Blue Devils into the third set in three of the matches. However, Stout prevailed with strong performances by Paine (6-1, 6-0) and Friedman (6-3, 6-2) to beat UNI 6-3.

Luther was Stout's next opponent. Once again the Devils dominated play shuting out Luther 9-0. Friedman and Paine were strong again as well as Leehy (6-2, 6-1) and Pheifer (6-3, 6-1) who had excellent matches. "I look for Pheifer to surprise some people in the WSUC this year," Smith said about the junior letterman.

> ...our team strength showed through.
> —Bob Smith
> Head coach

Pheifer did just that when he beat Brent Gisiner of La Crosse 6-2, 6-4 in Stout's next match. The Blue Devils crushed their WSUC opponent 8-1 for their third win of the weekend. They made their road trip perfect by defeating Bradley 9-0 later that same day.

"I was pleased with the competition. Everyone on the team got into the line-up," Smith said. He also commented on the team depth. "Even without Oertel we had some outstanding performances and our team strength showed through," Smith said. He remarked that the players adjusted well to the fast surface.

The tartan rubberized surface on the indoor courts was a common concern of the players. "The fast surface wasn't favorable to my baseline oriented game, I was happy I performed as well as I did," John Leehy said. A person who serves and runs to the net will fare better on this kind of surface. Mark Paine is that type of a player. He said the following about the indoor courts: "I played well on the tartan. My serve-and-volley style was good for the conditions."

The team leaves today for a California road trip. They will play some powerful teams such as Oklahoma and Redlands out West. "We're really looking forward to the trip. It should be excellent competition and help prepare us for playing Midwestern schools," Oertel said.

After spring break, the team will host Chicago State, St. Olaf and St. John's at the Blue Devil Tournament March 21-22 at the Johnson Fieldhouse.

Minnesota making basketball bid

After 26 years without an NBA team, Minnesota is making a bid for a franchise, officials announced Monday. The 23-team NBA will consider expansion later this year. Minneapolis was the home of the Lakers from 1947 until 1960, when the team moved to Los Angeles.

Brisco-Hooks, Howard voted top athletes

High jumper Jimmy Howard and sprinter Valerie Brisco-Hooks were voted the outstanding athletes of the 1985-86 indoor track and field season, the Metropolitan Track Writers Association announced Monday in New York. Howard won six of nine competitions, finished second three times and improved the American record to 7-8 1/2. Brisco-Hooks won seven of eight races, at distances between 220 and 500 yards, set a world best and five American records.

Brewers' Muser recovering

Milwaukee coach Tony Muser has been moved to the University of California-Irvine Medical Center to be closer to his family. Muser was injured in a gas explosion last Thursday at the club's spring training facility in Chandler, Ariz. He suffered second and third degree burns, mostly on his back, when his shirt caught fire after a heater in the clubhouse exploded. Ten people were injured in the blast; Muser and a plumber had the most serious injuries.

Cagers finish season with two-point loss

Wendy Johnson
Sports Reporter

After defeating UW-Platteville and UW-Eau Claire, Monday night's two-point loss to UW-Stevens Point was a major disappointment for UW-Stout's men's basketball team.

Stevens Point defeated the Blue Devils 55-53, after battling it out right to the last second of the game.

The game started with Stevens Point winning the tip and also putting in the first two points. Stout didn't score until two and a half minutes into the game. It didn't take Stevens Point long to take the lead once again, and continue to multiply the points to put them ahead by 14 points with five minutes left in the first half.

"Stevens Point was on fire," Head Coach Dwain Mintz of Stout commented when Stevens Point ended the first half making seven out of 14 field goals.

Stout reduced the point spread before the half ended with the Blue Devils behind 20-28.

After half time, Stout realized they had to make their move and did just that in the second half when they tied it up with 12 minutes left in the game. Stevens Point took the lead once again, but with a minute and seven seconds the Blue Devils made their final try to win the game.

With twenty four seconds remaining on the clock and Stout down by two, Chuck Dugger fouled Stevens Point's Craig Hawley. Hawley went to the line making both shots which put Stevens Point ahead by four.

Rick Stephan made his last basket for the season the last five seconds in the game to put Stout within two, but time ran out for the Blue Devils before they could tie it up.

Stout overpowered the boards with 26 rebounds to Stevens Point's 16 rebounds.

Stephan had complete control of the boards for both teams with 10 rebounds. Mark Stevens brought down six rebounds, and Jeff Olson for Stevens Point could only manage to bring down four.

Stephan laid into the boards sinking 14 points. Stevens put in 13 points, and Brian Ellingson scored 10.

Stevens Point's Tim Naegeli and Olson both contributed 14 points to their team score. Hawley put in 10 points and two free throws to add to their winning tally.

Mintz said, "We played really hard and with a real team effort."

Stout 78 Platteville 68

Last Saturday the Blue Devils opened playoff competition by defeating Platteville 78-68 in an intensely physical game.

The game started with Stout winning the tip. The first half was neck and neck with Stout never more than eight points ahead. Highlights included Stout's David Sandstrom slamming his first of two dunks while the crowd went wild. The half ended with a score of 34-30.

In the second half, the Blue Devils exploded on the boards. They took control of the game, and at one time led by 14 points.

> We really played hard and with a real team effort.
> —Dwain Mintz
> Head Coach

Early in the half Ellingson received his fifth foul and was out of the game. As the game went on so did the heat on the court.

With two minutes and 40 seconds left in the game, both Tim Hill of Platteville and Sandstrom were kicked out of the game for player misconduct. Stout received two technical free throws which were shot by Glen Fischer. Fischer sank all four shots. Platteville received one technical free throw for the resulting squabble.

The game ended with the Blue Devils committing 29 fouls and Platteville 26.

Mark Place caused problems for Stout all night by scoring 24 points for Platteville.

Ron Hunter and Stephan both added 16 points for the Blue Devils. Also, Chuck Dugger chipped in 10 points to add to the Devil's final tally.

Stout once again had control of the boards, rebounding 42 compared to the Pioneers' 28 rebounds. Stephan grabbed 16 rebounds, and Hill and Place each had 6 rebounds for Platteville.

Stout 47 Eau Claire 44

Stout went up against UW-Eau Claire for their last regular season game Feb. 25. Stout defeated the Blugolds 47-44.

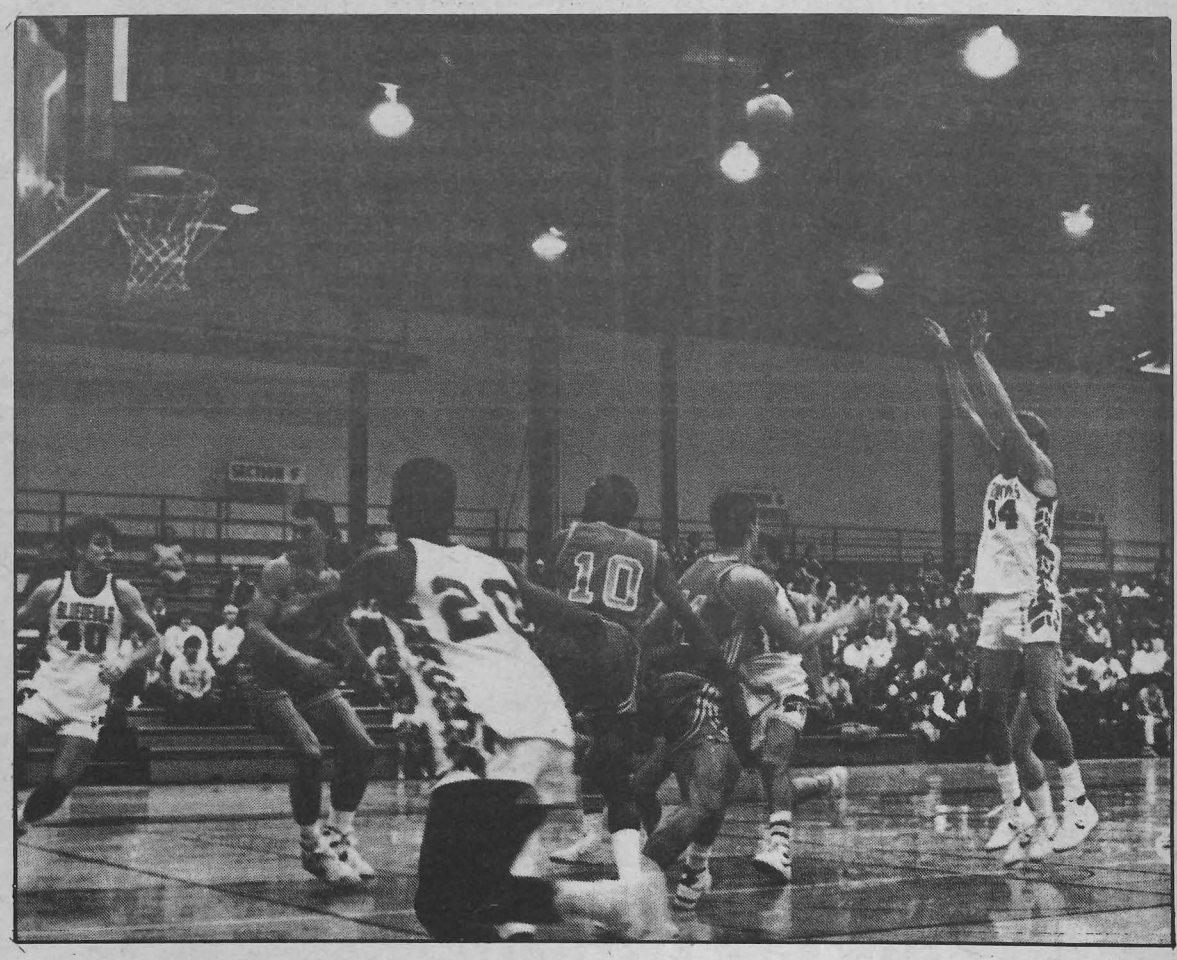
The game started very close. Neither team was more than four points ahead until six minutes before halftime when Stout took control.

When the half was over Stout was ahead 22-14. The Blue Devils kept the big lead for awhile, but eleven minutes into the half, Eau Claire started a comeback. The Blugolds made a final try to win the game and almost succeeded, but Stout held on to win the game 47-44.

Stephan was the lead rebounder for the Blue Devils with nine rebounds, and also the lead scorer with 16 points. Stevens poured in 14 points to add to the Blue Devils' score.

Chuckie Graves lead the Blugolds with 12 points, and right behind him was Brian Krueger with 11 points.

Stout ended their season in fourth place with 16 wins and 10 losses. Senior Rick Stephan was named an All-Conference player. Stephan was number one in rebounding both for the team and for the conference. Also, Brian Ellingson, a junior, received an honorable mention. He ended his year with 190 assists.



Blue Devil Tom Gomolak (34) jump shot all alone during the playoff game against UW-Platteville. Stout beat Platteville 78-68 in a game in which both teams were plagued by foul trouble. Stout committed 29 fouls and Platteville racked up 26 violations. (Stoutonia photo by Dan Banach)

Witt earns All-American status at Nationals

Paul Wehking
Sports Reporter

Heavyweight Dave Witt, a senior on the UW-Stout wrestling team, managed to cap off his final season as a Blue Devil grappler with success. Witt won sixth place and All-American honors in the NCAA Division III National Tournament last weekend.

Witt and Head Wrestling Coach Walt Perkins departed last Wednesday for Trenton, N.J. where competition was to begin on Friday.

At the tourney, Witt found himself seeded fifth out of the twenty heavyweights that competed. This tournament proved to be a little tougher for Witt, who had waltzed his way through the WSUC conference and the Regional tournament.

Witt's first match on Friday enlightened him to competition on the national level. In his first match, he stole a takedown with five seconds remaining to claim a 5-4 win over Rusty Middlebroch of Brockport.

Witt's next match was with Rolf Carlson of St. Olaf. Witt and Carlson tied 5-5 in an earlier battle this season at Johnson Fieldhouse. This time, Witt emerged victorious beating Carlson, 7-6.

This victory put Witt into the semi-finals where he met up with Jim Petty of Mont Claire. Witt was leading by three points in the second period when he suffered an injury to the arch of his foot. Petty took advantage of this and came back to defeat Witt 4-3. "I lost my composure when that happened," Witt said in reference to his injury. With this loss, Witt moved down into the loser's bracket where he met up with his first-round opponent Middlebroch.

This time, Witt found himself on the short end of the stick. Middlebroch managed to beat the sore-footed Witt in another close duel, 7-6. The condition of Witt's injury forced him to default in the match which was to decide fifth and sixth place. Ironically, the default went to Carlson who Witt had beaten in the second round on Friday. Carlson walked into the fifth place mark and consequently, Witt placed sixth.

"Dave had a good tournament. I knew he could place in the top five or six there. It would have been nice to see him in the finals though," Perkins said. Witt would have liked to have been in the finals also. "I missed my first goal (being national champion) but I got my second one (All-American)," Witt said. To acheive All-American honors a wrestler must place within the top eight places in the NCAA National Tournament.

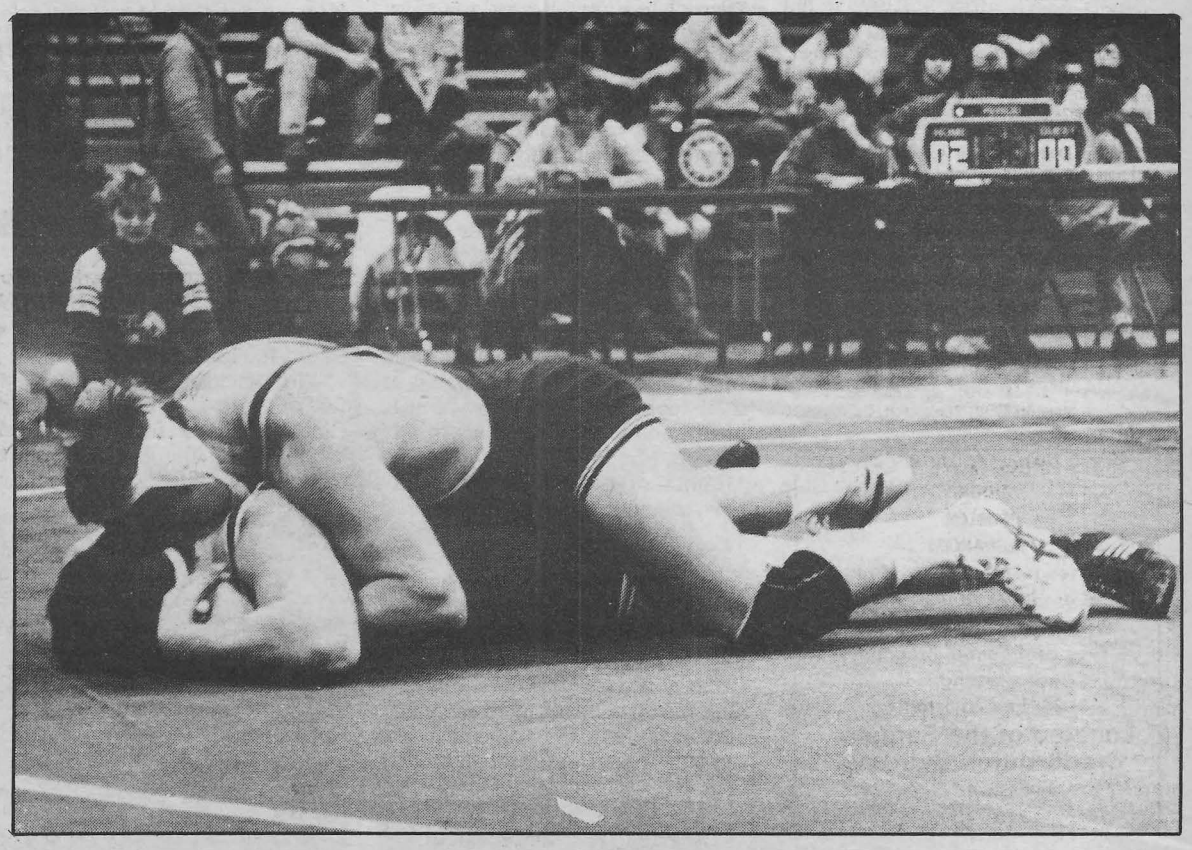
Witt is Stout's first wrestling All-American since 1982 and his individual conference championship was also the school's first since 1982. Witt put his season record to rest at an admirable 20-4-1. His other notable accomplishments include first place at the North Country Open and first at regionals.

Coach Perkins was skeptical of the bracketing because it is not usual that a wrestler should have to face two opponents twice in the same tournament. Upon examination of the rules, Perkins was satisfied with the bracketing procedures.

One thing that both Witt and Perkins weren't satisfied with was the officiating at the tourney. "For a national tournament, there was some very poor refereeing," Witt said, though he never cited this as an excuse for any of his matches.

"I rarely get upset with officials but I sure yelled at some down there," Perkins said. Both felt that the refereeing wasn't the kind that should be at a national competition.

Witt is the only Stout wrestler that will be lost due to graduation. He will graduate this spring with a degree in Industrial Education. Fortunately, there won't be a void at heavyweight. Junior Ron Wolf, who wrestled last year when Witt was out with a knee injury, is hungry to take over the spot. "Wolf will do very well next year," Perkins said.



Dave Witt had the advantage here over his opponent in an earlier season match. Witt captured sixth place and All-American honors at the NCAA Division III National Tournament held in Trenton, N.J., this past weekend. (Stoutonia photo by Dan Banach)

Student death prompts extradition request

Matt Kalina
Managing Editor

Dunn County District Attorney Michael Furnstahl signed extradition papers yesterday afternoon for a 26-year-old Texas man who is being held in the Harris County jail in Houston on a first-degree murder warrant from Dunn County in connection with the 1982 hit-and-run death of a Nigerian student at UW-Stout.

The papers petition Wisconsin Gov. Anthony Earl to ask the governor of Texas to order an extradition hearing of Michael Neubauer of Crosby, Texas charged in the death of Sani Danyaro Tela, 28, who died after being struck by a car behind a Menomonie tavern.

Lt. Tom Frazier, an investigator with the Harris County district attorney's office said Neubauer was arrested March 8 near his home in Crosby by FBI agents and Harris County sheriff's officers.

An initial extradition hearing was held in Texas March 13, and although it was expected that Neubauer would waive extradition from that state, he refused. Frazier said another extradition hearing must be held within 90 days. Furnstahl expects the extradition process to take about two months.

Furnstahl filed a criminal complaint in Circuit Court March 7 charging Neubauer with first-degree murder. The investigation of the death included the Menomonie Police Department, the Wisconsin Department of Justice, the FBI and the Civil Rights Division of the U.S. Justice Department, which began a grand jury probe into the case in 1984.

Tela was found in an alley behind the Den Bar at 1:01 a.m. June 19, 1982. He never regained consciousness and died later that morning at the Sacred Heart Hospital in Eau Claire. According to police, Tela was involved in an altercation with Neubauer at the Den Bar the night of June 18 and the early morning of June 19, 1982.

The case was closed in November 1982 by State Attorney General Bronson La Follette, who referred it back to the Dunn County district attorney's office. The U.S. Justice Department concluded that no evidence had been produced which could serve as the basis for a homicide prosecution.

According to the criminal complaint filed March 7, the case made a "break through" when a witness, Ray Dye, told the FBI about statements Neubauer gave that night. Dye had been questioned by police in earlier investigations, but this time Dye said that Neubauer came up to him in the Den Bar and told him that he had just run over "a Nigerian...."

WVSS violation of FCC rules causes apparent liability of $2,000

From this view point the EBS monitor appears operable but the device had been ripped out of the wall during a late night altercation at WVSS. The damage resulted in the apparent liability for $1000 of the $2000 fine the FCC gave WVSS notice of. (Stoutonia photo by Brad Kautzer)

Tim Hopkins
News Editor

The Federal Communications Commission (FCC) has notified WVSS-FM General Manager Arthur C. "Ace" Matthews of the station's apparent liability for a $2000 fine which the FCC said resulted from what they listed as willful and repeated violation of FCC rules and regulations.

Matthews called the situation the toughest crisis he has faced at the station in 16 years. He responded to the March 5 notice of liability from the FCC emphasizing the fact that, "I don't believe any of the violations were willful." He said that, "I asked that the fine be reduced because we don't have the money to pay it."

The FCC notice sent Matthews by Engineer in Charge, Garrett Lysiak, said the notice resulted from an inspection of WVSS Feb. 28. The violations recorded at that time included that the Emergency Broadcast System (EBS) receiver was not functional, the failure to transmit EBS tests, the failure to make station identification announcements, and the failure to have an operator on duty.

Responding to the apparent willful violations cited by the FCC, Matthews wrote that the EBS receiver wasn't fuctional due to vandalism that took place the night before the inspection. The station is offering a $100 reward for information leading to the apprehension of the vandal.

Matthews said the station identification violation resulted from confusion created by the elimination of FCC rules to log station identifications. "I thought with all the changes in the logs that the strict ID was no longer necessary," Matthews wrote.

The failure to have an operator on duty at night while the Automatic Transmission System (ATS) was being used, "Resulted from stupidity on my part," Matthews said.

Both the station identification and the no operator on duty violations, Matthews said resulted from trying to do more with less. "We were testing an automation system to play music all night on compact disks. With our $6,200 a year budget we were trying to give more service for the same amount of money."

Matthews said, "We were trying to impress the student association with our abilities to deliver, since at the time $35,000 in budget cuts were being proposed, including a $1,500 cut in our own budget."

The failure to perform EBS tests resulted from the hiring of two student managers who "were not fully trained." Matthews admitted, "I didn't take the time to go over everything with them."

Matthews recognized that he was responsible for seeing that the FCC fine was paid but he could not say where the money would come from. The UW-System Coordinator for Radio and Television, Ken Warren said that before deciding where the money would come from to pay the fine, "We would have to wait and see what the final amount of the fine is."

Stout Student Association (SSA) President JoAnn Prange said that WVSS could apply for the money from unallocated funds which currently stand at $4,000. Prange also said, "I think the idea of a fund raiser is excellent."

Matthews has considered having WVSS change to cable broadcasting which would eliminate FCC regulation of the station. Using this format, they would switch to selling advertising. Matthews said he was reluctant to start sell-

Coffers now in question

Compiled by Paul D. Nelson

Although former Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos is now a man without a country, he is in no way a man without money. Recent allegations assert that Marcos may in fact be one of a handful of billionaires in the world.

Corazon Aquino appointed respected Filipino lawyer Jovito Salonga to head a special governmental commission to look into the possibility of recovering some of the wealth which the former First Family allegedly stole from the Filipino people via widespread governmental corruption during Marcos' 20 year reign.

Salonga maintains that Marcos stole between $5 billion and $10 billion while occupying the Malacanang Palace.

Quoted in the March 17 issue of Newsweek magazine, Salonga emphasized that "There was no distinction between private funds and public wealth." And an anonymous American official asserted that "The robber barons took over the [Filipino] government and declared martial law. It was like having Jay Gould as president, Jim Fisk as secretary of the treasury and Boss Tweed as attorney general."

When Marcos fled the Philippines and was granted temporary residence at Hickam Air Force Base located in the Hawaiian Islands, United States Customs officials reported that his party had brought approximately $1.5 million in Filipino currency, almost $10 million in stocks and jewelry, and a multitude of documents that could link Marcos with untold wealth around the world.

Another Marcos critic, Steve Psinakis, charges that the Marcos family and selected supporters have deposited between $1 billion and $3 billion in Swiss bank accounts, along with approximately $300 million in Brazilian banks.

Yet Marcos did not act alone in his quest to build a personal fortune at the expense of his countrymen. Former First Lady Imelda was reportedly sending so many suitcases of cash to a specially numbered Swiss account that the bank officials eventually refused to receive any more questionable currency.

And daughter Imee was reportedly in charge of keeping detailed records of her family's ill-gotten gains.

Rep. Stephen Solarz (D-New York) has held congressional hearings to try to determine the extent of Marcos' real estate holdings in the United States. And some of the findings, which indicate that many of the allegations may be true, last week prompted a New York state judge to block the sale of five properties which have been connected to Marcos: the Lindenmere estate on Long Island, the Herald Center shopping mall, the Crown Building on Fifth Avenue, and office buildings located at 40 Wall St. and 200 Madison Ave.

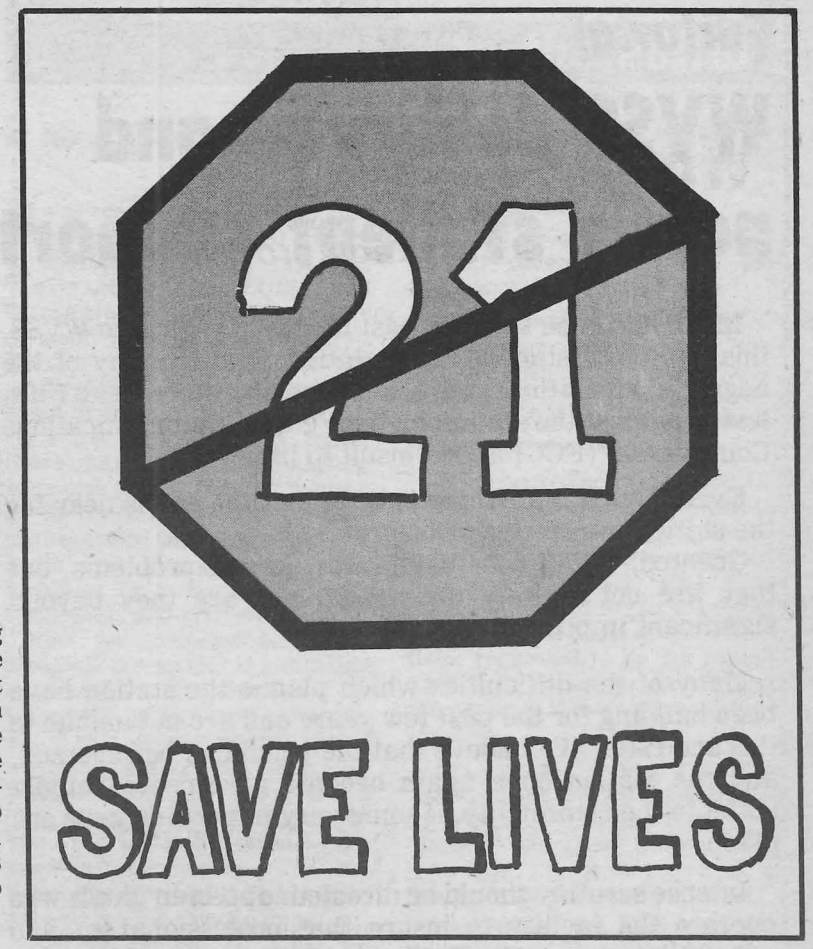
Raise in drinking age now appears doubtful



Kelly Cohorst
News Reporter

The controversy about whether or not to raise Wisconsin's drinking age was argued before an assembly committee in Madison, Wis. although the prospects for consideration of the measure this legislative session appeared bleak.

Both sides of the issue were strong in the display of there position. The two chief lobby groups were Stop 21 and 21 NOW Coalition. Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD) and other social organizations were fighting to change the drinking age to 21. Their argument for raising the drinking age drew its strength from the pain speakers expressed about the loss of a a loved one in a drunken driving accident.

Hundreds of people showed up to demonstrate their views either for against raising the drinking age. Excitement over the issue filled the overcrowded Assembly chamber.

The Stop 21 crowd broke into an uproar when State Rep. Susan Vergeront, R-Grafton, was challenged by Committee member State Rep. Gervase Hephner, D-Chilton.

State Rep. Richard Shoemaker D-Menomonie, chairperson of the committee said, "I suppose that we could have this type of demonstration all day but I'm not going to have it. And those on the committee that would wish to encourage that kind of thing. Well... I'm not going to have that either."

Hephner pointed out that the church groups supporting Vergeront and the 21 NOW coalition cannot raise the drinking age to 21 and still serve alcoholic beverages at church functions or any other functions for that matter.

Vergeront argued that they have church picnics and that they don't serve anyone under 19, " I could not see any problem with having church picnics and not serving anyone under the age of 21."

Supporters argued that the higher drinking age would cut down on the problem of the younger people driving drunk. But it was pointed out that not all drunk drivers are under 21 and statistically a much higher percentage of drunk driving accidents involve drivers over the age of 21.

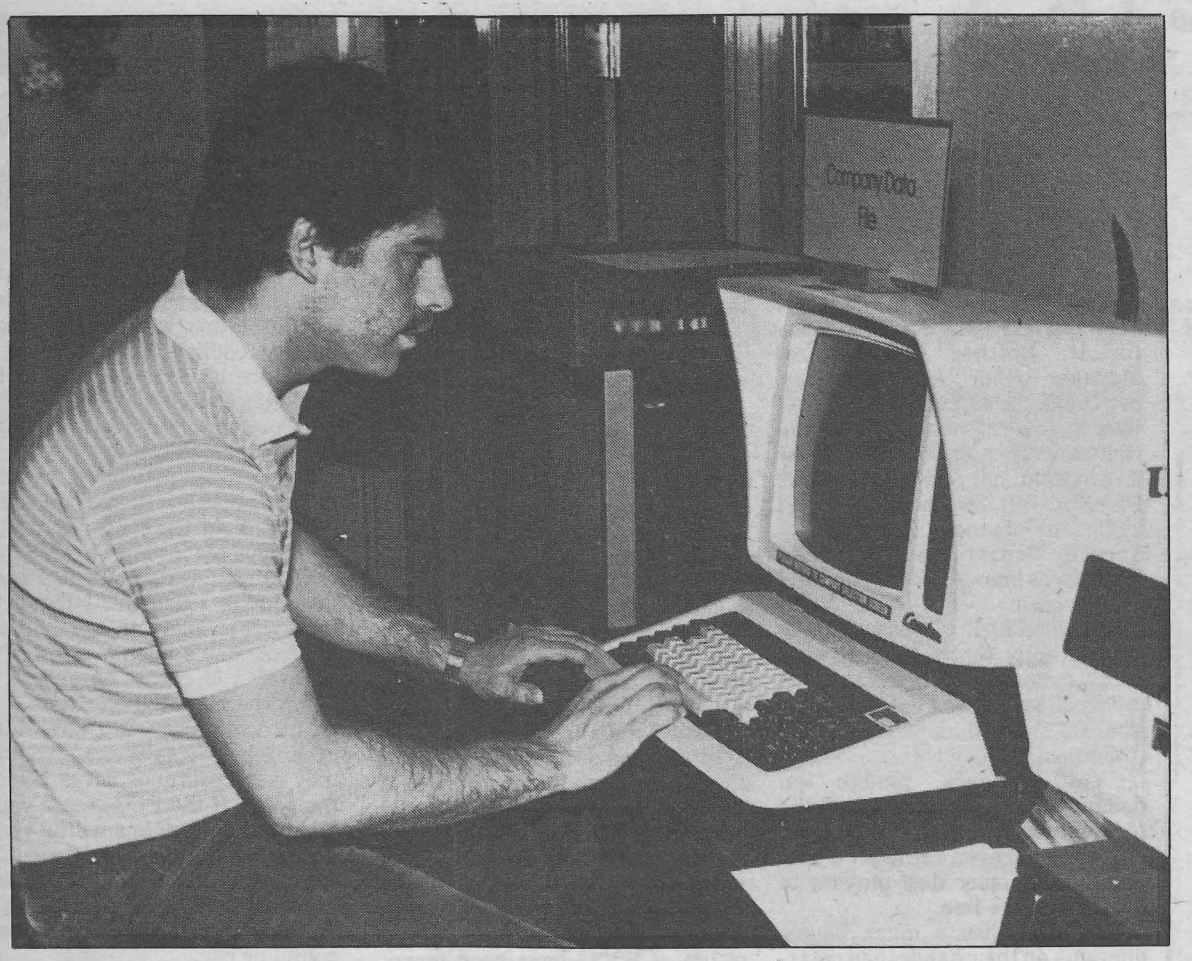
"We do not believe that raising the drinking age will by itself solve the problem of alcohol abuse but that it will help, said Morton Hetzenecker, the Hartland police chief and spokes person for the Wisconsin Chiefs of Police Association. Hetznecker said, "We do believe that raising the age to 21 will result in more mature persons making the decision to drink and to what degree."

He cited a that do not adopt an age requirement of 21. This was considered at the hearing but failed to alter the final result. Some state officials appear willing to lose the federal money "simply by saying we want to be different," Republican Rep. John Merkt of Mequon said. Governor Anthony Earl and other state officials have said they oppose boosting the minimun drinking age beyond 19.

Earl aide Paul DeMain said the governor feels the loss of 21 million in Federal aid would not seriously hurt Wisconsin's Transportation plans.

Because the Legislature's session is scheduled to end on March 26, Shoemaker said that it is unlikely that the Assembly and the Senate could consider the legislation before their summer adjournment.

Placement office computer aids job hunt



Manufacturing engineering major senior Eric Malm accesses The Company Data File in the Career Placement Office as he attempts to gain an accurate picture of the companies which might offer him the career of a lifetime. The Company Data File will be expanded as the Placement Office learns more about the companies recruiting UW-Stout graduates. (Stoutonia photo by Brad Kautzer)

Nitin Nadkarni
News Reporter

UW-Stout students searching for that first job after graduation to get them on the right path to achieve the career of their dreams, are being helped by the new computer in the lobby of the Resource Center in the Placement Office.

The Company Data File System in the Resource Center is a computer with a printer designed to assist the students getting information about the 400 companies the computer has in its memory. All these companies represent potential employers.

The information includes, the name and address of the company, the name of the person to be contacted in order to apply for the job and his/her designation, telephone number, and a brief description of the company. The computer data file also has information about the companies previous recruitment on campus and listed vacancies.

Further information is retrievable concerning whether the company is a career day participant at Stout, whether it has hired Stout graduates in the past and whether there is further resource information available on the company. The typical majors/concentrations that the company needs, and information on their summer and intern programs are also available.

The computer's memory houses information on approximately 400 companies from different areas including manufacturing, retail, business, hospitality and tourism. The Placement Office plans for the computer data file on companies to grow every semester.

A reference manual with a set of instructions is also provided beside the computer to guide the students. A student assistant also helps the students with any questions they might have.

The company information can be had through three methods.

1. Direct Company Access: Access to the information on the individual company itself.

2. Access to the company through company categories: Companies are arranged according to their specific type and are categorized with other companies sharing the same characteristics. At the press of a button the student can gain access to groups of similar companies and target a specific company of their liking from this information.

3. The third method is the selection of a company on the basis of specific criteria characterizing the company. These criteria include company location,(statewise), the particular major it hires, recruitment on campus, whether the company hires Stout graduates or not.

Opinions

Editorial

WVSS deserves and needs student support

Much has been said the past month in regard to WVSS, this campus's student radio station. And if many of the negative allegations were not enough, the recent fines levied against the station by the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) added insult to injury.

Even though many may believe that the end is near for the station, we strongly disagree.

Granted, WVSS does have some serious problems, but they are not entirely their fault, nor are they beyond significant improvement.

Many of the difficulties which plague the station have been building for the past few years and are not unique to this semester. We believe that the trend can be reversed, and the station once again become a respected media outlet in the community, if some very important steps are taken.

Intense scrutiny should be directed to all individuals who operate the facility to insure that professionalism and adherence to prescribed policies is followed at all times.

Industry professionals who are in no way connected with WVSS should be asked to study the current status of the station's operation and make recommendations as to what problem areas can be addressed and improved upon.

The Stout Student Association (SSA) should seriously consider additional funding for the station so they have the financial wherewithal to act upon many of the recommendations which we believe outside observers may recommend.

We stand beside our media counterpart because to do otherwise would contribute to the possible loss of what we believe will once again be a valuable information and entertainment resource on this campus.

Crash and Burn

WVSS II: The turmoil continues

Matt Kalina

In a surprise inspection by the Federal Communications Commission, WVSS was not awarded any trophies.

Instead, they scored a major ticket — $2000 worth.

What's funny is that no one knows exactly who is liable to pay for it. Neither the General Manager Arthur "Ace" Matthews, nor Dr. Gerane Dougherty, dean of liberal studies, nor Ken Warren, radio and TV administrator of the UW-System, nor Student Activities Director Bill Siedlecki, nor SSA President Joanne Prange, nor Speech Department Chairman Ray Hayes knows who will be driving the cash.

SSA President Joann Prange said recently that a fundraiser to recover money for the violations is an "excellent" idea. I can see it now. The DJ's could do a week-long radiothon.

"Yes listeners, pledge ten dollars today so we can be on the air tommorow."

They could even raffle off a couple of their laser disc players to pay part of the fine.

But WVSS has a much bigger dilemma on their hands than determining who will dish out the prize money. They must decide right now if they want to develop into a functioning, productive, competent communications resource for Stout, or if they want to pull the noose tighter and jump off a chair. If they decide to continue, one thing is for sure, they must do some heavy-duty upgrading. WVSS was designed for community service, but they are just not providing it. WVSS has to understand a concept called quality braodcasting and must make a ultimatum to serve the needs of the campus. They should not continue to reek in their pathetic existence, only to fulfill the minimal requirements of their license.

Presently, WVSS is a vast wasteland of resources. If quality was improved, more students would listen, more would want to work at the station, and the station could turn around.

WVSS has been like a person letting his taxes slide for year after year, ignoring the possibility of penalties until judgement day arrives when it's too late.

Is the end in sight for WVSS? Could the harsh hands of the FCC have been enough to finally strangle WVSS? Well, it could very well be kids, and all because of mass carelessness.

Botches, mess-ups, slips and mishaps which have become a part of life at WVSS have been mounting in the past few years. It is actually possible that WVSS could become a prime source of information and entertainment on this campus, but not before General Manager Arthur Matthews accepts the responsibility and strive to improve.

Matthews said that he has performed to the best of his ability. But has he? Since Matthews is the chief operator at WVSS, he should have at least ran the fledgling station legally. He should not risk losing the station, with the Stout community coming up the eventual losers in the deal, because of his negligence. Although Matthews may not be totally responsible for some of the violations, he is supposed to be in charge of the station's operations and is held accountable for the chaos. Matthews is responsible for knowing the FCC regulations inside and out. Forget the I think I thought, I thought I think, I thought that I think I thought. The station must play by the rules because hey, it is a federally regulated operation.

The violations were not willful according to Matthews. Whether they were willful or not is beside the point. If the FCC sees a violation, that in itself is a willful violation. The FCC does have the technology or the time to conduct psychological tests on Matthews to determine if the violations were willful or not.

Matthews must become aware of present FCC rules and regulations so that should FCC officers ever return to the bowels of the station, WVSS will not have to look like goofs again.

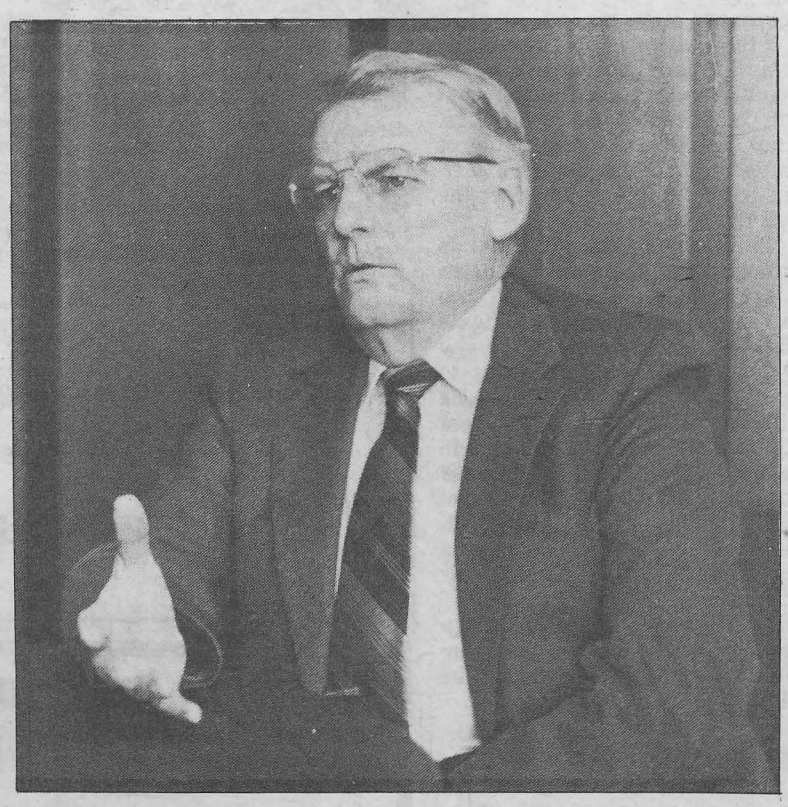
Subject: Chancellor elaborates on timely issues which will impact on Stout's present and future

Text by Paul D. Nelson



Chancellor Robert Swanson

Chancellor Robert S. Swanson, 61, came to Stout as a freshman in 1942. He enlisted in the service during World War II, during his freshman year, on Dec.7, 1942, the first anniversary of the attack on Pearl Harbor. Nearly all the male students at the University went to Eau Claire and tried to enlist in one of the armed services. Fifty-seven were accepted, while others worked in war industries. He served as a platoon sergeant in an anti-tank company in the Army's 42nd Infantry Division which joined the 7th Army in Europe.

Swanson returned in 1946 and continued his education, receiving a degree in education in 1949. He remained at Stout and was awarded his masters degree in Industrial Education in 1950. He then began teaching woodworking and drafting at Stout, while at the same time working toward his Ph.D. at the University of Minnesota, which he received in 1955.

Swanson was Vice-President of the Stout Student Association (SSA) from 1947-48 and President from 1948-49. He was a charter member of what later became the Sigma Tau Gamma Fraternity, called Phalanx when he joined in 1947. Phalanx, which was a local organization at the time of it's inception, secured a national charter in 1948.

Swanson taught a multitude of shop and theory courses between 1950-58 and served as the Chairman of the Woodtechnics Department and Assistant Dean of the School of Industry and Technology from 1958-64.

Swanson succeeded Dean Jarvis in 1964 as the Dean of School of Industry and Technology and became Dean of the Graduate College in 1966. He was then elevated to the position of Chancellor in 1972.

STOUTONIA: HAS THE STOUTONIA SERVED THE UNIVERSITY COMMUNITY THE PAST YEAR AND FACILITATED IT'S ROLE AS PUBLIC WATCHDOG?

SWANSON: Simply, yes. I would say you have.

STOUTONIA: HAS THE STOUTONIA BEEN FAIR AND IMPARTIAL?

SWANSON: I think so.

Letters to the editor

It takes guts to speak out

I was reading the February 13th issue of The Stoutonia and a letter to the editor caught my eye, "Coverage of Professor Unfair and Damaging" compared The Stoutonia to the National Enquirer. It talks about exploitation and responsibility. Let me say just a bit about this.

First of all exploitation. In the first semester we had two beautiful examples of this. The first happened in CKTO. The second was a distinguished old psychology professor. I was in on both stories, and I believe they were handled both responsibly and professionally.

Now for responsibility. The Stoutonia is responsible for all that is printed in the paper, not the University, or the State of Wisconsin. If this narrow-minded person was truly responsible, he/she/it, take your pick, would have done a little research and would realize The Stoutonia is governed by the same journalistic rules as the National Enquirer, Wall Street Journal and the New York Times.

Just remember the thirst for knowledge is why you are all there, you have a right to know what is happening in your surroundings, good and bad.

It takes a little guts to stand up and speak out; these are the people who want to do it, The Stoutonia. I was proud to be one of them.

Return city government to people of Menomonie

I feel that this letter is extremely important to you the people of the City of Menomonie.

Recently the City of Menomonie purchased equipment for our landfill. This may not seem like an important story, but indeed it is.

An equipment dealer went to see the City Manager to see if he would be able to put a bid on the equipment purchase.

The City Manager said no, we weren't accepting bids on the equipment purchase.

The equipment dealer notified me in a letter and he said that "the City of Menomonie is the only municipality in his seven county sales area that doesn't accept bids on this type of purchase."

I was shocked and I called the City Manager to ask him to place on the agenda a municipal purchasing policy, he refused. The equipment was over $70,000. The City Manager refused to place an item on the agenda that an elected official requested to be put on the agenda. It is easy to see who has the power in Menomonie's government.

I'm supposed to represent over 13,000 people currently and the City Manager in effect refused to listen to the 13,000 people that I represent. Is this the type of government the taxpayers want?

Remember, the Declaration of Independence states that "governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed and that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it." It is high time we abolish the manager form of government and join the other 90 percent of the cities in this state and have a mayor form of government.

Vote yes April 1 for an elected mayor and alderman by ward and give the government back to the people.

Jay H. Schroeder,
City Council Alderman

I think it's wrong. We're supporting the wrong side. I think it's their own problem, and we shouldn't be involved in other people's internal affairs.

Brent Haines,
Freshman,
Applied Math

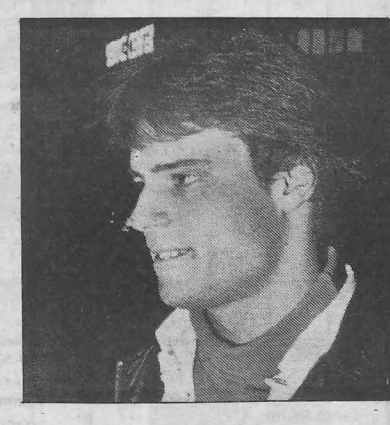
If we give them a hundred million dollars, we will never see it again, I'm sure. Although there is a call to stop communism I don't think it's the issue right now. I think what happens really isn't up to us. We have enough problems of our own.

Rainford Martin,
Graduate,
Management Technology

We have already spent three hundred million dollars last year and there was no progress, so one hundred million dollars won't do anything. I think peaceful negotiations is the best thing.

Sue Smeltzer,
Senior,
Business Administration

I don't think we should get involved at all because I feel they should fight their own war. They don't need our help. We have helped enough. I don't always agree with what Reagan says, but in this situation, I feel that many details are being withheld from the general public.



John Rashid,
Junior,
Industrial Technology

If it's going to help us I think we should support them. As far as having them as our allies, it helps us have good relations, and it will help them economically.

Inspect before signing lease

Patty Strassman

It is foolish, but not illegal, to sign a lease for an apartment or house that you have never seen. Most of us would agree with that statement.

The problem is that no one wants to take the time out in their busy schedule to seriously investigate the housing situation.

My advice is do not wait until the last moment to hunt, and be patient. Above all, do not let the difficulties of apartment or house hunting convince you to take one that is unsuitable.

Your first visit to inspect the apartment or house with the landlord or with his or her agent may be your only chance to determine if the apartment or house will provide you with a quiet, secure and well-maintained home. Bring your list of criteria with you and be ready to ask questions.

Tenants often overlook the exterior of a building and fail to consider how important the location can be.

Here is a beginning checklist for a prospective renter:

1. Is there convenient shopping?
2. Is there off-street parking and a garage?
3. Does the general upkeep of the outside areas lead you to believe that the landlord provides adequate maintenance?
4. Is there a locked storage area?
5. Is there convenient laundry facilities?

Add questions of your own to this list to make it complete for you.

When you first inspect the apartment or house, take time and don't be rushed by an impatient landlord. Check everything out in the apartment that concerns you. Turn on the water, lights, appliances and make sure that the heating and electrical outlets work. Listen for noise coming through the walls, floors and ceilings. Ask to make sure that doors and windows are well-locked and secure. Write down any problems that would have to be corrected before you move in.

If the apartment was advertised as a "furnished apartment," question the landlord and find out what will be included as furnishings. Since there is no legal definition of the term furnished, getting a written list from the landlord is the best that you can do.

No matter how carefully you go through your checklist during an initial visit to an apartment, you can never completely investigate all potential trouble spots. One way to get further information is to return to the apartment or house without the landlord or an agent and talk to the current tenants in the unit or building. Be sure to ask about any potential problems not easily noticed on a quick visit. Most people won't mind talking a few minutes, but do respect their privacy.

By following these few basic suggestions the chances of running into future rental problems will be eliminated.

Schroeder keeps promises

A few years ago I received a phone call from Jay Schroeder. He told me that he was a Stout student, and that he was a candidate for the City Council. I asked him a few questions, and he gave me direct answers. He was not evasive. I said, "that is good enough for me. I will vote for you." He has kept all the promises that he made then.

The new city library has been a public relations nightmare. Some of the local bureaucracies are opposed to Jay's open government policies. The word "inexperienced" is only a vague adjective. I am serving my apprenticeship in everyday living, and I am over 75 years old. Students are an important part of Menomonie's culture. Townspeople, who usually have open minds, should make major policy decisions.

I am a member of Ralph Nader's Public Citizen group.

STOUTONIA: WHAT HAS BEEN THE MOST POSITIVE OCCURRENCE AT THE UNIVERSITY THIS PAST YEAR?
SWANSON: Certainly the most positive and all pervasive, I would say, is the opening of the Student Center. Another thing though, that's of a different kind, would be the passage of faculty catch-up pay. That's been a very positive thing. Our preparation for an accreditation review is something that is less obvious to the general public, but is a very important thing. We'll actually have the review visit next month, but the preparation for that, which is the review of the whole institution, I would call that a very positive event. I guess those are things that I put high on the list.
STOUTONIA: WHAT HAS BEEN THE MOST NEGATIVE OCCURRENCE AT THE UNIVERSITY THIS PAST YEAR?
SWANSON: Well, financially of course, the whole situation on the budget is about to be an overriding concern. The shortfall of the $340 million incurred by the state and the subsequent cuts of the budget which have not yet actually taken place and won't really have an effect in 1985-86 and will have only a little more effect in 1986-87. But going beyond that, it looks as though we will actually be funded at a less good level. I would have to say that probably is the overriding concern that would be the most negative.
STOUTONIA: TO WHAT DEGREE WILL THE CUTS IN EDUCATION AFFECT THE UNIVERSITY?
SWANSON: I think that one of the things that will happen is somewhat of a reduction of access to the University. I think that we will probably have fewer students. For Stout that's not going to be a great reduction in number. It is our plan next year to reduce enrollment by 200 over the current year. So I think that will be a big negative factor. Another one will be, of course, we will have a smaller supplies and services budget. Probably less replacement of equipment and so forth. We will have somewhat fewer staff members when this all breaks out, I'm sure. So those are effects that have happened.
STOUTONIA: WHAT IS STOUT'S SPECIAL MISSION OR ROLE IN THE UW-SYSTEM?
SWANSON: First of all, in the UW-System, there are only two institutions that are designated as Special Mission. We have focused programs around a rather focused mission. And that mission can most simply be described to prepare professional personnel for programs in industry, technology, home economics, applied art, the helping professions, and education related to that. So that is our Special Mission.
STOUTONIA: WHAT FUTURE CONSTRUCTION PLANS DOES THE UNIVERSITY HAVE AFTER THE ADDITION TO THE FIELDHOUSE IS COMPLETED?
SWANSON: Our next project, which is of course under construction, is the making of the old student center into a graphics and photography lab. Our number one project priority after that is an addition to the Home Economics Building, primarily to serve our needs in Hotel and Restaurant Management, but probably more broadly than that. And we have that listed now as our next top priority. We're in the process, now, of beginning the 1987-89 capital budget requests and that is only at the very beginning. Of course we're a year and a half away from that time. But that is our top priority.

> It is our plan next year to reduce enrollment by 200 over the current year.

STOUTONIA: WHAT DO YOU FEEL THE UNIVERSITY ENROLLMENT COULD BE BY THE END OF THE CENTURY?
SWANSON: I've just written a brief scenario on that for an exercise we're doing with the Regents and we're saying that our enrollment will be in the range of 9000. That will depend on a lot of things. If the funding goes down significantly our enrollment could go down. But if we have reasonable funding or even funding at the same level we are this year, compensated for inflation, the students and the demand is out there easily for an enrollment of 9000.
STOUTONIA: ARE THERE NOW ANY PLANS TO ADD OR DROP MAJORS IN RELATION TO THE PRESENT CURRICULUM OFFERED?
SWANSON: There are no plans to drop majors. We constantly have a list of programs that we are thinking of proposing. And probably our next one is really a modification of a program we have and that would be the extended degree in Industrial Technology, which would take it off-campus into business and industry and so forth. But there will be constant changing of the concentrations within all of these programs. We have nearly 100 concentrations now. I would see some of those changing and being modified. Another big area in curriculum though that we will be expanding is a concept called a Specialization. We have initiated that. We have four of them, more or less in place. These are not degree programs. They are taken by degree students and have credits associated with them. But it's just a whole different approach and we think eventually the non-degree student may be interested in this. The four Specializations we have now are Craftsmanship, Inventing, Future Studies, Industrial Training.
STOUTONIA: HOW WELL DO YOU BELIEVE THE NEW ACADEMIC CALENDAR WILL WORK WHEN IT IS ADOPTED NEXT SEMESTER?
SWANSON: I'm sure it will work. Anything that gets changed, at first, people suspect that it won't be very good and inside of five or six years, if we stay with it and somebody wants to change it, they'll say that we can't change this because we have this longstanding calendar that is great. Actually, the calendar that we are switching too is about [the same as] the calendar we had twenty years or more ago. There is one difference. The traditional calendar started the Tuesday after Labor Day and then the first semester usually extended beyond Christmas and so about the second or third week of January we'd finish. Now this one will finish before Christmas. But I'm sure that we will adapt to it as we have to any calendar.
STOUTONIA: HAS THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE UNIVERSITY AND THE CITY OF MENOMONIE IMPROVED OR DETERIORATED OVER THE LAST FIVE YEARS?
SWANSON: That's very hard for me to judge, I suppose. In my view, it has improved. You always have individuals [and] specific events that get highlighted at a given moment which may be very good or not so good. But [there are some areas in which] overall it has improved. We are in the midst of a major capital campaign for the University, Toward Century II. We have had excellent response from the city [and] the citizens of Menomonie in contributing to that campaign. They have pledged a considerable amount of money to Stout in this. And these are both businessmen and private citizens. Obviously, that's a positive thing. They wouldn't be designating funds for the University unless they felt good about it. We have had very good relationships with the city government for instance. I guess I have to say that, certainly in any official sense, the city of Menomonie very much appreciates and works with Stout. They use our facilities. The [Menomonie] Chamber of Commerce has their annual meeting here. The student government [SSA] belongs to the chamber of commerce, as do many of our staff members. I guess I tend to see positive things only. The 8M plant, as least partially, came to Menomonie because of Stout. And many of these things, I think, are very positive.

> There are no plans to drop majors. We constantly have a list of programs that we are thinking of proposing.

STOUTONIA: WHAT SPECIAL QUALITIES SHOULD YOUR SUCCESSOR HAVE WHEN THE NEED ARISES FOR A NEW CHANCELLOR TO BE CHOSEN?
SWANSON: Well, I don't know. I guess [he or she] should be a good Chancellor, I guess. Everybody's [all previous Chancellors] been different. I have a lot of faith in whoever is chosen will be a good one. My four predecessors, three of them I knew personally, all had different qualities I think. I might say what Bill Marriott said when he was here talking to students. When a student asked him what qualities were needed to be a good hotel manager, he said work hard. I think you need somebody that is willing to work hard. But there are so many different combinations of qualities that people can have that I think it's often kind of foolish to even speculate, because there are fifteen of us Chancellors in the UW-System, and I know them all quite well, and there are all different sorts of persons. Somebody said the other day that they all get up early every morning. All of them don't stay up late at night. But I don't know if that's even true that they all get up early in the morning. I think it's such a complex thing that many different approaches can work. It depends an awful lot on the timeliness of the person. Are they appropriate for the job at the time? I guess I look at all four of my predecessors, they were all appropriate for a period in Stout's history. And that period in the history tended to have ended about the time they left and I don't think that they had a force on that. Rather, I think it's a cycle. Maybe it's simply that they saw that it was time to go and some of them left before they had to. One of them died on the job and he probably would have stayed longer if he had lived. I guess I really don't try to predict what a person should be like, because you may have a tendency to say that he should be like me and I don't think that's true.

Computers

The computer is aided with a printer for documentation of the information.

Placement counselor, Ms. Patricia Freer, stated that the office automation process started about three years ago and was primarily used for job matching and for interview sign-up procedures. The second phase, to build up a company data file, was started a year ago and the data file was put into operation on February 15, 1986.

"It took us a year to accumulate the necessary information of about 400 companies and this is an ongoing process," Freer said.

"The student reaction to the computer data file has been both encouraging and favorable as students welcomed the arrival of this new piece of equipment which helps ease the task of job selection," Freer said.

Freer said the advantage of the computer data file over the directories in the Resource Center is that the data files offer students the necessary information on the name of the particular person to be contacted and the person's phone number plus other valuable information which is not offered in the directories.

Freer said, "As companies come on the campus, we ask them to review the information that we have on the file about them and update the information for us. This assists us in the maintenance of the file."

The Placement Office plans to transfer all the data on companies now in the information material in the resource library onto the company data file. This would enable students immediate access to essential company information at the touch of a few computer keys.

"Eventually I hope that the companies that we have literature on in the Resource Center would also be in the Data file," Freer said.

REGISTRATION SCHEDULE

Students who wish to register must follow the time schedule listed below. If you are unsure of how many credits you have earned, please call the PASS Office, x-1465.

Class schedule books will be available beginning March 24. They will be available in each of the residence halls and at the Information Desk of the Student Center.

All students will register by submitting completed program cards and their Permit to Register at the Registration and Records Office, Room 109 Bowman Hall. Read further for information on obtaining your Permit to Register.

UNDERGRADUATE ADVISEMENT PROCEDURES

A Permit to Register must be obtained before you will be allowed to register for your classes. Find your major in the list below for specific information regarding advisement and procedures for obtaining your Permit to Register. Permits will be distributed from the appropriate offices beginning on Monday, March 24. If you are unsure of what major you are listed under, call the PASS Office at 232-1465, or the Registration and Records Office at 232-2121.

ATTENTION SENIORS
A SPECIAL NOTE FROM THE GRADUATE OFFICE

A HEAD START ON YOUR GRADUATE WORK:
Graduating seniors who need from 1 to 15 hours to complete their bachelor's degree work and who apply for one of UW-Stout's graduate degree programs have an opportunity to get a head start on graduate work at Stout. It is possible to enter the Graduate College on a "split program" basis. This means that those students otherwise eligible for graduate work may take courses at the graduate level to bring their total load to a maximum of 16 credit hours during the semester in which graduation will take place. Split-program students are eligible only as program students.

Tuition for the senior semester remains the same as for other senior undergraduates. Start early by calling at the Graduate College, phone 715/232-2211, for information and various forms. These must be filled out to permit processing of your application. Upon completion of processing (about 30 days), you may obtain your Graduate Permit to Register and advice from the appropriate Graduate Program Director to select courses that will lead toward your graduate program.

Legislation requires a non-refundable application fee of $20.00 of all applicants for admission to graduate study in UW-Systems universities.

Applications for admission will not be processed until the application fee and all forms have been received by the Graduate College. Check or money order should be made out to UW-Stout and remitted to the Graduate College, University of Wisconsin-Stout, Menomonie, WI.

REGISTRATION INFORMATION FOR GRADUATE STUDENTS

FIRST: Permits to Register for eligible students will be available from their graduate program directors starting March 24. See your graduate advisor (program director) to obtain your Permit to Register and class cards and receive assistance in completing your schedule. This advisement may take place any time after the class schedules are announced. (Class schedule books will be available on March 24 in your residence hall or at the Information Desk of the Student Center). Graduate students may register for a maximum of 16 credits per semester.

Students for whom the program directors do not have a Permit to Register should stop at the Graduate College Office between 9 a.m. - 11:30 a.m. beginning March 31.

International students whose program directors do not have their Permits to Register must call at the Graduate College Office between 9:00 - 11:30 a.m. to see the Admissions Examiner.

Be sure to review your degree progress according to the Student Progress Sheet which is on the inside cover of your Graduate Bulletin. Don't hesitate to call at the Graduate College if you need additional information and instructions.

Some graduate students are now at the point at which they should be applying for admission to candidacy. If you have completed 6 hours of graduate work, call at the Graduate College Office to obtain the information and forms needed to apply for candidacy. This should take place before applying for a Permit to Register.

THEN: Take your PERMIT TO REGISTER and SIGNED PROGRAM CARD to the Registration and Records Office according to their schedule. (Your advisor will keep two of the program cards).

Pick up a copy of your schedule in lobby of Bowman Hall. Students who found conflicts or closed sections in their schedules may make changes on the above dates.

NOTICE TO 1986-87 GRADUATING SENIORS
(Except: Psychology and Industrial Technology Majors)

During the summer months the Registration and Records Office staff prepares graduation check sheets. These check sheets will be distributed in August and reflect the courses remaining to be completed prior to graduation.

In order to prepare an accurate check sheet, it is necessary to have the following documents:

1. Program Plan Sheet, Program Guide Sheet, or Program Approval Form (for Clothing, Textiles and Design).
2. Waiver or Substitution forms signed by Program Director for any deviations from requirements of the Program.
3. Approved (by Program Director) list of courses which will fulfill the requirements for a concentration, emphasis area, specialization, study track, or etc. - in those majors where it is required and not already listed on the Program Plan Sheet.

TURN IN THE ABOVE MATERIAL TO THE REGISTRATION AND RECORDS OFFICE WITH YOUR REGISTRATION CARDS WHEN YOU REGISTER FOR THE FALL TERM.

Graduation Check Sheets will be prepared only for those students who turn in a Program Plan Sheet.

Minor Approval Forms may be submitted any time prior to the last term of enrollment.

Psychology majors plan with the Program Director and are not required to file the above materials with the Registration and Records Office.

Industrial Technology seniors who have had a contract signed by the Program Director, Mr. Weckmueller, need not turn in a contract. Those who have not had a contract signed by the Program Director (not advisor) go to room 115 Tech Wing

NOTE:
Program Guide Sheets or Program Approval forms for the School of Home Economics may be obtained in the Home Economics Advisement Office, HE 211.

REMINDER!
APPLICATION FOR DEGREE CARDS MUST BE TURNED IN TO THE REGISTRATION AND RECORDS OFFICE AT THE BEGINNING OF THE TERM IN WHICH YOU PLAN TO GRADUATE.

Conference focuses on nutrition industry and trends

Beth Reid
News Reporter

Designed to aid area nutritionists in considering new markets for their particular services, the Continuing Education Conference in Nutrition will be held on Friday, April 11 in the Great Hall of the Student Center. The conference is sponsored by the Food and Nutrition Department and the School of Home Economics.

The conference will feature presentations made throughout the day by four registered dietitians. The first speaker will be Ann Grandjean, who is the Associate Director of the Swanson Center for Nutrition in Omaha, Nebraska. She is also a consultant to the U.S. Olympic Committee for Sports Medicine Division and a consultant to the Physiology Committee of U.S. Olympic Sports Medicine Council.

Grandjean is well known in the field of sports nutrition as a result of writing numerous articles and books on that topic as well as giving presentations nationwide. During the conference she will "basically be looking at an overview of the developing market for sports nutrition," Lydia Jarosz, conference chairperson said. "She will also be looking at how a dietitian or nutritionist can decide whether the market for sports nutrition is suitable as a career selection and the current knowledge in nutritional needs of the athlete."

The second presentation of the morning will be given by Marion Franz. Franz is the director of the Nutrition Center at the International Diabetes Center in Minneapolis. She has given many regional and national presentations on nutrition and the diabetic. Her presentation, entitled "The Application of Sports Nutrition to the Diabetic Individual" will be from 10:30 a.m. to 11:30 a.m.

There will be a question and answer period from 11:30 to noon. A lunch break will be taken until 1:00.

The first speaker of the afternoon will be Donna Haverstock, who is the senior manager of the Consumer Nutrition Center for the Campbell's Soup Company. Campbell's Soup has been doing a lot of work on promoting nutrition as well as developing a sports nutrition athletic trainer's packet. Haverstock coordinates Campbell's nutrition programs for consumers, nutritionists, educators and health care professionals.

"Haverstock will be focusing on marketing nutrition information and selling nutrition knowledge to the public," Jarosz said. Haverstock has a broad background in advertising and has done a great deal of public relations work. Her presentation, entitled "Nutritious Goes Delicious: Or How to Market Healthy Concepts" will begin at 1:15p.m.

The final speaker will be Amelia Catakis, director of Professional Services and Health Care Services Division for the Marriott Corporation. This division of Marriott provides contract food service management to over 125 facilities including hospitals and nursing homes. Catakis coordinates all activities related to patient foodservice and nutrition.

"Nutritionists are going to be more and more in demand for the hospitality industry," Jarosz said, "that is one of the major areas that is opening up for people in the area of nutrition and dietetics." Catakis's presentation, entitled, "The Role of the Dietitian in the Hospitality Industry" will begin at 2:30.

This is the 16th annual conference, and Jarosz believes it is a very valuable opportunity for both students and faculty. "We want to provide the nutritionists or aspiring nutritionists with ideas on the new trends and markets in nutrition," Jarosz said, "because there has really been a problem with people falling into the rut of thinking only on terms of becoming a hospital dietian. For many people that is not a satisfying line of work and we feel that individuals who have the creativity and the will can really cut their own career pathways."

The fees for the conference for the general public are $30 with lunch or $25 without lunch. Student fees are $12 and $7. Registration for the conference will be March 26 and 27 in the second floor lounge of the Home Economics Building. After March 29 there will be an additional $5 registration fee and lunch reservations will not be accepted.

There will be a social period Thursday evening, April 10 to give people the opportunity to meet the speakers. No time or place has been set yet for this social hour. For any additional information on the conference you can contact Lydia Jarosz in Room 204 Home Ec. or call her at 232-1994 or 232-2183.

ing advertising on WVSS because of the impact he feared it would have on The Stoutonia's ability to sell advertising.

Lysiak said the FCC completed the inspection because "somebody filed a complaint" about the operation of WVSS. Responding to Mathews statement that none of the violations were willful, Lysiak explained that, "If we see the violation, no ifs ands or buts, that in itself is a willful violation."

Lysiak said he recognized that WVSS was a non-profit college station and that the $2000 fine amounted to nearly a third of the station's budget and he was sympathetic about the difficulty of the situation. This factor will be considered when the FCC determines the amount of the fine to be assessed.

In reference to the changes that might be made at WVSS, Lysiak said, "It's up to the students and the administration to decide if it's to be a viable communications resource."

Matthews indicated that WVSS was caught off guard by the FCC inspection when he said, "Never in 16 years had the FCC come down here." He acknowledged the right of the person to file the complaint but he wished that person had talked with him first.

"Whoever called the FCC got us in trouble," he said. He added that he had been told that Matt Kalina, managing editor at The Stoutonia had been the complainant although he said he had no evidence backing up that rumor.

Kalina said that he had never talked to the FCC but that he had questioned Matthews as he prepared his "Crash and Burn" column on the topic of WVSS. "He may have gotten the impression when I asked him about certain FCC regulations that that was what I did," Kalina said.

Stricter rules have been enforced at WVSS by the Student Managers Brad Konigge and Scott Smith. Mathews said that although he accepts ultimate responsibility for whatever happens at the station he likes to give the student managers the opportunity to manage. "They are responsible. They are in charge," he said.

Konigge said, "The main problem is the people late at night, usually from 11 on." Either of the student managers works from 7 to 11 p.m. most occasions he said.

Among the changes according to Konigge, "We have given notice to the d.j.s. if they don't fill out the log sheets they are gone." Matthews said that the biggest problem for student managers was their lack of control over the disc jockeys because they are all volunteers. "The only hold we have is to take them off the air," he said.

There has been no problem during the day since Matthews observes all the disc jockeys because they are enrolled in the radio production class. As a result, Matthews is considering cutting back the station hours to include only the seven hours of instruction which he teaches every day.

Security will start making periodic checks at WVSS each night after 10 p.m. Anyone found in the station without authorization to be there will be fined $37.50. If the protective services officer judges that the offense was especially severe the individual may be fined $100 for disorderly conduct.

Although Matthews said, "If we keep getting harrassed by the FCC I want to go off the air," the UW-System Coordinator for Radio and Television Ken Warren said, "Taking the station off the air has not been one of our considerations."

Warren said he wouldn't consider the FCC action harrassment since he recognized that the FCC has a legitimate concern regulating the use of the air waves nationwide.

SSA debates mall, liberal arts funding

Kelly Cohorst
News Reporter

The Campus mall proposal was the major topic of interest at the Stout Student Association (SSA) meeting on Tuesday. Wes Stead, an off campus Senator who is member of the Campus Grounds and Facilities Committee, reported on the survey that is available for students to fill out on the Campus Mall Proposal.

The surveys that have already been filled out were mostly in favor of the Mall proposal, Stead reported. At this point, the majority response is that the proposed mall, currently on display in the Student Center, looks nice.One student wanted to know if there will be a place to serve beer for spring and fall activities.

Chuck Keller Vice President of Legislative Affairs stated that he was against the proposal because he felt the money could be spent in a better way especially with the upcoming budget cuts. "The design lacks flexibility and once the cements there it's there," Keller said.

> The design lacks flexibility and once the cement's there it's there.
> —Chuck Keller VP Legislative Affairs

SSA members are concerned that it's mostly for good looks, and in the spring and fall it will look nice but in the winter the ice and cold could cause unthought of extra maintenance expenses.

A motion was passed setting up a committee investigating the pros and cons involved if the SSA should decide to declare all liberal arts activities such as Prometheus and University Speakers Series ineligible to receive segregated fees.

Women's Affairs Representative Tracy Lea Landis questioned whether the University would take care of the necessary funding for these groups. Vice President for Financial Affairs Tom Schwalbach said he could not answer that question at this time.

Landis was the lone USS member to vote against the motion as she questioned the motivation for the motion and viewed the committee as a waste of time.

There will be an open debate between the candidates for the SSA presidency this coming Monday, March 24 from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. in the Grandview Terrace of the Student Center. The debate is sponsored by The Stoutonia. The four candidates will be questioned by a panel which includes Tim Hopkins, news editor for The Stoutonia, Linda Lim of the International Student Association, Holly Peuse, president of Inter Residence Hall Council, JoAnn Prange, SSA president and Joe Torres of the Rainbow Coalition. The debate will be moderated by Dean of Students, Sam Wood.

The candidates running for SSA president are Dave Fredrickson, Tracy Lea Landis, Sands Mc Alees and Paul Nelson.

In the President's note to the SSA Tuesday night JoAnn Prange outlined the rules involved for submitting information pertinent to why the SSA ought to receive the President's Award. System President Kenneth Shaw gives the award annually to the student government in the system that demonstrates to him their actions were most beneficial to the student body at their university. — Stoutonia photo by Dan Banach

Stout streamlines Student loan process

Approximately 70 percent of the UW-Stout student population receive some form of financial aid. The preferred filing date for the 1986-87 academic year is April 15.

The latest news pertaining to financial aids, results from current and planned revisions in services.

Stout has started receiving the results of the computations to determine eligibility for financial aid along with UW-Eau Claire via telephone transmission of data. This will speed the response time by two to four weeks. Stout and Eau Claire are the only in the state to have this service.

Stout is planning to be a pilot institution for 1986-87 in the processing and streamlining of Guaranteed Student Loan materials. This process is expected to lessen the turnaround time involved in paper handling, edits, etc.

City issues to be debated

A forum for Menomonie City Council candidates will be held at 7 p.m., Monday, March 24 in the Crystal Ballroom of the Memorial Student Center.

Designed to inform city and student voters on local issues, the forum is sponsored by the Stout Student Association, the League of Women Voters and the American Association of College Women.

Each of the seven city council candidates has been invited to present statements and answer questions from the general public.

Refreshments will be served and there will be time after the forum to visit with the candidates. Admission is free.

Edinburgh Program set

The Wisconsin Study Center in Edinburgh program is "go." Applications are still being accepted for fall term and may be picked up the Office of International Programs in Harvey Hall.

Freedom From Smoking

Myrtle Werth Medical Center announces a Freedom From Smoking Clinic starting April 1 at the Medical Center. The Wellness Weigh of Life weight control clinics are offering afternoon and evening classes at the Medical Center beginning in early April. Call 235-5531 to register.

Grief education offered

A grief education and support group will meet in Menomonie from 7:30 - 9 p.m. each Thursday, from March 20 through May 15. This group is being sponsored by UW-Stout's Department of Human Development, Family Living and Community Educational Services. Meetings will be in room 159 of the Home Economics Building.

The group will be led by Janet O'Brien, a graduate student in guidance and counseling, under the direction of John Williams. Individuals and family members who have experienced the loss of a person through death, including spouse, child, friend, parent or other family member are invited to participate in the group.

The first group meeting will be an informational and "getting acquainted" meeting. The group will not meet Thursday, March 27. For further information, contact O'Brien at (715) 232-1273.

Diabetic support offered

The Diabetes Support Group meets at Myrtle Werth Medical Center the first Tuesday of every month at 2 p.m. in the Board Room. Diabetics and/or family members are encouraged to attend the free sessions. Contact Maggie White, R.D. at the Medical Center for further information. The next meeting is April 1.

Notice

Paul D. Nelson, Editor-in-Chief of The Stoutonia, will take a leave of absence from his position from March 22 - April 4. Because Nelson is a candidate for the position of Stout Student Association (SSA) President, the leave of absence will insure that there is no conflict of interest between the political process and the media.

Matt Kalina, Stoutonia Managing Editor, will assume Nelson's duties and be the acting editor-in-chief during the leave of absence.

Neubauer was interviewed twice by police, Assistant Police Chief of the Menomonie Police Department Earl Mosley said. According to the complaint, Neubauer had said that his car that night was at the former Country Connection on Highway 29 west of Menomonie.

Neubauer was a Texas resident at the time and was visiting relatives in the Menomonie area.

Neubauer had said he teased Tela and Bauer because she was a white female who was with a black male, according to the complaint. He said he did not remember everything that happened because he was intoxicated at the time. In the complaint he said he remembered putting out a cigarette on Tela's nose, a scuffle ensued and Neubauer was knocked to the ground.

Subsequently, the Department of Justice initiated an investigation into the death. The FBI assisted the Department of Justice in the investigation.

FBI agent Jack Schulte interviewed Neubauer in Texas last Nov. 6 after receiving the new information. First, Neubauer said that he left his car at the Country Connection, but later said he parked his blue Chevrolet behind the Menomonie Lockers, across the alley from the back of the Den.

Neubauer then admitted running over Tela but said it was an accident, according to the complaint. He stated, "I did it. I ran him over. It was an accident." According to the report, "...(Neubauer) did not realize that the black male was lying in the alley when he drove over him." He reportedly heard a a girl "holler."

According to the complaint, Den owner Thomas Morrow saw Tela enter the bar with a white woman, and as of a result of an argument with the woman, Morrow evicted Sani Tela from the Den Bar. Tela returned to the Den Bar and engaged in another argument with the woman. In the complaint, Morrow identified Neubauer engaging in a verbal argument with Tela and observed that it appeared as if they were going to engage in a fist fight as Tela was rolling up the sleeves of his shirt.

In the complaint, another witness, Larry Marko, observed that Neubauer and Tela were involved in a shoving match and that he heard Neubauer say that his brother had been killed by a black person. According to the complaint, Neubauer asked Tela several times to step outside and fight.

Allegedly, Neubauer and the black male "squared off at each other and shadow boxed." Shortly after Morrow evicted Tela from the bar a second time, he observed Tela re-enter the bar and engage in another altercation. There were a number of people involved in the altercation with Tela, according to the complaint. Morrow went over to where Tela was lying on the floor and picked Tela up by the ears in order to evict him.

Another witness, Lynn Behling, told Schulte that Neubauer said to him, "I think I ran somebody over." Neubauer reportedly made that statement as Behling was taking him back to downtown Menomonie from another bar.

Another witness, Calvin Garrett, said he observed a male negro later identified to him as Tela, engaged in a physical confrontation with a number of white males, and racial slurs were directed at Tela. Garrett said because Tela was outnumbered, he assisted Tela by leading him away from the group and led him out of the bar through the back entrance into the alley area behind the Den.

> "The defendent would have to have seen Sani Tela's body prior to running over Sani Tela."
> —Dale Amundson
> MPD Investigator

According to the complaint, Garrett attempted to find out where Tela lived so he could help him home. Allegedly, Tela made a lunging move at Garrett as if he were going to attack, so Garrett struck Tela alongside his head with an open hand, and Tela fell to the ground. Garrett checked to see if Tela was all right and laid him against a dumpster before returning to the Den Bar.

According to the complaint, when Garrett returned five to ten minutes later to check on Tela to see that he was all right, he observed some people standing over Tela. One of these individuals apparently told Garrett not to touch Tela because he had been "run over by a Chevy." Shortly thereafter Garrett contacted the Menomonie Police Department.

One witness, Craig Koser, told police that he recognized from prior contacts Tela lying in the alley. Joel Merritt indicated to police that shortly after 12:30 a.m. he observed in the alley behind the Den Bar what he believed to be a dark, two-door Chevy bounce like it had hit something, and it stopped and sped off. He observed in an area where the car bounced a person lying in the alley with his head up gasping for air. He then asked his friends to call for an ambulance, according to the complaint.

Assistant Police Chief of the Menomonie Police Department Earl Mosley said that Menomonie Police checked hundreds of cars fitting the description. Director of University Relations John Enger said a reward which eventually totaled $4000 was offered through the Community/University Relations Committee for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the person or persons responsible for Tela's death.

Robert Huntington, a forensic pathologist of the Wisconsin Department of Justice with the Crime Laboratory Bureau, perfomed an autopsy and observed scalp and trunk injuries to Tela, according to the complaint. He said the scalp injuries occurred prior to the trunk injuries and that the cause of death was the result of chest and intra-abdominal injuries.

Investigator Dale Amundson of the Menomonie Police Department said in the complaint that, "...the defendent (Neubauer) would have to have seen Sani Tela's body prior to running over Sani Tela in the early morning hours of June 19, 1982." Amundson based the statement on the narrowness of the alley, the width of the Neubauer's car, the location of Tela's body, the light from the power pole and the procedures needed to negotiate entry into the alley.

Mosley said the warrant for Neubauer's arrest was issued through the National Crime Information Computer system.

Neubauer faces a maximum penalty of life imprisonment if convicted.

Lay it on the line.

Ask any Navy pilot. It doesn't come any more thrilling than this. Landing an F-14 on the rolling deck of a carrier at sea is a challenge that tests the skills of the best.

Navy flight training. Navigation. Aerodynamics. It's the best you can get. But along with the airborne thrills, Navy pilots and flight officers get down-to-earth skills.

There is no boot camp. College graduates get leadership and management training at Aviation Officer Candidate School. It's challenge and responsibility. The satisfaction of knowing you're with a topflight team.

You can't beat the rewards either. An excellent starting salary. Unexcelled benefits. And opportunities to move up fast.

Ethiopian Civil War leads to famine

Pat Miles
News Reporter

St. Paul Pioneer Press and Dispatch reporter Jacqui Banaszynski brought to the audience at the Great Hall Monday night the result of her month observation of the adversities facing Ethiopians as they take refuge in Sudan.

February of 1985 the two journalists traveled with a team of relief workers who were being sent to Sudan by the American Refugee Committee. They spent one week in Khartoum, the capital of Sudan, familiarizing themselves with the situation. Banaszynski and Pieri then spent the next three weeks visting seven or eight camps of various sizes. Upon their return, they wrote a 16 page supplement for the paper that came out April 7, 1985.

They never got into Ethiopia itself Banaszynski said, because the government was reluctant to give visas to journalists. The government of Ehiopia is a Marxist regime. Two out of the 14 provinces claim independence from Ethiopia. The result of that claim is a civil war. The war has destroyed many fields for farming and trucks containing food supplies have been bombed.

Banaszynski said the draught in Ethiopia only added to the problems. "It hasn't rained properly for 50 years," Banaszynski said. "By the time famine hit in '84, the people had not had new crops for two to four years." The people turned to eating their animals and seed needed for planting and sold their tools to buy food. "Eventually they had nothing left," Banaszynski explained. "Soon whole villages just picked up and moved west to Sudan."

Sudan is a democratic country, therefore it is easy for the U.S. and other democratic nations to supply money for food as a result of politics. "We won't send money and food into a Marxist country even if it means feeding innocent children," Banaszynski sympathized.

"People often ask if it's as bad as T.V. shows us," Banaszynski said. "The answer is both worse and not nearly as bad." She said that the pictures T.V. shows are all there. "What T.V. doesn't show us is that in a relief agency 16 kids are dying but outside 200 are laughing and playing."

Banaszynski also expressed that T.V. didn't show the people's lively spirit, proud culture, selflessness, and religion. "One woman was so honored by our photographing her child that she asked us to have her ration of grain for that day," she continued, "Their funerals were so beautiful I didn't know whether to laugh or to cry."

Banaszynski went on to explain what is happen that things have improved. The drought has eased slightly, food aid got there and helped greatly, and treaties were negotiated that benefited both them and the United States and finally allowed food to get to provinces that needed it. "The trouble is, because there is no longer the publicity there once was," Banaszynski stressed, "we think it's taken care of. Well its not."

Banaszynski said families are being fragmented. There is no health care as we know it. Measles has been killing 15 to 20 percent of the children under 12 years old. Other health problems are caused by malnutrition and the lack of any plumbing. She referred to the use of "unsanitary defication fields." The population's continued growth makes these problems stand out even more.

"There is no easy solution to the problem," Banaszynski said. A long term solution is needed and that puts the problem onto the upcoming generation. "Because there's no more publicity, I don't see much hope."

Their culture is so different from civilized Western culture and it's difficult at best for the people to suddenly switch from traditions they've been following for years. "The culture is killing its people and yet if we go in and save them, we might have to kill the culture and I don't know if thats a solution."

She gave a slide presentation prepared by Pieri who was unable to attend. The slides depicted the joy and despair of the Ethiopians. It showed children playing. It also showed people waiting in lines for food and medical care. The lines are so long that boredom becomes a problem.

Asked if agricultural education had been provided these people, she answered, "No, the first concern was to get them out of their critical state." When asked if dependency became a problem, she replied, "Definitely, to discourage them, the camps are made to provide just what they need and not to be pretty."

Ethiopia is not the only country with the problem of starvation. The problem has existed in 20 other African nations for years. "People in these countries have been starving for years," Banaszynski expressed, "and we, the Western world, hadn't given a good God damn about it."

Banaszynski's presentation was sponsored by the Stout Psychology Club and the University Speakers Series Commission.

Musicians join for performance

Randy Sabien and Gerri Gribi brought a change of music to Stout. The two separately scheduled performances were combined on March 5.

Randy is a string musician who travels within the boundries of Ohio and Colorado. He plays in symphony orchestras, big bands, delicate collaborations with guitars and jazz quartets.

Sabien, referring to his performance, said, "Seventy-five percent of my appearances are like the one tonight." He joins with local musicians to form quartets and play for wide range of audiances, many like the type gathered in the Great Hall.

Members of the quartet included Mike Downing, from Madison, on the guitar, Brian Benson, a UW Eau Claire student, on the string bass and Dave Sanick, from Minneapolis, on the drums.

The jazz quartet had spent most of the day at PBS station Channel 28 tapping for a future broadcast.

Sabien has been playing the violin since he was in fourth grade. "I knew there was more than just classical music to be played on the violin since the day my grandmother asked when I was going to learn to play "King of the Road"

Listening to great jazz violinists inspired Randy to become one. After playing classical, country and blues he now plays mostly jazz.

The Randy Sabien Jazz Quartet performance was sponsored by the Performing Arts Commission. The Woman's Study Program, as a part of Woman's History Week, hosted Gerri Gribi.

Gerri was scheduled to perform in the Pawn but joined Randy and the Quartet to attract a larger audience.

Gerri Gribi is a folk singer who grew up in the Blue Grass region of Kentucky. She graduated form college with honors in History and Education and taught high school history.

Later, in 1979, Gerri became the Program Director for the Girl Scouts and moved to Green Bay. After four years with the Scouts she resigned to pursue her lifelong dream of singing.

> I want women to find power within themselves through my songs.
> —Gerri Gribi

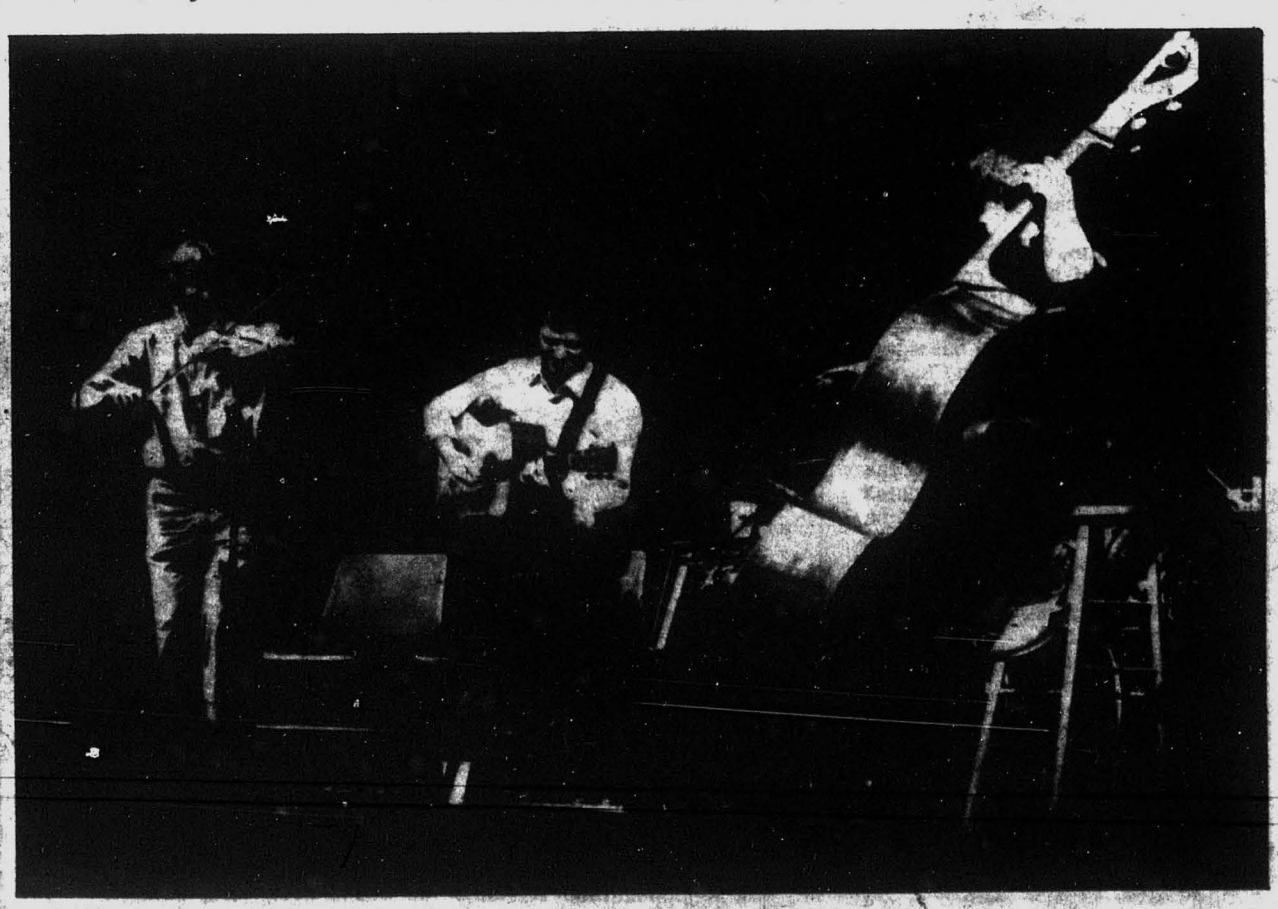
Gerri has three recorded albums and makes many appearances. She performs for a wide variety of audiances from young children to adult conferences and meetings.

Her appearance included songs about many kinds of women. Women in prison, a woman that wanted to be on engineer, a woman in the British Navy, a man trying to do a woman's work and failing, just to name a few.

Gerri also sang a song she wrote after her first Wisconsin winter " I Wish I Could Fly To The Hills Of Kentucky where the winter is only a fraction of what Wisconsin experiences."

"I want women to find power within themselves through my songs," Gerri said. Her songs and the songs she sings by other artists are carefully chosen because of their inspiration and content.



Fine Line

'Automatic' etiquette

Jef Maynard

"All's fair in love and war..." Sure, but what about etiquette and the social history of machine guns? We might look hopefully for a distinction.

In 1938, just prior to the "outbreak" of World War II, somebody named Norton Hughes Jonathan published a book, Gentlemen Aren't Sissies. Jonathan was trying to give those lovable thugs, hicks and buzzards of the post-depression youth culture a touch of suavity and etiquette with which they could "meet some dames," as the expression goes.

Over a few years, Jonathan sold some books. Doubtless, some of those books went to young men who went into the Big War. Here was a chance to test their skills against some real action. Instead of warm female flesh however, we're talking hot lead. Oh pleasure and delight.

If you're at a Social Club dance, it is no big challenge to cut in on Billy Hadlock and Barbara Sabota. It is not the same thing to cut in on a German Maxim machine gun at the big dance of Somme, France during WWI. Half of British at that party did the stately Grave Dance, which was very popular at the time.

Jonathan explains: "Don't abuse the cutting-in privilege. Wait until the numbers are well started before you cut." Maybe you should stay in the stag line or "the trench" as it is fondly known, for the duration of the entire social affair.

Jonathan continues, "After the dance is over, it is a nice idea to suggest going somewhere to satisfy the inner man and woman." The choices of after-dance dining are endless with the girl of your dreams. Dairy Queen or The Ritz will do. When your machine gun dance is over, you can either go to the ammunition depot or go sip some cool embalming fluid.

Gentlemen who aren't sissies have to dress right to attract the attention of the fairer sex. Jonathan interviewed some "young women who get around" on their opinions of men's dress. One said, "As long as his handkerchief and tie do not war, a boy usually thinks he is perfectly attired for any date." "Full dress is thrilling!" (If a man's handkerchief and tie are at war, who needs a machine gun?)

Full dress is known as the "dress parade." Sharp-dressed men with dates attract the attention of more women. Machine guns go on dress parade as well. Usually at the affairs where machine guns are invited, men dress so as not to attract too much attention. When a machine gun is attracted to you, and wants to take you out, they don't usually take No for an answer.

Proper dress for a machine gun affair has traditionally been baggy outfits, preferrably filled with sand, with the layered-look being that much safer.

In explaining attraction Jonathan believes, "Human beings seem strangely attracted to members of the opposite sex who snub them, hurt them or frankly have no use for them.... All this is just an easy, gentle way of letting you know you can't win all the time."

This statement, however true, is not entirely accurate when dealing with those hot-shot machine guns. Few men have ever minded being snubbed or rejected by a first-class machine gun. It's the hair-trigger types that just want to hurt someone, that men dislike. Safely at home after a night of machine gun rejection, a lot of proud fellows wake up the next day to declare, "I've just had the best peace."

Usually, first dates are the most exciting. "They are an unknown adventure and an unknown quality. They can mean everything or nothing. It's like starting out on a dangerous expedition..." according to Jonathan.

The first encounter with a machine gun can also be an exciting adventure. The little known Red Party of Omdurman, in the Sudan in 1898 tells just what a thrill it can be. The Whirling Dervishes were having one of their few rushes of the season. The British, as was their custom, were the uninvited guests, and crashed the party.

The popularity of the machine gun proved itself once again on the unsuspecting, unfamiliar Dervishes. Over 11,000 Dervishes were asked out, as compared with only 22 Englishmen.

Gentlemen who aren't sissies also know how to make interesting conversation. "At a dance or party, where you change partners often and are thrown in with a number of girls, handing out a line can become an entertaining game. You dish it out."

How can any mortal man compete with the eloquent mechanical chatter of a machine gun? Loud, rapid-fire comments are their specialty. Some current celebrity machine guns can spit out 6000 comments per minute. Who can stand and argue with that?

One of the embarrassing limitations of machine guns at social functions however, is that same loud, mechanical patter. That type of noise is fine for large social commotions, but when the moment comes for special quiet times, it's tough for a real machine gun to be mellow.

Sometimes, the worst happens. Your perfect night out is spoiled by a date with a machine gun that makes your flesh crawl. No gentleman who isn't a sissy will run away from the challenge. Jonathan suggests the "where have you been all my life?" approach. You try and make the other feel like the center of your attention, but then regretfully admit that your are deeply involved with another machine gun back home, and things won't work out.

Try to part on good terms, remember, a machine gun can either be a friend or an enema.

Mary Shannon Will

UW-Stout's Furlong Gallery will be exhibiting a some works by Mary Shannon Will, a Canadian sculptor. Her sculptures will be on display from Wed., March 26 through April 11.

There will be an opening reception on Tues., March 25 from 8 until 10 p.m.

Will has exhibited in western Canada during the last 10 years. Her exhibition at Stout will include recent two-dimensional work on paper, her work drawings and her ceramic sculptures.

"All of Will's work, both 2-D and 3-D, display planar and curved surfaces set by carefully-calculated and meticulously-executed patterns," said Ed Wong, gallery curator. "A systematic application of marks and use of color impose a beauty of color and decorative marks to her forms."

The gallery is open on weekdays from 10 a.m. until 1 p.m.

Dr. Kenneth Shaw

Dr. Kenneth Shaw, recently appointed as the University of Wisconsin System's President, is this week's special guest on Spectrum 28.

The program, which examines a wide range of issues confronting higher education in the state, will be broadcast Friday, March 21 at 9:30 p.m. and repeated Saturday, March 22, at 9:30 a.m. on Channel 28, West Central Wisconsin's regional PBS station.

Among the topics Dr. Shaw discusses with Spectrum host Max Herbach are: the state-mandated budget cuts and their impact on university programs, staff, and capital expenditures; the faculty salary catch-up delay and the controversy over collective bargaining legislation; Wisconsin's economic crunch and the university system's role in improving the state's business climate.

Watch Spectrum 28 this week for a close look at the new leader of America' fifth largest system of higher education. With 26 campuses, 165,000 students, 27,000 employees and a biennial budget in excess of two billion dollars, the University of Wisconsin System represents a huge investment of the state's resources.

Shoot Your Radios

Scenes of Wisconsin's four seasons, indoor as well as outdoor shots are encouraged. Photos will be judged on both originality and quality. First-place prize will be a 35mm camera donated by Como Photo. The second-place winner will receive two, mounted 16x20 prints courtesy of Harmann Photography of Green Bay and Algoma. Third-place and honorable mention winners will receive prizes from the Wisconsin Public Radio Store.

Besides receiving valuable prizes, winning entrants will see their work printed in Wisconsin Public Radio promotional pieces such as calendars, Radio Guide covers, special event displays, brochures, etc.

For a full set of rules, or to send in your entry, write to: "Shoot Your Radio," 3319 W. Beltline Hwy., Madison, WI 53713. Contest rules can also be found in The Stoutonia office in the lower portion of the Memorial Student Union.

Ice cream topping tips

Linda Konkol

Now that we've got spring break under our belts, I think it's time to look forward to our next major vacation--summer. I think it's a good time to think about a summertime food too--ice cream.

I may be rushing the season a bit, but I'm not alone. Dairy Queen has been open for weeks. And serious ice cream lovers will devour the delicacy any time of year.

Ice cream is another one of those foods of uncertain origin. No one knows who invented ice cream, but the first recorded appearance of ice cream was at a banquet given by the English king, Charles I, around 1640.

The "cream ice" served at the banquet was such a success that Charles paid the cook to keep the recipe a secret. Needless to say, the cook didn't keep his word.

Today ice cream is served in many parts of the world, but Americans eat more of it than do the people of any other country. The average American eats 15 quarts per year.

Other frozen desserts have invaded the American market as well. Premium and superpremium brands have appeared, which contain more fat and less air than the original brands of ice cream. Therefore, they have a more rich, intensified taste. Haagen Dazs, one such brand, contains 15 percent butterfat, instead of the usual 10 percent.

Gelato, which means "frozen" in Italian, is a dessert similar to ice cream. It comes in some unusual fruity flavors like cantaloupe and watermelon.

Tofutti is the newest rage in the frozen dessert market. It's made from a powdered soy base which is bland itself and will absorb the taste of any ingredient added for flavor.

The strengths of tofutti are that it contains no lactose, butterfat, or cholesterol. It contains less than half the calories of ice cream. Reports say that it comes surprisingly close to ice cream in taste and texture.

Innovations in styles of serving ice cream have also appeared. One ice cream shop serves ice cream that looks like spaghetti. The ice cream is run through a spaghetti press to produce the "noodles." It's then topped with chocolate meatballs, pureed strawberries, and grated coconut (to resemble Parmesan cheese).

If you prefer a less elaborate way of serving ice cream, try one of the following toppings to liven up plain ice cream.

- chocolate, peanut butter, or butterscotch chips
- crushed peppermint candy
- toasted coconut
- Rice Krispies or corn flakes
- granola or trail mix
- crushed cookies
- jam or preserves
- amaretto, creme de menthe, or grenadine
- pudding
- peanut butter
- marshmallow cream and maple syrup

Chocolate Crackle Sauce

2 tbsp. butter or margarine
1 4-oz. bar sweet cooking chocolate or 4 squares semisweet chocolate, cut into small pieces
4 Heath candy bars, coursely crushed

In a small saucepan melt butter over moderate heat. Add chocolate and let melt. Stir in crushed candy. Spoon hot sauce over ice cream. Wait a minute or so for sauce to harden before serving. Makes about 1 cup of sauce, enough for 6 sundaes.

For Those About to Rock

Heaven's rock 'n' rollers

David Chase

Heaven must have one helluva band. God must have realized how big rock & roll was going to be on earth. So why not have a band in Heaven? Talk about an all star line up.

I think God felt it was only right for Heaven to have the ultimate rock & roll band. The question is, did he choose the right talent? The answer is, yes, he chose the cream of the crop.

Let's take a look at the holy rock & roller band that God has put together. In order to have the ultimate band, one must have the ultimate:

1) Writers/composers
2) Vocalist
3) Guitarist
4) Keyboardist
5) Bassist
6) Drummer

...and last but not least, the ultimate manager.

Writers/Composers

John Lennon Lennon died in 1980, nine years after the breakup of the Beatles. He was shot outside his New York apartment by someone who claimed to be a fan. He was part of the most successful song writing team in history.

Jim Morrison Morrison died in 1971, the same year he departed from his band The Doors. He is considered to be one of rocks best composers, and is recognized as an accomplished poet.

Marc Bolan Bolan died in a car accident in 1977. He was a noteable composer as well as vocalist for the band T.Rex. His songs inspired many of today's top musicians.

Vocalist

Elvis Presley The King died in 1977. Not enough can be said about Elvis, his talents were beyond words. His voice may very well have been the best to ever sing rock & roll. We're lucky God let us have him as long as we did.

Janis Joplin Joplin died of an overdose of drugs in 1970. Her raspy voice was full of energy and feeling. Rock & roll may never see another blues singer like Joplin.

Sam Cooke Cooke was a major influence on rock & roll. He was shot to death in 1964 after walking into the wrong motel room. His voice had a lot of range and was said to be so sweet it could make the girls cry.

Guitarist

Jimi Hendrix Hendrix could do what most guitarists could only dream of. He is considered by both his critics and peers to be the greatest guitarist to have ever played an electric guitar. Hendrix died choking on his vomit after he overdosed on drugs.

Michael Bloomfield Bloomfield was an established blues guitarist that played for several bands in the sixties. He is best known for his abilities with the Wah-Wah on his guitar. Bloomfield died in 1981.

Randy Rhoads Rhoads was a musician who never got full recognition for his abilities with the guitar. His playing was precise and clean, and he was definitely one of the quickest. Rhoads short lived career ended while playing for Ozzy Ozborne. He died in 1981 in an airplane crash.

Duane Allman Allman died in a motorcycle accident in 1971. He was the master of the slide guitar and found great success with the Allman Brothers.

Keyboardist

Marvin Gaye Gaye was shot to death by his own father in 1984. He was a powerful force in rock in the mid-sixties and an excellent keyboard player. His songs are still sung and played today.

Bassist

Not any of what I consider the ultimate bassist have died yet, but anyone of the guitarists I have mentioned could fulfill the requirements, especially with a little help from the big guy.

Drummer

John Bonham Bonham was one of rocks most powerful drummers. His reputation grew quickly while playing with Led Zeppelin. He was known for his relentless pounding of his drums, unfortunately his party habits were relentless too. Bonham died in 1980 from a heart attack brought on by excessive drinking.

Keith Moon Moon was considered by many to be the best drummer to ever play rock & roll. He had the natural gift to use all his limbs independently at the same time. But like Bonham, Moon died from drowning in his pool while intoxicated. His years with the Who will never be forgotten.

Manager

Brian Epstein The discoverer of the Beatles, and the man who mastered their success. He overdosed in 1967, a tragic loss. Who knows, he may have been what it would have taken to keep the Beatles together.

So there you have it, the ultimate band. You may be thinking there are too many musicians listed. You re probably right, but through the help of God, their probably jamming like never before with unity and uniqueness. Rock on.

Printing course allows students to use techniques for self expression

Karen Heagle
Arts Reporter

When we think of printing we usually think of advertisements in newspapers and magazines, or the printing on a package, but do we ever think of the artistry of printing? Printing that is used for reasons of fine art instead of advertising.

The Art Department at Stout offers a course in studio printmaking. The courses are taught by Rob Price, and his colleague Paul Delong.

Delong stated the philosophy of the printmaking courses they teach, "The courses are strictly studio experiences in which the students use techniques to express themselves as they would in painting or sculpture. It is not at all about commerical art." He believes that artistic printmaking should be enjoyed just as a painting is enjoyed.

Delong has been teaching at Stout for five years. This is his first teaching job. He came to Stout while Price was on leave.

As a young boy Delong found himself interested in building things; he described it as making "order out of chaos." Lincoln logs were one of his favorite toys. He loved building structures.

Throughout high school, Delong had a strong interest in art, but when he considered the pressures of getting a job as an artist he was discouraged. He decided to study architecture as a means of using his love of building structures, and his need to be artistic.

While studying at Ohio State University, he found himself taking many studio courses. Just as an industrial design major at Stout takes many studio courses so did Delong at Ohio. Delong said, "I found that I liked pure art classes more than math courses related to architecture."

After taking his first course in printmaking Delong believes, "That's when I knew I wanted to be an artist for sure."

Delong found himself drawn into art more and more. He definitely had a skill for visually organizing things. Delong continued his schooling in Madison now studying specifically printmaking.

When the opening at Stout came up, Delong believed it was the perfect opening for him. "I was attracted to the job description, it was what I wanted. To be able to teach printmaking, and that is what I was trained to do."

Delong taught classes in etching, relief, serigraphy, and lithography. Currently he teaches two workshop courses for studio and art education majors, in addition to his printmaking classes. The courses, practice of art, and senior seminar, prepare these students in issues that fine artists face, marketing works, and developing a professional attitude.

One of his printmaking courses is lithography. Delong described the process in which the printmaker goes about in this type of printing. The student has a piece of limestone which is drawn on with a grease pencil, or a drawing instrument with a grease base.

After the drawing is completed, it is processed with gum arabic, and acid. Following the principle that ink and water don't mix the image is rolled onto a piece of paper. Delong added, "It's one of the most difficult printmaking processes, and it's challenging for most students."

Since the printmaking courses are higher level art courses it's unusual for a non-art major to enroll. Often students in clothing-textile design enroll, but these students often have art minors.

In reguards to his own work Delong says, "Printmaking is my means of expression. I'd like to think of myself as a painter who uses printmaking processes as my brush, so to speak."

Delong is not a traditional printmaker. He loves exploring new techniques. He takes pride in the uniqueness of his works. He said, "I'm not really interested in printmaking as a means of making multiples." He compares this aspect to the artistic value of it.

Delong also commented on his role as a teacher, "I do like teaching. Teaching is a very rewarding occupation." He reguards himself as both a professional artist as well as teacher.

Delong displays works in the faculty art show at least once a year. He mainly includes his prints. At the last show he displayed collages composed of hand-made paper. The process involves printmaking techniques.

Some people are attracted to the likes of printmaking for art's sake, and some are not. Yet printmaking is a unique art form. Take it from Paul Delong, printmaking is an artistic expression.

Halls double as home and classes

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

Traditional occupational ethics have changed over the years. Doctors don't make house calls anymore but college professors do. At least this is the case at UW-Stout.

The School of Home Economics is trying something new. Accredited courses are being offered and held in the residence halls. Last quarter was the first time a course was taken to the residence of the student.

These courses are sponsored by the Department of Human Development, Family Living and Community Education Services. Last quarter, Early Years of Marriage, a one credit course was held in HKMC. This quarter Beginning and Ending Relationships will be held in HKMC, Thursday evenings 6:00 to 8:00 p.m..

"We wanted to reach out to the student body to provide a class that is meaningful and convenient," Dr. Judy Jax, Administrative Associate for the Department of Human Development, Family Living and Community Education Services said. The special topic courses are geared toward the age group of people living in the residence halls.

Last quarter's enrollment for the special course was high. After students attended the first class period, word-of-mouth drew a larger group for the remainder of the quarter. The course attracted both men and women.

"The theory of experimentation is the approach of the School of Home Economics," said Jax. Students often times learn more outside of the classroom in more informal situations. Bringing human development courses to the informality of a student's residence may induce more openness and dialogue.

Linda Gifford, Staff Assistant for the Department of Human Development, Family Living and Community Education Services, taught the experimental course in HKMC. "It felt informal and relaxed and that is my style of teaching. I had people come to class barefoot and in sweats," Gifford said.

With this informality are a few snags in the new program. The facility, the basement of HKMC, is a long and narrow room. Gifford said, "It is a good idea in theory but the problem was the room. It does not lend itself well to a large class and audio visuals."

Noise floats in and out of the room. Linda Albert, a student said, "I thought it was too relaxed with people walking in and out. It was too loud and I didn't care for it."

Michelle Sanderson, another student said, "It was hard to concentrate in the room. I felt like I could relax and so it was harder to listen." Alternatives will be explored to smooth the snags. Jax said, "It takes time to build a successful class."

According to student evaluations, the majority liked the informality but not the facility. Gifford said, "I think the program should continue. It is a positive appraoch to teaching."

Topics of the special courses are the drawing card. In the future Jax hopes that the program will continue with a special topic course being offered in the residence hall once a quarter.

Runners earn All-American at Nationals

Kim Steger
Sports Reporter

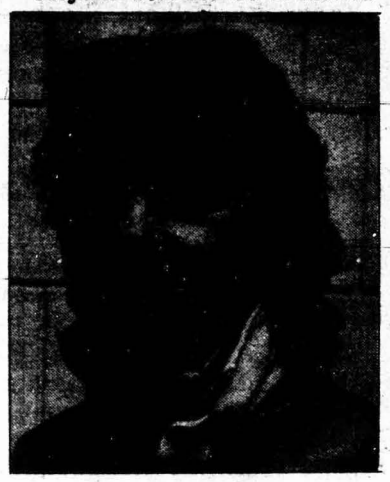
For the first time in UW-Stout's history, two Blue Devil women made All-American in the NCAA Division III track meet. Sheila Geere placed fourth in the 3000-meter run with a time of 10 minutes 3.25 seconds and Sue Meyer placed third in the 1500-meter run with a time of 4:36.03.

Nationals were held over spring break at Bethel College in St. Paul. UW-Stout's women's track coach John Miller said, "They did a great job. For a non-scholarship school we have some good quality runners. This was a tremendous accomplishment for them and we're extremely proud of them. Accomplishments like this really make the team look good."

"I didn't even think I made it to the finals," Meyer said. "I was kind of surprised when I found out I had made it. I had proved to myself that I could do well in the two mile so I really wanted to do good in the 1500-meter race."

Meyer physically prepares herself for a race by warming up and stretching. To mentally prepare herself, she pictures what she plans to do during a race. "I never doubt myself. I have faith in myself and a positive attitude," Meyer said.

Meyer's best source of motivation before a race is long-term psyching up. Meyer said, "I counted down the days to nationals. I set goals at the beginning of the season and I think about these goals every time I work out."



Sue Meyer

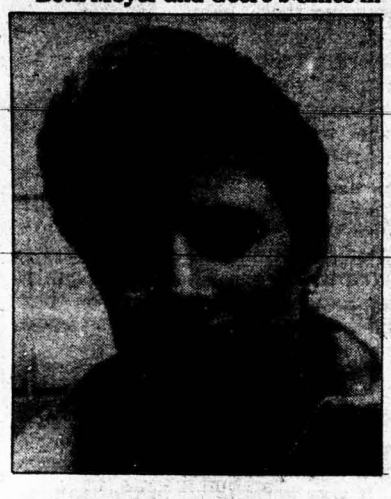
Meyer has been known as a smart runner. By listening to her splits and by running her own race she can control her run. She doesn't get intimidated by other runners she's running against. When racing, she considers herself alone on the track.

"I love to race," Meyer said. "I don't know if I could run just for the sake of running and staying in shape. I love the competition. You can have a lousy day, and if you race and beat at least one person, you know you're still better at something than someone else."

When asked what or whom has been her biggest inspiration in track Meyer replied that a former track coach had and still has an influence on her training. She still gets about ten minutes of coaching from him once a week over the phone. Meyer ran for him her first two years of college while attending UW-Parkside. Meyer replied that being able to eat more dessert has also been a motivation for her.

One sacrifice Meyer has had to make for track season is giving up drinking. "It's not hard for me to do. It's something I'll gladly sacrifice in order to perform at my very best. It's become part of my routine," Meyer said. This strong dedication to her sport stems back to her former coaching.

Both Meyer and Geere's times in their events were record-breaking times and personal best times.



Sheila Geere

"I didn't expect to do this well with all the tough compitition. I was very happy with my time and my place. I'll take fourth any day," Geere said. "I wanted to do this for myself. I changed my training by taking it easy at first. I have a tendency to go out and kill myself during workouts," Geere said.

"My coaches had a big influence on me. Coach Lou Klitzke always said we could do it and I never believed him until now. My friends were also very supportive and understanding," Geere remarked.

Geere also complemented teammate Sue Meyer's preformance. "This has been a good way for our last season to go."

Other members of the Blue Devil men's and women's track teams traveled to Florida last week for intensive training. Training and workouts were the main concentration of the teams during their spring break.

This training period was an opportunity to prepare the teams for the outdoor track and field season.

The women's next meet will be the WWIAC Indoor Conference Meet hosted by La Crosse on March 21 and 22. The men's next meet will be the St. Cloud Open on March 21.

Netters go undefeated on spring break trip in Los Angeles, Cal.

The UW-Stout men's tennis team had a great spring break in Los Angeles taking four straight victories.

The first team Stout competed against was California Lutheran University on March 10 with the Blue Devils winning the match 6-3.

In singles, Stout took four out of six matches. John Leehy, who is playing number two for the Blue Devils, beat his opponent 6-1, 6-3. Also with a big victory was Mike Friedman, who took charge over James Brunner 6-0, 6-2. Other winners in the top six for Stout were Mark Paine and Tony Pierfer.

In doubles, Stout won two out of three matches against Lutheran University. Stout's Rob Oertel and Friedman, the fourth-ranked doubles team in the nation, won their first match of the series against Wielff and Duffy.

The match started off poorly for Oertel and Friedman. They lost their first set 3-6. But Wielff and Duffy could not stop them from taking control, for they came back to win the next two close sets 6-4, 7-5.

Joel Voegler and Pierfer, after winning a close first set 7-5, blew away Brunner and Willy Torrence in the second set with a score 6-0.

Stout's second match was against Pomona Pitzer on March 11. The Blue Devils took control over the nets, winning every match in both singles and doubles ending with a the score 9-0.

In singles Oertel, after fighting out the third set with Tim Davis, won his match 6-1, 2-6, 6-3. Other highlights were when Voegler swept away a victory against John Strelow with a score 6-1, 6-1. The other top six winners in singles were Leehy, Paine, Friedman, and Bill Johnson.

In doubles action, the only close contest came at first doubles, where the Blue Devils' Oertel and Friedman experienced some obstacles finally defeating their opponents 6-3, 7-5.

Stout had a three-day break before their third match on March 14, so the team took a little time to sightsee. UW-Stout Head Tennis Coach Bob Smith commented, "I feel this was a exciting trip, and had educational value."

The Blue Devils' second big win was defeating Whittier College 9-0.

Paine swept away with a big victory in singles when he defeated his opponent 6-0, 6-0. Another highlight in the singles was Jarrod Barnard, a new player for the Blue Devils who had a victory 6-2, 6-1 over Eric Faber. Stout's other top six winners were Oertel, Leehy,

Tourney time

It is NCAA championship basketball time again, and I love it.

It's great to turn the tube on and be able to watch serious basketball full of individual and team emotion.

Basically the NCAA basketball tournament showcases not only team and school unity, it exemplifies what American sports should be today. That being, a bunch of athletic persons getting together to play fairly, have fun and be a part of a team because they want to, not because they are getting something in return.

In other words, these athletes get zippo green stuff for their intense efforts.

Unfortunately, this is not always the case. Some players in the NCAA basketball program are being paid big bucks and other fringes to play for certain schools to insure successful basketball programs.

This is just plain disappointing to know such corruption is crawling all around college basketball programs everywhere.

It's un-American. Or is it?

The NCAA basketball tournament was chocked full of neat little surprises this past weekend.

Originally, I had thought that after all the prelims, Georgia Tech, Duke, St. John's, and Michigan would take a trip to Dallas and be a part of the Final Four club.

After this weekend of basketball action, I had to re-evaluate my Final Four picks due to the major fact that St. John's and Michigan both bought the farm, and can no longer even thumb a ride to Dallas, thanks to Auburn and pleasantly surprising Iowa State.

Also impressive was the play of Cleveland State and Navy. Additionally, Arkansas-Little Rock gave North Carolina State a rock, forcing the game into double overtime before Jim Valvano and his boys put them away.

My updated choices are: Duke, Georgia Tech, North Carolina, and a pick that I dedicate to the previous Sports Editor, Tom Roth, who was a true supporter of anything going on in Iowa, Iowa State.

I'd like to see Iowa State go all the way because they beat Michigan, and also because they have this coach who makes some fantastic determined faces on the sidelines.

Over spring break I observed my old high school involved in the Pennsylvania State Women's Basketball Championships.

It was eerie to sit in the stands getting bleacher butt again.

My old team really did well. They creamed a Northern team by 20 points, and advanced to the second round of the State Tournament.

The game was interesting, but so were the people who were there. I ran into a few old buddies and teachers who asked me the general bonehead question, "How is school." Just once I wish someone would ask me how is my big toe doing, or perhaps my opinion of fake fingernails. Of course they ask you how school is because they know you will say, "fine" so they can robotically give you a big cheap smile.

And it was not surprising to see those people who graduated with me who I knew would hang around high school, still hanging around high school.

Next time, if I ever go to another high school game I will sport obnoxious mirrored sunglasses.

Nobody will know what I'm looking at, or best of all, who I am.

Recently, the city of Pittsburgh stated that they are going to buy 43 percent of the Pittsburgh Pirate's baseball team.

Essentially, most of the inhabitants seem to be in favor of this sale. However, on the evening news, I did notice some dissenters screaming about how the money should be put to better use by feeding the poor and sheltering the homeless of Pittsburgh.

There always has to be a few who want to make a ruckus about something. Remember the controversy that surrounded the ice palace in the St. Paul Winter Carnival? People were screaming the same things: "Use the money for other good will projects."

Here's what I would like to say to those few party-poopers in their three-piece suits that probably wouldn't dole out a dime of their own cash to the poor of Pittsburgh:

Shut up and enjoy the game.

Sluggers achieve most Southern wins ever on 9-10 spring break trip

Louie Filkins
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout baseball team returned home Monday with a 9-10 record from their trip down South over spring break. It was the most wins the team has ever recorded during their trip through Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana. Although two games against Division I schools, Alcorn and Jackson State Universities were rained out, the Blue Devils played well, winning four out of seven games against a strong Livingston University team.

Not only did Stout play well as a team, some outstanding individual performances were had. Bob Lindberg pitched exceptionally well (2-0), giving up just five earned runs in 13 innings. Another pitching standout was Rich Resch, who only allowed three runs in 12 innings as well as gaining one win and one save. John Schmitt also threw well down South — he had a 2-1 record with only six earned runs in over 13 innings.

The Blue Devils had some hot bats, averaging almost eight runs a game. Mike Dukat led the team in batting average (.529) as well as on base percentage (.666). Jeff Kloes slugged .456 with two home runs and four doubles. He also led the team with 20 RBI's. Greg "Ozzie" Osowski went 22 for 50 to give him a .440 average and 13 RBI's. With an amazing comeback from knee surgery, Bob Effinger hit .387 and three doubles. Nick Ghelfi crushed five doubles and had a .358 average through 15 games.

Overall, Stout played well in their nonconference warm-up. According to Head Coach Terry Petrie, his 19 returning lettermen have the best schedule in the conference. "Our main competition is going to come from La Crosse, who have three pitchers as good as ours. Eau Claire is better from last year, with transfers and more experience. River Falls has always been a thorn in my side." He also commented briefly on each of the players in his starting line-up:

First Base: Scott "Snackbar" Aschenbrenner (Jr.) "Scott is a junior college transfer from Iowa Western. He will probably start at first base or DH. Can also catch. Is a good ball player. He swings a real good bat."

Second Base: Greg Osowski (Jr.) "Comes from a good high school program. Was the rookie of the year here as a freshman. Has excellent hitting skills."

Shortstop: Jim Miller (Sr.) "Captain for us. Played second as a sophomore, shortstop last year and will be moved back to second this season. Excellent fielder, but still needs work on his hitting."

Third Base: Karl Drezek (Jr.) "A transfer from Oklahoma A&M Junior College. Had a good high school program at Milwaukee Tech. Has good arm and can play third. Will be a good ball player for us."

Catcher: Jeff Kloes (Jr.) "Had to drop out of school because of Hotchkin's disease last year, but is back. He is finishing up his treatments. Jeff is probably the best catcher in the state. He is one of our captains."

Pitcher: Chris "Fuzzy" Fasnacht (Sr.) "Co-captain again this year. Chris is a good competitor and a very good leader for us. Should be our number one pitcher this year."

Left Field: Eric Nystrom (Jr.) "Started last year in left field. This year will be used as a pinch-hitter. A transfer from Kirkwood Community College. Is a good contact hitter."

Center Field: Tim Buswell (So.) "Transferred from Winona State. Comes from a good high school program, his high school coach was Jerry Radditz. He is a very good defensive outfielder with an adequate arm. He will open in center field for us."

Right Field: Nick Ghelfi (Jr.) "Transfer from Trinton Junior College (Ill.). Nick will play right field. He is an excellent player that comes from a good baseball family. Has a brother that plays for the Phillies and another that plays for the Indians. Excellent bat control and a great arm."

Designated Hitter: Ed Space (Jr.) "He is a big kid. Needs to make more contact with the ball. He's a good competitor."

"We want to win everything, win our division, win our conference, win our district, win our area and go to Nationals," said Coach Petrie. The Blue Devils will get a chance to come closer to this goal when they play St. Mary College in their first game which is home on April 5.

'Social' & 'sober' golfers have varied goals

Louie Filkins
Sports Reporter

"Hit and chase" is an informal and somewhat crude definition of the game of golf. Webster's Dictionary more thoroughly defines this sporting activity as "a game played on a course having nine or eighteen holes, the object being to propel a small ball with the use of a club into each hole with as few strokes as possible".

I was fortunate enough to visit the warm climate of Scottsdale, Ariz. over spring break. After compiling 72 holes in the Scottsdale area, I have noted some interesting observations as well as some questions about the "sport of kings." As the season approaches, I will try to define this activity. Is it a game, a social gathering, or an inseparable mixture of the two?

First of all, the phrase "sport of kings" is rightly named. Although fees around the Wisconsin area usually aren't too bad, 18 holes in the Sun Belt states can easily cost between 40 and 50 dollars. The pro shop is yet another divot in the pocketbook. Clubs, bag, shoes, balls and of course a sharp-looking outfit can add up to a healthy sum.

Now I know Stout golfers might have a tendency to get a little dry out on the course during a sultry summer day. Well you won't find any "quarter taps" or "beat the clock" action on the back nine. A twelve pack purchased at the clubhouse will run about ten dollars. Even though it is "against the rules," one can detour this expense by tucking a few cold ones away in your bag.

Once you're ready to swing away, you'll notice that the first tee-off is located right in the center of attention. Don't let the fact that ten very serious golfers are watching you make you nervous. Try not to slice — there's woods on the right. Don't hook the ball — there's water on the left. To mess up here is certain embarrassment.

This is where we begin to separate the different classes of golfers. The first group is the casual or "social" type. The social golfer is obviously always in a group. Although it is still annoying for them, this type of person will not have a nervous breakdown after slicing his eighth ball into the woods. He merely laughs it off with his buddies. After all, he's out there to have fun — scores do not matter.

The social golfer category contains the largest number of participants and probably includes most of the club swingers at Stout. Most of their knowledge of the game comes from just plain doing it or from watching the movie "Caddyshack". In the movie, Chevy Chase suggests to hit the ball better, one should "be the ball." His concept isn't bad, but it seems a little difficult to be the ball without the help of some hallucinogenic drugs.

The guys out on the fairway who are breaking clubs belong in the second category, "sober" golfers. I'm not saying that these individuals do not consume alcohol, but they are quite sober. They are serious about their game and they practice often. Sober golfers choose a club like a fisherman chooses a lure. Sometimes greenskeepers don't like them because they swat the ground in disgust and hurl their clubs through the air. This category can also contain anybody from members on a golf team to the professionals, who make a nice living by chasing that little white ball around.

The last group is kind of a mixture of the first two. It can include almost anybody, but the older, wealthy businessman and his wife certainly fit in this spot. They usually have been golfing for quite some time, so they are serious about their game. However, they realize that if they are not enjoying themselves they should not be golfing. The course can also be a place for these businessmen to "turn a few deals" with their competitors.

Golf has changed very little since its origination in Scotland. It has, however, become much more complex and popular. The revenue generated each year by this pastime is astronomical. If and when you make your next visit to a golf course, see if you can pick out the different categories of golfers I have noted.

An unidentified golfer practices his putting skills on practice greens. Golf has been tagged the "Sport of Kings" for it's high cost of play. (Stoutonia staff photo)

Friedman, and Voegler.

The doubles teams were different against Whittier. Stout already knew they won the match so Head Coach Bob Smith decide to put in some of the less experienced players in to compete.

The three double teams swept their matches with little difficulty.

Stout's last match for the break was on March 15 against NCAA Division III fifth-ranked Redlands.

"We were fired up for that match because we knew we needed to beat them," commented Smith.

Stout, who is ranked number nine in Division III experienced their strongest opponent of the break beating Redlands 5 1/2-2 1/2.

The highlight of the single play was when Oertel defeated John Flagg who is Redland's number one man. The reason for this is because all six singles were be... played at one time, but ... Oertel and Leehy were still ... their matches, the others f... with it all tied up 2-2.

Despite Oertel losing his firs... 2-6, Oertel came back and wo... next two sets to win the match 6-3, 7-6. Oertel commented, "I knew I had to win because it was a big match — it was a deciding match for the team."

In other singles action, Leehy also went into three sets against John Kranz. But Leehy was defeated with the score 6-2, 3-6, 6-3.

Another singles winner for Stout was Voegler. Both Paine and Friedman notched four individual victories for Stout.

Oertel and Friedman were unable to be stopped, beating Flagg and Rowe 2-6, 6-4, 7-5. Also, Oertel and Friedman teamed up for three consecutive victories during the break.

In the third doubles match Voegler and Barnard competed against Ron Skanie and Gerano Picariello. The match was cancelled because Stout already had won ...e match, and the opposing team ...nted to let the other matches be ...ed.

...but went up against Clairmont ... past Tuesday, and was ... 6-3. Oertel commented, ...e is down after losing, because our win against Redland would have probably put us in eighth place. The Clairmont defeat will hurt us because now the win against Redland will not count, we have to prove ourselves all over."

Smith said, "The kids were still real tired from the California trip." The team just came into town Monday, and were off again Tuesday morning. Also Smith commented, "The team did not have the real tough teams to compete against besides Redlands, where Clairmont was playing tougher teams."

Staffer involved in local incident; vacationers and fish leave scene

Paul Wehking
Sports Reporter

It was to be another ordinary ice fishing trip. All the gear, beer and munchies were in the car. Also in the car was a pair of downhill skis and boots.

My friend Kevin, his brother Kent and I started our trek from River Falls, Wis. Now, River Falls is a lot like other towns that Stout students call home. It has bars, it has a post office, and it serves as a haven for those tight-fisted or thin-in-the pocketbook variety students who would not or could not accompany scores of other breakers to some sun-drenched spring retreat. But nevertheless, with a little snow sense, one can find piles of fun.

Feature

We arrived at our highly-coveted fishing lake, which I can only say is northeast of River Falls by about 40 minutes, at approximately 2 p.m. We stepped out of the car and sized up the situation. It seemed that all our "hot spots" were taken by more seasoned fisherman. We talked about our dilemma over a few refreshments and decided on a somewhat different solution. Since we could not catch fish in "our" spots we felt that they shouldn't either.

Figuring that the lake was available for all sorts of public recreation we pulled out the skis. We had to scrounge around a while but managed to come up with an old anchor rope. Kent wandered over to a dead tree that was nearby and broke off a small length of branch giving us all the equipment we needed. It was now time to try Ice Skiing.

Please keep in mind that I am not trying to claim rights of invention for the sport because I first saw it being done on the infamous Lake Menomin. It was a first for us and we may have been the first to implement the sport as a means to drive those old buggers off the ice.

Kevin secured one end of the rope to the bumper of his Dodge Omni and the other to the branch. Since they were his skis and his car, naturally we let him go first. With a "thumbs-up" from Kevin we were off.

We encountered trouble right away. The deep ruts in the ice road would be no match for a four wheel drive but for our little front wheeler it posed a bit of a problem. As a result, Kevin's first few runs up and down the lake were rather slow, and needless to say, drew some unfriendly looks from those who we were now sharing the lake with.

Finally, after trimming down the median between our tires, we could reach 50 m.p.h., our maximum speed. Kevin made the sport look easy by staying up on all of his runs. This, no doubt, reduced my own anxieties. I was next up.

Again, with the "thumbs-up" we were off. Being less adept on skis than Kevin, I found this sport very challenging. I also found my way to the snow in an abrupt hurry. Not willing to give up yet, I gave it another try. This time it went much better. I managed to make four runs while crashing only three times.

Kent then tried his hand at it. He was about my caliber of skier and was also introduced to the snow a few times. After several runs each we felt we had mastered this sport. Our fun needed another dimension.

We had to build a jump. We started to work on it as we watched several fisherman leave the ice. Apparently our plan was working. We finished our launching pad and I was chosen the guinea pig.

Coming up on my first approach I was wishing that I was lying on some Florida beach with a beach bunny in my arms. I erased that thought and focused on the jump. Up and over I went. Now the hard part — I had to land. This I did in a big way by doing the splits and slamming to the snowy, icy surface below. I then decided that yes, all fun must end and I traded the skis for the driver's seat.

Kevin and Kent each had their turns at the jump with similar results. We all found it tough to take the jump and land safely at 45-50 m.p.h.

It was now nearing dark and we decided we'd best go after some fish. We looked around and noticed that there was no one left on the lake. Obviously there were no fish there.

We packed up and headed for another lake. Arriving at our second spot we saw several lanterns (fishermen with lights) out on the lake. Again we paused for much-needed refreshments. A few hours later, we boldly strode out onto the ice with our gear (for fishing) in search of a productive spot.

Being the hard-core ice men that we are, we simply used holes that had already been drilled by our predecessors. We dropped our lines in and started the grill. After downing our steaks, chips and more refreshments we decided that we had had enough of this fishing business. Obviously there were no fish there either.

It was 2:30 a.m. when we arrived back in River Falls. It was a hard day of ice fishing and we had nothing to show for it. Oh well, just another spring break day spent in boring old Wisconsin.

IT'S A BIG WORD! USE IT APRIL 1st

Keep Menomonie Moving Forward

"Save Our City"

Box 474, Menomonie, WI 54751
Co-Chairs John J. Jax and Carolyn Ohnstad

We have a job to do at the ballot box April 1.

On that day, Menomonie will be asked to gamble away good government. To roll the dice. To spin the wheel. To take a chance on losing a form of government that has served us well for eighteen years.

We're being asked to risk stable property taxes and property values along with honest and efficient government.

In exchange for what? Empty promises? Fools' gold? Exercise your right to vote April 1 by voting NO to a change in Menomonie's city manager-council form of government. A NO vote means you want to retain a professional to manage city affairs rather than a mayor.

A city manager is your hired hand. His job is to provide facts on both sides of an issue. Armed with the right information, your elected city council stands a better chance of making the right decision. Right decisions keep taxes down and the quality of services up.

A city manager tells a community what it needs to know. A mayor tells a community what he wants it to know.

A mayor is interested in getting in office and staying there. He surrounds himself with cronies who can make that happen--who can deliver the votes. Sometimes it may mean shading the truth or suppressing the bad news entirely. That may help the mayor, but it doesn't help you.

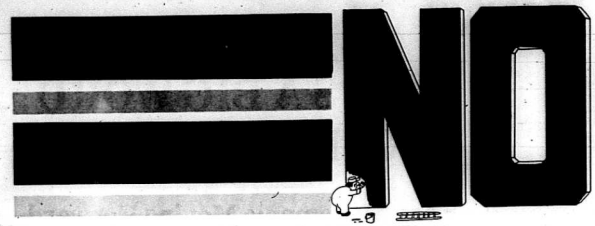
In the old West, they learned how worthless the medicine was only after the snake oil salesman left town. Tell them to keep their medicine. There is no cureall. Good government results from hard work by the entire community.

There are three qualified candidates who are working hard to earn your support. They are Norm Rockwell, Pinckney Hall, and Richard Martinson (1, 3 and 5 on the ballot). Support their efforts with your vote. Remember, keep Menomonie Alive--Vote 1, 3 and 5 and NO on the referendum.

Sincerely,

John J. Jax and Carolyn C. Ohnstad, Co-Chairs

P.S. "Nobody misses the water until the well runs dry."



IT'S A BIG WORD!

USE IT APRIL 1st

Keep Professional Management

NO I don't want to risk higher property taxes

NO I don't want to chance lower property values

NO I don't want to gamble away honest and efficient government

NO I don't want to jeopardize Menomonie's Class A bond rating

NO I don't want to exchange 18 years of steady civic progress and growth for empty promises

NO I don't want to replace public planning and priorities for a mayor's personal agenda

NO I don't want to lose professional, qualified and experienced city management...Then....

Keep Menomonie Moving Forward

Menomonie's Record of Achievement: 1968-1985

- Improvement and expansion of the industrial park
- Support for airport development
- City support for expansion and improvement of local businesses and industries through tax increment financing and industrial revenue bond: Tri Mart, Bill's Distributing, Lehman and Larson, Indianhead Industries, Badger Iron, Central Storage and Warehousing, Don's Super-Valu, Lammer's L-Mart, Churchill Tire, Myrtle Werth Medical Center, Master Industries, Fleet Farm, and Cedarwood Fitness Center

Future Needs Identified

- Airport improvements to upgrade its status from temporary landing strip to basic transport airport with federal funds
- Development of a solid waste disposal facility
- Build a second iron/manganese removal facility for the water system
- Extension of city water system to connect the industrial park area to the north side of the city
- Improvement and expansion of the industrial park with the addition of more streets and underground utilities

VOTE NO APRIL 1st

Support candidates who support a NO vote!

CITY COUNCIL

Vote 1-3-5 on the ballot

1 Norm Rockwell

Competent - Professional

Norm Rockwell is a resident of north Menomonie who is quickly earning a national reputation as a cartoonist. Most residents know him through his books and his weekly cartoon in the Dunn County News. His work appears in dozens of national magazines, including New Yorker, Good Housekeeping and National Enquirer. Former teacher, Arkansaw Public Schools, 1972-1983. Veteran, U.S. Army. Bachelor and Master degrees, Winona State. Master's, guidance, UW-Stout. Wife Ingrid and their two sons live at 1402 Mathews Street. Menomonie resident 13 years.

3 Pinckney Hall

Experienced - Dedicated

Besides membership on the City Council, Pinckney Hall has found numerous ways to serve his community. He is the Council's representative to the Library Board and the Landmarks Commission, a member of the new youth center board, the Menomonie Public Schools Performing Arts Commission, the Menomonie Theater Guild and the Greenwood Players. A counseling psychologist at Stout since 1969, he holds a doctorate from Northwestern University. The Halls and their two children reside at 1103 Riverview Drive.

5 Richard Martinson

Qualified - Hardworking

Dick Martinson - Most people know him through his involvement in civic affairs during the 15 years he has lived in Menomonie. His 20 years of financial training and experience are important qualifications that can help serve the city's needs. Employed by First Bank and Trust. Valuable experience gained as a member of Menomonie's Zoning Board of Appeals. Served Chamber of Commerce Board of Directors, three year term as treasurer. President-elect, Menomonie Rotary. Member, Menomonie High School Athletic Board. Lives at 1620 Fourth Avenue NE with his wife, Karen, and their two children.

Council debates gov't. change

Rich Brueckner
News Reporter

The crowd of over 200 Menomonie residents who attended the open forum presentation of City Council candidates were looking for answers to the question, "Will you know how to vote April 1" The forum took place in the the Crystal ballroom of Memorial Student Center Monday night.

The forum began with a three-minute opening statement by each of the seven candidates. These statements reflected the views of the two opposing factions vying for power in the City of Menomonie: The Concerned Citizens who want a change to a mayoral form of government, and the Save our City group who support the current managerial form of government.

Two referendum questions will be on the ballot. A "YES" vote to question no. 1 will result in the creation of a Mayor-Common Council form of government. A "YES" vote to question no. 2 will result in the creation of an eleven person Common Council elected by ward instead of the current seven person council elected at-large.

Concerned Citizens has endorsed three candidates: Steve Wood and incumbent Jay Schroeder and Rich Emmert. Save our City has endorsed Norm Rockwell, Richard Martinson, and encumbent Pickney Hall.

One candidate, Mike Wagner, was not endorsed by either group. He expressed his concern about political back-scratching by holding up a four-page Save our City flyer and saying, "Hey, these things cost a lot of money; don't you think that these guys are going to go along with what these people tell them to?"

Questions from the audience brought out the issue of Menomonie's $8 million debt which is approaching the debt ceiling of $10 million. Most of the candidates stressed fiscal responsibility in dealing with this debt and the $877,000.00 annual interest Menomonie pays on this debt.

Emmert said that the city has to borrow money to provide the services people want. "Look at some of the roads in the surrounding area," he said. "They look like something from World War I! It takes money to keep the roads repaired and plowed."

Please see ELECTIONS, page 8

There was a full house in the Crystal Ballroom of the Memorial Student Center to watch the debate between Menomonie City Council candidates Monday night. Audience members were looking for answers to their questions about the need for a change in Menomonie. Fiscal responsibility was the platform each candidate endorsed. The method of achieving fiscal responsibility was the audience's concern. (Stoutonia photo by Dan Banach)

Absence of Minority Affairs Rep caused by a series of problems

Nitin Nadkarni
News Reporter

The venue is the Stout Student Association (SSA) Meeting in the Crystal Ball Room of the Student Center. The time is 8 p.m. Tuesday. There's debate going on and the room seems to be filled with SSA Senators and the Executive Board members. As a result, the absence of a Minority Affairs Senator these past two months may be easily overlooked.

The SSA effort to come up with a Minority Affairs Senator for the remainder of this session has gone unrewarded. The minority affairs senator's seat is vacant. There is no representative for the four hundred or so minority students in the multi- ethnic UW-Stout.

Former Minority Affairs Senator Andrew Kumar formally resigned the post late January. His memory of working as the Minority Affairs Senator was that of someone asked to take on the world alone. Kumar said, "There is no participation and cooperation from the various minority organizations on the campus and it was tough working there all alone."

According to the University Student Senate, which is the governing body of the SSA, the minority students community consists of the student community from different types of disadvantaged situation or underrepresented groups like the handicapped, ethnic minority, the international students, lesbian and the gay community and non traditional students.

An increased awareness among Americans for the principles of justice, fraternity and liberty for all emerged during the civil rights movement which peaked in the mid-sixties with the Johnson administration. Steps were taken to ensure that the minority groups were not neglected which gave rise to the principles of affirmative action and equal opportunity.

The United Council, an organization of student governments in the UW-System, mandates that member councils at the various universities in the state have minority representation on the University Student Council.

The United Council, of which Stout is a member, has a mandatory rule regarding minority representation. This came into being because of affirmative action guidelines.

The United Council (UC) meets once a month to discuss various issues affecting the students. United Council positions on these issues are then lobbied for at the capitol in Madison, Wis. Each University brings a delegation of representatives to each of the six

US retaliates on Libyan attack

Gulf of Sidra, Libya U.S. planes flying over the Gulf of Sidra off the Libyan coast came under hostile fire after crossing what Libyan leader Khadafi has called "the line of death" which cuts the Gulf of Sidra off from the Mediterranean Sea. All hostile missiles fired at the planes missed their mark. Retaliatory response by U.S. 6th Fleet sank three Libyan patrol boats, damaged a fourth and disabled the Soviet built Sirte missile base. The 6th Fleet had been on maneuvers in the area. A White House spokesman has stated that all maneuvers have been outside the 12 mile limit for international boundary.

Soviets condemn US nuclear tests

Moscow, USSR An outraged Soviet Union condemned the United States nuclear test explosion that took place in the Nevada desert saying that it was meant to "torpedo" the Kremlin's moratorium on nuclear tests and that it was a show of contempt to the world. "One more test and the moratorium is over" said Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, "then there is the likelihood that we will have to increase defense spending." President Reagan has refused to discontinue testing, saying the Soviet moratorium was "unverifiable".

Smokeless tobacco hazards stated

Washington, D.C. Tobacco chewers face up to a 50 times greater chance of contracting cancer of the cheek and gum than non-users do according to a report from Surgeon General C. Everett Coop. The report states that snuff and chewing tobacco are equally as dangerous as smoking cigarettes and should be placed in the same category as a public health threat.

CPI dip related to gas prices

Washington, D.C. The drastic decline in gasoline prices and tumbling food costs sparked the largest drop in the Consumer Price Index in over thirty years according to the Labor Department. Gasoline prices fell 5.9% in Feburary after a 0.1% increase the month before. Home heating oil dropped 10.1% in that same month. Vegetables and fruits led the way in food decreases,but were slightly offset by the 26.7% increase in ground coffee.

Raid reveals teen sex club

Waukesha, Wi. A raid on the apartment of a 16-year-old boy provided evidence that the teen was the leader of a sex club for minors. The apartment, rented by the boy's father because he didn't want him to live at home, contained 35 unused condoms, ropes, and photo's of naked people. The club members included one 16-year-old girl, two 15-year-old girls, three 16-year-old boys and two 15 year-old boys. It is alleged that the girls were willingly tied to bedposts before having sex.

Great Peace March disintegrates

Compiled by Matt Kalina

A few hundred people in a makeshift, mobile tent city on the edge of the Mojave Desert are all that remain of the Great Peace March Across America, a demonstration against nuclear weapons.

As orgininally planned, 5,000 marchers would hike from Los Angeles to Washington, D.C. arriving here in November. It was to be a $15 million caravan with dozens of supporting vehicles carrying everything from "showers and a Laundromat to a post office and a library," according to the Wall Street Journal.

The Great Peace March is the latest - though certainly not the last - in a new outbreak of "mega-events." They are filled with good intentions and usually more than a bit of hype. Not all meet the sad end of the Pro-Peace extravaganza.

Last year, there was Live Aid, the global rock concert that raised millions of dollars to help relieve the famine in Africa. There was also Farm Aid, a concert to raise money for distressed U.S. farmers. Then there is Hands Across America, Kenneth Kragen's latest project. Kragen was the man who brought together a load of top pop stars to record "We Are the World," to raise millions of dollars to fight hunger.

Kragen expects to do better with about six million pairs of hands. On May 25 at 3 p.m. Eastern time, the hands, each pair attached to a person, are supposed to form a chain across the continent. Participants will then start singing in a benefit for the country's homeless and hungry.

The Great Peace March, however, ran afoul of everything from Mother Nature to the insurance industry. Only 1,200 set out last month. Last week, the group came to a standstill here amid mounting financial difficulties. Finally, David Mixner, the march's organizer, gave up the effort. Pro-Peace Inc., the march's umbrella organization, raised $3.3 million, spent several hundred thousand more than that and got the marchers 120 miles from Los Angeles into the 3,235-mile trip.

Some 500 marchers have now left the desert and are regrouping at a bicycle race track in nearby Barstow. They have vowed to continue the trek, though they will have to do without hot water and mail call.

Pro-Peace was trying to provide inspiration for millions to fight for nuclear disarmament. Some problems were beyond organizers' control, such as a dust storm and unusually heavy downpours that hit Southern California early this month.

The overriding problem, though was a lack of money. The marchers were turned away from an early campsite because organizers couldn't afford the necessary insurance, for example.

Some financial help came from such entertainment heavyweights as Paul Newman and Barbra Streisand. After contributing "extensively," Newman stopped payment on a $25,000 check to Pro-Peace as the march began to disintegrate, a spokesman for the actor says.

Even last week, there seemed to be hope for last-minute help from Hollywood. One rumor had organizer Mixner and actor Sylvestor Stallone coming to the camp in a helicopter with $100,000. An approaching helicopter drew cheers of relief, until marchers saw it was from a San Diego television station.

Presidential candidates debate issues

SSA presidential candidates listen to Tracy Lea Landis respond to one of 15 questions asked by five panelists during the 90 minute debate Monday afternoon. The audience that attended the Stout Student Association Presidential debate Monday afternoon heard David Fredrickson, Tracy Lea Landis, Sands McAlees, and Paul D. Nelson present their qualifications, their views, and goals as candidates for SSA president in next week's election.

Dean of Students Sam Wood moderated the 90 minute debate sponsored by The Stoutonia. Voters on Wednesday and Thursday April 2-3 will elect the Stout Student Association President and staff for the 1986-87 academic year.

The opening question was presented by JoAnne Prange, current president of the S.S.A. She asked, "If you could be any kind of animal, what animal would you be and why?" Frederickson responded by saying he would like to be a composite of many animals, including a crocodile because of its tough skin, and a deer because of its free spirit. McAlees also answered that she would be a mixture of animals, naming a seal for its intelligence, a whale for its freedom and power, and a cat for its spirit and ability to please. Landis responded by saying that she would be a dolphin, without citing a specific reason for her choice. Nelson replied to the question by saying he would be a "wise old owl" because of the patience it possesses.

Holly Peuse, president of Inter-Residence Hall Association, asked the candidates "What are your major objectives in meeting the students' needs in the residence halls?" McAlees said that she would like to see a working rela-

Once again students are preparing to elect the people they feel can best represent them in the Stout Student Association. Besides the Presidential position, other positions being sought are as follows: Vice President of Academic Affairs, Vice President of Financial Affairs, Vice President of Legislative Affairs, and eleven Off-Campus Senators.

This year the campaign is pushing towards the students' votes and they have come up with the slogan "You can Make a difference -VOTE- ". The elections for the 1986-87 academic school year will be held April 2 and 3 from 8 A.M. to 4 P.M. The voting will be done by computer this year and directions will be posted on the computers.

Vice President of Academic Affairs(VP-AA) will represent the students interests on issues concerning the academic side of student life. Running for the position: Julie Weiss and Toni Kunstman.

Julie Weiss is currently a Sophomore. Her activities that she feels qualifies her for VP-AA are as follows: She is currently a Senator for Wigen Hall. Weiss is the Chairperson for Freshman Orientation Committee and IRHC Activities Representative for Wigen Hall.

Toni Kunstman is currently a Junior. Activities she feels qualifies her for VP-AA are as follows: she is presently the President of the Organization of Adult Students Involved in Stout (OASIS). She served as Secretary for Sheboygan Association for Severely Handicapped Adults (SASHA). She participated in fund raisers for a number of different organizations such as Big Brothers and Sisters, SASHA, Heart Fund, and OASIS. While Kunstman was employed for 11 years at Georgia-Pacific, she was active in Plant committees and Safety committees.

Off-Campus Senators a representative to the University Student Senate for those students residing in off-campus locations. There are eleven positions availible. the following people are running for the position: Barb Caron, Denise Hoeft, Henry Oboh, Daniel R. Meyer, Brenda Morehart, Catherine Reszka, and Peggy A. Coughlin.

The students that have been described in this article may not be the only persons running for these positions. There is a possibility that some students may be running as a write-in-candidate.

Barb Caron has been active in the SSA for the last year as an Off-Campus senator. She has worked on the Landlord Tennant committee and has helped with the United Council in the Columbian Relief fund. She has worked as a Stoutonia news Reporter and has served on the Sexual Assult Prevention Committee. Currently she is a member of the Little Sister Organization of the Sigma Tau Gamma Fraternity and she is a volunteer to work with the Stout Alumni Phonathon.

Denise Hoeft is a Junior majoring in Business Adminstration/Sales who has received the Chancellor's Award for her academic excellence. While she has been attending Stout she has been active in the Stoutonia for two years,she has worked in the placement office as student assistant and in the graphic arts department

FCC cuts WVSS fine to $500

Tim Hopkins
News Editor

WVSS-FM General Manager Arthur "Ace" Matthews was clearly relieved last Friday when he received a Notice of Forfeiture from the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) for $500.

Matthews was relieved about the $1500 reduction from the Notice of Apparent Liability for $2000 which WVSS received from the FCC on March 5.

The Notice of Apparent Liability resulted from the first FCC inspection of WVSS in 16 years which turned up four violations of FCC regulations. The violations were that the Emergency Broadcast System (EBS) receiver was not functional, there was no station identification on two occasions, EBS tests were not transmitted and there was no operator on duty during early morning broadcasts.

Matthews had requested that the fines be reduced since they represented nearly a third of the station's annual budget of $6200. Matthews also said that the violations had not been willful as cited by the FCC.

The FCC Engineer in Charge at the district office in St. Paul Minn., Garret Lysiak acknowleged the budget constraints facing WVSS when he wrote, "Licensees are ultimately responsible for complying with the FCC regulations. However, in view of your limited budget, we feel that a reduction to $500 is warranted."

Matthews said that the fine would eat up what remained of their annual budget from Student Activities. "We'll clean out what money we've got left," Matthews said. Upon hearing of the fine reduction, SSA President reiterated her suggestion that WVSS apply for unallocated funds from Student Activities.

Matthews indicated that the student managers at WVSS were taking corrective action to help resolve the problems when he said, "They're just taking a couple people off the air now who are not fulfilling their obligations."

A cut back in the late night hours for disk jockeys is definitely possibly as Matthews said, "They're probably going to drop part of that 11 to 1 part out if they can't get enough people."

When U.S. push leads to shoves by Libyans

Seeds for a shootout in the Gulf of Sidra were set down by the Reagan Administration long before Khadafy was goaded into a dangerous, ill-provoked set-up which involved a penetration of U.S. forces 40 miles offshore of Libya beyond the "Line of Death."

It is obvious that Reagan had more up his sleeve than exercising the freedom of the seas or asserting our right to hold military exercises in international water by maneuvering our ships and buzzing our planes off of the coastline.

Khadafy has declared the gulf Libyan territory, but the United States recognizes only a 12-mile territorial limit for the Gulf. Libya is not the only nation that claims a 200-mile territorial waters. More than a dozen nations maintain an extended limit.

The Reagan administration sought an excuse to start action against Libya, to dare them. Reagan had been pinned into an aggravating struggle with Libya's ruler, especially with last December's terrorist attacks on airports in Rome and Vienna that U.S. officials claim were encouraged by Khadafy.

This short-sighted pursuit of revenge to make Khadafy "learn his lesson" will not change anything. It has serious world-wide repercussions, including the potential to spark Libyan attempts to carry out terrorist actions in the United States and abroad.

This extremist act could increase pro-Libyan support by estranging the Arab world from the U.S. and forming an alliance in Khadafy's favor. Khadafy could be played up as a hero as a result of the confrontation. He will be praised for defying the might of the United States. The United States had nothing to gain by picking a fight. In the process, the United States risked the lives of Americans, marred U.S. credibility and injured American public relations.

Diversionary Tactics

Born to run

Tim Hopkins

The one clear result of the debate between the four SSA presidential candidates was that there were no clear results. The people who went to the debate hoping to learn who the best candidate was must have been left with an empty feeling in the pit of their stomach.

The thing about this debate that makes it a good basis for making your political decisions is the fact that like the goings on at an SSA meeting, its emphasis focused more on form than substance.

Despite the fact that the first series of responses established that these candidates, if they chose, would end up either a deer, crocodile, cat, whale, seal, dolphin or owl, it was clear that the political animal, regardless of species, was basically evasive.

It was ironic that Tracy Lea Landis said she was a political animal and proceeded to tell us that she'd want to be a dolphin, yet offered no explanation for her answer. So she chose to stay out of the running in this case by failing to explain the reasoning behind her choice.

My viewpoint of the issues may have been jaded by working several weeks in a newspaper office which became the informal headquarters for the Paul D. Nelson for president campaign. If I were a shrewd presidential candidate, a.k.a newspaper editor-in chief, I'd go out of my way to make a clean break with the newspaper once the campaign got started.

How fair is it for one candidate to have say over what may or may not end up in the school paper?I'm not doubting Nelson's honesty in the least, yet the conflict of interests was rather blatant.

Reason lost out to political obsession as Nelson campaign workers asked me to wear a Nelson for President campaign button and to post one of his campaign posters.

Even though I know the candidate and his campaign workers reasonably well, it was difficult for them to believe at first that I couldn't justify wearing his campaign button, nor any of the others.

Back to Debate Central: It may be best to hire an interpreter for whoever is elected. Linda Lim's question about what campus changes each candidate would like to make if they were elected was surprisingly difficult to answer. Somehow, the topic of campus changes was totally forgotten by half the candidates as they discussed rallying school spirit and getting students involved.

Nelson woke a few people up when he described Menomonie as culturally dead. Funny, I never heard that comment at the City Council debate.

I was disappointed by his lack of imagination and diplomacy. I can see him doing a world of good for town/gown relations.

Nelson broached a few good topics such as backing corporate sponsorship of student organizations and suggesting a tutorial program designed to specifically help minorities but his lack of spontaneity combined with a touch of smugness detracted from the impact these suggestions had on the audience.

Dave Fredrickson suffered from a lack of knowledge and his own vascillation on the issues. He had the honesty on occasion to admit he started out thinking one thing and yet changed his mind once he learned all the candidates' responses. I wonder if a neo-fascist candidate would have altered Fredrickson's responses any?

Tracy Lea Landis seemed in the midst of a blue funk. I have rarely seen this candidate so passive in mood. Her passiveness lessened her impact on the audience. Was she suffering from burnout?

Sands McAlees was a surprise. Her strong point was her enthusiasm combined with an understanding of racial prejudice and the needs of minorities.

The question remains how these candidates might effectively oversee the operation of student government to get the many diverse elements involved concerned with addressing the needs on this campus.

Subject: General manager discusses future of WVSS, reflecting on problems, fines

Text by Tim Hopkins

Arthur "Ace" Matthews has been the general manager of WVSS-FM the past 16 years. He has overseen many changes at the 10 watt instructional radio station as he has taught hundreds of students radio production using WVSS as the main vehicle in their educational process.

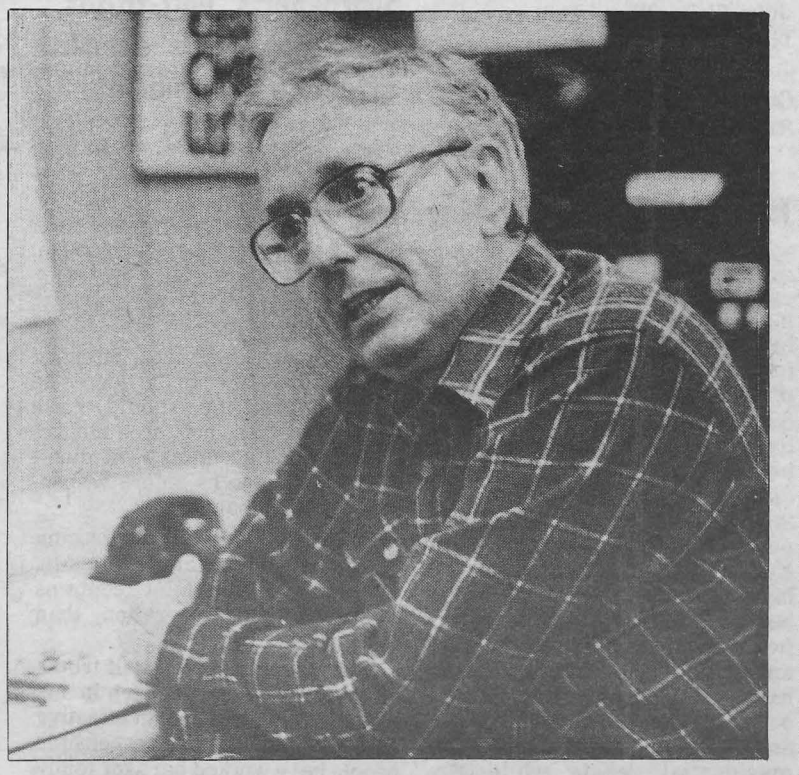
The Stoutonia interviewed Matthews about the cause of the recent $500 fine assessed by The Federal Communications Commission (FCC), the past problems at the station and the future plans for WVSS.

STOUTONIA: WHAT'S THE NEXT STEP AT WVSS?

MATTHEWS: The management has already started to work taking some of our weaker DJs off the air, warning others. One of the things I've been wanting to do for a long time is get our management out into the community.

Until you get out into the community you're not anything. So we're trying to arrange it next year so that half of their hours are spent down here getting stuff done and half are out talking to people in the community and getting that kind of stuff done.

We're talking to The Stoutonia too, I don't know whether it's going to happen, that The Stoutonia reporters might do some of their stories and then come up here and put them on the radio by reworking them so they fit in the radio format.



Ace Matthews

I've been wanting to get news for a long time and I've tried for a very long time to do some things like this.

We were better four years ago, five years ago and then I got my ulcer. And they agreed that we could take our news wire money and spend that to hire two students to watch the store for four hours a week and do stuff that had to get done that nobody else wanted to do. That has helped quite a bit.

I've had two relapses of my ulcer. Last fall, the manager we hired did not do his job and we had to get rid of him because the two of us [Matthews and the other student manager] had to do three jobs. And [with] this recent material my Maalox consumption

Schroeder tells 'only half of the story'

Mr. Schroeder seems unable to tell an entire story. He says he was denied the opportunity to place an item on the agenda, but does not say for what reason. He was denied an opportunity to speak, again, for what reason?

To one who is over sixty, this telling of only half the story has disturbing reminders of the days of Huey Long and Senator McCarthy. It should be noted that they also declaimed about "democracy," "voter's rights," etc., while busily taking away such rights.

Also interesting is the emphasis Mr. Schroeder places on his "responsiveness to the voters," yet when a student organization applied for permission to operate a beer tent during the snowmobile contest, Mr. Schroeder not only did not lobby for the group but voted against them. It took the efforts of Mr. Duane Bauer, chamber of commerce [director] to obtain a special council session and get the council to reverse itself to give the group a license.

One additional note. Forty four years ago as a student I considered that what happened in Menomonie was immaterial to me. I did not expect to be living here, but I am! We need your vote "No" to preserve our current improved form of city government. (And if taxes go up, is your landlord going to be a "nice guy" and absorb the increase?)

Chase neglects bassist

I'm writing in reference to David Chase's March 20, "For Those About to Rock" (column).

Maybe the "ultimate" bassist hasn't passed on yet, but the death of Phil Lynott earlier this year was a major loss to those who followed his career.

I realize you probably don't recognize his name, but his work with Thin Lizzy, Grand Slam, Gary Moore (a vastly under-rated talent, neglected in your recent guitarist feature) and as a solo artist, put Lynott in the spotlight of serious rock fans. Phil Lynott was more than a great songwriter, bassist and live performer, and his music will carry on. If Phil Lynott isn't worthy of bassist in "Heaven's Band", then the entire idea may as well be scrapped.

Preserve city's quality

The nicest thing the students of Stout could do for themselves and the City of Menomonie this spring would be to go to the polls next Tuesday and vote "no" to retain the present form of government in Menomonie. This system has an 18-year history of fairness and stability that has helped Menomonie to grow steadily and evenly. A "no" vote on both referenda will accomplish this. I would also urge a vote for the three candidates who support the retention of this system — Rockwell, Martinson and me. We are not angry and have no special interests other than the preservation of the current quality of life in Menomonie. Students are members of this community and have a vested interest in preserving the atmosphere in this city that many find pleasant and attractive. Please vote.

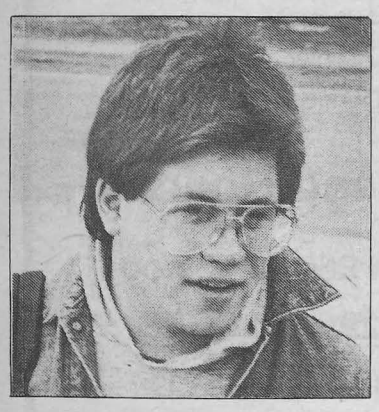
CAMPUS SLANT/ Should mandatory drug testing be required for professional athletes?

Photos by Todd A. Nelson
Text by Paul Wehking

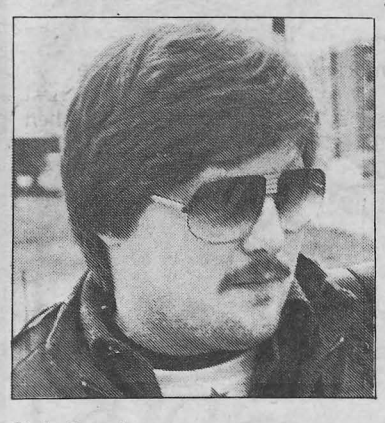


Jeff Wilhelm,
Sophomore,
Industrial Technology

Yes, I think they should be tested. I don't think drugs have a place in athletics. They have an obligation to themselves and the team and I don't see how it could enhance their playing abilities.

Tracey Crisp,
Freshman,
Hotel Restaurant Management

I think they should be. They are so highly paid for their profession that it doesn't seem fair that they should get away with it. So many people are watching them nationally, that they should set an example for society because so many people look up to them.



Pete Brasic,
Senior,
Marketing Education

No. I feel whatever they do is their own right. Doing drugs is their preference. They shouldn't be tested.

Lisa Bougie,
Senior,
Home Economics Education

I think they are representing a lot of people and a lot of people look up to them. When they take drugs they are just shooting down their image. They shouldn't be involved in that kind of activity, so yes, they should definitely be tested.

Ted Jacobson,
Junior,
Technology Education

A lot of people think highly of them and that they shouldn't take drugs. You always hear about those people that are drug dealers and playing sports. They should have to go through some treatment, not just be suspended if they are tested positive.

As a recent student of the council-manager form of government, I have learned a single council member cannot request an item be placed on an agenda. This can only be done if a majority of the council makes such a request.

As a member of the Menomonie City Council, this is imformation Jay Schroeder has. It is information he chose to omit in his letter to you.

Again, honesty in a public official is an admirable quality. Has Jay Schroeder any?

Relaying the 'real stink'

Once again we have had the not at all surprising experience of reading an article in last week's Stoutonia that incorrectly reported the facts. Maybe The Stoutonia should direct their efforts more to topics like dog shit rather than not being able to accurately relay the "real stink" to the students.

As the innovator of the Future Funding Research Committee, I would like to state that the intentions of the School of Liberal Studies fund the accredited liberal arts organizations which the SSA presently funds. The organizations that will be affected are: Band, Symphonics, Forensics, WVSS, and Theatre. Not Prometheus nor Speaker Series. It is in the best interest of the SSA only to procede with this type of funding if those organizations mentioned will only better their goals and purposes with the same amount of money or possibly a larger budget to work with. If monies were to come from the School of Liberal Studies this would free up approximately $30,200 to better suit the other funded organizations of which all are on a decreasing budget in times of increasing prices.

Once again this is the real "stink."

Lee Michaels,
Off-Campus Senator

SSA elections offer choice

In this year's SSA elections we are faced with some thing we haven't seen in years, for every SSA elected position (except for vice president of financial affairs) their is no one running unopposed. This makes the students job of choosing the senate leaders even more difficult, they will have to choose between various candidates, which is a new concept for SSA elections. When looking over the four candidates running for the presidency, one individual stands above and beyond the others in the areas of leadership, insight, intelligence and style, that being Paul Nelson.

Paul's accomplishments and qualifications stand by themselves. Paul has more than enough qualifications to be a very effective SSA president.

Paul has concrete goals for SSA in the following year. He wants to improve community and university relations. We would like to maximize student particiapation on various university and faculty committies. Finally, Paul wants to facilitate better relations between campus organizations. These goals are beneficial to all students on campus and are realistic enough to be implemented.

When all you students vote on April 2 and 3 make it easier on yourself, vote for the candidate who has proven his abilities, vote Paul Nelson for level-headed leadership.

Nelson's campaign puzzling

Although I hold The Stoutonia in high regard, I have had some problems with our tabloid in the past few weeks. The majority of the problems stem from the recent SSA presidential campaigns. I have some questions that have been confusing me ever since the campaigns began: Is The Stoutonia office really the campaign headquarters for Paul Nelson? Was Mr. Nelson abusing his powers as editor-in-chief while he was a candidate for political office? Did a conflict of interest and/or bias occur while Mr. Nelson had a voting right on the editorial board of The Stoutonia? Did The Stoutonia staff really plan the presidential debate while Mr. Nelson had a direct input as to the make-up of the debate? Are some members of The Stoutonia staff abusing their journalistic rights for the betterment of one political condidate, namely Mr. Paul D. Nelson? Can I really pick up a Paul D. Nelson for president button in The Stoutonia office? If Mr. Nelson runs his political campaign in this fashion, just think what would happen if by some stroke of luck he won?

These are just some the questions, I do have more, that have puzzled me since the campaign for our student leader has begun. I realize that there is a fine line between being a personal friend of a candidate and being a professional. We must realize that people working for a newspaper have an obligation to their readers. I hope that the questions that I have raised will make some people think about their actions. But most of all I hope that people will get out and vote to voice their own opinions.

Schroeder's 'half-truths,' 'over statements' demolish effective government

Equating the action of the Municipal Library Board with Japan's attack on Pearl Harbor, as City Council candidate Jay Schroeder did in last week's Dunn County News, would be the ultimate insult if it were not so ridiculous.

If Jay Schroeder was offended back in December to the degree he now claims, he should have responded then, not three months later. Thank goodness FDR didn't wait three months before responding to the Japanese.

Coming as it does in the closing of an election campaign, Mr. Schroeder's complaint contains more political inspiration than substance.

Overstatement and half-truths have played a large part in his campaign to demolish an effective city government that responsible people have worked hard for many years to build.

One wonders if Mr. Schroeder plans to be around after graduation to pick up the pieces.
Charles Buelow

Give government back to people of Menomonie

Why should Menomonie have a mayor and alderman by ward form of government? This will enable Menomonie city government to have a system of checks and balances in their government, just like our federal government and our state government.

We have an elected president of the United States and an elected governor. Menomonie should have an elected official on top of our government also.

Our system of checks and balances will work according to state statutes, whereby the mayor will only vote to break tie votes of the alderman and be able to issue vetoes. (But the mayor will be elected at large and the alderman by ward.) The alderman will be able to overide a mayor's veto by a two-thirds majority. This is a system of checks and balances. This type of government is the best, because it has served the U.S. for over 200 years.

Ninety-four percent of the cities in Wisconsin have a major form of government, I think that this is a very important statistic that should be remembered.

Recently, I have found a statement in the Rebirth of America that states why we should be like our federal government and have elected officials at the top of government.

"In establishing a federal structure with an intricate system of checks and balances the founding fathers had aimed to disperse authority so widely that no one branch or level of government and no one man (a city manager) could prevail over others. They concluded from history that concentration of power corrupts and sooner or later leads to abuse and tyranny.

Much has been written about the qualifications for mayor and what they should be. One must remember that the only qualifications to become president of the United States is to be at least 35-years-old and a natural born citizen. How can a person become president? The same reason a person can become mayor of Menomonie and the same reason the Philippines have a new president, because the people wanted her there, the people elect a president and the people of Menomonie will elect a mayor because they want them there, and whenever an elected official doesn't do what the electorate want, they can replace them!

Lets give the government back to the people by voting yes for an elected mayor and alderman by ward April 1. Voting yes April 1 will be voting for yourself. A yes vote on both referendums will be the best for the students as well as life-long residents.

Jay H. Schroeder,
Menomonie City Councilman

has gone way up.

I don't think that we're ever going to do what I wanted to do when I came here 16 years ago. I wanted to do a real community service. I had plans to record things that went on on campus and get them on the air. I had plans to do live news casts. I had plans to do all sorts of things that I thought would be community service.

> I know what we need to do, but the funds and time are not available.
> —Ace Matthews
> General Manager
> WVSS

But if the people don't want to do the community service, you've got to take what you get. We haven't had anybody who wanted to do sports for instance. I wanted to do games, I wanted to do all sorts of stuff. But, as they wore me down over the years until the point I got my ulcer, then I had to [cut back] because I was doing 40 hours a week beyond my regular duties to do things to keep this thing going the way I thought it ought to go.

So for survival sake, I've got to cut back. I'm the kind of person who wants to do stuff, wants to change, wants to, you know, I'm a fireball. People say, "You're 55 years old and you're still acting like a kid. You still want to get stuff done." I still do, but I've got to back off so I'll live long enough at least to retire for a couple of years.

STOUTONIA: WHEN YOU TALK WITH PEOPLE IN THE ADMINISTRATION ITSELF, HAS THIS EVENT POSSIBLY CAUSED A GROWING AWARENESS ON THEIR PART OF A NEED FOR CHANGES?

MATTHEWS: I don't know. We had another emergency five or six years ago. The FCC changed the regulations. We weren't normally on the air during the summer because there was no audience here. Everybody leaves May 15th and they're gone. Well, the FCC put in a new rule that said, "If you want to keep your license you've got to be on the air a minimum of 35 hours a week whenever school is in session."

That means that somebody's got to run this place that first week that students are getting settled in and the last week when final tests are, which means that I've got to be on the air 35 hours a week no matter what. We had to be on the air 35 hours a week all summer too.

At that point, the administration came up with $1,100 and we hired a student to manage the station during the summer. So that solves that problem.

I train the people to go on the air with my radio production [class.] They do editorials. They do interviews. They do public service announcements. They do the things that the rock people in the evening don't want to do.

It all works together. We get $1,100 or $1,200 for supplies from the Speech Department. We get $1,100 to run in the summer, $6,000 of my salary for supervising it. The school pays for the light, the heat and for the janitor when he shows up. So it's not as if the students are doing all of it and nobody's doing anything else.

We're all cooperating, doing everything we can. And with budgets going to hell and it's going to get worse at Stout because of the cut back, we got $460 million we're in the hole and if the student monies go down, we just have to pull back. If it comes to a point where I don't think it's viable, I want to go on cable to see if we can earn some more money.

STOUTONIA: HAS WVSS EVER EMPLOYED A CONSULTANT TO HELP POINT OUT WHERE THE MOST SIGNIFICANT CHANGES NEED TO BE MADE?

MATTHEWS: Somebody offered a few years ago to come down here and tell us what we needed to do for $3,000. I know what we need to do, but the funds and time are not available, so this is why I want to go to cable because then we wouldn't have to worry about all the regulations first of all.

Then we could be the electronic sand box we often become. Then the management wouldn't have to worry if the kids didn't show up, they'd just shut down. That's all. But we've got to have a minimum 35 hours a week, period. End of report. That's what it says in the rules. And as you've seen, you don't fool with the rules.

STOUTONIA: WHAT IS YOUR OPINION OF THE STOUTONIA?

MATTHEWS: I think that The Stoutonia, for the fact that we don't have a [journalism] major does a pretty good job. There are lots of times I don't agree with what they say, but that's what freedom of the press is.

> In all the years that I have been here nobody has come in to give an opinion.
> —Ace Mattews

I think there are times when either I didn't express it well or they didn't hear it well and we get a [missquote], but I don't make a fuss over it. I'll tell you if I thought, "Hey that wasn't so good." I'll call up and say so.

The reporter's got to make the decisions and the editor's got to make the next decisions. And you're not going to be professional because you aren't, but I believe that The Stoutonia and WVSS are striving to do the best they can with the people they have and the money they have available.

Neither we nor they are deliberately trying to screw somebody over or do something illegal or anything like that. We're just surviving the best we can and it would be nice if I could put my 40 hours a week back into the radio station but my doctor says if you want to live you have to cut back.

I want to thank you for the generally good support The Stoutonia has given us, we appreciate it.

STOUTONIA: WHAT IS THE TRAINING PROGRAM FOR DISK JOCKEYS AT WVSS?

There's six slide tapes. One is on the Form 753 which is the little card they're supposed to get to show they know what they're doing when they're on the air.

Then there's two on how to evaluate themselves or others when they're on the air to see if they're doing a good job. That includes editorializing, that is, making nasty comments about things.

See, we cannot editorialize. Your newspaper can say whatever they want to about anybody and, unless it's libelous they can say what they want, right?

STOUTONIA: NO.

MATTHEWS: Sure you can. I'm talking about legally. When the DJs here he's not representing himself, he's representing the organization. A columnist can say whatever he wants to, it doesn't make any difference.

Our people are not columnists. They cannot say what they want. If they want to do an opinion, we have a way to get opinions on there. In all the years that I've been here nobody has come in to give an opinion. They've always been produced by the radio production class because it's one of the assignments.

Nobody has ever come in and said, "Hey, I want to do one." Every time we do one [editorial] on the air we say, "WVSS offers time and assistance to anyone," and that's required by law too, "to anyone who wants to present their viewpoint on the air." We've never had anybody do that, but it's offered.

But they're not supposed to make comments. In the past for example, the Chamber of Commerce spent $3,000 to bring a show here to kind of show that they liked the students and that kind of stuff. One of our DJs read the public service announcement for the thing and said, "I wouldn't spend 25 cents to go to that." That's editorializing.

We had another case you can probably print but we're not allowed to say on the air. One guy brought a friend of his in to read the weather. The kid couldn't get through it and said, "oh shit," on the air.

Now, his friend said [shit]. He didn't put it in the log. If anything like that happens you're supposed to write it down. He tried to hideout it.

I went up to Radio Shack and heard from Radio Shack, "Did you hear about the Sheriff going down to WVSS about somebody complaining about saying 'oh shit' on the air?" If somebody had then called the FCC and said, "Hey, somebody at WVSS said, 'oh shit,' on the air," they would have had to investigate because if you call the FCC and make any kind of a statement, they've got to investigate. That's what the bureaucracy is supposed to do. Nobody did, but we got a discrepancy report through the police and through the security and we had to take the guy off the air.

I took him off the air, not because "oh shit" went over the air but because he didn't report that that's what happened. Cause when you're on, if something happens you're supposed to report it.

If somebody had moved this [EBS] cabinet, that should have gone in the statement. So and so bumped the cabinet and we don't know what happened. The next morning I could have taken care of it, looked to see if all the wires were all alright. Instead of that, when this guy [FCC officer] pressed the button it [the EBS test signal] wasn't there and so we got a $2,000 fine that we [got] reduced.

Ace Matthews

Because they didn't do what they were asked to do.

STOUTONIA: IN REFERENCE TO TRAINING, TO WHAT EXTENT ARE PEOPLE AVAILABLE OR AT THE STUDENT'S DISPOSAL TO HELP THEM LEARN THEIR JOB WELL INITIALLY?

MATTHEWS: Eighty to 90 percent of the students who are on the air went through the radio production course. They're on the air four times and each time they do something else.

The first time they don't say anything. They just learn how to cue the records. The second time, they cue the records, they play a tape and they talk once. The third time, they play two tapes that they have made [and] talk between every other record. The fourth time [they talk] between every record. Then they can volunteer to be on the radio station.

This fall or spring we came up short on our schedule. So, some people got on the air without proper training. That was a mistake on the part of the management to do that, but they were desperate to fill their schedule.

They are thinking now that maybe their best bet is, if they can't fill the schedule, fill it from the afternoon towards the one o'clock shift rather than trying to fill it all and then putting somebody on who isn't really trained.

I thought they might have problems, and they did. But I will never say to you, "You can't do that." I want you to try it to find out what works and doesn't work and then I have to take the responsibility if something goes wrong. But I'm willing to let you have that you have that responsibility even though it means my butt in the end. I think that's the only way you learn.

They're just taking a couple people off the air now who are not fulfilling their obligations. They're going to run things around. They're probably going to drop part of that 11 to 1 [p.m.] part out if they can't get enough people.

STOUTONIA: WHAT CREATES THE PROBLEMS?

MATTHEWS: One of the problems I think why we have operational errors is that it's a week between the time you're on the air and the next time you're on the air and you can forget things. If you were on [the air] every day that would be different.

Another thing, we've got over 100 people using this equipment each week. We have put things over it [the board] so they can't touch things they shouldn't. We have put little things in here [on the board] so they can't switch things they shouldn't. And they still come along and take these out and throw the switches anyhow.

When you have more than 100 people using the equipment every week, it's difficult. Now, these recorders are only four or five years old. This thing has been beaten to death and we keep putting reminders in [and] signs. I would like to have none of these [signs] in here. I would like them to remember.

The Bottom Line

Vortex of politics buzzes campus

Rich Brueckner

It was the worst of times. The once thriving community was transformed into a barren wasteland known as The Forbidden Zone. All the bars had been wrecked so I spent most of my time looking for beer. I f only I had spoken out to save our city before it was too late.

I had ignored the power of the press to save us from ourselves. I laughed when they called "NO" a big word. "Who cares?" I said, "For God's sakes, we're at war, aren't we?"

Some people are undoubtedly more concerned about the role of The Stoutonia in vote persuasion than others. The malaise of political atmosphere is spawning some intense rhetoric these days....

"Yo — wordy mutant, are you planning on writing something friendly?"

"No way 'ay. Radiation has made me an enemy of civilization!"

To make matters worse, politics really isn't very civilized. One SSA candidate even went so far as to call politics "dirty business."

One would have to wonder what prompts people to the sordid pursuit of SSA presidency. Last year it probably started with a caped figure saying, "I'm your father, JoAnn; turn over to the dark side of the force — you knob!"

The SSA presidency debate ran smoother than the Menomonie City Council forum. Well, at least the microphones worked the whole time even though the cords were too short. I would also like to thank Miss Prange for not repeating her infamous "What kind of an animal would you be?" question to the City Council candidates.

The campaign posters that are blanketing our bulletin boards have the makings for David Letterman's "Hometown News." One person is "sincerly" running for president of the Stout Student "Assosiation."

One person running for vice president of legislative affairs says, "Let experience show you success." What "experience" is at the top of her list? It's none other than the prestigious position of Aluminum Can Crush Committee Chairperson. Hell, that's good enough for me!

The same poster also lists her as being the Secretary/Treasure of Advanced Design. I don't know if this is a typing error or a Freudian slip.

The violation of campaign rules this year has been described as rampant. Posters have to be numbered. Apparently this is beyond the ciphering capabilities of some of the candidates.

These posters can't be put just anywhere. Posting in bathroom stalls is strictly forbidden.

Not to worry, none of the rules are really enforced anyway. This fact has not deterred the ever-popular political trend of "tattling" on your opponent.

Don't doubt for a minute that there are some important issues facing winners of these elections. The proposed mall area is going to be a priority item. The truth of the matter is that the people who really run this place are going to close 4th Street whether we like it or not; no one else is going to have squat to say to say about it.

The "pond" that they are proposing is intriguing. I'm sure that students will enthusiastically help to enrich this body of water with all kinds of wildlife such as carp, crayfish, and bullheads. Restocking will have to be constant since the detergent people will dump in the fountain will kill everything.

The positive effect of this elaborate puddle will not be limited to its aesthetics. Pond scum will now have a place to congregate besides the front of Lee's Drug Store on Friday nights.

Another political issue is SSA's membership in United Council. Now there's an effective body. $10,000.00 of our student fees are diverted to UC so they can do things like whine at Tony Earl when he doesn't read UC members applications for student regent.

Earl is no dummy. He knows when an organization is just pissing in the wind.

UC sent the Board of Regents a bunch of tuition-hike alternatives. If any of the regents appear to have a pained look on their faces, it's because these ideas were printed on courser material than the toilet paper in the Capitol Building.

UC will continue to do whatever they can do if Stout pulls out. Eau Claire and LaCrosse have found better ways to use their money. Students have a great opportunity to make themselves heard on this referendum. Precedent has been set. Man has been pulling out of UCs for thousands of years.

The biggest question facing newly elected SSA officials will be the same one I kept asking myself all year as an off-campus senator; "Why am I here?"

The saying goes that, "Hosers who don't vote shouldn't bitch." Whether "NO" or "YES" is a bigger word depends on making an effort. Let's get out there and exercise the democracy were so willing to kill for. The power of the Force compels you.

Elections

The candidates agreed that bringing in new industries would help to boost city revenues. Tax breaks for these new industries were suggested by Hall and Emmert. The new industrial park and airport were cited as being instrumental in bringing this about.

Wood, however, said that the airport was bought with city money to be used solely by the "rich" which he equated with Save our City. He was upset about Menomonie's failure to complete a convention center deal since such a complex is essential to attracting industry.

All the candidates said that community/university relations were improving and that they would support legislation to limit security deposits to one month's rent.

The fact that Menomonie does not take bids when it buys road equipment is something that needs to be changed, according to Schroeder. He also stated that getting some things on the council agenda is difficult because the City Manager sets the agenda.

Rockwell said that he is not a politician and that he is running to serve his city. He supports the current form of government in preference to one in which "eighteen year-olds who have been here ten days elect a mayor."

Martinson, a banker, suggested re-financing the city's debt with bonds of a lower interest rate than the city is currently paying. Martinson said that there is no one who hasn't benefited from the City Manager system.

Wagner said that his door is open to hear students concerns. He said that he would not show favoritism but that he would make sure students would have a voice in the City Council. He would also work to make it easier to get picnic licenses for things like the ice-ball tournaments.

Hall said that he has no axe to grind and that he supports the idea of recycling to reduce landfill dumping. He feels that people have not made their voices heard by failing to come to council meetings.

Some audience members complained about not being able to hear what was going on due to a faulty sound system in the Crystal Ballroom.

"Otherwise, I think the forum went off pretty well," sighed Vice President of Legislative Affairs Chuck Keller. "Bringing so many residents in to see the new Student Center will help to improve community relations."

The forum was sponsored by SSA, the League of Women Voters, and the American Association of College Women. Keller expressed his gratitude towards all the candidates and those who helped to make the forum a success.

Feedback on mall proposal is heard

Tim Hopkins
News Editor

The Campus Grounds and Facilities Committee was asked to beware of any UW-Stout liability for any accidents that might occur in the proposed pedestrian mall south of the Memorial Student Center. The Committee met Thursday March 20 in the Student Center to review the response by the campus community to the model of the mall displayed in the Cobblestone Court.

The committee received more than 50 written responses to the mall proposal and expressed their pleasure at the input they received while they were disappointed by the fact that only one student showed up for the hearing.

Patrick Gallagher described himself as a concerned student as he began to evaluate the mall design as developed by Ann Huhn, Theresa Lembezeder and Scott Micoley in an independent study project.

Gallagher recognized that, "Someone did some good planning." He was concerned that the plan not be allowed to fall by the wayside. Gallagher liked the emphasis on creating a natural setting in the mall. "I think it's something that we need on this campus," Gallagher said.

Gallagher wanted to make sure that the plan would not include the removal of the older trees in the area only to be replaced by small trees. Assistant Chancellor Wesley Sommers answered Gallagher's question saying that university policy was to plant replacement trees. Sommers acknowledged that, "You can't replace some extremely large ones but they will be mature, guaranteed trees. They won't be little."

> I would be concerned about the liability of having a pool there.
> —Garold Buckley Director of Protective Services

Gallagher said he was impressed by the way the students had planned for traffic flow around the mall in their design.

The Director of Protective Services, Garold Buckley told the committee, "I would be concerned about the liability of having that pool there." Buckley was referring mall that would be 12 to 18 inches deep. One level would be five feet above the other and both levels would be connected by a small waterfall.

Buckley said he did not want to discourage the making of plans on the mall but he wanted to make sure that liability risks be considered about the pond. "I'm just saying, think of it from a risk management stand point," he said. "I know this area is a highly vandalized area to start with and I'd be concerned about putting a swimming pool in there."

Buckley said he heard students reviewing the display saying wouldn't it be great to put detergent into the pool. He also predicted that carp would regularly end up in the pool.

Tracy Lea Landis challenged Buckley's remarks about students intended vandalism of the pawn when she said, "I believe I was there when you were and these remarks werre expressed as a concern because they had seen that happen in Minneapolis or wherever they were from.

Buckley wanted to know more about the planned information kiosk in the mall. He said that in past experiences "there ended up a lot of literature being scattered all over. It was very unsightly."
to the small two-level pond in the Committee member Professor James Mc Cormick told Buckley, "One could assume that it [the information kiosk] might have some of the qualities that you find in the fieldhouse where you have information [centers.]

Buckley endorsed the proposal to close Fourth St. "I know you have Fourth St. closed which is fine with me because I think it's a hazard anyway." Apparently any mall plans could not include the closing of Third St. because it is needed as an emergency route through campus.

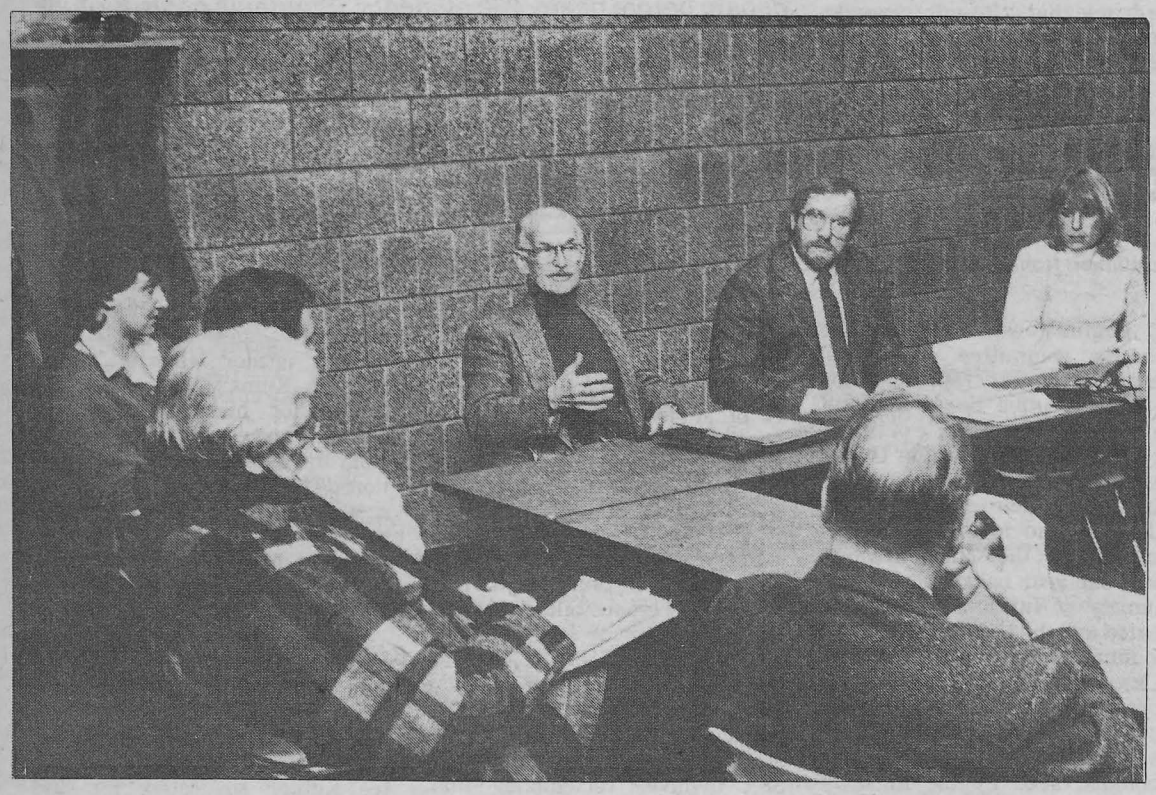
No parking could be allowed on the west side of Third St. either because of communications cables and steam lines underneath that area. Buckley asked that any mall plans consider the trees at the north end of Jarvis Hall. He didn't want the greenery in the area replaced with cement.

Tracy Lea Landis said that she was aware of students' concerns about the proposed cost for this mall as students face the upcoming tuition increase. Landis was told that if approved, the mall project would not cost the students a penney since all the money would be raised from the sale of State bonds.

Sommers said that the best way to view the mall proposal was in the terms of a trade off involving the cost of improving the campus. He said that estimates right now indicate a construction cost of $500,000 for tha mall.

Professor Mc Cormick endorsed the mall proposal saying, "To me it probably would save money. It really is a hole. You can't even drive through there half the time."

The committee stressed that mall plans were still in the proposal stage and they asked to hear more from students concerning their views on the proposal.



Campus Grounds and Facilities Committee members listened to Assistant Chancellor Wesley Sommers discuss the possible trade offs to consider in the pedestrian mall proposal. Committee chairman Robert Meier is seated to the left of Sommers. (Stoutonia photo by Brad Kautzer)

tionship develop between the leaders of the three largest organizations on campus, the SSA, IRHC and the University Student Senate. Landis agreed and added, "That working together is what works to benefit students." Nelson said that he would gain an awareness of what each group's duties and issues are. Fredrickson said it was his intent to attend Hall Council meetings to gain an awareness of the residence hall needs.

Tim Hopkins, The Stoutonia news editor, asked the candidates,"How do you intend to promote better relations between the city of Menomonie and the UW-

I feel I can build bridges between organizations by maintaining good relations between the leaders.

—Paul D. Nelson SSA presidential candidate

Stout community?'' Landis answered by saying that she'd like to keep ties open with the City Council and maintain good relations so our needs are met. Nelson said he believes that the S.S.A. president acts as direct liaison between the city and the school, and therefore his main objective is to maintain his positive relationships with influential city leaders, such as the chief of police and the district attorney. Fredrickson said he'd communicate with the public through polls and surveys to become aware of their opinions. McAlees said she believes that the key is communication, and concluded by saying, "We have to be able to work with and for each other."

Questions concerning the needs and interactions of international and minority students were asked by Linda Lim and Joe Torres. Nelson believed that the best policy was to go to their group leaders to make them more aware of their roles as students. He also advocated a volunteer tutoring program to help them in areas of acedemic difficulty. Fredrickson's key thoughts were increasing understanding and education to help minority students become more involved. He would also like to see more students become more aware of their different cultures.

McAlees, a member of the International Relations Club, said that people were afraid of the unknown and that she would strive to increase the number of activities that help minority students interact with campus life. Landis replied by saying that she felt diversity is a high S.S.A. priority and that she felt the SSA needed to reach out to others rather than waiting for them to ask for help.

Lim also asked the candidates what major changes they would like to make on the UW-Stout campus. Frederickson answered by saying that he would like to see the mall proposal pass through in order to beautify the campus and entice businesses to come into Menomonie. McAlees said her major objective would involve "bringing the students back into government through every avenue possible.'' Landis said, "She would like to let students know how to actualize their ideas, so their views don't turn into impotent cynicism." Nelson said his major goal was to implement corporate sponsorship, helping groups to be less financially dependent on the SSA.

Hopkins asked the candidates for their view on the role of liberal arts as it might be affected by the use of cooperative programming. Nelson, noting his activities in the liberal arts, believed that it helped create a well-rounded person. Frederickson, a Studio Arts major, said he agreed that Liberal Arts helps build a well-rounded individual, and that cuts in Liberal Arts funding in the past were hasty. McAlees agreed with Fredrickson that liberal was a needed ingredient in producing the well-rounded student.Landis said that Liberal Arts helps students learn how to project new ideas onto old problems.

Peuse asked the candidates to describe their leadership style. Nelson described himself as a "chairman of the board" leader and believes in dealing with four goals at a time. Frederickson desribed himself as liking to do things himself, but added that he was learning how to delegate authority. McAlees called herself a diverse leader, saying that she used both democratic and autocratic approaches depending on the people and the situation involved. Landis felt that her style of leadership could be called M.B.W.A. leadership- "managing by wandering around."

Peuse also asked the candidates what they felt was their most important quality was. Landis replied, "I feel I can build bridges between organizations by maintaining good relations between the leaders." Nelson felt that his best qualities were his open-mindedness and flexibility. He described himself as a utopian optimist and explified this by saying, "If I were to go home and find a pile of manure in his living room, he would look for a pony underneath." Frederickson felt his strong point was "his ability to communicate and his convictions to do a good job." McAlees felt her best qualifications were her open-mindedness and willingness to work with others. She cited her involvement in various campus organizations to back up statement.

We have to be able to work with and for each other —

—Sands McAlees SSA presidential candidate

In his closing statement, Nelson said that he would "break the ice'' by working to facilitate corporate sponsorship of campus organizations so these organizations would have a funding alternative to the SSA. He also supported continued funding for the liberal arts and cooperative programming, believing that it "would help bring students together.''

Landis closed by emphasizing two main points. She stressed the advantage of obtaining diversity of viewpoints in student government by drawing people into the decision-making process, and the SSA should get more involved in outreach to the students by doing work outside of SSA meetings and having the minutes available swiftly.

McAlees reiterated her opening statement saying she was the most qualified candidate. She said her two years experience in the SSA has familiarized her with the duties and responsibilities of the position. Once again, she stressed her desire to return students to government.

Fredrickson closed by saying that his five years experience as a student here at UW-Stout and his involvement in the community qualified him for the SSA presidency. He added that he was concerned for students and their involvement on campus.

SSA president JoAnn Prange said she was pleased by the student turnout for the debate. She said of the debate that, "It really gives the students a realistic view of the candidates.''

UC committees, including the minority committee. Therefore, the lack of minority representation on the executive board at Stout leaves a hole in the fabric of the effective organization of the United Council.

In the past, there were representations by the minority students community at the Council at Stout. About one year back the seat of a Minority Affairs Senator was created and the University has had two minority Senators since then.

The Minority Affairs Senator represents the interests of the minority students community at the Student Senate. The various problems faced by the minority students, their suggestions and requests are thus brought on the table and the matter discussed and solved. The seat offers a powerful platform of redress for the minority community.

SSA President JoAnn Prange says the SSA is concerned about the lack of a Minority Affairs Senator on the SSA. "It becomes very difficult for the U.S.S to represent minority interests and needs when we do not have a Minority Affairs Senator. We need to hear the minority voice and I would hope that we would be viewed as a very receptive government body to the minority needs and demands.''

Prange believes the lack of a Minority Affairs Senator is because the minority students who would be interested in the position are too busy and involved either in a job or with their studies or with extracurricular activities.

Prange also believes that those who might be interested in the Minority Affairs senate post may suffer from a lack of confidence in their ability to represent the elements of the minority community of students at Stout. This is because the minority group is so multi-faceted and the person has to represent not just one group but five groups in an actual sense.

Patsy Barnes, the Ethnic Services counselor, thinks the SSA has a special responsibility to reach out to the minority student groups and inform them of the need for representation in the USS by a Minority Affairs Senator who will participate as well in the UC.

Barnes said the first step for the SSA involves recognizing that, "Most of the minority students come here having no knowledge of the university structure.'' Barnes asked," How could anyone expect them to know the existence of minority representation and the Senator position at the Student Senate?''

She felt that The Stoutonia was an excellent avenue to inform the minorities of the various activities at Stout including the student government. "If the SSA is genuinely interested in getting minority representation, they must inform the various minority organizations on campus like the Rainbow, International Relations Club, Latin Network, Nigerian Students Association, the Hmong Club etc. having substantial minority representation," Barnes said.

She said that the representatives of the SSA should visit these organizations at least once a semester and inform them about the various activities and the need for minority representation at Stout.

When former Minority Affairs Senator Kumar was asked the reason for his resignation, he quickly answered "No support from the other minority organizations." He suggested that the SSA should make it mandatory for the minority organizations which it funds to nominate two or three members for a Standing Minority Committee.

These Standing Minority Committee members would become the working members for the minorities in the SSA. A Minority Affairs Senator could then be chosen from this standing committee Kumar suggested. He says there is a need for more funding and more campus wide publicity aimed at increasing the awareness amongst the minority community of the need for their reprersentation on SSA.

"The SSA and I have approached many minority organizations on campus and people concerned with such minority organization, but not one has been helpful in coordinating with the minority affairs work," Kumar said. He said it is time that the minority groups work with each other and cooperate with the SSA and bring an end to the politics being played by some of these groups.

From this overview of minority affairs at Stout there is concern in the SSA and Ethnic Services about the need to improve minority representation in the student government. It appears that input from any and all sides about how to solve the problem would be welcomed.

On April 2-3, 1986 four candiates will be seeking election as the President of the Stout Student Association. The responsibilities of this position involve acting as a chair to the University Student Senate and as a liaison between students, faculty/academic staff, administration, and the Menomonie community. The president also has veto power over legislative division. The president usually holds weekly meetings with the Chancellor, the President of the Faculty Senate, community members, plus sits on various committees to stay informed on issues concerning the students.

The president is the spokesperson for the Student Senate at meetings, functions, and ceremonies. The president is also responsible for overseeing the executive budget of the University Student Senate.

The following information has been provided to The Stoutonia by each of the SSA presidential candidates .

SSA hears Student Regent talk about next year's tuition increase

Kelly Cohorst
News Reporter

The Stout Student Association (SSA) opened its Tuesday night meeting with the Student Regent John Schenian speaking at Open Forum. Schenian was appointed to be the Student Regent this year by Governor Anthony Earl. He is visiting many UW Schools. He spent his day touring and visiting with people at UW-Stout.

Schenian is currently a full time student at UW-Madison and he has already earned an Engineering degree and he is currently studying to earn his Law degree at Madison. The Student Regent is a volunteer job and although Schenien is going to school he still has to attend meetings and seminars.

He addressed a wide variety of topics ranging from the UW 1987-89 budget proposal which is to be in by September, to the transfer of credits from one academic institution to another.

One of the highlights was the proposed new plan tuition plan. Schenian explained that the money from the budget has to come from somewhere, Schenien brought up that "the cut could be absorbed by the maintenance" of the schools and other budgets with in the university system.

In reference to SSA Presidential candidate debates, Joann Prange said "The debates went very well on Monday, all of the candidates were very good." She shared with the congress the three questions that she gave the candidates. Prange encouraged the students to vote on April 2-3.

Vic Sundvall, the Administrative Assistant, also talked about policies concerning write-in votes for the Presidential elections. He said that there was a question of whether there were write-in votes. His comment was, all write-ins will be taken care of at the computer terminal across from the UW-bookstore and that the computer will not accept any write-ins so all write-ins will have to be done by hand at the Student Center Polls.

Chuck Keller, Vice President of Legislative Affairs, reported on the controversial issue of the City Manager referendum. He said that the forum that met on Monday evening went well and that the main reason for the forum was to to inform the students and the city residents of the seven candidates who are running for the city council.

Mike Wagner spoke at the City Council candidate open forum about his trials as "The Lonely One." He told of a discussion with a voter who wasn't pleased by the fact Wagner was a tavern owner. Wagner told the voter he was also a lawyer. The voter asked, "What's the difference between a dead skunk in the middle of the road and a dead lawyer." Wagner said he didn't know. The voter responded, "There are skid marks in front of a dead skunk."

Travel study program

Judy Herr, director of UW-Stout's Child and Family Study Center, will lead a travel and study program titled "Early Childhood Education in Britain," June 30 to July 11, 1986.

Cost of the program is $1,589 for two undergraduate credits or $1,689 for graduate credits. Fees include air transportation, departing from and returning to Minneapolis, rooms, some meals and most travel in Great Britain

Visits to nursery training colleges in London, England and Edinburgh, Scotland, will provide participants with an understanding of current thinking among British early childhood educators.

Reservation forms for the program and a deposit check of $200 per person made payable to the university should be sent to Herr, UW-Stout, Menomonie, WI 54751.

Student lobby organizes

To combat recent attacks on their rights, students from around the state have united to form ED PAC, an educational organization designed to safeguard the interests of students in the political process.

ED PAC will serve as a source of financial support to candidates for public office and other individuals or groups promoting the student agenda. ED PAC will also be involved in lobbying and organizing and educating citizens on the need for support of higher education in Wisconsin.

In the upcoming legislative elections, ED PAC will target specific legislators who have misrepresented their student constituency. In addition, ED PAC plans to advocate a program of lower educational costs, more and better financial aid, increased shared governance and of keeping the door to higher education open for low income, minority and non-traditional students.

Chamber removes gambling devices to comply with raffle regulations

Beth Reid
News Reporter

The recent cancellation of Milnes Vegas Night has caused the Menomonie Area Chamber of Commerce to become more aware of the legal technicalities involved in sponsoring their First Annual Spring Fling. The event, which originally was to include a roulette wheel and a chug-a-lug game, had to be slightly changed in order to comply with the state statute.

"Basically, we only had to change the means of giving the prizes away," Duane Bauer, Executive Director of the Chamber of Commerce said. "We eliminated the roulette wheel, which was to be used to select winners and we eliminated the chug-a-lug, which is a dice game. Because these two games use types of gambling apparatus, they are considered illegal." The prizes will now be given away by means of two types of raffles.

In order to have the raffles, the Chamber had to obtain two types of licenses which are required by the state of Wisconsin. The regular raffle license is used for a raffle in which a single drawing for a prize is held on a specified date after the sale of the ticket has been completed. "The $5 tickets we are selling gets the person in the door," Bauer said, "gives him a meal, a band and a chance to win a $100 door prize."

With the regular raffle license, the tickets must be sold within 180 days of the drawing. The ticket must include the license number, the name and address of the organization sponsoring the raffle, when and where the drawing is to be held and the time of the drawing. "An organization can have up to five regular raffles per year," Bauer said, "this will be our second one."

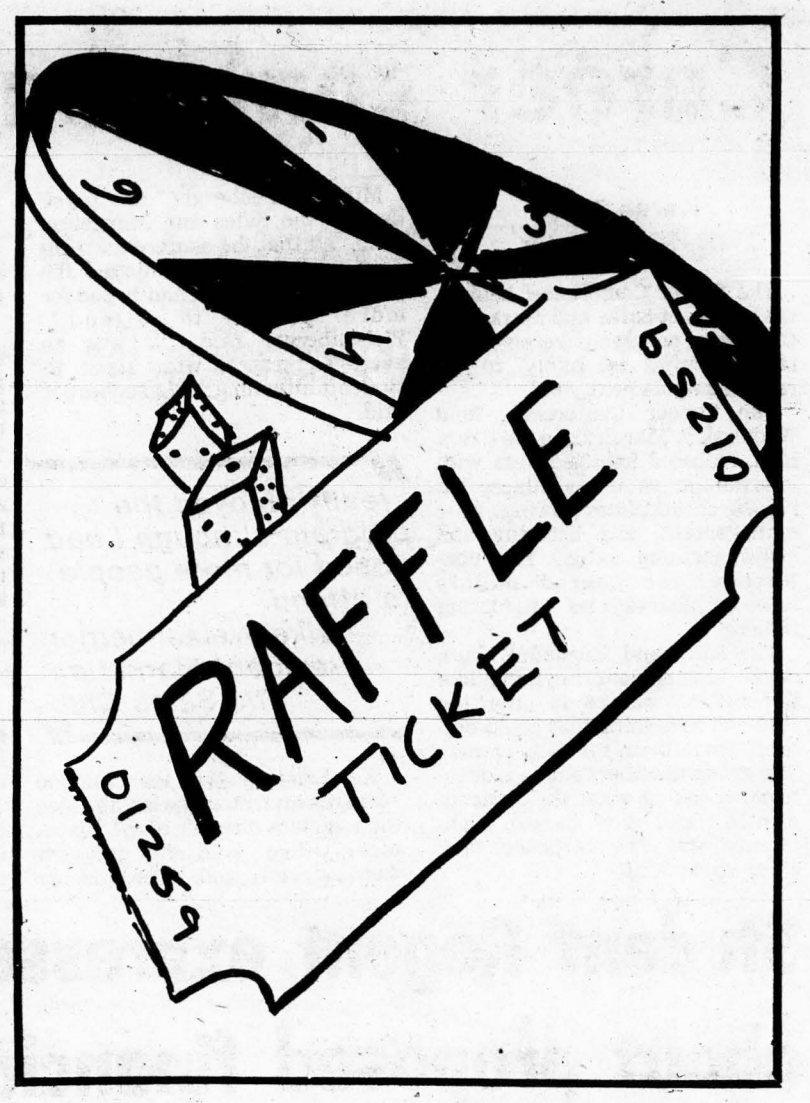
Along with the purchase of the raffle license, the organization must also comply with a few other regulations. Raffle ticket prices may not exceed $5 and the organization must also comp ete an annual report on every raffle held and the number of tickets sold. "We are being extra cautious to be sure that everything is legal," Bauer said, "so we have sent letters to the police department and the D.A.'s office to assure them that we have taken the neccessary steps."

Besides the regular raffle, the Chamber will also be having a special raffle, which requires a different type of license." The special raffle allows the organization to sell tickets only on the day of the drawing. "Once the people get into the Armory, we will be selling separate tickets," Bauer said. "These will be used for drawings for stuffed animals and other prizes. For these prizes, the person must be present to win, whereas with the $100 drawing, the person doesn't have to be there to win."

The special raffle license is good for one year and an organization may hold one special raffle per week. All of the rules regarding a regular raffle also apply to the special raffle.

"We were sorry that the Vegas Night was cancelled," Bauer said, "because it was for an excellent cause. But I'm glad we were able to find a way to alter things so that we were still able to have the Spring Fling. The Vegas Night made us think more about the gray areas and how often we accept the gray areas as being right, when many times they are not acceptable."

The chamber hopes that Milnes will try to find a way to continue the Vegas Night tradition. "We are going to be meeting with Representative Dick Schumacher," Bauer said, "to attempt to make these 'Vegas Nights' legal in the future for charitable non-profit organizations."



Guidance course teaches students effective methods of parenting

Shelly Flaherty
Contributing Writer

Eighty to ninety percent of all people will be parents one day. Of this percentage, many are unprepared to take on the responsibility of becoming a parent. Being a parent is a job, and like any job it requires training.

Through the child guidance course (212-264) offered here at Stout you can become prepared for parenting and learn how to deal effectively with children. "When you graduate, you come out prepared for a profession, but you are not trained to be a parent," said Dr. Marian Marion, Child Guidance instructor. Dr. Marion has also written the textbook, "Guidance Of Young Children," which is used in the course. According to Dr. Marion, "parenting is like a job, you don't go to work without experience, therefore you shouldn't parent without experience or the proper training, yet many do."

The Child Guidance course deals with characteristics of children, teaching children how to obey, how to develop self control and a positive self esteem. It also covers topics such as the affects television has on children, the overly aggresive child and how to deal with them, as well as many others.

"Child Guidance is definitely my favorite course to teach," Dr. Jeanette Coufal said, "however, I am not teaching the course this semester." She feels the material covered in the course is valuable for everyone.

"I feel the Child Guidance course helped me learn how to deal with children effectively. I learned many things that will help me when I become a parent," Lisa Reimann, a junior majoring in child development and family life (CDFL) said. "The thing that comes to my mind first about the course was learning the difference between punishment and discipline, before the class I always thought they were the same thing," Reimann added.

> When you graduate, you come out prepared for a profession, but you are not trained to be a parent.
> —Dr. Marion Marion
> Child Guidance Instructor

Disciplining a young child can often times be a tedious job. "Every child is an individual, and should be treated as such; however, no child should ever be hit," Dr. Marion explained. Many people don't know how to deal with their children, and abuse and neglect are their only answers. The Child Guidance course offers alternative methods of discipline. "You need to let the child know when they are good, a child's feelings are important. Consistant positive reinforcement is needed," Dr. Coufal said.

The course also points out that you, the parent, are a model for your child. "It is important to practice what you preach, a child is very likely to get confused if you do something that you have told them not to do," Dr. Coufal said.

Today, with so many families having both parents working, there exists some need for child care. Guidance is needed so you know where to take your child. According to Dr. Coufal, "Child care is not an easy issue to answer when both parents work, you can't say what is the best because each situation is different." The course does help you learn how to pick out the proper day care center as well as care providers. Since there are many families with both parents working, men are becoming more involved in raising their children. Men are encouraged to enroll in the child guidance course.

The course not only improves your child rearing skills, but it makes you look at yourself and examine your values as well. Through the course you learn about yourself, your ideas, opinions and values.

The course is primarily geared for CDFL or early childhood education majors, but anyone is encouraged to take it. "If you took Individual and Family Relaticns and enjoyed it, then you should consider taking the Child Guidance class," Dr. Coufal said. "Hopefully another Child Guidance course will be available to other majors that aren't required to take the course, but until then, I encourage everyone to enroll in this one," Dr. Marion said

Career conference popularly received

Karen Smith
News Reporter

The Career Conference, held by the UW-Stout Sales and Marketing Club was popularly received by students and is likely to be repeated again next year.

The Career Conference, held Wednesday, March 29, in the Great Hall, featured four speakers with information on dress ethics, job reasearch and interviewing, time management, and listening and communication skills. The conference was geared mainly towards juniors and graduating seniors.

The Sales and Marketing Club, never having done anything like this before, wanted to offer the students something that could better prepare them for their career. The group members made a questionaire asking what the students wanted, and the Career Conference was the response they came up with.

Mike Weisenberger, the president of the Sales and Marketing Club, felt that the conference went very well. "I really enjoyed the program, although I had hoped for more people to attend," Weisenberger said. "It was an average turnout, with about 85 students attending," Weisenberger said.

> I really enjoyed the program although I had hoped for more people to attend.
> —Mike Weisenberger President Marketing and Sales Club

Ken Erickson, the speaker on job research and interviewing and also the assistant director of the Placement Office, said the program went extremly well. "The students who put it on did an admirable job," Erickson said. "It really was a worthwhile effort." Erickson also mentioned the croud was more than he anticipated.

Ingrid Seversen, who attended the conference, was equally impressed. "Although much of the information I already knew, it's nice to brush up on it," Seversen said. "It was a reminder that made me aware of the material again." Although some the material was a repeat for her, Severen said that she never found it boreing. "The material was beneficial to anyone, know matter what major. You can never know enough about getting out into your career and becoming successful," Seversen said.

The Sales and Marketing Club has 27 members and the group focuses on handling things using a marketing startegy. They meet Tuesday mights in the Northwoods Room of the Memorial Student Center. They took this opportunity to welcome students in any major.

Student Regent expresses concern about proposed financial aid cuts

Tim Hopkins
News Editor

In his first formal appearance at UW-Stout, Student Regent John Schenian spoke on the threat of proposed financial aid cuts and the need for students to concern themselves with the planning of the state budget currently taking place for the next biennium.

Before his interview Tuesday afternoon, Chancellor Swanson helped familiarize Schenian with Stout as they completed a three-hour tour of the campus. Schenian said the tour emphasized to him the unique mission Stout has in the UW-System.

In an afternoon interview Schenian discussed the importance of the Regent's recent stand against proposed cuts in financial which are antincipated to take affect with the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act.

Schenian introduced this motion to the regents which was only amended to eliminate a portion that called for a cut in defense spending.

Schenian said the motion's purpose resulted from his concern that Gramm-Rudman could mean up to a 43 percent cut in financial aid to students. "We as people in the UW-System should express our opinion of what effect that would have," Schenian said. He was unsure of the impact the motion will have as he said, "I don't know what the net effect is going to be."

On the planning for the Wisconsin 1987-89 biennium budget Schenian warned that, "Unless students get directly involved right now they will lose the opportunity to be involved in important decision making that effects them."

Schenian said the regents recognize the need to facilitate the transfer of credits between UW-System schools. There is no easy solution to the problem because each professor must have the right to determine what prerequisites are necessary for the student to take his/her class.

Schenian said that whenever the need for budget cuts in the system is brought up, a natural sort of alarm occurs about the potential closing of the Center Universities. He said the regents have never considered such a move because, "You're not saving that much by shutting down schools."

Art instructor, Gamache, defines abstract and figurative sculpture

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

"Sculpturing" according to Webster's New World Dictionary means "to cut, to carve, and to chisel." To be sure, this art form is easier said than done.

David Gamache is an Associate Professor in the Art Department at UW-Stout. He said, "Sculpture is the most difficult course to teach."

Sculpture according to Gamache is unobvious. "It is one of those subtle arts in terms of how to attack a problem." Abstract sculpture is easier to teach than figurative.

"Abstract stuff submits to design principles much more readily. The more figurative you go, the less design conscious you can be. To get a student to function in the perimeters of that subtilty is difficult. They really have to be hungry."

Gamache instructs not only sculpture but fundamentals of design, fashion illustration and three dimensional design as well. In his studio he sculpts an average of 20 hours a week.

When Gamache started college at the University of Massachusetts, he majored in Science. Due to a death in his family, he dropped out of school and read philosophy for nine months.

"Strangely enough, the upshot of reading philosophy, in my subjective interpretation, was that philosophers were saying one of two things. Human beings should be philosophers or artists. I decided to look into becoming an artist," said Gamache.

Gamache's particular interest in sculpture was the result of a television program about the Boston Art Festival. He said, "The next day I caught a train to Boston, strolled around to look at the sculptures and thought it was the most wonderful stuff I'd ever seen in my life." Gamache went off to art school with the idea of becoming a sculptor.

I'm content to sculpture then store it away, rather than peddle it.
—Alan Gamache

Before entering art school Gamache never had sculptured. "I found it very interesting. A part of my brain had been laying dormant for about 21 years," he said. Once he was invited to look upon design principles, art came naturally to him.

At the Rhode Island School of Design, Gamache did his undergraduate work. He began sculpturing abstract pieces. In graduate school in New Orleans, he shifted back and forth between abstract and figurative sculpture. Now he works solely on figurative pieces.

This artist has shown his work in a number of shows but has pulled back recently. He said, "I'm surprised when somebody wants the stuff. It's my personal research. I'm content to sculpture then store it away, rather than peddle it."

Gamache has taught at Stout for 19 years. According to him life in Menomonie has been fine. Since living here he has picked up on another art and that is the art of bird watching.

He said, "The only thing that is not fine about Menomonie is that if one really is interested in establishing a professional reputation, this is a horrible place from which to do it." If one wants that reputation, New York is the place to be.

Over Gamache's years at Stout, he has seen the massive shift in fine art studies. He said, "Ten years ago there were slews of fine art students, now there are 20 at the most." The job market for art closed in the early 1970's.

According to Gamache the country has had an implied system of taking care of its artists which began around World War II. Employment projects supported much of the creative population. Once the war and these projects ended, the University System absorbed artists.

Artists were hired to teach in newly formed art, music, theater, and writing departments. Now this system has run its course. Gamache said, "Now people that major in painting and sculpture have few options."

Area artists display talent at regional art exhibition amalgamated works offered by artists who live in the Western Wisconsin Region. While it may not be the first runner-up to the Library of Congress on the grandeur meter, the library is an honorably busy and good-looking place.

First looks in the lobby lead my glance to a large painting which I think was titled "Berries in Light." I say 'I think,' because the painting was displayed on the short-wall of the second-floor, which overlooked the lobby, and there was no visible name with the painting from where I stood. This seemed to be an irreconcilable distance upward to savor a painting.

The berry painting had the initial flavor of a nice, pretty reproduction of a nice sweet still-life. The black frame seemed to enhance that impression. The phrase "amalgamated art" ran across my mental viewmaster.

Rapidly, first impressions gave way to mixed impressions, for which I was grateful. Modern art had done away with strawberries in light, I thought. Dismissing my vague expectations, I knew this was not to be a thoroughly modern milieu.

After seeing the rest of the pieces that were likewise displayed at great heights, I knew that there may have been nebulous guidelines for acceptance, and a number of tastes at play in selection.

Nowhere was this more evident than in the quizzical selections of prize winners. Upstairs I ran across a charming but out-of-place, children's book illustration called "Night Patrol." Good heavens, I thought, in a book for kids, this might last forever as a cherished memory.

But as fine art goes, this is hack... ptuey. It was sweeter than strawberries in season and the medium was handled with minimal skill. It was the weakness in the density of the black that really got to me. It won a catch-all special mention.

So did the electrified, modified kitsch, plastic "gizmo-istic" piece next to it, "Tutti Fruitti." I think the judge who made the prize selections, Dan Devitt, wanted to commend the extremes in regional creativity. That is a dangerous idea.

The First Place and the Best of Show prizes also went to pieces that defy the laws of gravity, i.e. serious art done with a straight face.

The Best of Show was created by Paul Cyr. It was an acrylic and wood combination that, in its way, depicted a hand mirror and a projecting razor blade that apparently stuck in the flesh of a stubbly throat. It had some interesting use of materials until it got to rendering the reflected throat. This portion lacked a glassy or fleshy feel equal to the other textural impressions. The razor blade was a nice bit, however.

First Prize honors went to Anders Shafer's "Imaginary Portrait of Joe E. Penner." The style of this work fell somewhere between a magazine illustration for a short story, James Ensor's social sarcasm, and Howdy Doody. Three-legged approaches stand better for milking stools.

The artists of UW-Stout made an impressive showing, if not merely in numbers. Stout students, professors and former students counted for about 28 of the 70 artists chosen.

Third Prize was shared by two Stout art instructors, Jerry Bowker, for his "Last Light," and Paul Delong, for "Wave."

Bowker's dark subtle work was recently on view in the faculty show at Furlong Gallery. The work is fortunately displayed on the landing between the two floors, which allowed for closer inspection.

Delong's piece, though well-lit, was slightly interferred with by a vibrant, oceanic red sculpture created by Paula Gorski which hung about six feet in front of it. Display space was a problem in the library. It was not designed to exhibit this many varied pieces at one time. That is not a fault.

One piece that suffered from display limitations was Stout instructor, William Schulman's "Giacometti Pose."

Besides being hung eight miles high where intricasies were lost, a lot of the remaining image was washed out due to the glare of the skylights on the glass. This was unfortunate because the weakened image then had to compete with the less-than-serene woodgrain pattern of the wall.

The piece I preferred most in the Tuesday, at Furlong Gallery, was the opening of a show consisting of ceramic sculptures and working drawings. The artist responsible for these works is Mary Shannon Will, currently living in Canada.

Gallery curator, Eddie Wong is pleased to be presenting the show. Wong commented, "I like what I've seen." Will's husband, George Will, is a former Stout art instructor. This is how Will's talent came to the attention of Wong.

Will is a professional artist. Most of her work is ceramic sculpture although she has done paintings, prints, and drawings. The highlight of the show is probably the ceramic sculptures.

The show at Furlong will consist mainly be of these ceramic sculptures. Her work has appeared in several shows throughout western Canada. In a gallery publication at the Southern Alberta Art Gallery, in an article by Victoria Baster, Will's works are described as, "Poised compositions were built out of a vocabulary of forms of a newly geometric character."

The works of Will, as well as the shows they have appeared in, have been featured in magazines including, Ceramics Monthly, and Arts Review.

The feature by Baster also described the craftsmanship of these works by saying, "Their surfaces set forth meticulously executed patterns. Exuberant color and pattern are the outcome of consciously displined activity."

The pieces are definitely the result of hard work. The animated pastel color of these works is dazzling. The surfaces are satiny smooth, and the minute details in the patterns on these forms are impressive.

In another feature article in the Calgary Herald written by Nancy Tousley, Will explained the effort of this detail, "When I'm painting those little dots, I'm good for three hours and then I either can't see or my hand starts to shake."

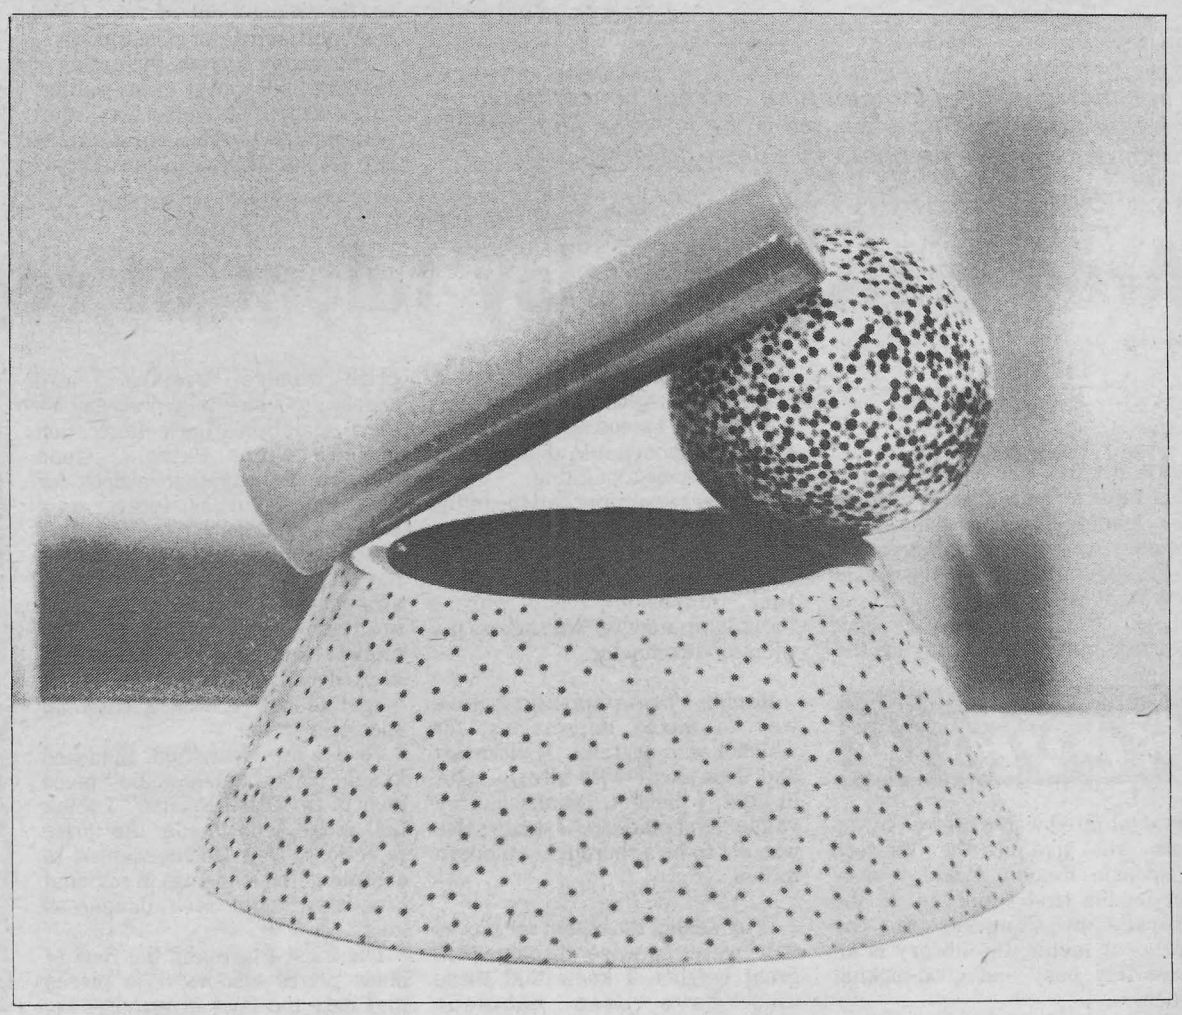
Not only is the detail of the design interesting, but the simplicity of her forms are as well. In Tousley's article, Will told her, "The forms are very simple and unpretentious, cones, circles, triangles, or easily recognizable shapes, that allow the color and energy of the patterns to work."

I like what I've seen.
—Ed Wong
Furlong Gallery curator

Although these shapes appear to be abstract Will doesn't claim that her works are completely abstract, she told Tousley: "Hardly ever is anything in my work totally abstract: it's just removed from where it came from. I always have something in the back of my mind that's kind of a joke, even if I'm the only one who knows about it."

Will's works are very involved. Some of her ceramic works have taken up to three years to complete, others just a year. She displines herself to follow a seven hour work day in the studio which is located in the basement of a 75 year old house. The house is set on a hill and she has access to the outside for the studio. The studio contains her potter's wheel, and kiln, as well as shelves of glazes.

In Baster's article she wrote, "These works clearly have their sources in the ceramic pieces. They reveal the remarkable way in which ideas evolved from one medium can take possesion of other materials and advance into new realms of expressive effects." This was written of Will's show in southern Alberta, and it holds true of the show at Furlong. The show will run through April 11 at the J. Furlong Gallery.



Strongly geometric in design, these pieces feature smooth lacquer-finish glazing over vivacious coloration applied in patterns related to the forms. These works lead to the drawings in the show.

For Those About to Rock

Rock'n'Roll Trivia

David Chase

Trivia; is a six letter craze that has struck America. There is trivia all over, on TV game shows, in books, magazines and newspapers, and on board games. There's Trivial Pursuit, Trivial II, Silver Screen Trivia, Sports Trivia, Entertainment Tonight Trivia and of course Rock & Roll Trivia.

I have Rock & Roll Trivia, but sorry to say, the game is boring. It seems that either the questions are real hard, or real easy. So I thought to myself "Dave, make up your own trivia on rock & roll."

So I did. It works like this: There are five levels of rock & roll knowledge.

1. Freshman Rock & Roller
2. Sophomore Rock & Roller
3. Junior Rock & Roller
4. Senior Rock & Roller
5. Graduate Rock & Roller

You reach a level by answering the questions under each heading. Many of you may reach the Sophomore or Junior level without peeking at the answers, but very few will surpass the Senior level. For those of you that make it to the Graduate Rock & Roll level, I'm humble in your presence.

Freshmen Level

1) Which artist has the most gold records?
2) Manfred Mann has had popular air play with the songs "For You," "Spirits In The Night," and "Blinded By The Light". But who wrote these songs and on what album can they be found? 3) Which artist has had the most songs that have reached the -1 position on the charts?

Sophomore Level

1) The Beatles, Beachboys and ELO have all recorded the song "Rollover Beethoven," but who wrote and sang it first?
2) Rod Stewart, Stones guitarist Ron Wood, Who drummer Kenny Jones and Ronnie Lane all played in what band?
3) What two artists have won the most Grammys? (Hint, they both wear shades.)

Junior Level

1) Who is the person sitting on a mushroom playing the sintar in Tom Petty's "Don"t Come Around Here No More" video? What band does he play for?
2) Can you name the talented guitarist that played for the band Santana at the age of 15? Can you name the band he played for after Santana?
3) What 1985 Grammy winning performer played the harmonica on Elvis Costello's "My Aim Is True" Lp?

Senior Level

1) What late "60's, early "70's band did both Ted Nugent and Meat Loaf play in?
2) What band did Jimi Hendrix first tour the United States with?
3) Who is the guitarist that accompanied Eric Clapton on the song "Layla"? What band did he play for?

Graduate Level

1) Who is the artist/actor that played the lead role in the movie The Wall? What band does he sing for?
2) Who is the guitarist that appears on half of all the albums released in Britain from 1963 to 1965? (Hint, he played for the most popular heavy metal band of all time.)
3) Can you name the three ladies whom the following songs were written for?

(1) Angie - Rolling Stones
(2) Delta Lady - Leon Russell
(3) Layla - Eric Clapton

So, how do you think you did? Find out by checking your answers with the ones listed below.

Freshmen Level

1) Elvis Presley
2) Bruce Springsteen - Greetings From Asbury Park
3) The Beatles

Sophomore Level

1) Chuck Berry
2) The Faces
3) Stevie Wonder (15) and Ray Charles (10)

Junior Level

1) David A. Stewart - Eurythmics
2) Neal Schon - Journey
3) Huey Lewis

(Senior Level)

1) The Amboy Dukes
2) The Monkees
3) Duane Allman - The Allman Brothers Band

(Graduate Level)

1) Bob Geldof - Boomtown Rats
2) Jimmy Page (Played with Led Zeppelin)
3) Angie - Angie Bowie, wife of David Bowie Delta Lady -Rita Coolidge Layla - Patti Harrison, George Harrisons ex-wife, Claptons current wife.

I hope you enjoyed Dave's Rock & Roll Trivia. If you found this trivia to be fun and interesting, let The Stoutonia know and I'll see if I can't have a Rock & Roll Trivia II.

April 10, I'm gonna have the results of my music ratings of the party houses. If you think you're in the running, have a party, and let me know.

show was one of the least pretentious, and the least over-worked. "Igor Stravinsky" by Mary Ellen Bressette, a Studio major at Stout.

The piece featured, repeated the image, visible or implied, of Igor Stravinsky, pioneer composer of the avant garde during the first half of the twentieth century. The 'hundred little Stravinskys' were in the form of two-cent stamps pasted down en masse, overlain by a piece of hand-made paper. Some more two-cent Stravinskys were variously disintegrated on the surface of the paper. The work seemed fresh, well-conceived and executed without floundering.

There were many other works that reflected some excellent fine art qualities, both in images and execution. One the whole, the serious level of development displayed by the Stout contingent indicates a strong and vital arts program, which admittedly has to fly against strong headwinds at this predominately Technical and H & R institution.

Other works by Stout members that deserve recognition were, but certainly not limited to: Rob Price's "Koshi I," photos by Robert Meier, and Noreen Spraner's oil painting, "The Emergene," which held its own against the distracting height and woodwork.

Yet another piece that deserves mention is Nancy Blum's "Examination II." The technical prowess in both detail and overall aesthetic impact seems to rank it well above the prize winners. My opinion.

The unanimous concensus among interviewed spectators was that the Phillips Library deserves an appreciative round of applause for taking on such an ambitious, gutsy, and culturally beneficial event, even more so because it is an annual show.

I don't want to leave the lasting impression that the strawberries in light were lacking in positive qualities. It was my first impression and I developed an attachment to that feeling. I decided not to do anything further about it.

WPR radio 'shoot'

Wisconsin Public Radio is sponsoring its 2nd Annual "Shoot Your Radio" photo contest. Any resident of Wisconsin can enter a color slide or photo showing themselves, family, or friends as they listen to Wisconsin Public Radio. The most important rule is that each photo must feature a radio in it.

Scenes of Wisconsin's four seasons, indoor as well as outdoor shots are encouraged. Photos will be judged on both originality and quality.

First-place prize will be a 35mm camera donated by Como Photo. The second-place winner will receive two, mounted 16 x 20 prints courtesy of Harmann Photography of Green Bay and Algoma. Third-place and honorable mention winners will receive prizes from the Wisconsin Public Radio Store.

For a full set of rules, or to send in your entry, write to: "Shoot Your Radio", 3319 W. Beltline Hwy., Madison, WI 53713. Entries must be postmarked by April 1, 1986 and winners will be announced by April 15.

Lyra plays Tainter

The Lyra Concert is a newly established Baroque Orchestra devoted to the performance of 17th and 18th century music on period instruments.

Directed by Randy Bourne, Associate Music Director at Minnesota Public Radio, the Lyra Concert orchestra brings new life to old music as some of the finest Twin Cities Baroque musicians play the music of Handel, Bach, Corelli, Telemann, and others.

The Mabel Tainter Theater, with funding from First Bank and Trust in Menomonie, is fortunate enough to host a three concert series.

The concert will be held on Sunday, April 6 at 3 p.m. Tickets will be $10 for an individual and $5 for a student with an I.D.

MTG announces cast

Menomonie Theater Guild announces the cast of its spring production, the heartwarming comedy On Golden Pond by Ernest Thompson.

Nora Koch has been cast as Ethel Thayer and David Cook as Norman Thayer.

Other cast members include: Susan Churchill as the daughter Chelsea, Steve Olson as Bill, Tim Snyder as Bill's son Billy and Chris Leubner as Charlie the mailman.

Performances are scheduled at the Mabel Tainter Theater in Menomonie for 8 p.m. on April 25, 26, and May 1-3. Matinees are at 2 p.m. on April 27 and May 4.

YOU CAN FIGHT CANCER BEFORE YOU GET IT.

OR AFTER YOU GET IT.

It's a lot easier to fight cancer before you get it.

Scientists estimate that up to 60% of all cancer could be prevented.

By simply making a few changes in your lifestyle.

By not getting too much sun. By not smoking cigarettes. By not overeating. And by following a diet high in fiber and low in fat.

By simply doing these few things, you could drastically reduce your risk of getting cancer.

Sure, you could still get cancer.

But why not give yourself the odds against it?

Racism and Sexism in America

According to Flo Kennedy

Ms. Kennedy is an attorney who is a civil rights and Feminist activist. She has appeared on the Phil Donahue Show, Good Morning America, and 60 Minutes. She is also the author of many articles and books including:

"The Abortion Rap"
Hustler Magazine
and Color Me Flo

Ms. Kennedy says her cab-driver father had the right idea when the Ku Klux Klan tried to evict her and her four sisters from the "White Trash" section of Kansas City, Missouri. "He grabbed a shotgun and said: 'The first foot that hits the step belongs to the man I will shoot. And then you all can decide who shoots me'. We had no more trouble after that."

Stage set for NCAA Final Four in Dallas

Louie Filkins
Sports Reporter

Duke, Kansas, Louisiana State and Louisville all advanced to the National Collegiate Athletic Association's Final Four in regional play last weekend. The Final Four began to take shape over a week ago when the NCAA Division I was weeded down to 16 teams.

In the East, a strong Duke team defeated DePaul 74-67 to move them on to the East championship game against Navy. The Midshipmen squeaked by Cleveland State in the battle of the "cinderella" teams.

Meanwhile in the Midwest, North Carolina State rolled over Iowa State 70-66. In the most controversial and possibly the most exciting game of the tournament, Kansas beat Michigan State 96-86 in overtime. The controversy stems from the time clock which apparently cheated the Spartans out of about 14 seconds. Kansas went on to score a field goal with five seconds remaining to put the game into overtime, which they won.

Louisville will try to decode LSU's "freak" defense...

Kentucky earned a berth into the Southeast championship game by defeating Alabama. Kenny "Sky" Walker scored a game-high 22 points to help the Wildcats advance. Louisiana State University (LSU) upset number two-ranked Georgia Tech. 70-64. The Tigers forced 17 turnovers while committing only five. Don Redden hit 10 of 16 from the field and finished with 27 points. Derrick Taylor pitched in 23 points for LSU.

Another surprise erupted in the West when number eight ranked Auburn beat number four University of Nevada-Las Vegas (UNLV). Chuck Person scored 17 of his 25 points in the second half for the Auburn Tigers. Louisville crushed the Tar Heels of North Carolina 94-79 in the other West game. Billy Thompson scored 24 points to help bring the Cardinals to their 14th consecutive win.

The stage was set. By last Saturday only eight teams remained. The bouts for regional champions went as follows:

East: Top-ranked Duke (36-2) had a relatively easy win over "cinderella" Navy 71-50. A hot shooting Johnny Dawkins captured a game-high 28 points which included a reverse jam just before the half. Dawkins, who many consider the finest guard in the NCAA, scored 20 of his points in the second half, most on jump shots from the outside. Despite a fine effort by Navy's David Robinson, the nation's top rebounder and shotblocker, the Middies were out rebounded 49-29. Blue Devil senior Bilas had 10 rebounds, while Mark Alarie and Dawkins had 8 and 7 respectively. "They're not big but they're huge like trees," said Navy Coach Paul Evans, whose team finished at 30-5.

Midwest: Danny Manning scored 10 of his 22 points in the last nine minutes to give number two Kansas (35-3) a 75-67 Midwest regional championship over North Carolina State. Greg Dreiling and Manning pounded the offensive boards late in the game to put it out of reach for N.C. State. Dreiling finished with 19 points and 12 rebounds. Ron Kellogg downed 12 points.

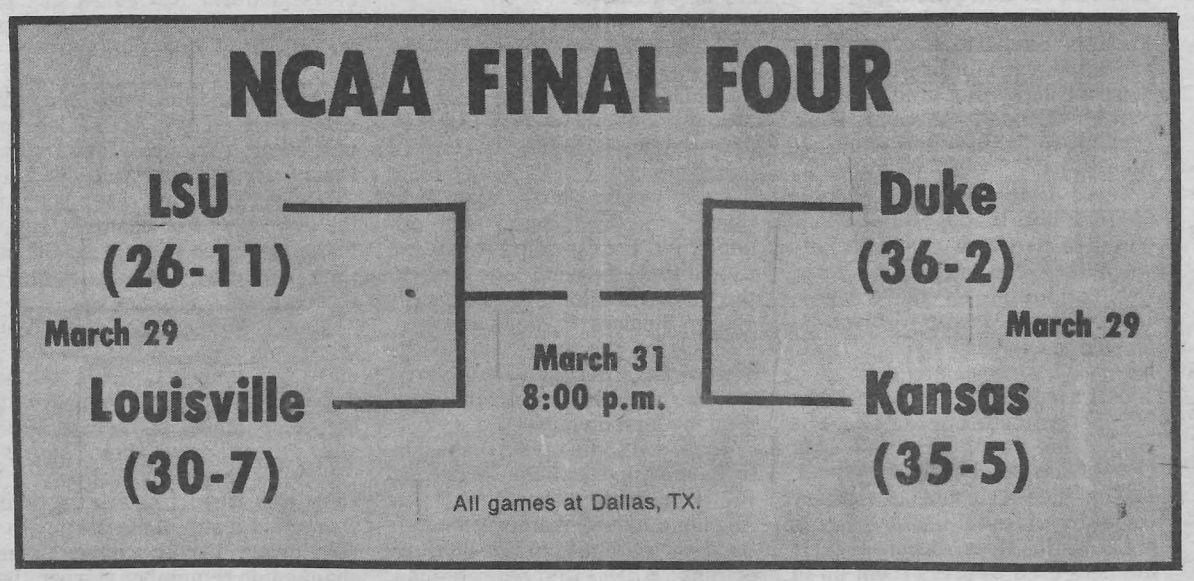
Southeast: "Freak" defense helped LSU upset number three-ranked Kentucky 59-57, who dominated the Southeastern conference all season long. LSU Head Coach Dale Brown said, "It's a combination of trying to confuse them about what you're in. Whether you're in a box, a diamond, a triangle, or you've got men collapsed so they think it's a man to man." LSU used 225-pounder Ricky Blanton to fight off Kentucky's Kenny Walker inside. John Williams led LSU with 16 points and Redden had 15.

West: Louisville (30-7) handled Auburn in the West regional 84-76. Freshman center Pervis Ellison scored 15 points and snatched 10 rebounds in the victory. Auburn coach Sonny Smith remarked that Ellison dominated the inside and made the difference in the game. "I was really impressed with Ellison's defense," Smith said. Louisville hit 16 out of 20 charity throws after the intermission. Their leading scorer, Billy Thompson, had only 13 points because of foul trouble. Milt Wagner and Jeff Hall picked up the slack with 16 and 14 points respectively.

In the Duke-Kansas semifinal game this weekend, the Blue Devils' Johnny Dawkins and Tommy Amaker, who many consider to be the best guard tandem in the country, could give Kansas a headache because of their quickness and outside shooting ability. The Jayhawks will fight back with possibly the best center in the country, Greg Dreiling. His powerful inside game combined with the explosive offense of Danny Manning might be too much for the Blue Devils. This offensive battle between the number one- and two-ranked teams will probably be one of the best games of the weekend.

Louisville will try to decode LSU's "freak" defense with stick-thin Freshman center Pervis Ellison and their leading scorer, Billy Thompson. Don Redden and Rick Blanton will more than likely be LSU's main offensive weapons. Redden was voted the most valuable player in the Southeast regional tournament. LSU (26-11) is the surprise team in the Final Four and might have trouble with the more experienced Louisville. Head Coach Denny Crum has taken his team to three previous Final Four's in the 1980's.

Louisville will play LSU in Dallas on Saturday and Duke takes on Kansas later that afternoon. The NCAA championship game will be held Sunday night at 8p.m.



Lady tracksters set school record with fifth place conference finish

Kim Steger
Sports Reporter

Only two years ago the UW-Stout women's track team scored a measly ten points in the WWIAC Indoor Track & Field Championships. This year was a different story. Last week the Blue Devil women raced their way to a fifth place finish with an overall score of 54 points.

John Miller, head coach of the women's team said, "The team did really well. This was the highest finish any women's track team has had in Stout's history. It's really exciting to see this. We had some very good performances."

The tenth annual conference meet was hosted by La Crosse last weekend.

In the 440-yard run trials, Lynn Luedke placed fourth and Michelle Ennis placed fifth in their heats. There were no competitors for Stout in the 440-yard run finals.

Becky Riedi took fifth place in her heat of the 60-yard hurdle trials but didn't qualify for finals.

In the 60-yard dash trials, Tammy Schaller placed fifth and Terri Holzhueter and Suzanne Krank placed sixth in their heats. No one qualified for finals.

The 300-yard dash brought fourth place finishes to Ennis, Luedke and Schaller in each of their heats, but there were no Stout finalists.

Becky Riedi placed third in her heat of the 220-yard hurdles. Her time didn't qualify for finals.

Placing fifth in her heat of the 600-yard run trials was Lisa Heimmermann.

Running an excellent 3000-meter race was Shiela Geere. She ran to a first place final finish with a new conference record time of 10 minutes 11.76 seconds. Placing third in this event was Ann Meyer with a time of 10:36.88.

The distance medley relay team of Janet Turowski, Luedke, Heimmermann and Sue Meyer raced to fifth place with a time of 13:07.14.

Barb Peterson placed sixth in the pentathlon finals. The pentathlon consists of five separate events. Peterson placed fifth in the 880-yard run, sixth in the long jump, fifth in the shot put, fourth in high jump and sixth in the 50-meter hurdles. Her total amount of points added up to 2162.

Running another impressive, conference record-breaking race was Geere in the 5000-meter run. She raced to first place with a time of 17:30.04. Teammate Sue Meyer placed third with a time of 17:44.84. Geere's time was her highest finish ever.

The mile relay team of Luedke, Heimmermann, Turowski and Ennis scored a sixth place finish with a time of 4:25.63.

Racing to a fifth place finish was the 880-yard relay team of Schaller, Holzhueter, Ennis and Krank with a time of 1:57.75.

All-American runner Sue Meyer ran to a first place finish in the 1500-meter run with a new conference record of 4:49.58. Ann Meyer placed fourth in this event with the time of 4:54.81.

In the shot put finals, Sue Schaefgen placed sixth with a put of 11.34.

Lisa Heimmermann took sixth place in the 1000-yard run finals with a time of 2:51.71.

La Crosse won the indoor title with a total of 233 points. UW-Stevens Point placed second with 98 points, UW-Oshkosh placed third with 73 points and UW-Eau Claire came in fourth with 69 points. Stout was fifth, UW-Whitewater sixth, UW-Platteville seventh and UW-River Falls placed eighth.

The UW-Stout men's track meet at St Cloud was cancelled.

The men's next track meet will be the WSUC Championships hosted by Oshkosh. The women will compete in the Winona Quadrangular hosted by Winona State.

Out of Bounds

Uniform variety

Rochelle Buhr

Imagine the Minnesota Vikings tossing out their traditional purple uniforms for new pink togs.

Or suddenly, the Green Bay Packers exchanging their kelly green uniforms for one of spring's hottest colors, mint green.

This wouldn't happen. Pink, mint green, mauve, and peach are not macho.

These pastels are a few of those female colors that men are not supposed to like to wear, especially when they are out on the game field hammering on each other.

Recently, I began to look at uniforms. I noticed styles, stripes, lettering and especially colors.

Blue seems to be the choice color for most school colors. There is navy blue, royal blue and light blue, which happens to be a pastel, but this doesn't count as a prissy color since most of the boys figure it's OK to wear because their mothers used to dress them up in this hue when they were babies.

Actually I think that blue is quite boring. Everything seems to be blue. Why should people want to blend in with everything?

If blue is the conservative color of sports, red is the somewhat racier color of the two. Red is seen on uniforms frequently. I like red. It seems to be the fast color.

Often, red is also teamed up with blue. The Philadelphia 76ers wear this combination and look pretty sharp. It's the patriotic look.

How about orange. Syracuse wears it, and so do the Cincinnati Bengals and the Denver Broncos. It's a happy color that people connotate with oranges, sunshine, Florida, spring break, and jumping off balconies.

Orange is mostly tasteful on uniforms, but sometimes it looks odd. For instance, take the Miami Dolphins. Their orange and sea blue green uniforms look like they are making a pitch for Howard Johnson's.

A nasty color seen on athletes is black. It's dark, scary and all-engulfing. The Chicago Bears wear it, and so do the San Diego Padres, the Oakland Raiders, and the Pittsburgh Steelers, to name a few.

Think of the power in black. Would the "Refrigerator" Perry look as intimidating if he were wearing lemon yellow?

There are some teams that seem to have failed in Color Matching 101. One such team is the Los Angeles Lakers. Who coordinated their mismatched purples on their get-ups? When I first noticed this I thought my eyes were color blind that day, but now I have confirmed that the Lakers are trying to be trendy and cool and prove to the NBA that uniforms don't have to be boring. They can make political statements.

They could only get away with this in California.

Magic Johnson has shoes that were made to match the Laker's uniforms, and people everywhere are buying them.

Penn State sports white. No frills, just numbers and white. They don't even put cute oranges and cotton balls on their shoulder pads when they make it to the bowl games.

Stripes are common. Perhaps every uniform has some sort of stripes running down the sides. Its the influence of the military.

I can't stand those triangle type cutouts that I see on the legs of basketball warmups. They flap in the air when players run.

Who decides what name goes on the uniforms? For example, some teams have the state or school on their uniforms, and some have their mascot.

Notre Dame has "Irish" on theirs, while Kansas has "Kansas" on their uniforms. Some teams have both. North Carolina State has "N.C. State" on their jerseys, and "Pack" on their shorts. "Pack" is short for "Wolfpack". I knew this when I saw it on their shorts, but it still made me giggle.

Uniforms hardly change. One change I do remember is when the Bengals came out with tiger stripes on their helmets.

The public gasped.

This whole subject of uniforms was prompted by my noticing that the UW-Stout baseball team has new uniforms. They look sharp. They are blue, red and have "Devils" on the front. The trident for the "L" on "Devils" is what really caught my eye.

I suppose Christians will gasp again.

Martina wins Virginia Slims

Martina Navratilova beat Hana Mandlikova, 6-2, 6-0, 3-6, 6-1 Sunday in a best of five set to win $125,000. This brings her total earnings for the past week to $386,250. This was her third straight season-ending crown at Madison Square Garden.

Players sell tickets to fans

The University of Texas football players are selling their complimentary tickets to fans for prices of up to $600 per ticket. This is in violation of NCAA rules but seems to be a tradition according to former players. The athletic director, DeLoss Dodds, has opened an investigation and notified the NCAA about the allegations.

Duke and Kansas in Final Four

Sunday number 1-ranked Duke defeated Navy 71-50 and Kansas edged out North Carolina State 75-67 to advance to the Final Four. Duke will take on Kansas Saturday while Louisiana State goes up against Louisville in Dallas.

Michael Jordan ready for more

Chicago Bulls Michael Jordan, after breaking a bone in his left foot early in the season, is ready to increase his playing time. Limited to 16 minutes in past games, he may be playing up to 20 minutes in upcoming games.

Connors fined for defaulting

A fine of $20,000 and a 10-week suspension was placed on Jimmy Connors for defaulting a match last month. He was also given a $5,000 fine by supervisor Ken Farrar after defaulting his semifinal match against Ivan Lendl.

Weight lifting boosts overall well-being

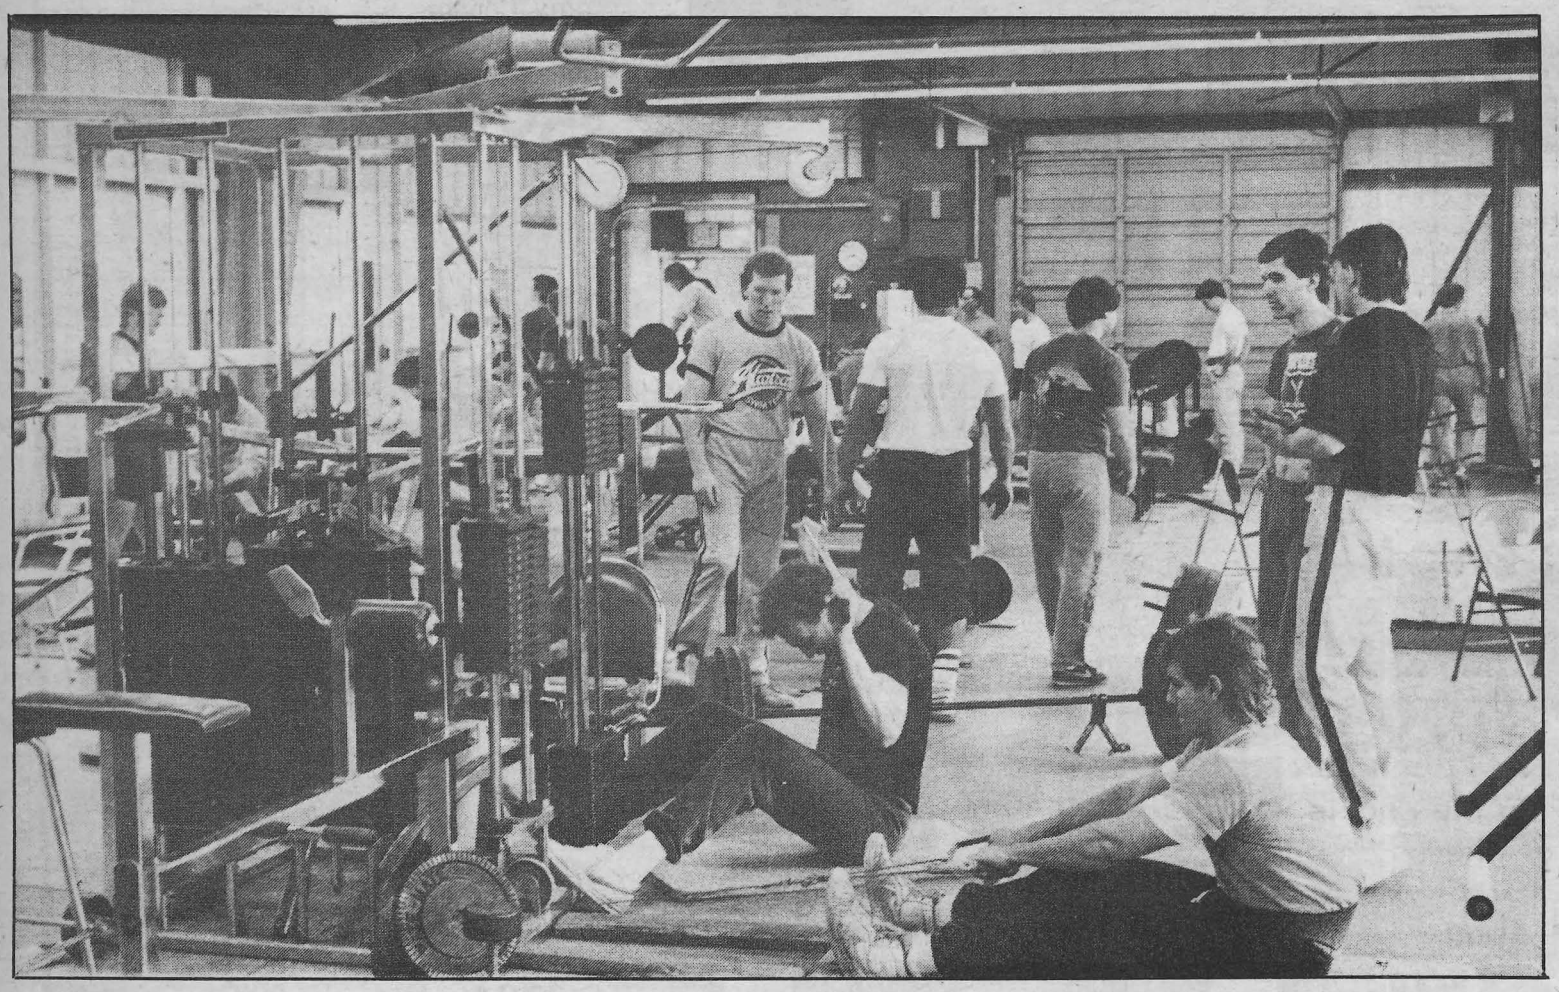
Eyeing his reflection, Mark Rieggraf pumped irons while Ryan Seefluth spotted him. Beginning weight lifters should take a course in weight training and safety. (Stoutonia photo by Dan Banach)



The UW-Stout weight lifting room fills with students everyday who seek to develop their bodies and to get into better physical condition. Serious weight lifters should be mentally prepared and have endurance and motivation. (Stoutonia photo by Dan Banach)

Wendy Johnson
Sports Reporter

Will power will help a dieter lose weight, but an effective way to help keep those pounds off is to take up a weight lifting program.

A weight training course would be helpful to someone who is considering taking up a weight training program. It's highly recommended to try all the equipment before starting a program to get familiar with the equipment and the machines in the weight room.

Both men and women are interested in weight training, but for different reasons. Men usually want to lift weights to look better, and to develop larger muscles. Women who lift weights want to lose excess weight and tone their muscle.

The common exercises that weight lifters do are the bench press, the squats, the lunges, the military press, arm curls, leg curls and toe raises. These all help the three major muscle groups which are the arms, the chest and the legs.

A beginner should use a weight that feels just right and start out with three sets of 10-20 reps. A lifter should work hard enough to work a real sweat, but stop at the point before really hurting themselves. There might be some discomfort, but judgement should be used. If there is excessive pain, the exercise should be stopped immediately.

Someone who wants to lose weight can not eat whatever they want just because they are now getting exercise. There is a need to control eating habits by watching calorie intake. The calorie intake should be equal or less than the amount of calories a person wears off in exercise and their daily life style.

According to Walter Perkins, an instructor of physical education and athletics, weight training did not get started by one person. The health trend created the need to be thin, and started with the jogging craze. Jogging started to fade, and many articles came out saying how jogging can become a hazard to people. One reason for the hazard was that people were running on the city roads. Another hazard was people were wearing headphones while they would run and would not hear cars.

The jogging trend made people aware of the need to exercise. The trend opened a new area. People started taking aerobics, walking, weight lifting, racquetball and other forms of exercise.

If someone wants to seriously lift weights, they need to be mentally prepared, and need to have endurance and motivation. A serious beginner should lift at least three times a week, but can lift up to six times a week.

It's good to take a course in weight training to inform the lifter so they learn to lift correctly and safely. People unable to take a course but still interested in weight training should have someone that lifts weights show them how to get started. Junior Val Anderson, who is a competitive weight lifter commented, "It's good to ask a lot of questions and read magazines like Muscle and Fitness."

Anderson has been lifting weights for two years. Last year she placed third in the weight lif-

Highlight Your Spring With Softer Shades From Merle Norman

by Sharon Stemsrud

Suddenly, like a breath of fresh air, spring finally arrives! And with it comes prettier days, softer colors and a whole new approach to the way you look and feel.

Layers of heavy clothing make way for a brighter, lighter wardrobe and the same principle applies to makeup.

By the time winter finally ends and spring begins, women are ready for a big change, not only in their clothing, but in their makeup as well. We at Merle Norman like to suggest softer, prettier pastel shades for spring. We'd like you to feel like you're spending a day in the country with us. There is a whole selection of products for the eyes, cheeks and lips to help you achieve just the right look.

Since springtime usually means more time spent outdoors, we also recommend that women start thinking about using sunscreens. With all of the products available today with sunscreen, there's no excuse anymore for not protecting your skin from the sun's damaging rays. We have many products with sunscreen from moisturizers to foundations to lipsticks.

For a free consultation, contact us at Merle Norman in the Thunderbird Mall at 235-4551.

Ninth-ranked netters shut out opponents

Paul Wehking
Sports Reporter

It looks as though the UW-Stout men's tennis team is keeping pace with its ninth place national ranking. The Blue Devils encountered smooth sailing late last week as they slashed through their three opponents, St. John's, Chicago State, and St. Olaf.

On Thursday the Stout netters found out that they have some good talent on the team. The twelve-man Blue Devil team split in two with Stout's first six players taking on St. John's at Johnson Fieldhouse while the second six players were facing Chicago State at Menomonie High School.

Both teams emerged victorious by blanking their lesser opponents 9-0. Tennis Coach Bob Smith said, "With scheduling both matches it gave the other guys a chance to play. It showed we had good depth." Not one singles match went into the third set.

In doubles play against St. John's, the number one doubles team composed of Rob Oertel and Mike Friedman had trouble bringing their talents together in the first set which they lost 4-6. They managed to keep the Stout slate clean by coming back with 6-3, 6-4 wins in the second and third sets respectively.

"We took them lightly at first because we had already won the match as a team. We played the last doubles match and by that time we had already won five matches," Oertel said.

In singles play, Oertel had the toughest competition of the day. The first set ended with Oertel winning the tie breaker 7-5 and then winning the second set 6-4. No other St. John's opponents won more than four games from the Blue Devil netters.

Stout's second half set down the five-man Chicago State team 9-0 again with no matches, singles or doubles, going into the third set. Having only five players, Chicago State had to forfeit the third doubles match concluding the competition for the day.

The Stout netters faced St. Olaf on Friday and experienced some similar results. Blue Devil Mike Friedman provided the most excitement of the match. After a 7-6 first set, Friedman and Olaf's Peter Hart battled it out in an unusual tie breaker that ended with Friedman outlasting Hart to win 16-14. Friedman then went on to trounce Hart 6-0 in the second set securing his match win.

In doubles action against St. Olaf, the Blue Devil duo of Oertel and Friedman handled their opponents easily. Stout's Joel Vogler and Jarrod Barnard went three sets with their Olaf opponents before chalking up their win. The pair of Todd Trabant and Troy Kelly were the only ones to lose their doubles match. After the first set (6-7) Trabant and Kelly found themselves in the tie breaker which they also lost. The second set, the Olaf team ended the pairs bid for a win beating them 2-6.

These latest three wins up Stout's record to 11-5, having not lost since the first of the month. The Blue Devils will take on the Huskies of St. Cloud State tomorrow. Coach Smith expects the Huskies to give the Blue Devils more competition.

ting competition in Madison. This year, competing in Eau Claire, she did not place. "I compete for the experience, and also it's fun," Anderson said. "Competing gives me new goals to go after, and adds life to my workout."

Anderson started lifting weights when she decided one morning she wanted to do something to improve herself. Anderson was thin, but had no muscle or shape. She decided she wanted to do something about it so she started lifting to tone her muscle.

Today Anderson is a serious weight lifter. Ten weeks before she competes, she starts dieting. She's very strict on how much fat and calories she takes in. Besides the other advantages to lifting, Anderson commented, "Exercising will make you feel more alert and awake."

Jan Burnes, another serious weight lifter, has lifted for about one year. Burnes started to tone up her muscles because she felt lifting would be the best way to tone specific areas. She took the weight lifting class to get the basic idea. She also watched other people and from that she picked out the routine that suited her. Burnes said, "My goal is to compete hopefully next year in some competition."

Perkins started lifting to get him prepared for his wrestling days. He discovered with time he was much stronger, and did better when he wrestled. Today he still lifts on his own. It's one way for him to reduce stress.

To seriously lift weights for whatever reason, it takes motivation and endurance. The effects will show, but it takes time and discipline.

Mayoral government approved by voters

Charles Keller
News Reporter

Menomonie is going to have a mayor. After weeks of political struggles that pitted neighbor versus neighbor, the votes are in and the yesses have it.

The referendum issue of whether to revert back to a mayoral form of government from the present city manager form passed by a slim 68 vote margin, 1492 to 1424. . "This is the vote that gave the city back to the people," Councilman Rich Emmert said about April 1st election.

The second referendum issue to change to representation by ward instead of the current at large system passed overwhelmingly 1858 to 978. This will increase the size of the city council from the seven members that it has now to eleven city council members after April, 1987 election when the new form takes effect.

"The City Council could call for a special election for mayor in the fall" said clerk Anita Klamm. Such an election could cost the taxpayers up to $4,000 for election officials, supplies and materials. It is also possible that the new mayor will be elected in the spring of 1987 when other offices come up for election.

—Rich Emmert Councilman

Former City Manager George Langmack was unavailable for comment concerning the question of whether or not he would run for mayor when the election takes place. Langmack will be replaced April 15th when the City Council holds its organizational meeting to elect its officers. The newly elected council president will become the acting mayor. Until then, the city will be without an executive officer.

In the city council elections, incumbent Rich Emmert, one of the candidates endorsed by Concerned Citizens for Menomonie, received the most votes with 1,364. Challenger Norman Rockwell, backed by "Save our City", came in second with 1329 votes. Stout student Jay Schroeder, also a Concerned Citizens candidate, filled the third vacant seat, receiving 1,318 votes. Other candidates receiving votes who were not elected include Richard Martinson 1290, Steve Wood 1277, Pinckney Hall 1250, and "Lonely One" Michael Wagner 857.

Dr. Forrest Tenant held the audience's attention as he explained his background studying drug abuse. His message was that America suffered from cocaine addiction since use of the drug forever stops the body's production of norepinephrine. (Stoutonia photo by Julie La Fleur)

U.S. suffers cocaine addiction; chemical dependency explained

Patrick Miles
News Reporter

Doctor Forest Tennant, Executive Director of Community Health Projects, Inc. in California, described the effects of cocaine abuse when spoke to UW-Stout students and concerned citizens on the subject of "Cocaine: Why it's the Drug of Choice." The presentation was sponsored by the Alcohol Program and cosponsored by the Psychology Club.

Tennant spoke in the Great Hall of the Student Center on Tuesday, April 1.

He began by explaining how he became involved in drug abuse treatment during the Vietnam War. Stationed in West Germany as a physician, his colonel requested that he do something about the problem of military personnel using hashish. Tennant then began researching drug abuse.

Tennant described the history of drug abuse research and experimentation. He explained that the terms "physical and psychological dependency" are obsolete. This is because of recent research redefining addiction as "a biological state in which an individual biologically needs a drug in his/her blood stream constantly," he said.

Tennant told about a scientist who discovered what cocaine does to the brain. The scientist sprinkled cocaine on some brain tissue. In response, norepinephrine and endorphine leaked from the tissue. These chemicals aid us in our sense of time as our "internal time clock." They also are instrumental in effecting our motivation. Tennant said these effects weren't known until several years later.

He explained that he doesn't know why people start using cocaine, but that he does know how they become addicted. "After working with thousands of drug abusers," Tennant stated, "I've heard no satisfactory or logical explanation of why they started."

As an example he described an experiment that proves people are not physically attracted to drugs except for an occasional case of genetic deficiency. In the experiment, liquid heroin solution was placed in rats' cages. The rats would not touch it until after they were given heroin intravenously. They then preferred the solution over their food and water.

One cause of addiction is negative feedback, according to Tennant. He defined negative feedback as the body ceasing to produce certain chemicals as a result of taking drugs that resemble the chemicals. "Addiction occurs because drugs mimic other chemicals the body makes," Tennant said. In some cases, when a drug is no longer used, the body resumes production of the chemical. This is not true with many drugs such as cocaine.

When a person becomes addicted to cocaine, they stop producing norepinephrine and endorphine forever. Some other examples of

LaRouche scores squeeze-play

Compiled by Matt Kalina

The victories of two ultra-right wing candidates of the Illinois democratic state primary nominations have left Illinois politicians standing stunned. Mark Fairchild, candidate for lieutenant governor, and Janice Hart, candidate for secretary of state, clipped the nominations away from virtual shoe-ins endorsed by Adlai Stevenson III, who with 88 percent of the vote, won the Democratic primary for governor, according to Time. The two are followers of an anti-social, bullhorn politician Lyndon LaRouche.

The win leaves State Democrats in a condition of topsy-turviness and jeopardizes Stevenson's second try at the governorship. The last time Stevenson ran was in 1982 when he was beaten by four-term Republican James Thompson in a slim margin of 5,000 votes out of a total of 3.6 million ballots. Under Illinois law, nominees for Governor and Lieutenant Governor must run under the same ticket. Stevenson labeled his uninvited running mates "bizzare and dangerous extremists" and "neo-fascists," acording to U.S. News and World Report. Looking for ways to drop Fairchild from the ballot, Stevenson is considering running under a third-party candidate.

Since 1976 die-hard righter LaRouche, 63, has run in each presidential election, accumulating nearly 80,000 votes in 1984, Time reported.

He stepped into the political arena as a Marxist-Leninist and is presently blanketed in radical-right positions.

According to Newsweek LaRouche "believes there is a world-wide, anti-democratic conspiracy, headed by Italian aristocrats, Jewish bankers, Chinese intelligence agents and Queen Elizabeth II." He envisions that a plotter is attempting to make the Western world drug-dependent and that the Holocaust never happened.

Leading the National Democratic Policy Committee, he supported hundreds of LaRouchian candidates for elected office in 1984 with the help of approximately 2,000 followers.

Although the success is slight, almost 1,000 candidates plan to run this year in 26 states, according to Time. According to U.S. News and World Report the NDPC proposes mandatory screening of all Americans for AIDS and building an vast arsenal of nuclear arms.

Illinois Democrats blamed victory of the LaRoucian pair on inclimate weather, overconfidence and name confusion.

Any impact the wins may have overshadows the weaknesses in the State's political campaigns. Illinois politicians may not take the voters for granted anymore.

Successful fund-raiser pushing for higher goal

Karen Smith
News Reporter

UW-Stout's capital fund raising campaign, Toward Century II, has reached it's "base goal" of $1 million and is now working to meet it's "challenge goal" of an additional $1 million, according to Dave Williams, Director of Educational Development.

The fund raising campaign was developed with the intention of making the educational program better for the Stout student.

Toward Century II has four main goals. These are: 1. Faculty and staff developments — to have them well trained and up to date. 2. Instructional equipment — mainly for student use in the classrooms, like computers. 3. Library Learning Center — increasing the number of periodicals. 4. Curriculum developments — opening up whole new study areas and finding the newest technology.

The money for Toward Century II is coming from six different campaigns: the Stout Foundation Board, faculty and staff, alumni, Menomonie, the Twin Cities, and foundations, corporations and friends.

I predict the fund raiser will go way beyond $2 million.
—Dave Williams
Director Educational Development

The graphic arts campaign is another important part of the fund-raiser. To date $1 million worth of equipment has been purchased to help transform the old Student Center into what is what is hoped to be a first class graphic arts, communications, and photography program for the students.

Williams says that the fund-raiser is going extremely well. "Many of the areas have already surpassed their goals in donations, such as the faculty and staff who have $210,000 in written pledges, $110,000 over their goal," Williams said. Three of the six campaigns have already met their challenge goal.

"The faculty and staff, people of the community, alumni, and other areas where money is being received, have shown that they really do care about the Stout students," Williams said.

The benefits from the fund-raiser are already observable since the money helps purchase equipment that will be put to use immediately. "Some donations are made for specific items, such as a certain piece of equipment," Williams said. "Often times, these can be available for use right away."

Toward Century II is a three year campaign for the funds (gifts). The fund raising campaign will conclude in 1989 at the time it is expected all the pledges have been paid.

Williams said the outlook for the fund-raiser is favorable. "I predict that the fund-raiser will go way beyond $2 million," Williams said. "We are getting great support."

Chancellor Robert S. Swanson recognizes the direct relationship between the campaign's success and the impressively wide range of volunteer support being made in each of the six campaigns that make up Toward Century II. "Without the leadership, support and hard work of our volunteers, we would certainly not be experiencing the outstanding success we have," Swanson said.

Although the campaign still has a ways to go, many are confident that the $2 million "challenge goal" will easily be reached, if not surpassed, by 1989.

Prange emphasizes students' rights as SSA president

SSA President JoAnn Prange reviewing her accomplishments over the past year said she achieved greater communications between students and faculty as she said she proved a woman can do the job of SSA President. (Stoutonia photo by Todd A. Nelson)

Kelly Cohorst
News Reporter

Stout Student Association (SSA) President JoAnn Prange recently looked back on the happenings this past year involving the SSA and reviewed the impact these events had on the UW-Stout community.

A Junior in Business Administration, Prange feels that the past year's experience as SSA president has been beneficial to her career goals and her personal goals in life as well.

She is the third woman to become SSA president, the first was in the 1940's, the second was in the 1960's, and now in the 1980's Prange has made her mark in Stout history.

Upon her election as SSA president one of her personal goals was to leave a good impression about SSA with all Stout students. She also said, "I want to make students aware that women can do it (SSA presidency) as well as men."

Prange's platform was based on the issues of upholding students' rights and insuring the emphasis on quality education.

She said she accomplished both of these by educating students concerning their rights and by increasing student representation in a variety of areas that she said were lacking representation when she took office.

The lack of minority representation has been a problem at Stout. It was felt that minorities on campus were being underepresented. Prange said the SSA worked to resolve this problem by getting a representative for minorities in the SSA.

Prange said that her primary objective was to increase school spirit and to increase school pride. She believes she was successful in a number of ways. First of all she had a committee formed whose main purpose was to increase the student attendance at the school sporting events. The committee publicized events by putting up posters and they also put together a pep-rally.

I want to make students aware that women can do it as well as men.
—JoAnn Prange
SSA President

She said the idea was well received as student attendance at the football game increased by 1000 students. She was pleased to say that the attendance increased extended beyond football to other athletic events as well.

The SSA has also provided information for students dealing with pertinent items. As an example, Prange mentioned the Off-Campus Housing Fair. According to Prange, the Fair provided the updated off-campus housing lists as the SSA provided counciling for students off-campus.

Prange's third promotion involved increasing the quality of education, maintaining student involvement in campus-wide activities and improving the communication ties between the students and the faculty.

The Leadership Conference that was held in February was a major concern of Prange's. She said such conferences were designed to ensure the students a quality education. She said Stout had full attendance and the conference was very well run. Due to its success, the Leadership Conference is scheduled to be an annual event.

The communication ties between the students, faculty members and the administration were significantly increased according to Prange. Focusing on the need for better communications, Prange met with the Chancellor Swanson every two weeks. She felt that these meetings and the involvement of the SSA in other activities helped break the barrier between these groups.

Prange said these were just a few examples of the major accomplishments this past year by the SSA. She belives she not only followed through on her platform but she has gone far beyond what was expected of her.

She listed a variety of SSA achievements for the past year. Among these were Coorperative Programming, Take Back the Night,(a women's rights educational organization), a Sexual Assault Prevention Committee,

Opinions

Editorial

All eyes on the mayor

As the position of the Menomonie city manager is officially abolished today, the pre-election hoopla and rhetoric for the creation of the new office of mayor must be scrutinized.

Now that the city is "given back to the people of Menomonie," and the weeks of political struggles are finally over, the pre-election motives of the Concerned Citizen for Menomonie who supported a mayor-common council form of government should not be forgotten. The precedents that they created must be watched with a magnifying glass to determine if they follow through with their objectives. Menomonie can not afford to exchange 18 years of relatively steady progress for void promises.

Voters did choose an improved system of council representation, approving the change to representation by ward instead of the current at-large system which increases the size of the City Council from seven members to eleven.

With the council by ward system, constituents will be able to directly contact their representative responsible for their particular area of the City. It also offers more accountable representation and greater responsiveness by council members in each neighborhood.

It is the new mayor who will now hold the reins. An individual in our community who is qualified and capable of doing the job as mayor will have to be found. Hopefully, power politics will not be injected into city affairs.

Solid planning will be vital in reducing the risks of higher property taxes and lower property values. Let's hope that the mayor has the ability to administer a budget that stands at more than $7 million and to continue economic development in Menomonie, rather than concentrating on running for office and hustling to remain there. We need more than a continual popularity contest. It is vital to maintain the standards Menomonie had.

Crash and Burn

Wrack and rail

Matt Kalina

The three-day blow-out called "Rock and Roll," a Search for God, sponsored by the Maranatha Christian Fellowship last week appeared to be an honest damnation of a concept we call, sex, drugs and rock and roll. Actually, it was a front for a slick religious crusade.

There was the expected moral blindness scene: ". . . damage and destruction by violent means. . . stealing, killing and destroying. . . Satan's lies and deceptions pile up. . .profound theological significance. . .a lie that can kill you is that there is two paths you can go by. . .my sweet Satan....

Part of the audience broke in periodically with oohs and aahs as they viewed the stark slide show, gazing at naughty album covers.

Rock and roll was lambasted with the ability to hyponotize the youngin's. I guess it's kind of like one of those magical spiral disks that you can order in comic books.

I quickly became wise to the clever six step scam. It was just as subtle as any back-masking of "Stairway to Heaven." I give them credit; it was a brilliant manuever for recruiting the easily impressionable. I can see the producer's of the presentation gathered around the table.

"Okay now, we need a drawing card to shuffle the kids in. The basic evangelic crusade won't work. Rock and Roll, brothers and sisters, that's it!"

First, they build emotions by wallpapering Jimmy Morrison posters and setting up the old V.C.R. with classically unnerving, fanatical little hits like AC/DC's "Highway to Hell." What better way to attract a bunch of entertainment starved kids into the big show like rats to cheese.

Secondly, they scare the kids with an hour of violent images and ultra-course tunes. Make the kids feel guilty. Give the hedonists the old "you're all going to hell 'cause you're listening to that rock and roll trash" routine. That'll be sure to toss a few rats into a vat called the major guilt complex.

Flashing scary stuff like the typical concert pose of Ronnie James Dio, the Devil's triad gesture, is good. Hey, it's the universally recognized symbol for satan himself. The lightning "S" used by Black Sabbath or the number of the beast, 666, used by Iron Maiden ought to scare the wits out of some of the kids.

Next go after what is characteristic of society gone bad: Sex, lust, getting drunk, wild parties, drinking bouts, surging into the express line at K-Mart with more than eight items, the worship of idols and other evil, terrible things. Witch craft and satan worship fit in there somewhere too.

Third, they use the prayer bit, pleading for everyone to join into a group prayer.

Repeat after me: "Jesus, I thank you for suffering so I won't have to. . . .I'm sorry for doing my own thing. . .But tonight I want to change. . . ."

Nobody is going to sit back and refuse to pray, right?

Fourth, the audience is pressured that tonight they have to make a decision, quick-like.

"You either are for Jesus or against Jesus. There is no in between. It's one or the other. Tonight if you finally had those blinders ripped off of your eyes. . I don't want to serve Satan anymore. I don't want to kill and steal and destroy or be sent to hell for eternity."

Fifth, they make the delinquents publicly make a stand. Make them get to their feet and acknowledge their transformation from the kingdom of darkness to the kingdom of light.

"Last chance. Don't let the devil rip you off. Go for it."

Once they stand up, they got them. They can get them to do almost anything.

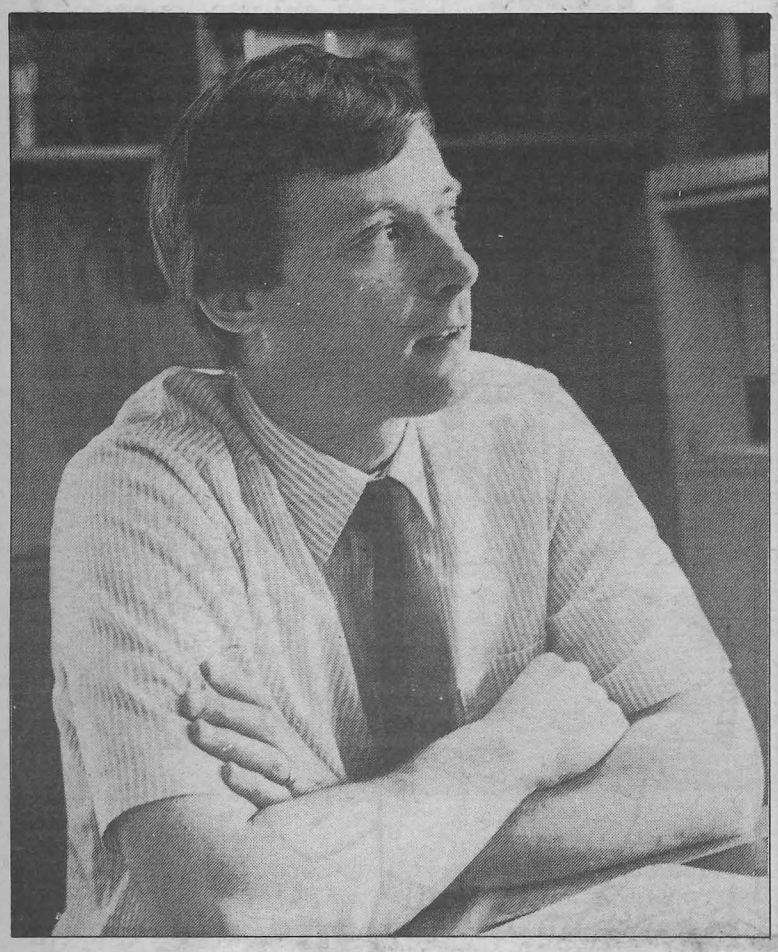
They end peacefully with a nice soothing song and pictures of family and fun like in a Pepsi commercial.

And here's where hard sell religion all comes down to. Sixth, tell the affilicted to come up to the corner for free booklets on personal salvation.

Alas you're saved from rock and roll.

SPOTLIGHT/ Bob Johnson

Subject: Student Center found imperfect; improvements and development will continue



Bob Johnson

Text by Rochelle Buhr

Bob Johnson, 40, is the Director of the Memorial Student Center. He completed his undergraduate and graduate studies at Stout receiving a B.S. degree in industrial education, and a Master's degree in guidance and counseling. Johnson is married, has three children, and lives north of Menomonie.

STOUTONIA: HOW MUCH UNDERDEVELOPED SPACE IS IN THE LOWER LEVEL OF THE STUDENT CENTER?

JOHNSON: In the unfinished area of the lower level there is approximately 11,000 gross square feet. The useable space will depend on what is to go in what particular area, how the layouts are made, and other such things as mechanical room requirements. We try to strive for 70 percent.

STOUTONIA: HAS ANY OF THIS SPACE BEEN ALLOCATED TO ANY GROUPS ON CAMPUS?

JOHNSON: The space is specifically designed for future Student Center type needs. The state requires that when you plan a building, there has to be in those plans some space allocations for future expansion. This space is our plan for future expansion, and it had to be a part of the whole plan in order to get a new building. About four years ago, we did have a committee review some ideas of what the space will be used for, and at that time some ideas included a commuter student lounge area, an exhibit area, and a student organization work area. Our first plan is to review our present needs, and see if our original plans need to be changed. The Student Center Advisory Committee hopefully will start looking at what was originally planned, and see if these plans need to be changed.

STOUTONIA: HAVE GROUPS APPROACHED YOU EXPRESSING THAT THEY WOULD LIKE TO USE SOME OF THIS SPACE?

JOHNSON: No, no one has specifically came up to me and said that they wanted this space.

STOUTONIA: WHEN WILL THE LOWER LEVEL BE DEVELOPED?

JOHNSON: Some where in 1991-92. It is an expensive project, and it will take time and careful planning. It took seven years to build the Student Center. Building projects don't happen overnight.

> I think what we have to do is to identify what the needs are,
> —Bob Johnson
> Director Student Center

STOUTONIA: IS THERE A PROCEDURE OR A COMMITTEE THAT A GROUP CAN CONTACT TO ASK FOR SPACE IN THE UNDERDEVELOPED LOWER LEVEL?

JOHNSON: If you open it up for people to ask for space, everyone asks for space. I think what we have to do is to identify what the needs are, and to meet those needs.

STOUTONIA: WHAT ARE SOME OF THOSE NEEDS?

JOHNSON: I think there need to be a number of people involved, in identifying those needs. The students will play an important role. The Student Center Advisory Committee, which is primarily students, will provide a lot of valuable input. In terms of my own feelings, I do think we need a place for student organizations. Not necessarily an office complex, but a place where an organization could be assigned a lockable file drawer. Creating work space, and not actual offices, for the over 140 student organizations on campus will provide some continuity. I also think an enlarged TV area would be appropriate. The "soaps" seem to be very popular.

STOUTONIA: HOW WILL THE PROBLEM OF STUDENTS WALKING ON THE GROUNDS AROUND THE STUDENT CENTER, INSTEAD OF WALKING ON THE CONCRETE WALKWAYS, BE SOLVED?

JOHNSON: There is going to be some landscaping, hopefully this summer, done around the building that will help direct the traffic more toward the ramps and the sidewalks. Ideally, a person should

Off Campus Blues

Quest for housing

Patty Strassman

Your Landlord Tenant Service of the SSA is excited to invite you to participate in a new quest to better inform you on off campus housing!

On April 14 from 1:00 - 3:00 pm the New Student Ballrooms B and C will be open to Menomonie housing agents and landlords to advertise their housing units.

Its your chance to get the lowdown on next years housing. All of these properties will be licensed with Menomonie Building Inspector, providing you with a good start on quality housing. Landlords will be available for questions on details such as lease terms and any rules they might have for a specific unit.

Community services such as utilities, police department and a Menomonie attorney will be available for any further inquiries on off campus housing.

I think he does because he's being a threat to our country. I mean that with our ships in the sea that he's been threatening our country that he's going to attack. So I think that he does but then again I think our country kind of provokes it sometimes.

I think the United States has to be real careful with Khadafy. I think the man's a lunatic and he is definitely a danger not only to the United States but other countries and other nations throughout the world.

I think so. I think the attacks were wrong for one thing. I don't know if we should have retaliated the way we did.

Definitely. The basic reason is because he is trying to challenge one of the super powers in the world, that's America. If he does that, what's going to happen is that U.S. embassies all around the world are going to be sabotaged. They'll be attacked.

Ministry seminar confronts public with questions, ideas about peace

Maria Wagner
News Reporter

Peace in the world (and lack of it) will be examined and discussed in a four-week seminar entitled "Great Strategies for Peace" organized by The Ministry and will begin Monday, April 7. The primary topic discussed are the ways in which one might work towards making a more peaceful world.

The primary goal of the seminar is to invite people to think about the many different questions that confront us regarding peace and help people to feel a greater sense of peace with themselves while introducing them to some tools they can use to become peacemakers themselves.

This seminar will give individuals the opportunity to examine different attitudes toward peace and great leaders of peace throughout the years. Each person will be encouraged to evaluate the topic for themselves and to draw their own conclusions. Options for a more peaceful world will also be discussed and examined.

> There is a lack of peace because people are not at peace with themselves
> —John Mithell
> The Ministry

According to John Mitchell of The Ministry and co-facilitator with Dr. John Williams of the Human Development Department in Home Economics, the course will initially deal with peace relating to the individual. Mitchell said "There is a lack of peace because people are not at peace with themselves." Mitchell explained that if we have difficulty seeing ourselves as having infinite value we will then have difficulty accepting others.

Mitchell believes that many people do not think about the future in global terms and will discuss this one of the evenings. According to Mitchell, the future can be viewed either apocalyptically and eschatologically. Apocalyptically, the future is seen as sudden mass destruction whereas the eschatologic theology believes that man can expand the kingdom by making the world more peaceful.

Mitchell believes peace can only be gained by drastic changes in the worlds' present, traditional way of thinking along with careful planning, strategy and hard work.

One of the main topics discussed will be the cost of war in terms of both monetary and physical losses. Mitchell said "Every dollar spent on war takes away from the poor and needy."

There is no cost for this seminar and it will begin at 7:30 p.m. for four consecutive Mondays starting April 7. The seminar is open to anyone and will meet at the Ministry.

negative feedback are: cortisone that causes the adrenal gland above the kidneys to shut down; and steroids, which as a synthetic testosterone, causes the body to stop producing testosterone.

After spending much time with cocaine addicts, Tennant came to the conclusion that the U.S. has a proplem. "Quite frankly, the United States is in a cocaine addiction," Tennant said.

Tennant said that the best way to help someone suffering from drug abuse is to "Try to get people before they're addicted. Then you have a slight chance of helping them." Doctors recently found that the drug symmetrel helps rid cocaine users of their addiction. Although, the body will not resume production of norepinephrine or endorphine.

As a result, a successful person who becomes addicted may suddenly disappear because they lost their motivation. "The tragedy is that those who come off cocaine lose their competitive spirit," Tennant sympathized.

Pickney Hall and Judy Tomesh, counselors from the University Counseling Center, said, "Cocaine hasn't become a major problem yet." they said. "It (cocaine) is used casually, but is becoming more frequent."

tant election" stated Jay Schroeder. "There were forums, the public was informed, they layed the facts and made their decisions. I'm confident and pleased with the electoral process." Schroeder was not certain, but he thought the Mayor election would be held this fall. "It's important that the students be here to take part in the election."

"I was very disappointed in the outcome of the mayor election" said Chuck Buelow, Director of University Relations. "I felt Menomonie had a loyal, honest, hardworking government for the past 18 years. The city had a great deal of momentum and now it all comes to an end," Buelow said.

Buelow also was disappointed by the prospects he saw for the alderman by ward system in Menomonie. He said, "It's a poor idea. The at large system was like having seven mayors at once. I could talk to anyone or all of them. Now I'm limited to one, and what happens if he isn't effective." Buelow is in favor of cutting the number of wards from eleven to seven. This would make city government more affordable and similar to the present form.

SSA proposes rules for segregated fees

Kelly Cohorst
News Reporter

Among the many items on the Stout Student Association (SSA) agenda Tuesday night, a motion was proposed specifying the Rules and Regulations for Segregated Fee Funded Organizations.

The SSA also discussed the plans for Governor Anthony Earl's visit here Thursday morning, April 4 and encouraged everyone to attend his address.

Tom Schwalbach of the Financial Affairs Committee proposed the following rules and regulations for segregrated fee funded organizations:

1. The organization must be recognized and approved by the USS of the SSA.

2. The organization must be chaired by a student.*

3. The organization must have a faculty advisor.

4. The majority of members of the organization must be students.

5. The treasurer must be a student. The treasurer is responsible for all the bookkeeping. *

6. The organization must submit a "Renewal Form" to the USS of the SSA.

7. The organizations must meet a minimum of once a month and a notice of the meeting must be posted in the Student Union three days prior to the meeting. *

8. All budget changes must have the approval of the Vice President of Financial Affairs of the SSA.

9. A copy of all minutes must be submitted to the USS of the SSA for public record. *

10. No organization shall discriminate by race, religion, sex, sexual preference, physical disability, marital status, amount or source of income, national orgin, political ideology, or age.

11. The organization must have the scope of the entire university.

12. Each organization must follow the UW-System Budget and the Purchasing policies and procedures.

13. Budget must be written and presented by the student leaders of the organization . *

* The Intramural organization does not apply.

JoAnn Prange said that she feels that the proposal needs a few revisions but other than that she said it looks like it's going to be a very good proposal.

She also said that it is going to help organizations to make up guidelines to their meetings. It will help the students that are interested in the various organizations to find out what has happened in the different meetings.

The University of Wisconsin-Stout Power Club, was recognized by the SSA at the meeting and the SSA will read the Power Club's constitution and their by-laws and a proposal will be brought up on the club next week.

The University Power Club is a student organization of the University of Wisconsin-Stout. The club's purpose is to teach Stout Students the proper form of weightlifting. It also exposes the students to competitive power lifting at different levels.

The club is affiliated with the American Drug Free Power Lifting Association (ADFPA). This is a state wide organization that benefits young people in weight training.

(the committee outlined a program to organize an on campus group to help women from walking alone at night.)

The SSA has educated the students on the Columbian Relief Program and informed the students on the disaster. The SSA has also helped approve the Night Club Committee. The Night Club is a non-alcoholic alternative to going out to the local establishments in town. It provides a full dance floor that has appropriate lighting and good, popular music.

The first Night Club evening was in February and the second is going to be April 5, from 10 p.m. to 3 A.M. in the Great Hall of the Student Center.

Prange listed a significant number of contributions in the past year with the SSA. She is confident that the 16th congress of the SSA has been a success.

Reader/taping service seeks volunteers

Bridget Record
News Reporter

The reader/taping service of UW-Stout needs volunteers. It has been in existence for several years, and most students are not aware of its services.

According to Veronica Wrege, a UW-Stout junior who is involved in the program through work study, the service provides taped copies of textbooks for students with visual impairments, learning disabilities such as dyslexia, and severe physical disabilities. "Right now there are about 40 students who use the reader/taping service." says Wrege.

"There may be others who could benefit from the program but we do not know about them. There are also some students who may take a semester off and try to learn the material without the help of the service," Wrege said.

Right now, there are about forty students who use the reader taping service.
—Veronica Wrege

Christy Lendman, Assistant Director of the Services for Students with Disabilities, is Director of the Reader/Taping Service. Along with Wurge, and Joan Jensen, a graduate student in charge of the public relations aspect of the program, Lendman assists about 20 volunteers this semester.

Wrege said that the program receives about 75-80 percent of the taped textbooks from Recording For the Blind (RFB), and the Library of Congress. The remaining textbooks are taped by volunteers here on campus. Jansen is responsible for recruiting and training the voluteers.

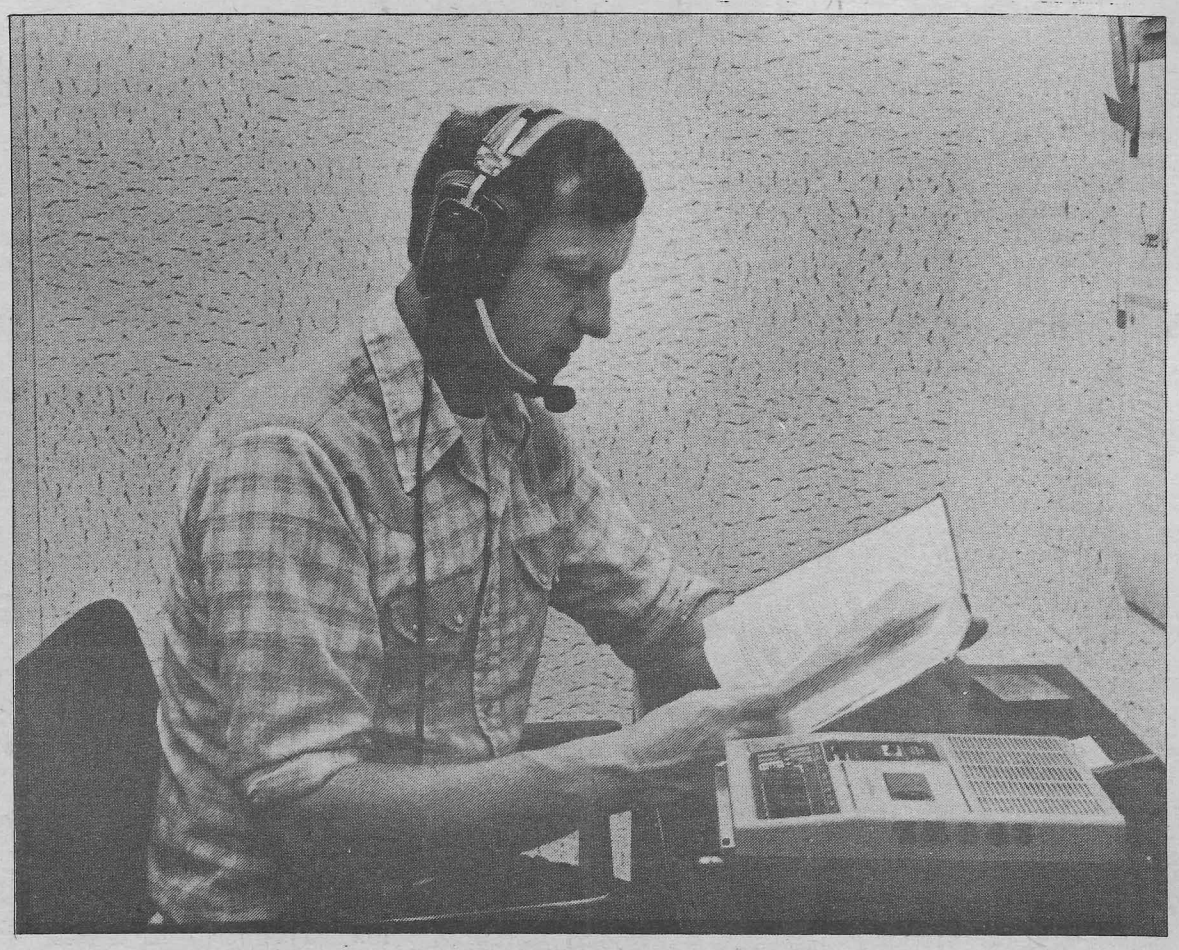
Visiting classrooms to inform students about the program, and sending letters to teachers are two of the methods the service uses to recruit volunteers. Wurge says that for some classes a student can receive credit for the volunteer work they do with the program.

She says that after the volunteers are recruited, they must complete a brief but thorough training process. This consists of viewing an orientation video tape, and making a test tape that gives the directors an idea of the reader's strong and weak points. "The reader must produce an easily understandable tape for the listeners. They must state where the headings, pages and chapters are located."

The reader/taping service came about in the late 70's as a program for a graduate thesis. Since then the service has undergone a few significant improvements, according to Wrege. She said that the reader/taping service was previously located in Ray Hall and now resides in the newly remodeled Administration Building. The program has been more successful since the move because the amount of background noise has been greatly reduced.

Wurge said that another step forward for the program was the use of the Watts Line. She explains that the Watts Line is a telephone hookup with RFB that the reader/taping service uses to order textbooks over, instead of through the mail.

According to Wrege, a development that is still in the planning stages is the computer delivery process. Wrege explains that this delivery process is a computerized ordering service between UW-Stout and RFB. The service would be able to print the order up right on the computer terminal and RFB would be able to send the tapes out that same day. She adds that this service will be very helpful in a case where a student drops a class and adds another. The reader/taping service must order a new taped textbook and the student would not recieve it until weeks into the course. With the computer service, the textbook would arrive in a couple of days.



Sophomore Gerry Bentzler is shown here reading and recording a textbook for students with learning or reading disabilities. Currently there are about 20 volunteers such as Bentzler who provide this service for about 40 students at Stout. The reader/taping service is orgainized by the Services for Students with Disabilities at Stout. (Stoutonia photo by Brad Kautzer)

The seminar speaker is Patricia Shirley, associate director of Psychiatric Social Services, Milwaukee County Mental Health. Refreshments will be served at 6:45 p.m. with the seminar running from 7-8 p.m. in the Maplewood Room (118) of the Student Center. The public is invited to attend.

Graphic arts fund-raiser

A fund-raising campaign to equip a new $3.1 million graphic arts facility has been announced by UW-Stout. The university plans to open the new 57,000 square foot facility in January 1987, according to James Herr, program coordinator. About 37,000 square feet will be devoted to classrooms and laboratories.

Herr said the national fund-raising campaign will target five groups — the graphic arts industry, private foundations, friends of the university, graduates of the program and parents of students. For more information contact Herr by calling (715) 235-2232.

Step out on A Chorus Line

University Theatre is sponsoring a trip to Chanhassen Sunday, April 6, to see Bob Fosse's A Chorus Line. Anyone interested in going is welcome to join the group. Tickets are $23 and should be reserved by talking to Natalie Bothwell, 117 C Harvey Hall, 632-2314.

A Chorus Line is a dance-filled musical based on the lives and experiences of Broadway dancers. It is the longest running show in the history of Broadway, the winner of nine Tony Awards, and winner of the Pulitzer Prize. The N.Y. Post called it "...a dazzling show; driving, compassionate and finally thrilling..."

"I'm sure it will be an experience you'll long remember," says Bothwell. "Chanhassen's productions are top professional quality, the food is delicious, and the whole experience delightful. I hope students take advantage of the opportunity."

The bus will leave Harvey Hall Circle at 2:30. Dinner will be at 4:30 and is included in the ticket price. Curtain is 6:30. Should be back to Menomonie about 10:30 p.m.

To make your reservation, call Natalie Bothwell at x1420 or at home, 632-2314. Tickets are limited so call soon.

build a building without walkways, and then see what traffic patterns will develop, but we had to make them and see what traffic patterns developed. There will be some changes. We are considering adding other walkways and stairs around the center. For instance, stairs are being considered for the south entrance on the lower level going up to CKTO Hall.

STOUTONIA: ARE HANDICAPPED PERSONS FINDING THAT SOME OF THE RAMPS ARE TOO STEEP TO TRAVEL ON SAFELY?

JOHNSON: The building is handicapped accessible. We have three or four of the ramps that meet all handicap code requirements. The steepness of the upper ramp on the north side of the building was a surprise. When the building was being built, we ran into problems, where we had to raise the building a few feet, and this ended up making some of the ramps not accessible to the handicapped. The building is accessible to the handicapped, but it is not as accessible as we had originally planned.

STOUTONIA: IS THERE A POSSIBILITY THAT SOME OF THE LOWER LEVEL SPACE COULD BE DEVELOPED INTO SOME SORT OF STUDENT BAR?

JOHNSON: The law currently eliminates some students from using the facility. The question arises that is it proper to provide the students with a facility that everyone is paying for where only a certain group of students will be able to use? I would like to see the space being used to meet the needs of the greatest number of people on a regular basis.

STOUTONIA: WILL ACTION BE TAKEN TO ELIMINATE THE CROWDEDNESS OF THE TERRACE CAFE?

JOHNSON: We have conducted many studies on this problem, and have found that it is only heavily congested for about 40 minutes, between about 12 noon to 12:40. We have made some changes. We have rearranged the furniture, we put in some deuce seating, and we've changed the configuration of the seating. We don't think that the facility should be enlarged for this small amount of peak time.

STOUTONIA: ARE YOU PLEASED WITH THE STUDENT CENTER AS A WHOLE?

JOHNSON: Generally, we are happy with the facility. We are concerned with the accoustics on the lower level by the Pawn. Also, we are going to work on the aesthetics of the Pawn. The loading dock is also causing some problems. It is not big enough, and we didn't anticipate the increased business volume.

STOUTONIA: DID THE SLOPED ROOF HOLD UP WELL DURING THE WINTER?

JOHNSON: Very well. We had some concerns early on, because we had some problems with snow blowing up in the roof vents that caused some water damage. This was corrected, and everything else worked well. The real test will be to see what shape it will be in ten to twenty years, when most flat roofs need to be repaired.

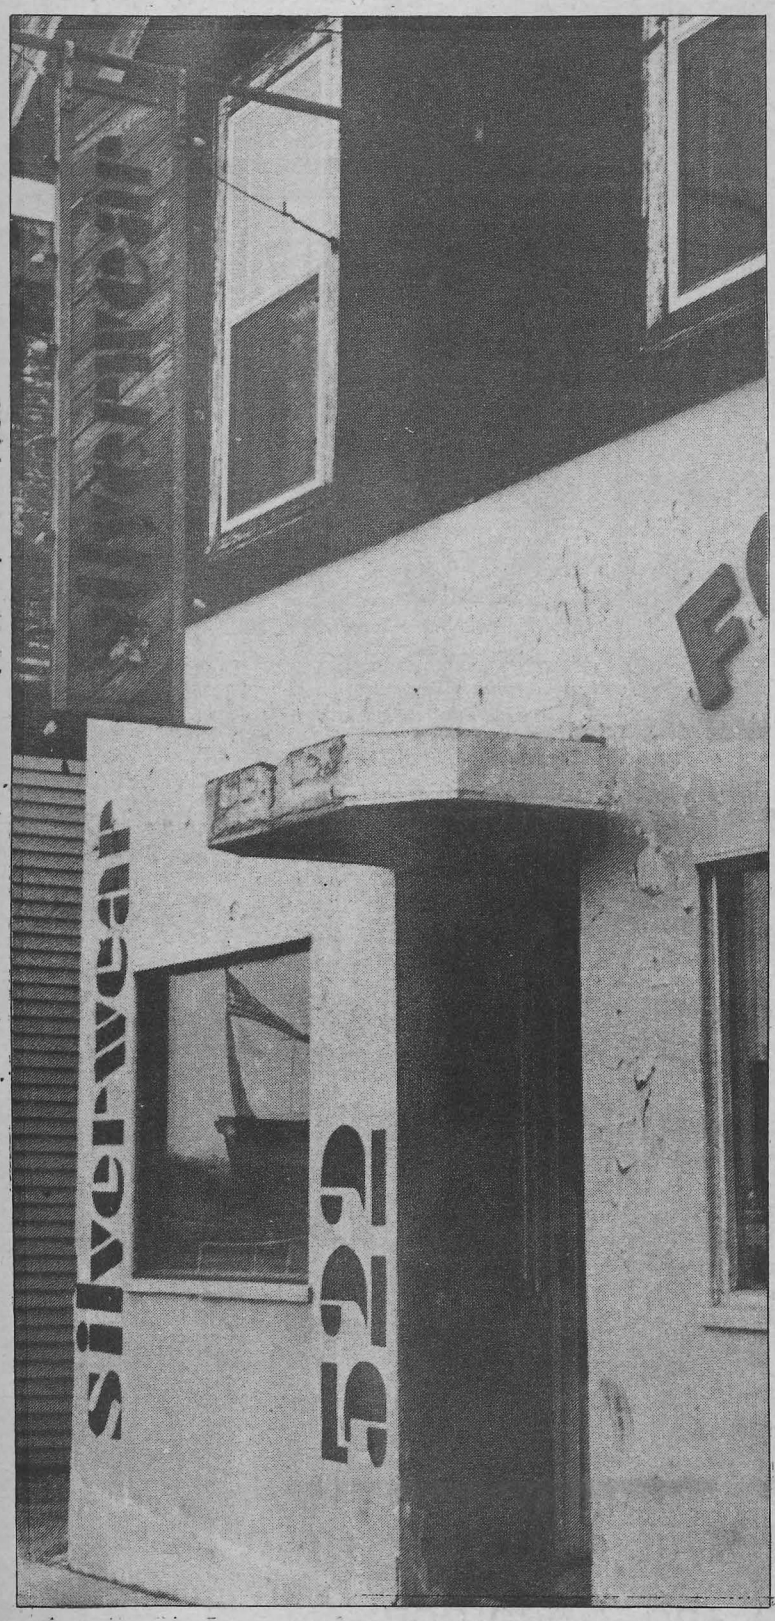
Arts

Jewelry design reflects individual tastes

Beth Reid
Arts Reporter

Diamonds are a girl's best friend, but the trends in jewelry seem to go with an individual's taste. "Everyone has their own likes and dislikes," Bob Giede, owner and creator of the Silverware Jewelry Store said, "but some things do tend to be more popular than others."

One of the main changes which has been seen in the past few years is the movement from silver to gold. "When I started, I was mainly dealing with setting agate and other semi-precious stones into sterling silver," Giede said, "but at the time the price of gold was high. Since then, the price has gone down and has stabilized, so more people are selecting gold settings for their stones."



Feature

Gold is much stronger than silver and is much better for life time jewelry and precious gems such as diamonds. "Silver has never been very popular for us," John Anshus, owner of Anshus Jewelers said, "it's too weak and it oxidizes and tarnishes too easily. It's strong in the low end market because it does give people a solid metal at a lower price, but it isn't used as much for wedding sets."

The strength of the gold is another factor to consider in selecting jewelry. The different karats include 10, 14, 18, 22 and 24. "The 10 karat is 35 percent less expensive than 14 carat," Anshus said, "because it has only 10 parts gold and 14 parts alloy. The 14 karat is more durable and is used for additional strength and life." The more gold that is in the jewelry, the more yellow it will be, but the 10 and 14 karat tend to be the most popular.

Another trend seen in jewelry is in the use of different colored stones. "Opals and rubies continue to be popular," Giede said, "but I've been getting a number of requests for other stones such as blue topaz, which is coming from Brazil and it isn't too expensive. We also see people using odd colors of sapphires and different colored rubies."

> The consumers are becoming more conscious and trying to educate themselves... to make better judgements in their selections,
> —John Anshus Jeweller

In looking at the styles and designs of jewelry, the trends seem to be according to an individual's own taste. "We in the Midwest tend to be more conservative when it comes to styles," Anshsus said. "Out on the coast they wear things which are a little more flashy and larger, but we don't see much of that here."

In the past, there was a trend towards designs of jewelry which were inspired by the baroque shape or the pattern of the stone. Giede still uses semi-precious stones of unusual shapes, but he is also executing his designs utilizing diamonds. His designs have developed into a refined style, with clean, free flowing lines. "My ideas come from the shape of the stone someone has selected," Giede said, "or from something I've seen somewhere. People often come in with their own ideas too. Then I draw sketches for them to approve and once they've done that, I develop a wax model of what the finished piece will look like."

People are also looking for quality in the jewelry. "The consumers are becoming more conscious and trying to educate themselves to make better judgements in their selections," Anshus said, "We find that they are reaching for quality diamonds rather than something that's just low in price."

In selecting diamonds, one of the most important factors is the cut. "There is a big difference in diamonds," Anshus said. "There are a number of poor cut stones coming from India, which can be high in color and clarity, but they are cut so poorly that the value drops tremendously in value." A well cut stone will give off a great amount of brilliance and a good cut can determine as much as 70 percent of the value. "If the cut isn't there," Anshus said, "you will never get the same brilliance as an ideal cut diamond."

Jewelry reflects the personality of the wearer and the best thing to do is select the styles and colors which the individual feels most comfortable wearing. "A large piece looks out of proportion on a small feminine hand," Giede said, "and a small piece looks odd on someone who is larger. Rather than going with the styles that everyone else is wearing, it's better to look at the different designs and pick one which you will enjoy wearing."

Small fry creative cuisine

Linda Konkol

"Kids are natural cooks," says Harper's Bazaar. Why not nurture this culinary creativity by inviting some small fry into your kitchen? The result can be fun for you and educational for the kids.

Dr. Priscilla Huffman, Program Director for Early Childhood Education, mentions several benefits kids can gain from working with food. Children can learn a bit of math (measuring), science (physical changes of food during cooking), and English (new vocabulary words).

They can also learn about colors, shapes, and sizes, and experimenting with various forms of food will bring out their creativity. Kids are much more likely to try a new food if they've helped prepare it (although they'll still be suspicious of green foods).

Dr. Huffman says that even a child of two can start doing simple tasks in the kitchen, like turning a hand beater, stirring, pouring, sifting, and decorating.

Around age three, kids can start following simple "recipes," like making instant pudding. Another easily prepared food for young children to make is butter. Simply pour whipping cream into jars. Put lids on and shake until the cream turns into butter.

Older children can handle more advanced procedures, but keep several things in mind when choosing recipes to make with kids. Because kids often have short attention spans, choose recipes with only a few steps. Also, choose foolproof recipes to avoid disappointing disasters.

Kids think tiny and conceptualize small quantities. If a recipe makes six servings or more, cut it in half.

If using recipe cards, keep instructions short and clear. Picture symbols, single words, and short phrases make recipes easy for a young child to "read."

If cooking with more than one child, give each one a different segment of the recipe to do; save the more complex steps for yourself.

Teach the importance of cleanliness in the kitchen by washing hands before you begin cooking. Use only tasting spoons for trying the food during preparation, not fingers. Keep a sponge or wipe-up rag handy for spills.

Safety should also be considered when cooking with kids. Dr. Huffman says children can start using knives and heating appliances around age four if there's one-on-one adult supervision.

Avoid using dull or plastic knives as they can slip and cut more easily than sharpened knives. Teach children to pick up knives by the handles and cut away from themselves.

Provide a hand rest for the extra hand when children are cooking with a heat source. Stress the importance of keeping pot, pan, and skillet handles turned away from the edge of the range to prevent pans from tipping over.

Here are a couple of easily prepared, fun recipes to try with young cooks. Encourage kids to take out their frustrations on the Aggression cookie dough instead of you, and invite them to be creative in working with this edible playdough.

Aggression Cookies

3 cups oatmeal
1 1/2 cups brown sugar
1 1/2 cups flour
1 1/2 cups margarine, softened
1 1/2 tsp. baking powder

Dump all ingredients in a large bowl. Mix by mashing it, kneading it, and pounding it. The longer and harder you mix it, the better it tastes. Roll dough into small balls. Bake on cookie sheets at 350 for 10 to 12 minutes.

Peanut Butter Playdough

1 cup peanut butter
1 tbsp. honey
1 cup nonfat dry milk

Mix well. Keep adding nonfat dry milk until dough feels soft, not sticky. Form into shapes. May also roll or pat flat and cut out shapes with cookie cutters.

Variations

-Cocoa or carob powder can be added for chocolate flavor.

-Raisins, miniature marshmallows, or chopped peanuts may be added or used to decorate finished shapes.

Lyra-Concert Series

The Lyra Concert is a newly established Baroque Orchestra devoted to the performance of 17th and 18th century music on period instruments.

Directed by Randy Bourne, Associate Music Director at Minnesota Public Radio (KSON-FM), the Lyra Concert orchestra brings new life to old music of Handel, Bach, Corelli, Telemann and others.

The Mabel Tainter Theatre, with funding from First Bank and Trust in Menomonie, is fortunate enough to host a three concert series. There is still one concert left to enjoy.

The farewell to the Bach Tercentenary will be held on Sunday, April 6 at 3:00 p.m. at the Mabel Tainter Theatre. Tickets will be $10.00 for an individual and $5.00 for a student with an I.D.

Tour Italy

A tour of three Italian cities will be sponsored by the UW-Stout art department Sept. 16-29. The itinerary includes a visit to the international furniture exhibit in Milan plus trips to Florence and Venice.

The Milan exhibition is an annual event, attracting all disciplines within the design field. Orazio Fumagalli from the Stout art department will provide guided tours of the three cities, with emphasis on the history of the architecture.

Cost of the tour is $1,460 and includes a round trip flight departing and returning to Minneapolis: hotel accommodations for 12 nights; daily continental breakfast and dinners for 12 nights; transportation within Italy; and sightseeing.

To reserve space, a deposit of $300 is requested by April 23.

Participants also have the option of earning two academic credits for the tour. Additional information can be obtained by contacting Jean Starkweather, Art Department, UW-Stout, Menomonie, Wi 54751, phone (715) 232-1141.

Dakota Theatre Caravan

The Dakota Theatre Caravan began in 1977 with a grant from the South Dakota Arts Council. They organized with a philosophy of creating plays about and for the people of the great plains.

The Caravan's productions tend to concentrate on content and performance rather than the more technical aspects of theatre. Their use of minimal sets has made their plays easy to tour with while freeing the audiences' imagination.

The performance, funded by Arts Midwest, can be seen in the Great Hall of the Memorial Student Union on Tuesday, April 8 at 8:00 p.m.

University Archives preserves area history

Beth Reid
Arts Reporter

The University Archives, located on the third floor of the library is a resource center filled with historical information. Gayle Martinson, Stout's university archivist is the administrator of the center and also acts as the director of the Area Research Center on campus.

"As an archivist, I am responsible for a number of different things," Martinson said. "The archives collects materials, preserves them in acid-free boxes, processes them and puts a majority of the material on microfiche." The original information may be in the form of diaries, letters, photographs, manuscripts and business and government records.

One of Martinson's major reponsibilities is in preserving the materials donated to the archives. This involves sorting through the materials and removing duplicate files and irrelevant information. "We can often reduce the collection of materials from one-third to one-half," Martinson said. "This makes it much easier to handle and to store."

The materials which are stored are not all old documents. "The documents that are more recent will serve people in the future," Martinson said. "They will aid people in their research in the coming years."

Another responsibility of Martinson's is assisting people and serving as a reference person. She helps them to locate the necessary materials for a research project they are working on and directs them to areas where they may be able to obtain more information. "One of our most popular requests is doing geneology research," Martinson said. "We have requests from people throughout the area who wish to learn about their family histories. We also get requests from people through the mail for assistance with family research."

Martinson enjoys geneology research because the people get really excited about what they're learning. "They are learning about themselves and the information they find has personal significance," Martinson said.

The archives are also used for local and area history research, resource for student and faculty projects, and papers which deal with Stout's history.

"The archives have a great value," Martinson said, "because the materials we have are original documents. It's not like in history books, where someone has gone through the documents and interpreted them and recorded what they think the documents mean. These are the originals, to be read and interpreted by the person using them."

The materials in the archives are listed under subject headings in the Automated Library Information System (ALIS). A more complete listing of the the holdings can be found in the guides to the archive's and Finder's Aid, available in the ARC.

The archives are open to the public Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Those doing research and who would like additional assistance can also call Gayle Martinson at 232-2300 to make an appointment.

Instructor Price balances teaching, artistic freedom

The Stout Art Department has many dedicated staff members. For Rob Price teaching is the title that allows him to earn a living. He finds teaching gives him the life style he prefers as an artist.

Price said, "I started off as an artist because nothing else seemed to allow me the range of independance and freedom to explore and make choices for myself." He found nothing else gave him fulfillment and happiness.

Teaching for Price is nothing new. "It's the consistancy in my life." he reflected. Both his parents were teachers and having spent most of his life in an educational community made it an easy choice.

Price also enjoys the mature and inspiring atmosphere of the college community. Teacher/student interaction in both formal and informal situations is a learning experience for all involved he feels. He finds the Stout community very adaptive to this kind of interaction.

"The gratification of teaching is seeing that happen." Price said in reference to a student's success. Looking back at the change in students from a begining drawing class to a final exhibition is a delight for him knowing he was a part of it.

> —Rob Price
> Art instructor

"I like interaction in interval measures." Price stated. Teaching allows him to be alone when he needs to to work on his own art. He feels, "I'm not a loner but I can be when I need to work."

A gallery in Chicago now has a display of Rob Price's work. Developed paintings and constructed paintings were the start of his displays. They now tend towards developing works out of print making techniques.

"I mix materials and add my own hand made paper to work into a print," Price described. These all become independent works on paper giving him more room to develope a finished piece then move on to another.

After seeing one of Price's works at Purdue an art dealer from New York contacted him to find out more of what he was doing. "I'd be happy to have her handle it for me." he said. This may lead to

F.A.A. promotes art in numerous ways

Karen Heagle
Arts Reporter

There is an organization on campus that centers on the fine arts. The club's current president, Roger Daleiden said this about the club, "Our club is promoting art on campus in several ways." The club is the Fine Arts Association, and the ways they promote art are through presentations, workshops, and lectures by established artists.

In addition, the club sponsors the purchasing of student works that are put into a permanent collection. Daleiden explained that it is done "so the university has a kind of history of the art students who have gone through here." It also generates interest in the students.

Although few students are aware of it, the Fine Arts Association is open to all students, regardless of whether they are art majors or not.

"Our biggest problem is people aren't aware that we exist," says Daleiden, "Some are just intimidated because they feel if they're not artists they are outsiders."

Daleiden reviewed the year. The F.A.A. year opened with a presentation by a former Stout art student, Dennis Allen Jones. Jones is a photographer currently residing in California. Jones' subject of choice is the punk rock scene. He goes to bars and clubs, and photographs these people as he visits, and gets to know them.

Daleiden said in regards to Jones, "It was great to have somebody who went to school here come back, because he can show people what you can do after you graduate."

Another major event which was highly successful was Operation Dance. The group sponsored a dance to raise funds for a graduate of Stout's Industrial Design program. The club was assisted by many volunteers and raised 800 dollars. The dance featured two bands.

A maskmaker as well as performer, Robert Faust performed a show sponsored by F.A.A. Faust creates masks out of paper mache, fiber glass and other mediums, and using simple props such as a sheet, performs the feeling conveyed by a particular mask which he wears. His masks ranged from scary and mysterious to humorous masks.

The organization is looking forward to it's spring events. April 10 and 11 they will host a husband and wife pairing of artists. Bruce, a metalsmith and Chris, a ceramic sculptor, will present a slide lecture at 7 p.m. in Room 321. The two will also present a workshop.

During Parent's Weekend the Fine Arts Association will present a Fine Arts Festival. The festival will feature art shows, refreshments, entertainment including jugglers and singers, and

> Our biggest problem is people aren't aware that we exist,
> —Roger Daleiden
> FAA President

what Daleiden believes is one of the most exciting events, a Raku primitive firing demonstration.

The ceramics classes will be firing these pieces in a large garbage can. This primitive firing creates dazzling effects on ceramics. It will be held between the Tech Wing of Jarvis Hall, and Applied Arts. Both members and non-members are invited to attend.

The festival will be held April 19, and if last year's festival is any indication, this should be a very successful event.

The last event that F.A.A. will sponsor, along with the Industrial Designers Society of America, this year will be a sculptor who makes non-functional furniture. Non-functional furniture includes couches, tables and stools that were made for viewing only.

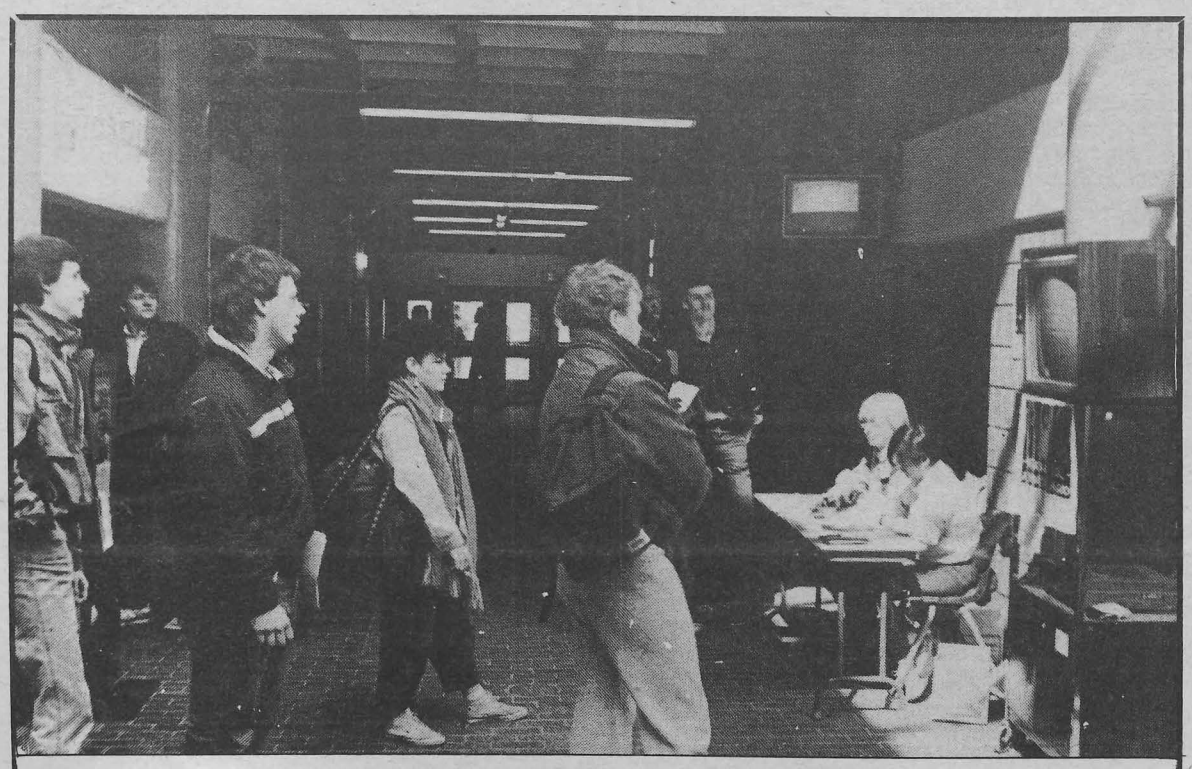
In recent months the SSA has been questioning whether certain liberal arts groups should continue to be funded. The F.A.A is one of these groups. The issue is: is this group a special interest group, therefore not broad enough to interest enough students that it qualifies for SSA funding.

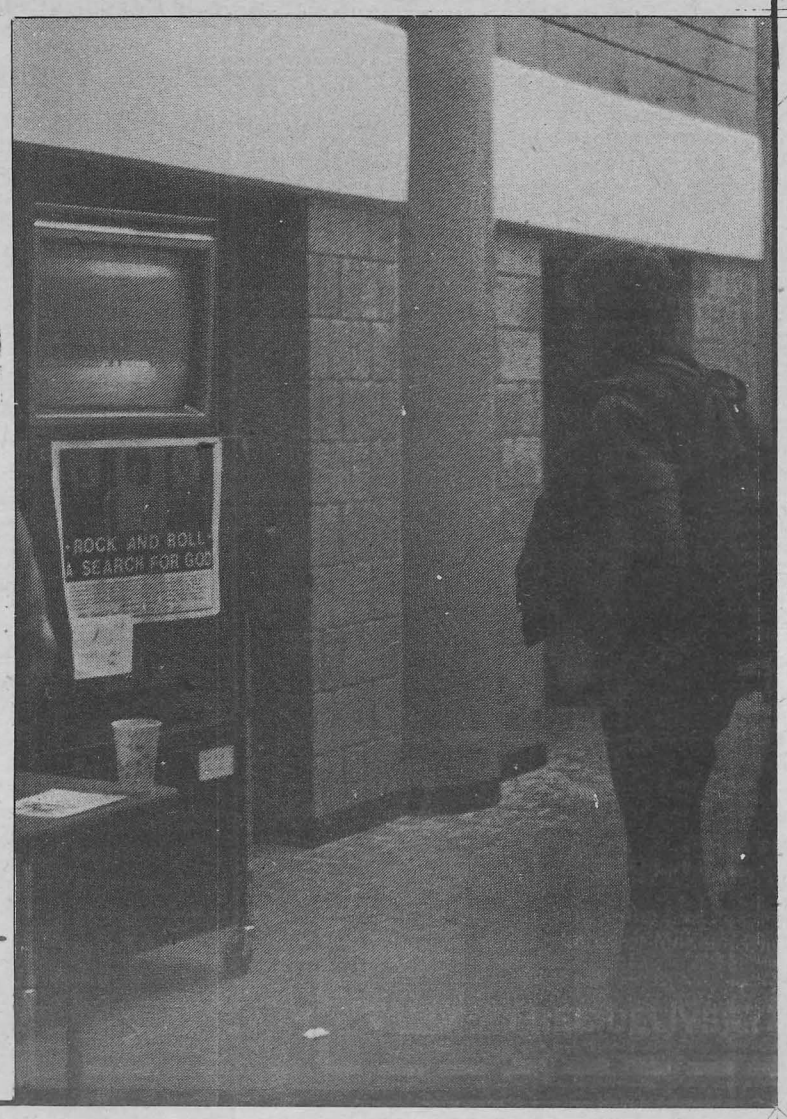
Daleiden responded with his view, "Every funded group is a special interest group in its own right. Intramurals for instance, are particularly interested in sports, and people who aren't interested in sports are not going to get any benefit from it."

Daleiden feels that the concern is too much with the "head count", the amount of members, of these clubs rather than the value of such clubs. "There are over 500 art students in this school and this club provides them the opportunity to do what they're interested in."

As of right now Daleiden is reasonably confident they will continue to receive funding from SSA, "I think we are a positive influence on this campus; we just need more interaction with the SSA sentators."

The Fine Arts Association currently has 40 members and invites members to join anytime, art-majors, and non-art majors. Daleiden believes that it takes very little effort to be a member of this group, and there are no dues, but most importantly he explains, "The fine arts are about creativity. Any student can use that to their advantage in life."





MALL VIDEOS --

The show was called Rock and Roll - The Search for God. Running daily in the Student Center on videotape, the message was highly publicized with flyers and posters. For three nights there was a slide presentation on the same topic. Students viewing the program were a common sight as were the flyers, many of which became litter. Student comments ranged from agreement with the questionable morality of some rock lyrics to laughter at the fear of music and the out-of-context approach of the presentation. For Those About to Rock

The Boss of rock and roll

David Chase

"I saw rock and roll future, and it's name is Bruce Springsteen."
April 1974, Rolling Stone
John Landau, Writer/Critic

Bruce Springsteen, a name that is familiar all over the world. No matter where you go in America, you will hear, read or see something that has to do with Springsteen. Why is The Boss so popular? For several reasons.

Springsteen is one of the most outstanding composers in rock and roll. His songs reach so deep within himself that not only does the music become part of him, but he becomes part of the music.

You may not see this quality quite as clearly in his Born In The USA Lp, but his skills as a writer are very apparent in albums such as Born To Run and Darkness On The Edge Of Town. His songs are real and hit close to home.

Springsteen is also an excellent performer. I have yet to see a band that can top Springsteen in concert. He plays for well over three hours at each performance and never denies his audience an encore or two, or three. You haven't experienced The Boss until you have seen him in concert.

I have seen The Boss twice, once in 1978, and again in 1982. Both times I saw him he played for three and a half hours. Both times he gave three encores, each resulting in a climax of it's own. Just when you think he can't go on anymore, he finds the energy for still another song.

Another reason for Springsteen's popularity is his E Street Band. With members like Clarence Clemons and Steve Van Zandt, (now replaced by Nils Lofgren), how could he go wrong?

But the biggest reason for the popularity of Springsteen is that rock and roll was looking for a leader. One person that could be put aside from all the rest as the "new Dylan" or "new Elvis". One person that could define the music of a new generation. We can be thankful that Michael Jackson was not the choice.

Especially here in the United States, The Boss is looked at as a kind of symbol. Hot dogs, apple pie and Bruce Springsteen. The U.S. waited a long time before claiming the top act in rock and roll. Not since Elvis or Dylan has America had the idol that is recognized throughout the world as the best.

You may not think he is the best, I don't think he's the best, but millions of people do. That's why he's The Boss.

Let's say you are not to fond of your face, and you have decided to get the shit beat out of you, a sort of face lift, here is what you do... Walk into a bar, let's say The Spot. Go into The Spot with a picture of Bruce Springsteen and yell "Springsteen sucks". Then rip up his picture and burn it, this should be sufficient enough for an immediate facelift.

This may be slightly exaggerated, but only slightly. There are so many avid Springsteen fans that one does not dare to change the station during one of his songs in fear of becoming unpopular.

Some say the Springsteen phenomenon will pass, I don't think so, at least not for a long while. There is too much talent in him to be put aside and forgotten. No, Bruce Springsteen is much more than a passing fad, The Boss is a legend.

broader recognition but presently he is waiting for further word.

Upon graduation from Ohio University, Price taught there for a year then came to Stout. He has been here for 12 years teaching basic and advanced drawing and filling the gap teaching art history classes.

Five years ago he went to teach in London and is making plans to go again in the 87-88 school year. "I brought some new things back about teaching I know that resulted from being in a different situation along with different views in my mind about what it means to be an American." Price reflected.

Escapes are important to him so he can be refreshed and ready to face new students. Price said "I like to go to California to be with my family." Begining with someone new and working to see things happen is his delight as a teacher.

"When I look back I'm getting this sort of historic tunnel to think about." he recalled. Price first came in 1970 to help develope the printing program. He plans to remain to see more developments and become a part of the the deeper sence, or roots, of this community.

Price loves to be outdoors, not so much winters, but the Wisconsin spring, summer and fall. The rural town atmosphere of Menomonie he enjoys because he grew up in a small town.

Other pastimes include canoeing rivers, jogging, gardening, fishing, bike riding, walking, playing tennis, traveling and live music.

Spirits high for baseball's home opener

Louie Filkins
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout baseball team will open up their home season with a double-header against St. Mary's College Saturday at 1:30. Sunday the Blue Devils travel to St. Paul to take on Hamline University.

This will be the first game for Stout since their return from the 9 win-10 loss spring break southern trip. The Blue Devils all-time record against St. Mary's is identical(9-10), which dates back to 1924. Stout has won four of the last six meetings between the two schools. Last year they split their double-header.

Starting first-baseman, Scott Aschenbrenner, said the following about the upcoming game, "They are a tough hitting team but their pitching is weak. If our bats are hot, we should win both games."

Stout's Sports Information Director, Jeff Bjork, also commented on the game, "St. Mary's has a junior-dominated team which gives them a little experience. They have a strong baseball tradition; however, it's only the coach's second year with the team."

Stout has only played Hamline once in the last ten years. It was in 1983 and the Blue Devils split two games, winning 7-2, and losing 9-13. The "Pipers" have been a thorn in Stout's side. Since 1914 the Blue Devils have won only two out of eight games played against Hamline.

The warm weather earlier this week enabled the team to have their first outdoor practice of the season. Pitcher John Rademaker, who is now nicknamed, "Rallymaker", after the spring trip said, "The field was in good condition, it was nice to be outside again."

Greg Osowski leads the team in hits with 22, Jeff Kloes follows with 21. Kloes has a chance to break the all-time hit record for Stout this year. He is currently in seventh place with 103 hits. The record is 142.

Osowski may also have his name scribed in the record books after this season. He has scored 67 runs, the record is 101 and "Ozzie" is only a junior this year.

Senior Jim Miller might capture the stolen bases this season, he has 25. Joe Vavra(1980-1982) holds the record with 33. Jeff Kloes has 80 RBI's and leads the team this year with 20. He is 22 shy of the record set by Duane Ruff in 1980-1983.

The Blue Devils move on to a scrimmage with Anoka Ramsey next Friday and then return home to play UW-Eau Claire next Saturday, April 12, and St. Thomas College on April 13.

Men netter's improve team record with recent victory over St. Cloud

Paul Wehking
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout men's tennis team rolled on as they defeated the Huskies of St. Cloud State 8-1 last Friday in St. Cloud.

Judging by the score, one would believe that the Stout netters dealt a thorough trouncing to their competitors, but this was not necessarily the case. Four of the nine varsity matches went three sets before any winners were determined. Apparently, Coach Bob Smith's expectations of a strong Huskie team were correct.

"St. Cloud is a big school. With a school that size we never expect to blow them away," Smith said.

In singles play, Mike Friedman grabbed the first set of his match 6-4 and then went cold, dropping the second set 0-6 to his opponent. Friedman then regained his composure and came back to win the third set 6-3 and consequently win the match.

Tony Pheifer went three sets with his competitor before claiming his match win. Extra player, Bill Johnson, came back after losing his first set 4-6, to defeat his opponent 6-3, 6-2 in the second and third sets respectively.

Junior John Leehy, smashed his opponent, scoring 6-1 victories in both the first and second sets to tally the largest margin of victory for the day. "I was playing really well and he (opponent) was a freshman and inexperienced," Leehy said in reference to his match.

Number one player, Rob Oertel, who has been hampered in earlier play by a hip injury, felt that his game was starting to come together. "I had to sit out for a while with my injury but now I'm getting my timing back and am playing better," Oertel said. He won his singles match 6-4, 6-3.

St. Cloud racked up their only victory in doubles play. Number one team, Oertel and Friedman, lost in two sets and a tie breaker to the Huskie's Sadik Sendich and Mark Smith. The Blue Devil pair dropped their first match 3-6. The second set went to the 7-6 mark calling for a tie breaker which Oertel and Friedman eventually lost 7-6.

The number two doubles pair of Leehy and Mark Paine also went three sets, but they emerged victoriously after winning the third set 6-3. Joel Vogler and Jarrod Barnard, the number three doubles team, left the court after two sets defeating their opponents 6-4, 6-3.

"Their doubles lineup played very well. They were strong in every slot," Smith said.

This weekend Smith will further test the depth of his Blue Devil squad as half the team will go the Augustana Tournament in Rockford, Ill, while the other half will remain here in Stout to compete in the Blue Devil Invitational.

When asked how the team would be divided, Smith said, "We will send down (to Augustana) a good representative team that should do well."

Oertel does not share this opinion. Rather he feels that the first team should compete at Augustana. "Our top team has to go down there if we want to win, the competition is very good," Oertel said.

Opponents arriving at Stout for net competition include Universities of Minnesota, Duluth and Mankato, UW-Green Bay, and UI-Chicago while opponents at Augustana are expected to be of higher caliber.

Out of Bounds

NCAA disappointment

Rochelle Buhr

Monday evening, I cruised up to a friend's dorm room to watch the NCAA tournament.

He had a color TV in his room, so do I, but his room was filled with basketball enthusiasts, while mine contained only my roommate studying in our hacked over chair.

I wanted to be a part of this "real" basketball audience, for I thought that these people could enlighten me on new basketball jargon, wild hoop strategies, and how to open a beer bottle with the tracks on a dorm window.

I sat there waiting for the game to begin while CBS made us watch some nauseating early season basketball highlights with Barbra Streisand crooning in the background music.

Barbra and basketball just don't bounce.

Then when they introduced the players on each team, they had each starter's signature appear on the screen.

We all booed at this. Most people, including myself, can't write their names legibly. CBS did a bonehead mistake in not providing translations to all their chicken scratch.

Their signatures were revealing. Amateur handwriting analysizers everywhere were taking notes on loops, t crosses, and angles, so the real deranged players on the teams could be identified.

Well, now back to the game.

In the opening minutes the game appeared to be your general final in a NCAA championship. Leaping lay-ups, rotten calls, and jittery off-target passes, made the fans I was with shoot spit with loose beer lips, all the time yelling at their team that they had one dollar riding on. (Like this really helps.)

In fact I caught myself doing the same thing. It was somewhat embarassing, but nobody could see that my face was red. The neon red beer light hid this well.

I really wanted Duke to win. I think that even Brent Musberger wanted Duke to win. He said that Duke boys' Jay Bilas and Mark Alarie could be models for GQ magazine. Yeah, I thought to myself, even though they did look like Lerch's cousins.

Maybe Duke could have pulled it off if Louisville freshman Pervis Ellison could have thrown up before the game. His nickname is "Never Nervous", but all of us watching the game endearingly tagged him Pervert.

Pervert scored 25 points, pulled down 11 rebounds, blocked two shots for the Cardinals and was named the MVP of the title game. He deserved the award, even though he was a frosh, and wasn't supposed to be so great.

Who were those guys licking ice cream in the stands? They were eating vanilla ice cream cones.

I don't care anyway. I have no desire to know and/ or meet men who like to actually order and enjoy vanilla (of all flavors) ice cream.

The end of the game was exciting like it always is. It wasn't quite as exciting as the Villanova-Georgetown final last year, but it was entertaining.

I hate it when they show the losers hanging their heads low on the benches. Especially when they were my losers, my team, my Duke, the one that I had picked to win it all.

Duke should have won. They had the WASP name, the clean southern image, and a friend of my that went there.

The hell with the NCAA's. Duke should have run for president.

Bowler's enthusiastic despite sectional loss

Wendy Johnson
Sports Reporter

By placing third at the bowling sectionals as an individual, UW-Stout's Mark Shady will be off to Las Vegas May 2-4 to bowl at nationals. The men's bowling team did not qualify for nationals, placing seventh at Roselle, Ill., for sectionals.

Stout's bowling team was in Roselle, Ill. Mar.14-15 to bowl in the National Bowling Council sectional tournament. March 14 they bowled eight games, and on March 15 Stout bowled four games plus nine games using the Baker System. The Baker System is where ten frames are bowled with each bowler bowling two frames.

"The Baker System is to show how good you are as a team," a Stout bowling team member, Keith Andes commented.

The bowling team has placed second in the nation for the second highest individual score as a team. Stout bowled this score Mar. 15 in the llu game with a score of 1182.

Mark Shady, Jeff Barth, Glen Senge , Bill Mc Farlane, Keith Andes and Rich Landreman were the Stout members that participated in the tournament.

Shady commented, "We bowled well as a team, but not well enough to win. There were a lot of tough teams at the tournament and we bowled the best Stout has done in the past years."

Shady bowled a 267, which was the teams highest score for the tournament. Shady said, "I was suprised how well I did. It was the best I have ever bowled in my life in a tournament." Shady also won the title for the highest average for total pins.

Shady competed at nationals last year, where he placed fifth. Shady's experience will pay off at the National tournament in Las Vegas. His goal is to place in the top eight.

Stout puts on a campus tournament every year to find the best bowlers to advance to regionals. The tournament has the bowlers bowl nine games, and the top six winners are then chosen for regionals.

Stout's mens bowling team traveled to Chicago in February to participate in regionals at the University of Illinois. They placed first in a field of 16 teams.

Stout's women bowlers did not qualify for sectionals as a team; however, Cindy Cherek qualified as an individual. Cherek went on to place third at regionals, which did not permit her to advance to the national tournament.

The bowling team improved their average this year to 200 compared to last year's 184. A junior at Stout, Bill McFarlane, president of the bowling club, feels that Stout will have a good bowling team next year because of their improved play this year. Also Shady said, "We should have a strong team because we have five out of six bowlers returning."

The bowling club, which is different from the bowling team, was formed for the first time this year. The club's main purpose is to organize bowlers of all abilities to participate in bowling related activities, to earn money for the club, and join in some other non-bowling activities.

The club organized a bowling Fun Nite where it offered club members three free games of bowling, and awarded door prizes such as t-shirts, free games of bowling, and bowling towels.

The bowling club also started Stout's first collegiate bowling tournament which is called the Annual Blue Devil Classic. There are 11 men's teams and five women's teams that compete for the championshIp. This year UW-La Crosse won in both men's and women's categories to be able to take home the title.

A problem the club has found is that people feel they are not good enough to join. But McFarlane commented, "The club is not just for good bowlers, it is for everyone. We have people with averages around 120-200."

The club is organizing a brat stand for parents weekend for one of their fund-raisers.

The club also plans meets with other Universities in the area. Some of the bigger tournaments they are considering bowling in 1986-87, are in Whitewater, Milwaukee, and one of the biggest collegiate bowling tournaments held in St. Louis.

Texas wins NCAA title

The Lady Longhorns upset the University of Southern California 97-81 and ended their season with a perfect record of 34-0. Clarissa Davis, from Texas, was also named outstanding player of the Final Four of the NCAA Women's basketball championship.

Mahaffey wins TPC

John Mahaffey beat Larry Mize in the Tournament Players Championship and earned $162,000 from the total purse of $900,000. Mize lost the tournament due to a string of three bogeys starting on hole 14.

Michigan grabs NCAA hockey title

Michigan State won the NCAA hockey title after beating Harvard 6-5. This is the third straight year that someone other than a Western Collegiate Hockey Association team has won the title.

Becker defeats Lendl

Boris Becker defeated top-ranked Ivan Lendl in Sundays Volvo-Chicago Tennis Tournament 7-5, 6-3. With this win the 18-year-old West German earned $50,000. Becker is ranked fifth in the world and had not beaten Lendl in their four previous matches.

Vuckovich retires

Pete Vuckovich, former Cy Young Award winner, retired Sunday after having surgery done on his shoulder. Vuckovich will still be working for the Milwaukee Brewers as an instructor and a scout.

Hacky Sack: 'Frisbee of the Eighties'

Louie Filkins
Sports Reporter

The same surge of balmy weather that swept over the midwest and abolished what dirty snowbanks were left last weekend, also lured hundreds of winter-sickened students out of the confines of their rooms. Some volleyed, some pedalled, some threw, some ran, some slammed, and yes there was even a distinct group that dared to "hack".

The term "hack" refers to "Hacky Sack", a popular brand name that has become synonymous with the sport of footbag. It has been called the "Frisbee of the Eighties", and it's popularity is growing rapidly. Footbagging involves keeping a small leather bean bag like sack in the air by using only the feet and knees. The bag is less than two inches in diameter and weighs about an ounce.

According to an article in Footbag World, the sport actually originated in 2597 B.C. Chinese emperor Hwang Ti, the father of footbag, invented this game using an elliptical hair-filled leather object. Malaysians have played a game something like tennis and footbag combined by kicking a six inch ball of woven palm stems over a five foot high net.

However, American ingenuity took claim to footbag as we know it today. John Stalberger and his friend Mike Marshall started kicking a bean bag up in the air as therapy for Stalberger's injured knee. When they wanted to play, they'd say, "Let's hack the sack." Thus, the name Hacky Sack originated.

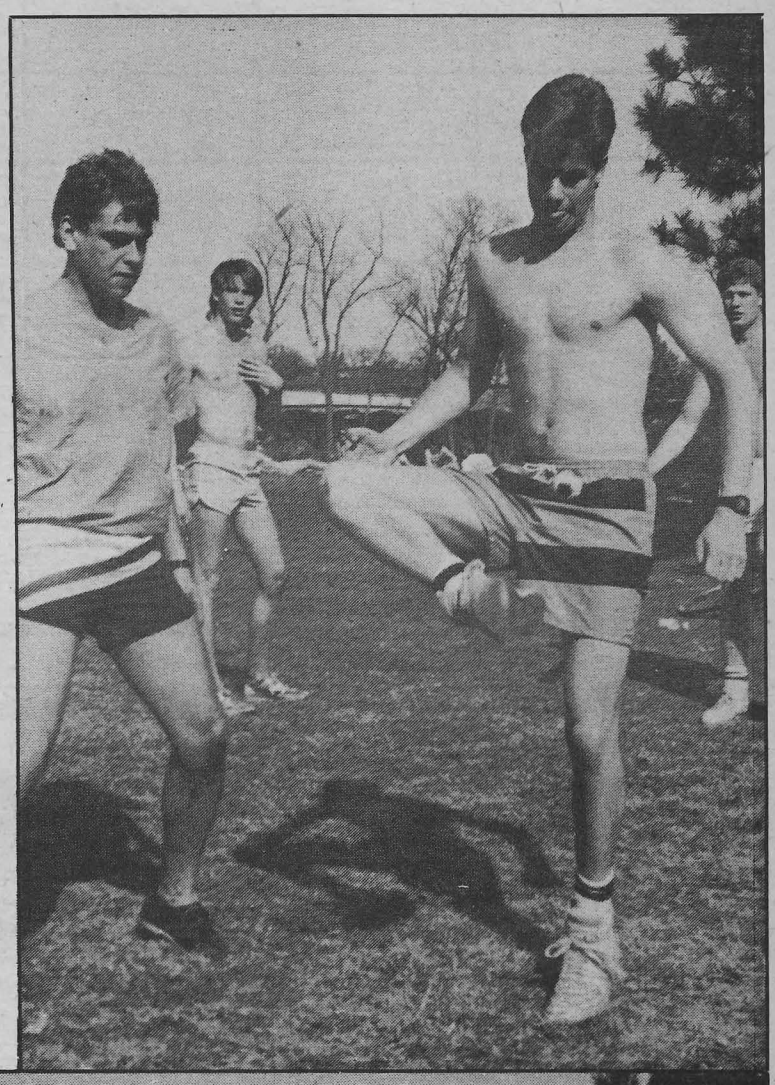
They discovered that bean bags weren't too durable, the demin cover wore through and the beans got wet and soggy. The two finally came up with a leather pouch filled with plastic pellets. They applied for a patent in 1975 and footbag was on it's way. Unfortunately, Marshall never lived to see the expansion of this sport, he died of a heart attack later in 1975. He was 28 years old.

Since then, footbag has grown to be popular in other places around the world. Last year's National Footbag Championships at Golden, Co. gave away $10,000 in prize money. Stout student Joe Kutzke said the following about the sport, "It's getting so you see those darn things everywhere."

Forms of competition range from footbag tennis, freestyle, doubles, and even footbag golf. The world record for consecutive hits keeping a footbag in the air is held by Andy Linder of Illinois. He kept the footbag in the air for five and one half hours compiling 32,598 hits before it hit the ground. The physical exertion alone of this feat would be overwhelming.

Footbag is a sport that takes only one person. It is very cheap to get into, about six dollars for a bag, and some court shoes(which are not really necessary). It doesn't require much room, and it exercises both sides of the body. Learning to "sack" can take a little practice, and at times can be quite frustrating.

Then again, most forms of helpful exercise do take some work. With a bit of patience, footbag can not only be a sport, but it can be an actual social activity. Since the participants often stand in a circle, B.S. and beverage sipping can frequently be seen among casual "hackers". So, don't be intimidated by inexperience, and don't be shy. Kicking one's legs wildly up in the air and looking like a wounded chicken is half the fun.



(Right) hackers Mike Detries and Matt Mazanec perform fancy footwork while they enjoyed the unseasonable warm weather. (Bottom) Riverside park became "Hacker heaven" for this group of college hack enthusiasts. Hacky Sack involves keeping a small leather bean bag airborne by using only the feet and knees. Changes being made to improve Fieldhouse

Kim Steger
Sports Reporter

Existing plans for the future addition of the Johnson Fieldhouse at UW-Stout have recently undergone modifications to better serve present Stout athletic programs.

The original plans for the expansion of the Johnson Fieldhouse were drawn out in 1978. The proposed addition was brought out in every university budget thereafter, until it was passed in the 1983-85 budget. It has since been approved by the Wisconsin State legislature for the 1985-87 period.

Because of the changing athletic programs at Stout, the Johnson Fieldhouse addition concept and the architect's original interpretation had to be minimally changed.

Included in the 1978 plans was a large men's gymnastics area. Presently, Stout no longer has a men's gymnastics program. This was one of the changes in Stout's atheletic program that prompted last Wednesday's meeting with the Johnson Fieldhouse project planners.

The original plans had the addition containing a large multi-purpose room where one end of the room would have been closed off for men's gymnastics.

After Wednesday's meeting, Dr. Carol Dobrunz, designated campus Fieldhouse project liason said, "The meeting gave approval for the architect to plan a large open space excluding a men's gymnastics area."

Also, the new revised plans would contain forty thousand square feet, (more feet than was originally planned.) "This added square footage will leave more open space than closed space," Dobrunz commented.

It was also decided at the meeting that the ceiling would be lowered to approximately twenty-nine feet rather than the approximate thirty-five feet.

Dobrunz said that the groundbreaking for the $5 million addition would probably take place next spring.

Dobrunz stressed that time was needed for redesigning the architectural plans, finishing paper work and creating a positive bidding climate for construction contracts.

Dobrunz also noted that in the future the weight rooms would be moved to another location to make way for the new addition.

Glen Schuknecht, director of Planning and Information management said, "The weight room will probably be moved this summer. It might be stuck on concrete slabs on the north or south end of the football field."

The exact date of the weight room relocation has not yet been determined but Dobrunz said that when the weight room is moved, it will be done within a week's time. "We will not let the University be without a weight facility for a long time," Dobrunz said.

Governor Earl makes appearance at Stout

Pat Miles
News Reporter

Governor Anthony Earl made a short visit to U.W.-Stout last week as part of a tour through this portion of the state. Earl made his appearance in the Great Hall of the Memorial Student Center on the morning of Thursday, April 3.

In his 20 minute visit, Earl stressed opinions on such issues as tuition, enrollment, and answered listeners questions.

> I think we ought to establish, as a legislative goal, a cap on tuition increases.
> —Anthony Earl Governor

State Represenative Richard Shoemaker introduced the Governor by portraying him as a person who is appreciative of the work legislaters do. "In eight years I've dealt with two governors," Shoemaker expressed, "The difference this governor, Tony Earl has made is his appreaciation he has had for the legislative process."

Earl opened by complimenting U.W.-Stout for its good reputation. "In the period since merger, no school in the U.W. system has taken that direction more seriously than Stout," Earl said, "Merger wasn't seen here as something to be feared, rather as a further opportunity, and I appreciate that."

Earl then went on to express his opinion of tuition increases. "Our low tuition among Mid-west states is seen as a liability, rather than as a virtue," Earl stated, "I see it as a virtue." Earl feels strongly that it would be a "terrible mistake" to use tuition as a measurement to determine the number of students that would be let into the U.W. system. He expressed that it is better to take students on a measure of intelligance and willingness to apply ones self.

When asked if ther will be a decrease of enrollment as a result of the tuition increase, Earl answered, "I do not think tuition ought to discourage people from entering the U.W. system." Earl went on to explain that in the near future we will not notice that much of an increase. He said the increase has been "masked by a surplus of student funds." When the funds run out, we will see a "substantial bumb" in the increase. "Then I think it might serve to discourage some people from coming in," Earl said.

Earl said he does not feel that more money should come out of loan programs as a result of tuition increases. "I think we ought to establish, as a legislative goal, a cap on tuition increases," Earl stressed, "I don't want to see it reach 30 percent."

Earl also stressed strong opposition against the idea of the Board of Regeants to have the authority to set tuition. "I know the Regeants want the authority to set tuition," Earl said, "I do not support that because I don't think they're sufficiently atuned to the impact of tuition."

Charles Yost asked about the likelihood of gambling becoming legal to help Wisconsin's tourism industry. "I think we may get gambling," Earl replied, "I think it's going to be more difficult to get by legislature than people anticipate."

When asked if he thinks gambling will improve tourism Earl answered, "Most of the states around us have some type of lottery, so I don't see that much of an increase there."

Earl continued to say that we have to depend on what we already have as tourism attractions. "Our strongest points in tourism still have to remain in the natural resources we have and the hospitable people we have." Besides our current tourism attractions, Earl did not object to having some income come in through types of gambling such as horse racing, etc. "Although, I think our emphasis on tourism should be made on making the most of what we have."

Earl then closed by thanking the audience for sharing their time and stated that it was a pleasure to visit U.W. Stout again.

Shoemaker was asked about the success of the student regeant. He replied that the regeant has been very responsible. "I think he has been doing very well. He took a lot of heat when he took the side of a tuition increase," Shoemaker said, "He realized that raising tuition was better than eliminating programs."

As the Wisconsin gubernatorial race begins to heat up Governor Anthony Earl spoke to Stout students, faculty and area residents on such issues as the recent tuition increases, the odds that gambling might be legalized in the Badger State and the role of UW-Stout in the UW System. Earl lauded Stout for using the opportunities provided by the UW System merger. (Stoutonia photo by Julie LaFleur)

SSA voting process proves tamper-proof despite attempts to test the system

Bridget Record
News Reporter

Despite the attempts of several students to prove the contrary, the Stout Student Association (S.S.A.) voting process came up tamper proof after all the votes were counted last Thursday, April 3.

According to Cheryl La Fountain, S.S.A. Media and Advertising Coordinator, 20 students tried to vote more than once. La Fountain believes this was not attempted to help any one candidate achieve election, but to test the system. She said that the double voting attempts failed because all the ballots were cross referenced with three means of identifying the voter.

Students were asked to reveal their name, social security number, and date of birth when voting. "The S.S.A. did not ask for just one of these, because there were not very many places to obtain all three of these statistics on one person, making it more difficult to enter someone else's vote," La Fountain said.

> ...we may have lost a few votes because students were unable to vote in a building convenient to them
> —Cheryl LaFountain

She said that the two sources of voting were the computer terminals hooked up to the VAX system, and the paper ballots that could be obtained in the Memorial Student Center. Out of the approximately 1000 students who voted, 500 of those were done so by paper ballot.

When voting on the computer a student was unable to write-in candidates. La Fountain said that there was a statement at the beginning of the computer voting ballot informing students that if they

U.S. prepared to respond

Manama, Bahrain-Vice President George Bush warned Iran to "think again" before disrupting trade routes through the Persian Gulf. Bush said that the United States was prepared to respond militarily to any attempt to close the gulf if shipping lanes were threatened. This and other topics concerning the safety of Gulf countries were discussed between Bush and Sheik Isa Bin Salman, the Emir of Bahrain, and other top Bahraini officials.

Eastwood wins by a landslide

Carmel-By-The-Sea, California-Popular box-office king Clint Eastwood cleaned up house Tuesday in his bid for the post of mayor of Carmel, Ca. Some critics say the election began as a side show and ended as a three ring circus. Eastwood won the race by a 3 to 1 margin over incumbent Charlotte Townsend and he will assume the $200 a month office on April 15. A record 95 percent of the towns 4,100 voters went to the polls.

Goose lovers kill Alaskan foxes

Anchorage, Alaska-In a game of fox and goose it was the goose that won on the Aleutian island of Kiska just south west of Alaska. In a last ditch effort, Federal Fish and Wildlife agents attempting to save the rare Aleutian Canada goose used a pesticide to exterminate the entire fox population on that island. "The geese were on Kiska first" said George Sura of the Fish and Wildlife service. "The fox didn't come until late 19th century when they were introduced by fur farmers." Now that the predators are removed the agency plans to transplant breeding pairs of the bird to Kiska from neighboring islands.

Thompson announces gubernatorial bid

Madison, Wisconsin-Assembly Republican Leader Tommy Thompson of Elroy announced his bid for the Republican nomination for governor against Democrat Anthony Earl. Thompson, the fourth republican to announce his candidacy, acknowledges the fact that he will be an underdog in the race against the present governor. "An incumbent governor with a well-oiled political machine in Madison will be hard to beat" said Thompson. The other announced republican candidates are Jonathon Barry, George Watts, and Albert Wiley Jr.

21-year-old drinking age inevitable

Madison, Wisconsin- In a complete reversal of his April 1 statement on not reopening the 21 year-old drinking age, Governor Earl said on April 8th that "it is now appropriate to ask the Legislature to change Wisconsin's drinking age to 21" in a statement co-sponsored by other leading Democratic leaders. If Earl has his way, the drinking age will probably be raised to 21 effective on September 1, 1986 with a grandfather clause to allow those of legal age now to retain their drinking privileges. Reasoning behind this sudden change include Minnesota raising their age to 21, and the federal blackmail law of retaining highway dollars permanently from states who do not comply with the law.

Rise of the Fourth Reich

Compiled by Paul D. Nelson

Former United Nations Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim, currently a candidate for president of Austria and head of the United Nations from 1972-82, has been haunted recently by allegations that he is guilty of World War II war crimes.

Waldheim maintains that while serving in the German Army he acted merely as an army interpreter, holding the rank of lieutenant and leaving active duty in 1942 after receiving a leg wound on the Eastern front. Waldheim asserts that even though he served on the staff of General Alexander Lohr in the Balkans between 1942-45, who was found guilty of war crimes himself and hung in 1947, he was totally unaware of any of the atrocities which were occurring almost daily. Yet many recent disclosures take issue with Waldheim's version of his wartime involvement.

The World Jewish Congress uncovered documents in Washington's National Archives which state that Waldheim's duties included the interrogation of military and civilian personnel, assassinations, deportations, kidnappings and mass murder. The organization also claimed that it found Waldheim's name on a list, compiled by the U.S. Army, which listed all those suspected of being Nazi war criminals.

A global organization, the WJC has members in approximately 70 countries. Yugoslavia's press, via the Yugoslavian newspaper Vecernje Novosti, recently published two documents which further darkened Waldheim's wartime service.

The first piece of evidence was a 1947 extradition request made by the Yugoslav government based on the belief that he was guilty of "murder, slaughter, shooting of hostages ... and burning of villages." The document contained a total of 791 names.

The second incriminating piece of evidence was a United Nations document, dated 1948, which asserts that Waldheim put hostages to death. Waldheim dismissed the allegations as "pure lies and malicious acts."

In relation to what he knew or thought of Nazi reprisals against partisans in the countries in which he served, he admitted: "Yes, I knew. I was horrified. But what could I do? I had either to continue to serve or be executed. [I] was not directly involved in the fighting [but only translating orders]."

Quoted in the April 7, 1986 issue of Newsweek, WJC Secretary-General Israel Singer stated simply, "Waldheim is a bad liar. He has no moral standing, no credibility."

Contrary to the negative political impact, many political experts thought Waldheim would suffer due to the allegations, his bid for the presidency has actually soared eleven points since the allegations regarding his Nazi past. He currently is the leader in national polls, pulling ahead of his Socialist opponent by 43 to 32 percent.

Stout Student Association President-elect Paul Nelson appears set to preside over the SSA Congress as he plans to focus his attentions on such concerns as the proposed cuts in financial aid to college students. Nelson discusses future SSA goals and policies

Bridget Record
News Reporter

Paul Nelson, Stout Student Association (S.S.A.) president-elect discussed the goals he hopes to achieve and the policies he plans to implement over the next school year.

Nelson revealed that he has already begun to work with outgoing S.S.A president, Joanne Prange. He said that Joanne is making him aware of the projects that the senate did not complete, and the ones that are still in the planning stages. Nelson plans to maintain those projects that are not yet completed and will review those that are in the planning process to determine the importance of them. Since Nelson has started to work with Joanne a couple of weeks before his inauguration, he feels the transition will go over fairly smooth.

Nelson said that sometime in his first 3 weeks after he takes the oath and becomes president, he plans to hold the first meeting of what he alluded to in the election as the president's council. He will administer this by sending a letter to the president's of the approximately 140 organizations on campus and set up a date to meet in the Memorial Student Center. At this meeting they will discuss how to get to know each other and how to facilitate better cooperation between the groups. "If we get a good turn-out, I think that will be a good sign that the interest is there. I used this council as a plank in platform, and I fully intend to see it through,and at least give the groups an oppportunity to see it work," Nelson said.

> Even though people don't get involved, that doesn't mean they don't care and it doesn't mean they don't have concerns.
> —Paul Nelson
> SSA president-elect

As one of the major issues during his campaign, Nelson plans to give the recent cuts in financial aid primary attention. One of the goals dealing with this issue that Nelson plans to consider is an educational drive to make students aware of what is actually happening in the area of cuts in higher education. He wants to get their input as to ways in mobilizing students to lobby their legislatures.

Because the cuts for this year have already been made, Nelson does not believe now is the time to press the issue. He feels that in the beginning of the next spring semester when the issue comes up again, it would be a more advantageous time to address the matter.

Nelson says that a major issue he wants to concentrate on is the role the students play in S.S.A. He would like to remind the senators that they are students addressing students and they are not politicians. "I think that if we keep this frame of mind, we will be more effective," Nelson said.

Nelson is also aware of the issue regarding the restructure of the senate. For example, should some seats be eliminated or added? He feels this is a big issue because a number of people will be effected negatively or positively. At the time the issue arises, Nelson says he will caution everyone involved in the decision-making process not to make a haste decision.

One of the issues Nelson feels may be overlooked, is the development of the 11,000 sq. ft. that is vacant in the student center. Nelson says that he will do his best to insure students that the space will

Power outtage disrupts classes, planned events

Karen Smith
News Reporter

Prior to last week's blackout affecting five buildings on campus, plans had been made to replace the underground feeder lines throughout the UW-Stout campus at an approximate cost of $950,000.

According to Assistant Chancellor Wesley Sommers, the State Building Commission has approved the concept for the repair. The Commission now is working to determine the final dollar cost of these repairs. The approximately $1 million required for the repairs will come from the state once approved by the Building Commission.

> No one can determine the chances of it happening again.
> —Ike Isis
> Crafts worker supervisor

The blackout itself broke up the planned schedules of many students, faculty, workers and even campus visitors.

Shortly afternoon Thursday, April 3, the power went out in the Memorial Student Center, Jarvis Hall, Applied Arts, Home Economics, and the Library Learning Center.

The blackout was caused by a failure in a primary line. A feeder line fault took place which caused the insulation to be blown off of the line. The loss of electricity resulted.

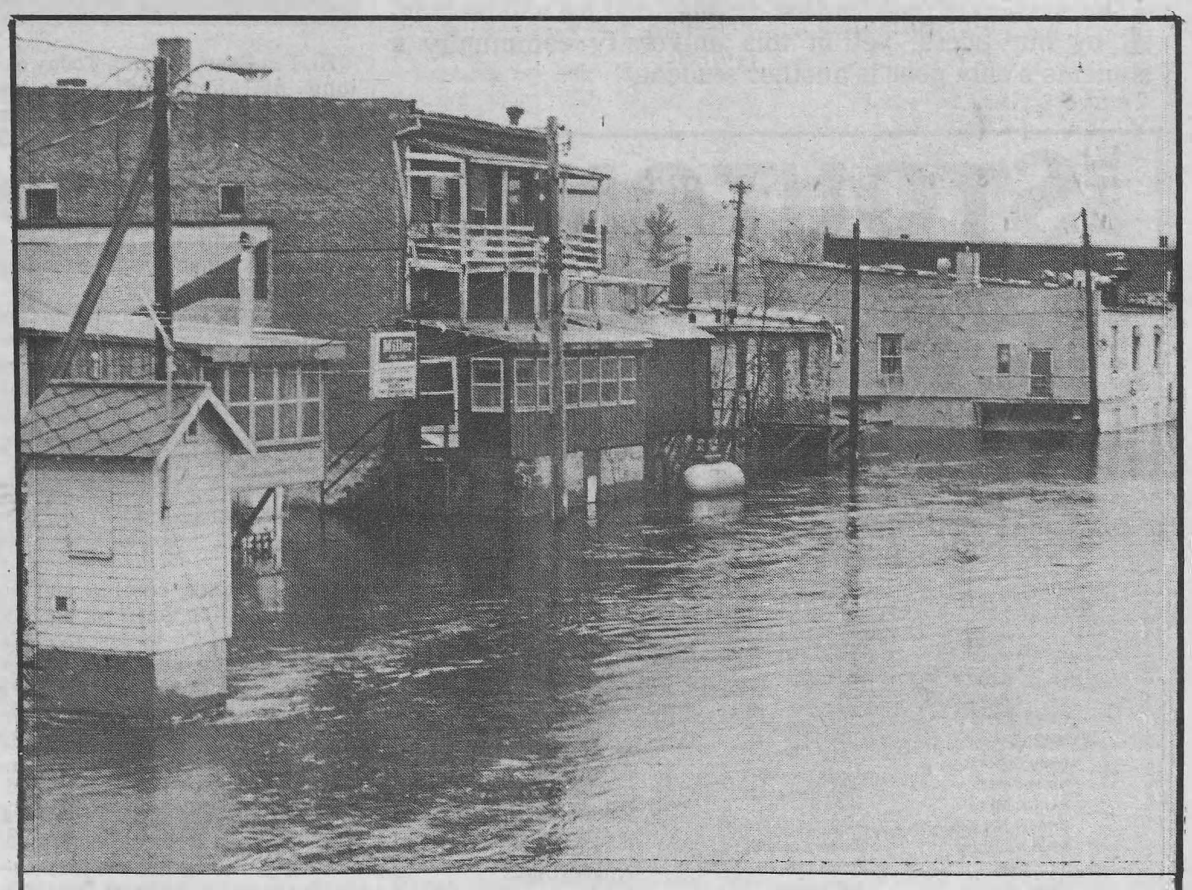
Crafts Worker Supervisor at the physical plant, Ike Isis, said there was no way to anticipate the blackout. "It's not something that can be pre-determined," he said. "No one can determine the chances of it happening again."

Isis said it cost $6,000 for six electricians to work around the clock to repair the damages.

Bob Johnson, director of the Student Center, was equally surprised by the power failure. "The blackout was very unusual," Johnson said. "It came as quite an inconvenience to not only the staff, but also the students."

Most of the buildings had emergency generators which provided enough power to light the hallways so they might be used. Yet, most the classes in the affected buildings were cancelled on Friday due to lack of electricity in the classrooms.

Workers are available to analyze the situations on hand, if they ever occur again. To date, no new emergency plans have been made in the case another blackout occurs again.



Happy hour had to be postponed at this Durand, Wi. tavern until the flood waters receded. The unseasonably warm weather last week which brought sun worshipers out of the closet in Menomonie also caused the Chippewa River to seriously overflow its banks, flooding much of Durand. Your best option was to break out the canoes and navigate the streets of Durand for a change. (Stoutonia photo by Julie LaFleur)

Students lose again

There now exists, at this university, a multitude of ways to resolve conflicts or address grievances brought by one person, or a group, against another. Students, academic staff, and members of the faculty all have Positive Action Committees in place to redress possible wrongs.

Yet it has recently come to our attention that students have less representation, if someone transgresses against them, than they had in the not too distant past.

Previously, if a student filed a grievance against a member of the faculty the Faculty Positive Action Committee, which is comprised of faculty members elected via the faculty senate and students appointed by the Stout Student Association, would hold a hearing between the parties involved. Each school within the university had a committee for this purpose and heard the cases in their respective departments.

But because some of these school level positive action committees were overstepping their authority and deciding cases which should have been left to the university level positive action committees, the grievance process on the school level was dropped and the university level is now all that remains.

Although streamlining the process to make it more fair and expedient was very positive for all those concerned, the student representation which was lost through the abolishment of the school level process does not now exist at the university level. Students have in effect been denied a right which they not so long ago justifiably possessed.

We believe that student rights were blatantly brushed aside and support a return to fairness and equity. We urge the faculty senate to once again allow student representation on the university level positive action committees.

Our system of government dictates that we will be judged by our peers, yet in this university community a students's only peer is another student.

The Bottom Line

America's Top Forty

Rich Brueckner

Hi, I'm Casey Casum. Today our long distance dedication on "America's Top Forty" is from May Elias Monseur of Libya. It reads:

"Dear Casey, I hope you play this dedication because it is relevant to all America. It all began a while back when I was attending the University of Tehran.

"I was hanging out in the student union after attending a Rainbow meeting when I heard some loud music coming from the auditorium. It was a program called Rock and Roll — A Search for God and it changed my life.

"I learned that rock music reflects Satanism and that Christianity needs help to fight this menace.

"I have since become such a devout Christian that I set off that bomb on the TWA jet just to make a point: People who listen to rock music are capitalist dogs that are better off dead. As for the infant that died, well, it probably would have grown up listening to Madonna anyway.

"America is the birthplace of rock and roll. It should suffer accordingly; Casey, please play Onward Christian Soldiers by Slim Whitman."

Well, I'd be glad to Mary. But first, here's a word from our sponsor....

"Tonight on "Miami Vice", Crockett and Tubbs get a hot tip from Lyndon Larouche and head to London to bust Britain's royal drug dealer, Queen Elizabeth. Bloody riots hit the streets when Tubbs and Lady Diana have a romantic encounter in the Winchester Cathedral. Let's all be there."

Our next dedication is from Bart Zoomoff of St. Paul, Minnesota. It reads:

"Dear Casey, I recently got into a fight over a song at a local tavern. That new Prince tune came on and I became violently irritated. I kicked the son-of-a-bitchin' juke box so hard that it went to the next record.

"Then these two queers came up to me and complained because they liked that tune. I told them that a paisley pansie who sings with his balls in a vice produces music that is too lousy even to be considered bad.

"They didn't agree, so I kicked their asses. Casey, I'd like you to dedicate this to all the people who subject the rest of us to Prince's intolerable noise. Please play "My Fist — Your Face" by Aerosmith.

I'll play the record, Bart. I can't help noticing how violent people are who listen to rock. "Rock and Roll — A Search for God" must have been right.

Maybe the program should have been called "The Search for Satan in Rock n' Roll." It spent most of its time on low-rent bands who use blasphemy to sell records.

I personally hope that some of these bands and their followings do go to hell. Heaven would stink if it was full of peons who listen to Lords of the New Church.

The climax of the show was "Stairway to Heaven" played backwards. It says, "My sweet Satan, no other made a path, for it makes me sad. Whose power is Satan?"

The producers of the program theorize that this was not accidental or intentional but spiritual in nature. The "man in the red suit" must have squeezed into Robert Plant's jeans while Plant and Jimmy Page were busy sodomizing that teen-age girl with a mackeral.

I saw a guy on TV who confirmed the presence of the Devil on Motley Crue albums. He played the record backwards and personally heard the Devil say that, "This band sucks!"

To be honest, the program did make me think a little. I went through my record collection in search of hedonistic lyrics. The program neglected to mention one of my favorite Blue Oyster Cult tunes that goes like this:

"I am the Black Blade, Carving out destiny, Bringing in the lords of chaos, Bringing up the beasts of Hades, Sucking out the souls of heroes, Laying waste to knights and ladies."

This song is great for cranking up at parties. Seeing how we drinkers are on the road to nowhere anyway, we might as well have a battle hymm to wage war against terrorists with nylon guns and evangelists with plastic good will.

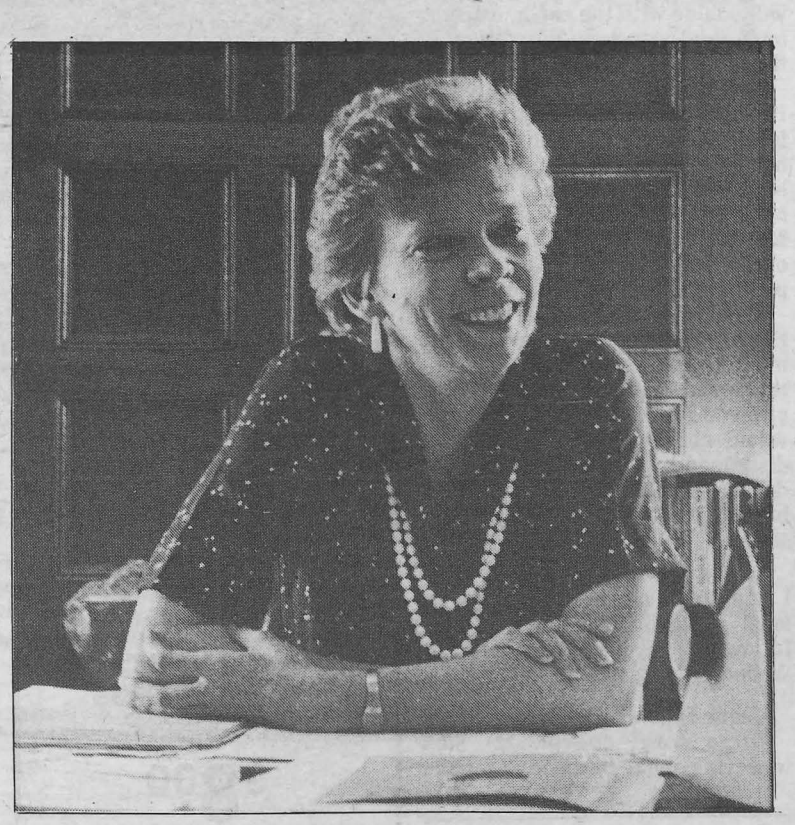
Subject: Mabel Tainter administrator focuses on increased promotion, increased use of building

Text by Jef Maynard

Maggie Foote has held the position of building administrator for the Mabel Tainter Memorial for just longer than six months. She received her degree from UW-Stout in psychology with a minor in journalism.

After college, she moved to Eau Claire writing copy for an ad agency. Later she worked with an Eau Claire public relations firm. Foote then worked for Stout in the University Relations office. She was also editor of The Bottom Line, an Eau Claire business publication. Prior to moving to Menomonie, she worked with the Public Access Television Channel.



Maggie Foote

STOUTONIA: IS NON-PROFIT MANAGEMENT AN IMPORTANT REQUIREMENT FOR YOUR JOB?

FOOTE: I think so.

It's a service business in a lot of ways, so you have to try and educate the public. You have to have a lot of kno ..edge of public relations and promotion. You are dealing with business people, dealing with government, being aware that you are being funded to some degree by city and county monies and the responsibility that involves.

STOUTONIA: DO THOSE RESPONSIBILITIES BRING SOME RESTRICTIONS TOO, FOR INSTANCE, STATE RESTRICTIONS AND HANDICAPPED ACCESS?

FOOTE: Because it's a historic landmark, you would run into some problems as to how you would do that, where would we put an elevator or how would we put in a ramp. I would like to work with, possibly, someone from the voc. rehab. department in giving us some alternatives as to how we could make it handicapped-accessible, at least the theater part. We've looked at trying to have a ramp built and it would have to be portable because we are so close to the street. The other option is to put in an elevator but.... Structurally, it [the building] is real sound. It would cost big bucks to try and figure out how we could put it into the building and not really significantly change the interior.

Letters to the editor

'Evil junk' attracts rockers

This letter is three fold in nature. First of all I would like to congratulate Paul Nelson on his successful SSA campaign. As one of the candidates that ran for this office, I know experience was a great learning tool for all those involved. Paul, if your diligence, stamina and your willingness to work hard remain with you as it did in the race, I'm sure you will do well in representing the Stout Community in the 1986-87 school year. My best wishes, prayers and full support go out to you.

Secondly, I would like to make a few comments on Matt Kalina's last column about the "Rock and Roll — A Search For God" seminar. Thank you Matt for covering this issue as non-biased as you did, we with Maranatha appreciate it.

As far as it being a front for a revival at Stout, you're right. But we didn't hide this from anyone. Our posters made it very clear that it was coming from a spiritual aspect, but then so does rock and roll. Yes, it's true, we had planned this event long before it got here, but we weren't at a table, we were in my living room.

Sure the evil junk in rock is used to get people's attention, but the fact still remains that secular music as a whole is a mighty tool which Satan uses to promote his kingdom. We believe that this promotion of the devil's kingdom must be exposed for the benefit of all mankind. As well, we feel that the Kingdom of Light (Jesus's Kingdom) must also advance, and that people make him Lord and Savior!

According to the Bible, you are either totally for Jesus or you're totally against Him — No middle ground.

Last but not least, many people do not pray with us at these outreaches, so Matt, to answer your question "Nobody is going to refuse to pray, right?" is wrong. If everybody did pray, (having faith in the prayer) then our society would be a greater place to live. Many people die in their sins and in the long run, (eternal life), they do get ripped off. If people will follow Jesus with everything they have, they won't be disappointed!

My third thing is on Planned Parenthoods response to the Silent Scream. It still stands that this society has to let go of its selfish, greedy, and irresponsible nature. If you're gonna play, (sexually), you or a baby are gonna pay. Finish what you start America, don't kill it!

Dave Fredrickson,
Maranantha Christian Fellowship

Chase uses blasphemy

Referring to the March 27 issue of The Stoutonia, David Chase's column had to be the most blatent example of blasphemy that I have ever seen. David obviously has no concept of heaven, according to the Bible, or who is there. God has been preparing this place for his children, not for Satan's. The whole concept of God having a rock band with the likes of Jim Morrison, John Lennon, John Bonham, Jimi Hendrix and Elvis is a stench in the nostrils of God. Each one of these men either professed a disbelief in God, or, worse yet, practiced Satanic worship. These men expressed a desire to be separated from God and, in the end, got their desire — hell. The Bible says clearly in Revelation 20:8, "But the cowardly, the unbelieving, the vile, the murderers, the sexually immoral, those who practice magic arts, the idolators and all liars — their place will be in the

The best thing they can do now is check things a little more thoroughly, like at airports. The metal detector systems don't do the job anymore because guns and plastic explosives are just not picked up anymore. I don't think they will ever conquer terrorism.

Bob Jankowski,
Graduate,
Technology Education

Beefed up security is one measure that could be taken, although we can only go so far with something like that. Attempts to get to the root of the terrorist groups themselves would probably be the most effective way. I don't think retaliation is the answer because because violence begets violence.

Ellen Zimmer,

We need to redesign the security system. I don't think people should be flying overseas. I don't know how to solve it It's a major issue right now and it makes me sick seeing almost every day on television.

Todd Besler,

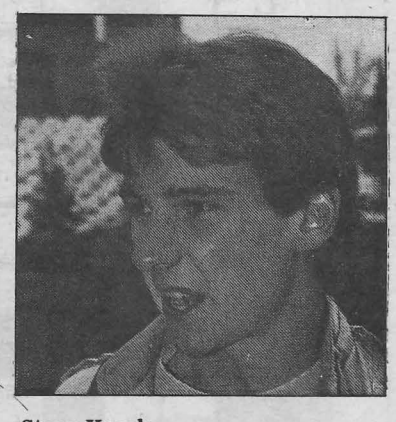
Business Administration

There should be stronger penalties for people that get caught at it and more security with loading of luggage at airports



Steve Krech,
Junior,
Industrial Technology

I really don't think there is any way to stop it, but I feel that increased security will help out a lot at the major airports. I don't think in America we really have to worry about it too badly because we have a lot of security right now, but we could increase it a little more.

Crash and Burn

Fate, fortune from crystal gazers

Matt Kalina

You know where to find it. It is either on the bottom of the funny pages or buried in the classified section of any daily paper.

No, it's not the obituaries. It's, of course, the horoscope, a vision into your future, a complete analysis of your character, inside and out.

If you are like most people, you may find yourself doing an occasional look-see at your zodiacal sign to see if its description matches up to reality. You may laugh and say, "That horoscope stuff is totally bogus. It has as much credibility as a prophesy from a fortune cookie."

Yes, you may make your funny little jokes about horoscopes, but you're entirely out of touch. Psychics have the fortune-telling business of horoscopes down to an art, I mean a near-science. It is like a science because actually, what better way to predict the future of civilization than with the position of the earth, planets and stars? The Gallup Poll? The Neilson Ratings? No way.

For the past few days, I have been analyzing my existence by scoping the earth, planets and stars and studying the complicated relationships that they form. I figure my biorythms are out of whack, since the moon was full and Jupiter crossed paths with Saturn a while ago, while Mercury has been in my third "house," and the Milky Way is kind of pale. This stuff gets technical.

Horoscopes are flexible, by the way. The decent thing about them is that if your particular sign doesn't jibe with your day, you can substitute it with Leo or Gemini or one of the others.

Jeane Dixon is the most well-known present-day psychic in the whole wide world; everybody has heard of her. Getting a clue that Dixon was a fellow psychic, a gypsy gave her a crystal ball when she was just a tyke. There is no doubt about her psychic abilities, since Dixon believes she may have been a Tibetan lama in an earlier reincarnation.

Dixon has to be a grand fortune teller because according to the People's Almanac she predicted between 1981 and 1990 that a comet will collide with the earth, causing huge tidal waves and mighty earthquakes. No volcanos though.

Dixon forecasted that between 1979 and 2000 UFOs will give to us, free of charge, the knowledge to harness the sun's energy, benefiting all mankind. We still have lots of time to observe any Martians handing over the secrets of the fiery ball to us. There's still plenty of time for that to happen.

She once predicted that Howard Hughes would become involved in medical and psychological philanthropy. Instead he died in 1976. She also concluded that Richard Nixon would not, in the bitter end, be disgraced by the Watergate scandal. We should give her just a tiny break; she can't be right all the time.

Lately, I live by my horoscopes. I want to get a cystal ball too or at least a plastic one. Each of the following is my forecast for Wednesday, April 8.

Jeane Dixon:

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Stop worrying about insensitive people. You are on the right track and will soon have the results to prove it! Research is the best way to obtain information. Level with your boss.

Okay, I did spout off to a couple clods. And gee, that's quite a relevation — Research is the best way to obtain information. That's a good one. But since I had nothing, well hardly anything, to hide from my boss, I didn't "level" with her.

Sydney Omarr:

Maintain aura of mystery. Don't tell all you know, be discreet, utilize sense of drama.

You'll learn more about finances, debts, payments, possible inheritance.

It's uncanny. This morning I used my roommate's soap without telling him. I speculate that's being "discreet." I suppose getting a "fix it in five days or we hang ya" warning from the Menomonie's finest for having one of my headlights out, chimes right in there too. Yow, shivers down my spine, eerie.

Astrograph by Bernice Bede Osol:

If you make an agreement with another today, honor your commitment. It will tarnish your image if you seek an excuse to back out.

Hey, supernatural. I made it to a group project meeting today, so I suppose my image is not "tarnished."

Joyce Jillson:

Hold off submitting proposals for now. A random conversation provides invaluable information. Stop procrastinating on a personal matter; the outcome will be positive.

Oh no. I guess it's too late. I already placed my request for getting Monday night off from work. What is a random conversation? Speaking to an unsuspecting person for no apparent reason? I guess I do that. Also I have been avoiding scrubbing my dishes for a week. If I wash them, I suppose that that would be a "positive" outcome. Rub a dub, dub.

Diversionary Tactics

Choose and lose

Tim Hopkins

One of the most subtle methods used to relieve us of our freedom of expression and also diminish the valuable differences between each one of us is the multiple choice test. It isn't surprising that in most cases UW-Stout classrooms are silent except for the professors who continue lecturing practically regardless of what the students may or may not be getting from the class.

Why should the student respond in a class discussion when the vast majority of their grade comes from their ability to correctly fill in the circles on a multiple choice test? The student doesn't feel encouraged to respond. After all, of all horrendous things, they might show precisely what they do not know if they choose to open their mouth. Why risk it when you can get an A by filling in the right circle 90 percent of the time?

I've heard the statement that essay tests are dangerous because, unlike multiple choice tests, they lack objectivity. Yes, multiple choice tests are corrected by computers that merely demand that you input your I.D. number on the test so the grade determined will have significance.

What's most disturbing about computer corrected tests is the supposed irrefutability of the results. When was the last time you told a professor you knew you had marked the correct response although the computer marked you wrong?

Computers are a great record keeping tool allowing you to store and retrieve data in such a fashion that it is most meaningful to you. When it comes to judging how someone reasoned out their response to a question, computers are inept.

I object to tests which allow the student no room to move since there is no concern for the explanation of the answers you choose. This total lack of flexibility in selection of the correct response demands that the questions be asked in a manner that isn't misleading. When all the weight is put on the answer you give while none is given to how you got the answer, it is essential that the questions be clear.

Too many times, I've gotten this sinking feeling in the pit of my stomach that my response might be graded incorrect by the grossly insensitive computer which is unable to judge my response on the basis of the question's validity.

I've gotten to the point where I answer these clearly unclear questions on multiple choice tests without caring what the computer's verdict will be on my response. I can't be expected to communicate to a computer the meaning of my response by filling in one circle rather than another. I'm unable to feel badly after getting a low score on a multiple choice test when I can be confident that, when viewed in the proper context, my response was correct.

I've heard it said by many students, including myself on more than one occasion, that "Even though I got an A in the class I have no memory of what was taught." I've known students who got an A on a multiple choice test and yet were unable to explain their answers. The question then is, what if anything has been learned?

It would be healthy for the academic environment to return to an emphasis on how you got the answer you did rather than on the fact that you merely got the answer. Could you imagine the lively discussions between students and faculty about the veracity of a certain response in an essay test.

The return to experiencing an occasional essay test should promote more interaction between students and faculty at Stout. Classes should become more interesting as the test emphasis is replaced by a desire to understand the logical basis for the knowledge we as students pay to receive.

SSA election said to have went 'smoothly'

Kelly Cohorst
News Reporter

Election of the Stout Student Association (SSA) for the Seventeenth congress was the primary topic of discussion at Tuesday night's meeting. The elections were held Wednesday and Thursday April 2, and 3. "The elections went smoothly," said Cheryl LaFountain of the Media Advertising Committee.

Paul D. Nelson was elected president of the SSA. The other election winners were Julie Weiss as Vice-President of Academic Affairs, Vice-President of Financial Affairs is Gary Harder, Vice-President of Legislative Affairs is Mark Nickels, Women's Affairs Senator Catherine A. Schneider and Minority Affairs Senator Aref Khatib.

Off-Campus Senators elected included Barb Caron, Peggy Coughlin, James Falkofske, Denise Hoeft, Katherine McCarthy, Daniel Richard Meyer, Brenda Morehart, Henry Oboh, Andy Previn and Scott Shaver.

More than 900 people voted, and over 500 voted by using paper ballots. Turn out for this year's election was slightly better than for last year's election when President JoAnn Prange defeated Tom Lindh 585 to 318.

The 17th congress will be sworn in April 22, and will take over the SSA for the 1986-87 academic year. The new Senate will be installed and the five appointed positions may be appointed.

Chuck Keller, vice-president of legislative affairs, reported on two major activities, the drinking age and the City of Menomonie's new city mayoral position.

Other than Wisconsin, Minnesota is the last state in the area that has a drinking age of 19; and in September, Minnesota will change their legal drinking age to 21. Keller said " The Wisconsin Legislature is going to be pressed into changing their drinking age to 21."

"Reagan proposed yesterday that he will permit all states two years to comply with the federal guidelines," Keller said. Overall, more than 30 states have a drinking age of 21 but only seven comply with all the federal guidelines.

The City of Menomonie voted "Yes" on the April 1 referendum concerning whether the city should change from a city manager form to a mayoral form of government. After weeks of dispute, the political struggle which divided the Menomonie people was decided.

On April 15, the temporarily appointed position of City Mayor will establish the first step in setting up the new form of government in Menomonie as mandated by the voters. Once the formal election for the new mayor is scheduled it will not be long before not be used for anything that doesn't directly relate to the input of students. He says that the senate will talk to all the groups and individuals that have a voice in the decision-making process.

Nelson said that during the 2 1/2 week campaign after spring break he spoke to many diverse groups and found that there isn't anybody out there who isn't displeased about something. He said in talking to these groups, he found that they were concerned about problems that he had never considered, or didn't know existed. "I think that my administration will benefit from the fact that I had the opportunity to speak to a diverse amount of groups during the campaign, Nelson said . "Even though people don't get involved, that doesn't mean they don't care and it does'nt mean they don't have concerns."

Nelson said one of the problems that, existed in last year's senate was that although well-meaning, they tried to do everything at once. He feels that it is unrealistic for the senate to have too many goals at once. Nelson said that he would like his administration to decide on four or five goals that they think need addressing the most.

"I think that if the senate knows on a narrow focus what they are trying to do, they will never lose sight of the big picture" Nelson said. He feels that last year they had problems because everyone had different priorities. This year he will work for unity of direction.

fiery lake of burning sulfur."

The same God who is preparing heaven is also preparing hell. He doesn't want anyone on earth to end up there, however. Hell is being prepared for Satan and his angels, not for you or me. God has no choice in the matter, though when someone chooses with their free will to align themselves with Satan rather with God. God loves His creation so much that He provided a way to escape the lake of fire. The Bible says very clearly:

> "For God so loved the world that he gave His only begotten Son, that whoever believes in him shall not perish but have eternal life. For God did not send His son into the world to condemn the world, but to save the world through him."
> — John 3:16-17

Many people will die and go to hell because they thought they they were good enough or that because their father and mother will get them into heaven. Let no man be a fool. All twelve disciples of Jesus died for their convictions. God isn't looking for wimpy Christians to come to church once a week to drop two bits in the plate. God wants total committment and surrender to him and his word, the Bible. If you don't do what he asks you to do, how can you say that he is you Lord and king?

Covert war is costly

On April 15 the U.S House of Representatives will vote on whether to give the contras another 100 million dollars to continue their war against the Sandistas. President Reagan and the hard-liners that surround him have pulled out all the stops in lobbying for this money. If they win this vote, it will be a symbolic victory that will legitimize the covert war they have been waging against the Sandinistas since the early 1980s. It will also represent the first big U.S. installment payment on a widening conflict that could eventually cost many billions of dollars and see Wisconsin and Minnesota boys coming home in body bags.

Ronald Reagan and his associates have lied and mispresented virtually every aspect of the current political situation in Nicaragua. They have polarized the situation by portraying the Sandinistas as worse than they really are. In addition, they have attempted to conceal from the American people the fact that the CIA has played a central role in the whole mess and is up to its elbows in innocent blood.

We are told by our administration that the Sandistas are exporting Marxist revolution to the rest of Latin America, yet Reagan has not been able to produce one single country that is willing to say it is threatened by the Sandinistas. On the contrary, we have been told by the Latin countries that American military force is not welcome in the region and that what we should do is encourage the Contadora process, now installed, which at least offers some hope of negotiated settlement.

Our administration has grossly mislead us regarding the nature of the Contras. The distilled "truth," according to Ronald Reagan, has the contras looking like brave and noble patriots fighting for democracy. Nothing could be further from the truth! The term "contra" refers loosely to anyone who fights the Sandinistas, and there are indeed brave and democratically oriented factions under this broad umbrella. Unfortunately, these are not the contras that do business with Ronald Reagan. His contras are the Honduran-based FDN whose filed commanders are almost exclusively ex-guardsmen of the hated dictator Samoza. After the overthrow of Samoz by the Sandinistas in 1979, these misfits scattered in all directions, with many of them finding employment in death squads from Argentina to Guatemala. They were brought back together by CIA money. They are literally the hired guns of the United States. If something unpleasant happened to your stomach when heard Reagan compare these cut-throats to our founding fathers, you weren't alone - civilized people all over the world are still gagging on that bit of blasphemy.

The policy of Ronald Reagan has brought us to the brink of war. It is a policy without wisdom and without a future. The only thing it guarantees is an increase in the killing!

It is still not too late to pull back, but it will take the voices of many U.S. citizens, and they must be raised before the House votes on April 15. The current betting is that Reagan will win by a narrow margin. If you are concerned, please call or write Congressman Steve Gunderson now, and let him know that he does not have your permission to squander tax dollars and young lives in a jungle 2,000 miles away just to make an ideological statement.

WVSS needs volunteers, not 'destructive' criticism

As student manager for WVSS from January 1984, to my graduation in, 1985 and the two summers between, I felt compelled to write after reading the one sided and poorly researched articles printed in The Stoutonia dealing with WVSS. I think someone needs to set the record straight.

Stout does not have a degree in broadcasting like many of the other stations WVSS has been compared with. These other stations have budgets three or more times greater than that of WVSS; whose budget is just over $6000. One thousand dollars of which is raised by the WVSS in the form of sponsorships, which, unlike commercials do not allow commercial content like those printed by The Stoutonia. This makes them difficult to sell and sometimes unattractive to local business because of the restrictions of a sponsorship as placed upon it by the FCC.

WVSS does receive approximately 1000 records each year. Thirty percent being single song dance mixes by groups no one has ever heard or cares to hear. Fourty percent are albums by break-out groups, and thirty percent are groups a listener may at one time or the other, heard of before. However these 1000 albums are a wide mixture of rock, easy listening, folk, classical or country. This gives WVSS a limited selection of music that may appeal to any one listener.

The price of records has made the WVSS record vault prone to theft by students interested in increasing their private record collections. The theft of 200 albums during a school year is not uncommon. The budget is not large enough to install anti-theft equipment such as that used at rental resources. So the albums available for airplay dwindles even further.

Other campus radio stations have paid, full-time staff, and can offer their disc jockeys pay. WVSS student radio is composed of volunteers. I have yet to find a Stout student willing to sign up for a shift from midnight to 8 a.m. It would take 20 DJs covering a two hour shift per week to broadcast live, and we can't even find one. Would you give up Thursday night parties to donate two hours a night to WVSS? Would you volunteer at all if WVSS management dictated to you the entire musical content of your show?

In one paragraph Matt Kalina finds the D.J.'s shows "irritating, nauseous Top 40, slamming mediocrity and mindlessness by creating their own mind bending jams." And in another paragraph finds fault with the C.D. player automation leaving "less time left to the spontaneity of live jockeys on the air." Which is it to be Mr. Kalina?

If given the chance, C.D. automation would give more of what you seem to be after: quality, variety, and a clean, clear sound for WVSS listeners. Once the system was compete, WVSS could have offered all night music instead if going off the air for lack of volunteers. I now see we were in violation of FCC rules, but we did not know. And I defy anyone without a legal background to wade through the legal mumble jumble of FCC rules and regulations to have found that out!

A news service such as Matt Kalina tells WVSS must have costs $1200 per year, a hefty sum of money on our budget. Until Matt Kalina or some other Stout student dishes out $1200 each year for such a service, WVSS must once again use what few resources offered them at no cost.

A student manager at WVSS makes $40 per week and easily puts in 20 hours per week. A dedicated few are willing to work for $2 per hour and put up with the hassles imposed upon them by student D.J's, Stout security (all D.J's are not saints), the FCC, the SSA; and work with the community to find additional funding, and involve the local High School to strengthen Stout-Menomonie relations. Another dedicated handful makes up the volunteers who spend two hours each week spinning records, and with luck will spend another hour each week putting records away so others may find them, and then there is Ace Matthews, whose energy, assistance and guidance is invaluable.

It is not an easy job. There are many problems. WVSS needs your help to find solutions to the problems. Constructive criticism with suggestions for improvement are helpful. The type of articles I have read are destructive, and hurt many people who spend many hours to do the best they can do.

While this is long, I hope The Stoutonia will find the space to print this in hope of shedding some light on the causes and problems, and maybe, just maybe, one more person will volunteer their time to help solve the problems.

Stoutonia editor-elect Hopkins sets newspaper's new direction

Matt Kalina
Managing Editor

Tim Hopkins, was chosen by The Stoutonia staff in an election held April 1 to replace Paul Nelson as the new editor-in-chief for the 1986-87 session.

Formerly the news editor, Hopkins, 32, is a senior majoring in hotel and restaurant management. Hopkins said, "I think I have a pretty good idea of what the problems and needs are in working in the newspaper." According to Hopkins, the major need at the The Stoutonia is "focusing in" on the major activities of organizations on campus and how they affect students directly, so students can have a closer tie to events affecting them on a day-to-day basis.

"The thing that impressed me being news editor this year is people saying things don't happen in Menomonie," Hopkins said. "There is always a lot going on, and I think it is valuable for people to know what's going on."

Hopkins feels that it is important to inform readers about the variety of valuable opportunities that are available on campus. "There are so many activities, so many different groups around here, things that go on, you wouldn't really even hear about, the sort of things that we can learn a lot from," Hopkins said. "Sometimes there are things that you'd like to go to, and you can't go to. I think the newspaper can help broaden people's general perspective on things going on in the world around them."

Bill Siedlecki, assistant director of the Student Center, said, "Tim has been involved with a varied series of experiences in journalism, whether it be printed journalism or radio...."

Siedlecki described Hopkins as a "pretty good" writer. "I feel it has been for years that the editor of the paper has to be a good writer. If you don't have a particularly good writer as editor, it's very difficult for his reporting staff to take him or her seriously." Siedlecki said that Hopkin's style of writing is "clean and precise" and that his point of view is "interesting." Siedlecki said, "He raises interesting questions that help you look at an issue, perhaps in a different light."

Outgoing editor-in-chief Nelson said, "Because news is by far the largest department as far as reporting within the paper, it's especially beneficial to the new staff that Tim has a great deal of experience in news." Nelson said, "He knows how to go about cultivating sources for stories, and once the sources are cultivated, he knows how to maintain them to the benefit of the newspaper." Nelson continued, "Tim is a very dedicated individual in that he trys to bring a professional touch to all aspects of journalism that he has contact with."

Nelson said, "Tim is always more than willing to put in effort above and beyond what is called for in whatever position he works on," Nelson said. "The entire staff as well as the readers will benefit from this dedication that he has shown, and I'm sure he will continue on as editor-in-chief.

"Tim has always wanted to scratch beyond the superficial in any and all issues, getting down to underlying causes that are not readily apparent in the beginning. Nelson continued, "I sincerely believe that we will see nothing but improvement and good things from The Stoutonia next year."

Hopkins will officially take the reins of The Stoutonia April 15.

STOUTONIA: HOW IS THE RELATIONSHIP WITH THE LIBRARY BOARD? THE PREVIOUS ADMINISTRATORS HAD SOMETIMES FELT POLITICALLY SANDWICHED BETWEEN THE BOARD, THE PUBLIC AND THEIR OWN GOALS. HAS THAT HAD AN EFFECT ON YOUR JOB?

FOOTE: I've felt no restrictions other than that we need to move forward. Because there are so many changes going on, because of the economic situation ... that's going to have an impact, especially on any kind of organization whether it's government, or non-profit....It's going to affect where those dollars are and how many of them there are. So we have to look at "How can we use the building?" Then there are two ways: we can put a nice little velvet cord across the doorway and have a plaque on the door that says, "This used to be a theater."....you [may] look at it as a beautiful place that used to be well-used, or we try and make it a functional, viable community center that still respects and utilizes to its advantage, the historically significant building. We do need to make a compromise in some way between how we protect the wood so people don't carve their initials into it but still also give people the opportunity to come inside. Also, this hits me, as when we had public radio here yesterday to record our concert and they said they had to stop several times in the community to find people who could tell them where the building was. People did not know what they were talking about.

STOUTONIA: WERE THE PEOPLE THEY ASKED STUDENTS?
FOOTE: I think they did say they were students, but still that is a concern for me. I have 7000 people living across the street. I have a miniature community there and how do I get them into the building? How do I get them to fill the hall? People say that this looks like a funeral home.

STOUTONIA: THAT BRINGS UP TWO OTHER POINTS, FIRST, WHAT ABOUT THE LOSS OF THE LIBRARY? WHAT ARE THE PLANS FOR THE SPACE THAT LIBRARY IS NOW IN DOWNSTAIRS?
FOOTE: I think it will give us more visibility....It will be much more evident that there is something going on in this building other than a library. We hope to be able to rent that space. I want to use it as a conference room, conventions, small groups. A group like the Lion's Club might...have a regional conference. Well, we can seat 300 people so they can have their conference, their group meeting, then break into smaller groups. Long range, I'd like to do some things with theater history, actually with seminars and week-long workshops where we work with children and bring in theater instructors. It is fun to bring in people who really are into theater and see them ooh and aah and say they've never seen anything like this. If we can bring in the key people who have a knowledge of the history of theater and the vaudeville era to use this as a teaching facility, that will give us visibility and credibility as a place where people can come and see some very interesting things.

STOUTONIA: WHAT ABOUT THE POSSIBILITY OF CREATING A HISTORICAL CENTER, THEATER OR GENERAL HISTORY, INCLUDING JOHN RUSSELL'S PHOTOGRAPHY COLLECTION?

FOOTE: We will keep the reading room. It will be a community service. We will have newspapers and publications....And to that we will develop a research library that will be theater, arts. I think that we can do a lot with just historical preservation types of things....How do you preserve old papers, how do you take care of photographs....Why not offer workshops on these kinds of things? Then I see a time in working with Stout and some of their departments, workshops in restoring furniture, treating and preserving fibers.

STOUTONIA: DOES THE TAINTER BEQUEST REQUIRE THAT THE LIBRARY REMAIN HERE, OR THAT THE READING ROOM REMAIN AS PART OF THE CHARTER OF THE BUILDING?

FOOTE: I think that we would want to use it as a reading room, but with the emphasis on research. We don't want to be in competition with the library, they are going to be doing a fine job, they have trained librarians....but we will have more of an emphasis on the historical part of it, maybe Wisconsin history, local history, the photograph collection, the kinds of things that relate closely with the building.

STOUTONIA: WHAT WOULD YOU CONSIDER THE HIGHLIGHT OF YOUR TERM AFTER ONLY SIX MONTHS?

FOOTE: I guess the highlight to me is having people come in and you see this look of wonder in their eyes, and the real highlight is when they come back again....When you see that you have tapped something that means that they will come back, or tell a friend, or bring their neighbor, or offer to volunteer. The more support that we have for the building, the more things we will be able to do with it....

STOUTONIA: WHERE DO THE FUNDS COME FROM FOR THE PROGRAMS YOU PUT ON?
FOOTE: We apply for grants from the Wisconsin Arts Board, and Arts Midwest. Our classical series was underwritten by First Bank, ticket sales, plus we do receive money from the city and the county.
STOUTONIA: ARE THERE RESTRICTIONS FROM THOSE SOURCES?
FOOTE: No, they don't ask for any kind of submission of what we plan to do, other than that we submit an overall budget to them. But they don't have any controls over what things we do for programming. We don't have to answer to them or get permission for any events.
STOUTONIA: TEN YEARS FROM NOW WHEN YOU ARE CELEBRATING YOUR TENTH ANNIVERSARY ON THE JOB, WHAT THINGS WOULD YOU LIKE TO SAY YOU HAD ACCOMPLISHED?
FOOTE: I would like to see our performing arts program be self-supporting, which is a big order. Part of that will be that we are starting a capital campaign to establish an endowment, so for the next three years, that will be a majority of my time. Ten years from now I hope that we are regionally known. I would like to go to anyplace in the Twin Cities area, to a place where they are familiar with entertainment or arts, that they are going to know of the Mabel Tainter....

Seminar offers creative teaching methods

Beth Reid
News Reporter

"Growing, Learning and Living Together" was the theme for the conference sponsored by the Early Childhood Association and the University of Wisconsin-Stout. The conference, held on Friday and Saturday, was designed to provide a wide variety of information and ideas for use in teaching children.

Workshops were held each day in the Home Economics Building and the Student Center. People attending the conference were allowed to select those workshops which were of most interest to them. There were 120 workshop sessions presented by teachers, educational directors, and other specialists and professionals.

A number of the workshops dealt with creative teaching methods for use in the early childhood classroom. One of the workshops, entitled "Make Your Classroom Come Alive" provided examples of innovative teacher-made materials which were categorized into various curriculum areas.

"These types of workshops are always helpful," said one teacher attending the conference, "because sometimes it's really hard to be creative and think of new things to do in the classroom."

Other workshops dealt with teaching health, safety, music, math, science and reading to children. These workshops featured methods of adapting curriculum materials to the preschool setting to make these concepts come alive. Attendees were allowed to participate in games and group activities which were appropriate for various age groups of children.

"Children need to use concrete objects to develop their skills," Trudy Lorenz, Kindergarten Teacher, said. "These workshops are designed to give teachers ideas of ways to present the material to the children at their level of understanding."

Another topic of focus for some of the workshops offered guidelines for effective parent meetings and conferences. The speakers presented ways to communicate more effectively with parents, with particular emphasis being placed on listening and responding in the most helpful ways.

Some of the other topics featured career opportunities in early childhood education, current happenings in child care, computer applications for early childhood education, and effective time management.

Along with the workshops, two keynote speakers gave presentations during the luncheons. On Friday, the keynote address was "Developmental Appropriateness: The Growing Concern" presented by Ms. Bess-Gene Holt, Early Childhood Consultant in Ames, Iowa. She dealt with the concept of developing a high quality program for young children, which is appropriate for their age level.

"A high quality program is not determined by the length of the program day, the type of program, whether it's a day care or nursery school, or on the type of sponsorship used," Holt said, "a high quality program is based on the age appropriateness of the program, which is determined through research, and the individual appropriateness, which is based on the observation of each child."

Her speech also looked at the environment of the early childhood classroom, the expectations of the teacher and parents, and the use of assessments and screening of the program to determine its effectiveness. "Children are not empty containers on an assembly line waiting to be filled up with a predetermined amount of knowledge," Holt said. "Each child needs his own individual amount of filling up, and we must develop programs which are appropriate for each child."

Entertainment during the lunch was provided by "The Flyers", who are performers for pre-school children. Their concerts are fast-paced and are designed to get children ages two thru nine involved in singing and movement to music. Their selection of songs are upbeat and fun, and their use of props and routines makes their performance truly enjoyable for children.

Saturday's luncheon address featured Wilma Stutheit, Associate Professor of Early Childhood at Kearney State College in Nebraska, who gave a presentation on "The Art of Puppetry." She presented ideas on using puppets in the classroom, developing puppet shows and other creative uses for puppetry.

During the two-day conference, exhibits were set up in the Student Center by various companies featuring educational tools and playthings for children. Those attending the conference could purchase materials for use in their own classrooms.

The Early Childhood Education conference attracted hundreds of participants to the two-day event that included 120 workshop sessions and the opportunity for early childhood educators to share their experiences with an intriguing variety of people. (Stoutonia photo by Julie LaFleur)

Energetic speaker gives dynamic presentation

Shelly Flaherty
News Reporter

Dynamic, energetic, enthusiastic and informative are only a few words to describe Flo Kennedy. Kennedy, an attorney and activist for feminists and civil rights, delivered a speech titled "Racism and Sexism" Wednesday, April 2, to an audience that filled the Great Hall.

To begin her lecture, Kennedy led the audience in two of her favorite songs. Both songs are feminist versions of familiar tunes. One, entitled "The Battle Hymn Of Women", included phrases such as, "We march for liberation and we're many thousand strong, we'll build a new society, we've waited much too long, for women's time has come," set the tone for the night.

The main topic Kennedy discussed was student loans. She thinks that something needs to be done about student loans. "Banks and the government are running a game on all of you," she said. "Do you realize that there are many black countries that pay for schooling up through the graduate level, yet, here in the United States many of you will be graduating and owing thousands of dollars," added Kennedy.

She suggested that a way to get ahead of the game is to negotiate in a nice way with the administration, and see if they will go with you to the government to see if a moratorium can be established to cover all loans.

To Kennedy, the whole student loan issue is nonsense. She says that the government is wasting money on useless things. "What is the point of spending so much money digging the ocean floor near Cape Canaveral, hoping to find remains, when all it does is get families upset," she asked. "Do you realize how much money is being spent everyday to have those boats go out," asked Kennedy. "Just think, that money could be put to something good, like student loans," she added.

She advised that students look into the National Student Roundtable, as a vehicle of getting things done on campus in a good way. By joining the National Roundtable, she feels that something can be done to take care of the student loan problem, as well as others. The National Student Roundtable is an organization that looks at various problems that students face, and tries to develop solutions for them. To get in contact with this organization you can write to:

Washington, D.C. 20003

She also stressed the importance of becoming involved with groups around you. "You've got to get off your apathy, because this country needs to be set in a different direction. This country doesn't care for you anymore, and it is up to you to stand up for your rights," said Kennedy. "You need to find your voice to talk back to power, because the power isn't always exerted in the healthiest way. If something bugs you, get ready to move," Kennedy added.

> Don't just lay around like a bowl of oatmeal. There are changes needed to be dealt with, so go to it.
> —Flo Kennedy Activist

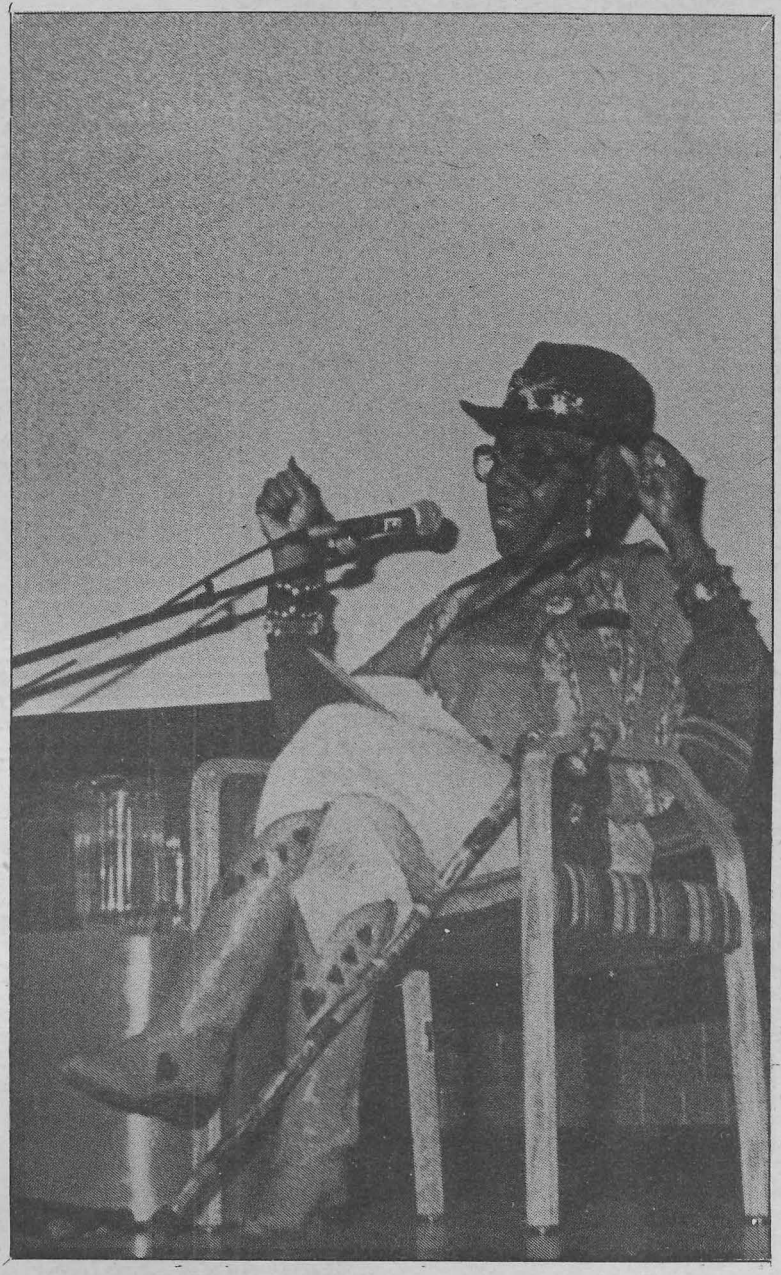
Change, and the importance of initiating it was also stressed. "It's fun to make change, and it's not all the big coastal towns that are changing, but the small towns," Kennedy said. She feels that Stout has potential, in fact she said it could be the Berkely of Wisconsin. "Don't just lay around like a bowl of oatmeal," Kennedy said. "There are changes needed to be dealt with, so go to it."

She believes that this country needs new eyes and new involvement. "You can't have people in charge who lead things to bad situations," Kennedy said, "we need to be disciplinarians for the people who run the nation."

Kennedy touched the topic of sexism, by saying that it is a result of bad treatment, quite often by society. "You hate men who oppress you, not all men," Kennedy said. "Women need to know that most sexist men are the men in 'skirts' like the priests and judges," Kennedy stated. "I am against sexism and racism, yet I have many friends that are men, and I have many white friends as well," Kennedy said.

Kennedy ended her speech by encouraging everyone to have fun, "There is a lot of fun to be had out there, so go for it," Kennedy stated.



Civil rights and feminist activist Flo Kennedy tried to stir up interest in the audience as she told them America was heading in the wrong direction and it is up to the people to turn things around. Kennedy's theme was that a person's enjoyment was derived from their active involvement in the process. (Stoutonia photo by Julie LaFleur) wanted to write-in a candidate, they could do so by using a paper ballot.

Another concern was the objectivity of the people handling the election results. LaFountain said that the votes were counted by approximately six people from the S.S.A and the Inter-residence Hall Association (I.R.H.A). Asked if these people could change the vote, LaFountain replied "It's not that they couldn't, but I doubt this went on. The tallying process is done by few people in a open area for just that reason."

Additional questions about the validity of the voting process were raised when the blackout occurred on the Thursday, April 10, the final day of the two-day election. La Fountain said that the computer terminals were unaffected by the blackout because they were hooked up to a main terminal in the Administration Building, which was unaffected by the blackout.

"The only problem imposed on the elections was that we may have lost a few votes because students were unable to vote in a building convenient to them that was effected by the blackout," she said.

Asked if there were any complaints about the waiting time involved in using the computer, La Fountain said that there was never more than a few minutes wait for the computer terminal because of the extensive access students have to computers on campus.

Union runs smoothly despite minor problems

Nitin Nadkarni
News Reporter

The Terrace Cafe was packed and the Pawn was full too, judging from statements overheard in the Student Center lobby as students tried to decide where they might go for lunch or a snack.

The Cafe was full to the bursting point with the milling crowds on this sunny afternoon and the area near the Pawn and the bowling alley was agog.

Student Center Director Bob Johnson agreed that the Terrace Cafe was getting crowded, but he pointed out this was the peak period in the early afternoon. "The time period from 12 noon to 12:40 p.m. is the peak period. You do not build a facility to take care of the peak time," Johnson said. He said the Student Center was built using whatever funds could be afforded.

"Earlier in the year we had a lot of problems with the crowd (size) and we tried rearranging the tables and chairs to get in the right configuration, but now I feel the crowding problem has lessened," Johnson said.

He encouraged students to make new friends and share the tables and thus help ease the situation. Patrons could eat a little earlier or a little later he suggested.

Regarding the acoustics on the first floor by the Pawn and the bowling alley, Johnson said he was aware of the problem and it should soon be solved by having a consultant come and suggest the necessary changes.

"We do care for the students' needs and they are being looked after and properly represented by the Student Center Advising Committee," Johnson said.

The various dining services at the Student Center attract many students and Student Center Dining Services Manager, Vernon Rhodes discussed some of the problems and their possible solutions.

He pointed out the areas of the dining service that have done well. "The food is really appreciated by the students and we are proud of that. We all really work hard, and I feel that my staff really deserves the compliments," the dining services manager said. The full-time employees and the students work for the best and achieve the best," Rhodes said.

Mexican and Chinese specialities are present on the menu apart from French and Italian cuisines, so the international students may also enjoy the food.

Regarding complaints, Rhodes said that people complain about cold french fries and no variety in the soup selection. One problem is that "although the food is piping hot when served, it is cold by the time the guest sits down to eat it," Rhodes said. In defense of the lack of soup selections at the Terrace Cafe, he said that when different soups were on the fare, for quite sometime people still preferred the ones being served now.

> The food is really appreciated by the students and we are proud of that.
> —Vernon Rhodes
> Student Center
> Dining Services

He welcomed suggestions and comments from the students and invited the patrons to come to him with any problem they may have regarding food at the Student Center.

Rhodes said the catering department worked to insure that what was offered in the menu was what was served. Strict quality standards were laid down so that high quality food might continually be served, according to Rhodes.

He stressed the fact that the staff at the Terrace Cafe made it a point to tell the patrons about the food ingredients, since people could be allergic to some foods or may not eat certain types of meat due to their religion.

The food's popularity was shown when Rajiv, a student from India, said the food was "scrumptious." Initially, Rajiv said he was quite apprehensive of eating the relatively bland American fare since he is used to the hot and spicy curry used in India. But he said he liked the food at the Terrace Cafe so much that now he cannot think of missing the treat.

Other international students praised the job done by Rhodes and the dining services team.

"We use the best of products and try to use very little of convenience foods and preservatives while preparing the food," Rhodes said. According to Rhodes, most of the food is prepared from scratch rather than using canned versions.

"I don't take the back seat to anybody, we are tops and we shall remain there," Rhodes said proudly.

Chuck Harmonick and Paul Wenger, graduate students in the hospitality and tourism program, said that the food was really excellent and especially commended the Today's Special. They suggested that the cafe would look better and be more comfortable with booths by the windowside.

Harmonick and Wenger also suggested that smaller tables which could be joined to form bigger ones might answer another problem while causing only minor changes in the current arrangement.

Tres bien was the overall reaction of most students when asked their opinion of the Student Center Dining Service.

Brazil tour offered

A food study tour of Brazil is being offered through UW-Stout's food and nutrition department Aug. 10 to Aug. 25.

Cost will be approximately $1,700 plus course registration fees for those who take the tour for credit.

Participants in the tour will study both foods and food industries of Brazil.

With a departure from Miami, the tour will include visits to six cities. Additional information can be obtained by writing to "Brazil 86," Food and Nutrition Department, University of Wisconsin-Stout, Menomonie, WI 54751 or by calling (715) 232-2693.

SME donation to LLC

The Society of Manufacturing Engineers (SME), Student Chapter -88 at the University of Wisconsin-Stout is proud to announce their donation of a reference book to the Library Learning Center. The book was awarded to the chapter for its achievement in having the largest membership growth rate in Region 6. Stout has the largest SME student chapter in the nation.

The title of the book is, TOOL AND MANUFACTURING ENGINEERS HANDBOOK: Materials, Finishing and Coating, and is valued at $100. It will be available for faculty and student use in the reference section of the library.

AIDS conference

"Aids on the College Campus" will be the topic of a conference to be held Monday, April 14 and Tuesday, April 15 at the Radisson South in Minneapolis.

Sponsoring the event are the UW-Stout department of residence life; the university's Office of Continuing Education and Summer Session; and the National Association of Student Personnel Administrators.

The conference is designed to assist colleges and universities in preparing recommendations, writing guidelines and developing educational programs on this sexually transmitted disease.

Career program

Minority students in high schools will receive early exposure to career fields associated with technology, science and mathematics through a special program at UW-Stout.

Titled "Technology Now," the program is being offered through a one-time $10,000 grant from the UW System. This funding is part of a $100,000 appropriation for precollege preparation programs to serve minority students.

Organizers of the project stated that blacks, Hispanics and native Americans are under represented in career fields associated with technology, science and mathematics. The program at Stout will provide information and practical experience in these fields through the university's specialized majors.

A two-phase, five-week program will bring selected high school students to campus July 6, where they will reside in university housing. In the first phase of the program, students will spend four weeks completing one or two regularly scheduled summer session courses. In addition, they will be enrolled in a series of workshops an dseminars designed to introduce various career opportunities.

In the second phase, on campus and off-campus professionals will conduct workshops and seminars focused on a range of topics in four primary areas: self-awareness; university-academic opportunities; career awareness; and college life.

ECE in Britian offered

Judy Herr, director of UW-Stout's Child and Family Center, will lead a travel and study program titled "Early Childhood Education in Britain," June 30 to July 11.

Cost of the program is $1,589 for two undergraduate credits. Fees include air transportation departing from and returning to Minneapolis, rooms, some meals and most travel in Great Britain.

Reservation forms for the program and a deposit check of $200 per person made payable to the university should be sent to Judy Herr, University of Wisconsin-Stout, Menomonie, Wis. 54751.

Hospitality and the Handicapped

Harold Snider, executive director of the Society for the Advancement of Travel for the Handicapped, will speak at UW-Stout from 7-9 p.m., Tuesday, April 15 in Room 208 of the Home Economics building.

Snider's topic is "Impact of Handicapped-Disabled Travelers on the Hospitality Industry."

Snider is also president of the Washington, D.C. based Access for the Handicapped, Inc; and coordinator of Programs for the Handicapped at National Air Space Museum, in the Smithsonian Institute.

CKTO residents victims of robbery; others cautioned to lock their rooms

Kelly Cohorst
News Reporter

Shannon Strauss was arrested by Menomonie Police Friday morning for allegedly burglarizing Curran, Kranzusch, Tustison and Oetting (CKTO) Halls.

Between the hours of 4:30 and 7:30 A.M., according to residents of Second Kranzusch, Strauss allegedly burglarized numerous rooms on three floors of the resident hall. Items which students reported as missing and police believe may have been involved in this case include T.V. remote controls, men's clothing and women's jewelry.

Apparently, Strauss came up to visit friends who live in CKTO. After going out on the town they returned to CKTO and went to sleep. At this time Strauss allegedly burglarized rooms on the three floors in question.

Strauss is from Brooklyn Park, Minnesota. She came to Menomonie with a girlfriend.

Ann Pearce, CKTO's assistant hall director, would only say, "It's an eye opener for students in the residence hall." She felt that the students were not as cautious as they really should be and she thinks that an incident like this will caution students to lock their doors more often.

Several students allowed access to their rooms by leaving their doors unlocked when they went to sleep.

> It's an eye opener for students in the residence hall.
> —Ann Pearce
> Asst. Hall Director

A number of students saw Strauss while the alleged burglaries took place.

"Theft may not seem like a problem, but more and more, Stout campus is becoming more unsafe," said Sheri Ramy of CKTO. Ramy said she witnessed Strauss in her room between the hours of 6:00 and 7:00 a.m.

Many girls who reported some of their jewelry missing said that they did not know how to go about pressing charges and that if they did know, they were not sure if it would be more trouble than it would be worth.

After Strauss allegedly burglarized several floors, it was found the next morning that she had belongings in her possession which may not have belonged to her. The articles in question were said to be worth several hundred dollars. Many students did not realize for several hours that their belongings were missing.

Two girls who requested to remain anonymous checked their own possessions after they learned of the alleged incident. One of the girls said that her roommate noticed that her watch was missing and asked if she had anything missing. Upon checking they found that up to $400.00 worth of their jewelry was not to be found.

None of the students who reported their items missing will press charges at this time.

ATTENTION ALL STUDENTS

You are invited to attend a question and answer session held by the members of the North Central Association visiting team. This organization is the major accreditation body for the University. The members of the team would like to hear from students on how they feel about the university and the programs offered at Stout. The session will be held Tuesday, April 15 at 4:00 in the Cedarwood and Maplewood rooms of the Student Center.

Rainbow organization represents ethnic groups through interaction

Cheryl Carr
Contributing Writer

To fully appreciate a certain ethnic culture, one must experience the values, traditions and backgrounds of people from that group. At UW-Stout, students are given the opportunity to mingle with others from diverse cultural backgrounds through the Rainbow Organization.

With a native American president, Hispanic treasurer and black secretary, the executive board of Rainbow reflects the goal of the club--to represent all of the American ethnic groups on campus. Rainbow allows for interaction between different cultural groups and the sharing of various ethnic traditions.

"We want to provide a safe environment for interaction," said Pat Barnes, advisor of the organization. "Too often, a student may want to talk with a minority student, but feels uncertain--about approaching him after class or on the street. At Rainbow, you can learn about other cultures and meet some interesting people in the process."

Barnes emphasized that Rainbow is open to non-minority students and they are encouraged to join. "This is a campus-wide organization," she said. "I think they (non-minority students) need that interaction with the minority students. Cultural diversity isn't taught much at the college level and this is a good chance for them to get some exposure to ethnic differences."

Community members and international students are also encouraged to become members. "Understanding the traditions and values of a particular culture will help a person better appreciate that culture," Barnes said.

"Last year we had a soul diner and all of the members participated," she said. "It turned out really well but many people don't realize all of the work that goes into the preparation of such a meal. By understanding things like this, a student might better understand the culture."

The Rainbow Organization was formed about two years ago, evolving from the group Ebony Harambee, which was perceived by students as an organization for blacks rather than one to educate the campus about blacks.

Most campuses offer separate organizations for individual ethnic groups, resulting in several different entities, each with fairly low membership, Barnes said.

"We wanted to give the students the opportunity to join one group where they could learn about all of the various cultures," she said. "On most campuses, if you want to learn about five or six cultures, you have to join five or six groups."

The Rainbow Organization brings ethnic films, entertainers and speakers to the campus and helps promote various events which are coming to Stout. Throughout February, which was Black History month, the group sponsored the appearance of Regency and Sounds of Blackness, two musical groups which performed on campus. They also sponsored a black American chef, who came to participate in Stout's Ethnic-Chefs-in-Residence program.

Barnes said that all of the events they sponsor are free to students unless there is a cost to the club. "We aren't out to make a profit. We just want to give everyone the opportunity to be knowledgeable of all the cultures of the campus," she said.

Joe Torres, a junior from Oneida, is president of the organization. "There's so little interaction among the students from different cultures," he said. "We're trying to increase the cultural awareness on campus. It's difficult to break students of their natural 'cliques.'"

Torres sees Rainbow as an opportunity for minority students to establish and practice leadership skills. "In the UW System, minority students aren't given enough encouragement to become involved," he said. "They're generally underrepresented in student government. Through Rainbow, we're providing a place for students to show their leadership and we're encouraging all of the members to become involved."

Torres is co-chairman of the third annual American Minority Leadership Conference, which will be held April 11-13 in La Crosse for all UW System students.

"We've got some Rainbow members involved on the planning committee," he said. "The conference is a good opportunity for students to voice their concerns."

Rainbow is also seen as a great campus resource for various displays and cultural events.

"We often loan some of our items for campus events," Barnes said. "In the [Ethnic Services] office, we've got some commissioned art and quite a few cultural pieces given to us as gifts by students."

Although Rainbow may still be considered a new organization on campus, Barnes feels they have been fairly successful in reaching their goals of expanding cultural diversity on campus.

"I just feel that, with some cultural understanding, people will get along a lot better," she said.

Arts

Parents Weekend to feature Oklahoma

Karen Heagle
Arts Reporter

It is the time of the year again when the University Theatre presents its spring musical. By popular demand, the theatre will present Oklahoma!

Preview

This year when Natalie Bothwell, director of the University Theatre, was looking for some real musical talent for her play, she decided the best way to find it was to use a survey. She wrote up a list of potential selections for the production and gave it to Pat Liebergen, director of choral activities, and he had the choir vote.

The decision was almost unanimous: Oklahoma! Not only did this turn out to be the choir's favorite but this happened to be a favorite of Bothwell.

She explained, "I've always loved the music from it, and I love Rodgers and Hammerstein." Bothwell has found that the survey did indeed help her find strong voices. "I am very pleased," she admitted.

The response to the play as far as ticket sales are concerned is overwhelming. Bothwell has an abundant stack of ticket requests from a lot of student's parents. Since they will be performing Parent's Weekend, the tickets sales have reached pleasingly high rates. She recommends that students who are looking for good seating should reserve tickets for Thursday night's show.

Bothwell expects that Friday, Saturday and Sunday's shows will be close to sell-outs. She said, "It's exciting for me and exciting for the cast too."

The music from Oklahoma! is probably its strongest point. As director Bothwell put it, "It's funny most of the people who've been involved with this play say the music just kind of haunts you." Bothwell believes the music is so influential

> ...the music just kind of haunts you.
> —Natalie Bothwell director

that you tend to like all of it, not just one certain song.

She continued to explain the mood: "They were singing "Oh What a Beautiful Morning," but it was a dreary morning — cloudy and gloomy. The show's fun because of that." The show will leave audiences in a terrific mood, feeling "optimistic."

The technical aspects of the show are somewhat simple, but as Bothwell said, "It's real interesting visually. It wasn't extremely demanding on our crews, so the kids could kind of relax and have fun building." The set up consists of several moveable platforms.

The show itself is based on a play Green Grow the Lilacs by Lynn Riggs. The show consists of several characters. Curly, a cowboy, and Jud, a hired-hand on a ranch are competing for the love of a pretty young girl, Laurey, who is staying with her Aunt Eller. The rivalry between Jud and Curly leads right down to the box social, a very big deal among these people. Laurey, who won't admit her true feelings to Curly, claims that he is not good enough to take her to the social.

So Jud solves the problem by announcing he will take her. The conflict between Curly and Jud develops just as another conflict develops.

Laurey's friend, Ado Annie, a vulnerable young girl, is trying to decide if she should marry Will Parker, a cowboy who believes he is as good as engaged to her. He just needs Annie's father's approval. Then there is a peddler, Ali Hakim, who Annie has taken to, but Ali has no intention of marrying. Annie's father doesn't want Will to marry Annie so he tries to force Ali to with a shot gun.

The story, the music, and the dancing, all provide for a very enjoyable production. The show, Oklahoma! is very highly acclaimed, but it wasn't always that way.

LYRA concert impressive ending to concert series

Beth Reid
Arts Reporter

The third and final concert of series performed by LYRA took place last Sunday at the Mabel Tainter Theater, providing a rare opportunity for music lovers in this area. This concert, entitled "A Farewell To The Bach Tercentenary" brought new life to the compositions of Bach and provided an impressive ending to the concert series.

Directed by Randy Bourne, Associate Music Director at Minnesota Public Radio (KSON-FM), the performance made a strong impact on the members of the audience, young and old alike. The compositions played varied, featuring concertos for one, two, three and four harpsichords.

LYRA is a newly established Baroque orchestra that is devoted to performing the music which has the characteristic style and expression prevalent in the 17th and 18th centuries. The style is marked generally by improvisation, contrasting effects, and the use of continuo.

All of the instruments used in the orchestra are replicas of those used back in that time period. Some the instruments included: violins, cellos, oboes, cellos and harpsichord. The instruments had the shape of those from the 17th and 18th centuries, and did not look like those of today's orchestras. The strings are made of sheep gut, rather then steel, which is used in the modern instruments, and the wind instruments used are made entirely of wood, not brass or metal.

The shape and materials of the instruments makes them more difficult to play then their modern day counterparts. The sound that comes from them has a different pitch and violinist Mary Sorlie feels that "the quality of the sound is much richer and makes these instruments much more enjoyable to play."

The concert was well attended, as were the first two concerts of the series. "This is a unique opportunity," one member of the audience said, "and one that I hope will continue because this type of music can be enjoyed and appreciated by anyone of any age or background." The LYRA concert series has also been taking place at the Lutheran Northwestern Chapel in the Twin Cities. The LYRA Concert Series was brought to the Mabel Tainter Theater through funding from the First Bank and Trust of Menomonie.

The final performance of the Mabel Tainter Theater's LYRA series included a concerto for three harpsichords seen here. The combination of period replica instruments and the unique acoustics of the Mabel Tainter Theater made for a special musical evening. Those in attendance remarked on the beauty and elegance of the opera house style theater, unique in its quality restoration. (Stoutonia photo by Brad Kautzer)

For Those About to Rock

The wild side

David Chase

"Hey babe, take a walk on the wild side."

Lou Reed

U.W. Stout stumblers have definitely walked on the wild side of life this school year. I'm almost positive it was a Stout stumbler that invented the four day weekend. Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, personal holiday for some, for others, Party Production Weekend.

Now do not take me wrong, I know that U.W. Stout stumblers are more than just reckless party animals that do nothing but drink. No, I know for a fact that many of you are clean shaven, well groomed party personnel — that do nothing but drink.

I have distinguished three different types of parties here at Stout. One type is the pre-bar parties: these parties are held during the day, previous to bar time.

A second type of party at Stout is the "drink until we get busted or run out of beer" party. These are money making parties that are most popular to those who are broke, and to those not old enough to drink at bars.

The third type of party found at Stout is the after-bar party. If you've been drinking at the bar, and you're not satisfied with the damage done to your liver, you attend an after-bar party. This particular party is also known as the "all nighter."

I never once ran across a "Norton" party, but someone at the Zooplex did give me a Red White and Blue beer. I did meet a guy named Norton uptown, he came up to me and said, "My name is Norton and I throw great parties." I wasn't sure if he was joking or not, so I just patted him on the back and said, "I'd change your name." I'm a firm believer in miminal encouragers.

So... do you wanna know who rocks? Putting all personal bias and accepted bribes aside is not easy. But it has to be done, Stout stumblers have a right to know who rocks Stout. The top five are...

Zooplex This house really jams. They have a Marantz tape deck, Techniques receiver, acoustics and graphic equalizer. These guys are serious about their parties, and so are the people who attend them. Though a bit over crowded, I had a damn good time.

Some of the better tunes I heard were Bob Seager The Doobie Brothers, Eric Clapton and The Blues Brothers. Two groups I rather not have heard from were The Jackson Five and Sister Sledge, but hey, no one is perfect.

The White House This was an invite only party, a friend of mine gave me his invitation. I must admit, I did not expect it to be much of a party, but it turned out to be a rocking occasion. The house had a nice Fisher set up and really rocked the house with it.

I heard a lot of great tunes, Boston, REO, Jethro Tull, The Stones and Pink Floyd. The party was fun, but would have been better if it were open to anyone. If only Ronald Reagan jammed tunes in his White House, and let the whole nation rock.

Home Plate The Home Plate is a fun and wild place to party. They do their share of jamming tunes. The party was good sized but not over crowded. If it weren't for the treacherous stairs, the place would be a perfect party house. But even with those "lawsuit stairs," the party was one of the best I have been to.

I never saw the stereo system, but the tunes had good sound. I heard tunes by The Stones, Lynyrd Skynyrd, Billy Squire, Yes, Prince and Alabama. I had a good time at this party and I plan on attending their next bash.

No Conclusion The parties at this house tend to be all night bashes, they're not huge parties, but that's okay, this house jams. I heard some Yes, Clapton, The Who, The Doors, Led Zeppelin, Aldo Nova, Springsteen, Dire Straits, ZZ Top and Aerosmith. Not bad, not bad at all. If you like to pussyfoot around with rock and roll, don't go to the No Conclusion, They'll rock you right out the door.

The City Dump I know what your thinking, you've never heard of the City Dump, right? Well you may not have heard of this house, but more than likely you've been there. Located behind Wigen Hall, it's just a stumble from the bars.

The hospitality at this house is fantastic. Where else can someone pay a mere two dollars and get plenty of beer, upside downers and natural brownies? (Betty Crocker never tasted so good.) The house jammed everything from Dire Straits and the Cars to Aerosmith and Led Zeppelin. A great party, and a great time.

Honerable Mentions

Off The Wall I just happened to stumble on to this party, a pleasant surprise. This is an up and coming party house of the future, and a great tribute to the female party houses at Stout. If any of you chauvinist out there feel that all men are superior partiers, well all I can say is watch out for these girls.

Land Of Make Believe This house was a damn good time, the party was not huge, but it was nice to breath. Tunes were good and there was even some scattered dancing. The place is definitely worth checking out.

MaiTai These ladies do their share of jamming, but unfortunately they ran out of beer real soon after I arrived. But while I was there I heard Van Halen, Romantics, Quiet Riot, ZZ Top and Alabama. Keep rocking ladies.

I wish to express my regret for missing parties by... Capitol Hill — I'm told it was a fun time, Bad Habit, Pleasure Dome and Seven Sisters. I was dissapointed that the Ranch did not have a party. And I also extend my regrets to the Beach House, I was there , but I do not remember much, but that's a sign of a good party.

My sympathy goes out to the Power Station, who suffered a casualty with the law.

So now you know who rocks.

Take a walk on the wild side...

The show was the first Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein did together. They met in college. Rodgers and his long time colleague, Lorenz Hart had produced 23 Broadway musicals, and 18 Hollywood films. Hart was taken seriously ill, when the idea for Oklahoma! came up.

When Hart died a year later, Rodgers was left with no one to work with, and didn't plan on completing the production. Until the name Hammerstein came to his mind. When Hammerstein agreed to work with Rodgers, the planning for Oklahoma! began.

The idea of a musical about cowboys was not one that was favored well, at first. One man put it, "No legs, no jokes, no chance." The name of the play at that time was, Away We Go! since titling it Oklahoma would have gone over even worse with critics because it suggested cowboys.

The audiences enjoyed early productions of it but the critics were not impressed. Rodgers and Hammerstein decided to change the title, revise the second act, and add a little more humor. They opened again at a theatre once prosperous but, now falling on hard times, and so, anxious to try something new. They decided to produce the play.

Then things changed as the play became a huge hit. It was the first musical play ever to win a Pulitzer Prize for drama. The success continued as the play broke every existing Broadway record, as it ran for five years and, toured the United States for 10 years.

When the show arrived in Oklahoma, the state declared a state holiday, and announced the title song of the play was now the official state anthem. Rodgers and Hammerstein are musical legends as a result of their incredible play writing efforts. Oklahoma! is just one of their masterpieces.

The University Theatre plans to make it their masterpiece next weekend when they open April 17th, and run through April 20th. Show times will be 8 pm on April 17, 18, 19, and a special matinee at 1:30 on Sunday, April 20th. Tickets can be reserved by phoning the box office at, 232-1468. Box office hours are Monday and Wednesday 1-6 pm, and Tuesday, Thursday and Friday 12-6 pm.

Ticket prices will be $2 for students and $3 for adults. Natalie Bothwell said, "I'm real proud of this show, and the cast is proud of it too, and that's what's important to me."

The Bijou Players

The Bijou Players are a highly acclaimed group of musicians who re-create the mood of the silent film classics. Since their founding in 1981, the Bijou Players have offered audiences the rare chance to experience the classics of the Silent Film Era accompanied by authentic orchestral music originally written for film. Something that has not been seen or heard since the 20's.

Come cheer the hero, cry with the downtrodden, and boo the villain!

The Bijou Players will be at the Mabel Tainter Theater on Saturday, April 12 at 7 p.m. That evening will feature "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" movie only. General admission: $4.50. Sunday, April 13 at 2 p.m. will feature "The Kid" with Charlie Chaplin Workshop. General admission: $5.50 for movie and workshop — movie only $4.50.

A special lecture/demonstration will be offered prior to Sunday's matinee film at 1 p.m. Don't miss this opportunity to meet The Bijou Players in person.

Stout Tours Italy

A tour of three Italian cities will be sponsored by the UW-Stout art department Sept. 16-29. The itinerary includes a visit to the international furniture exhibit in Milan plus trips to Florence and Venice.

The Milan exhibition is an annual event, attracting all disciplines within the design field. Orazio Fumagalli from the Stout art department will provide guided tours of the three cities, with emphasis on the history of the architecture.

Cost of the tour is $1,460 and includes a round trip flight departing and returning to Minneapolis; hotel accommodations for 12 nights; daily continental breakfast and dinners for 12 nights; transportation within Italy; and sightseeing.

To reserve space, a deposit of $300 is requested by April 23.

Participants also have the option of earning two academic credits for the tour. Additional information can be obtained by contacting Jean Starkweather, Art Department, UW-Stout, Menomonie, Wi 54751, phone (715) 232-1141.

Oklahoma!

"Oklahoma!," the Rodgers and Hammerstein hit musical, will be presented by University Theatre at UW-Stout Thursday, April 17 through Sunday, April 20. Performances in Harvey Hall auditorium are at 8 p.m., except for April 20 which will have a 1:30 matinee.

Tickets, which are $3.00 for adults and $2.00 for students, may be purchased at the box office in Harvey Hall between 1 and 6 p.m. Mondays and Wednesdays, and from noon to 6 p.m. Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays.

"Oklahoma!" is the first production Rodgers and Hammerstein did as a team. It became one of the most popular, beloved and widely produced around-the-world musical shows in theatrical history. It received a special Pulitzer Prize and a national tour that lasted for 10 years, with presentations in almost every corner of the world.

"Oklahoma!" revolutionized musical comedy. It was the first show to have songs and dances integral to the plot. It was also the first to use everyday people in the show and a character who was evil.

Wellness Week focuses on better living

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

Feel good, look good and get more enjoyment out of life. This is the underlying message of Wellness. To better understand this concept the UW-Stout Wellness Program, Student Health Service, Wellness Club and the University Counseling Center are sponsoring Wellness Week, April 14 - 18.

Although Wellness is a relatively new term, created in the late 1970's, it is a concept as old as life itself. According to Dr. David McNaughton, Director of the Counseling Center and Coordinator of the Wellness Program, "Wellness is an idea. Wellness takes us beyond not being sick. It is a higher level of being, leading to not only a longer life but a higher quality of living each day."

The purpose of Wellness Week is to focus upon the idea of better living in six specific areas. These areas include: physical and nutritional, emotional, intellectual, career and vocational, spiritual, environmental and social.

This year's Wellness Week is the fourth to be sponsored at Stout. Nancy Gehlhar, President of the Wellness Club said, "This week is more than just awareness about Wellness. We want students to see what areas in their lives which are lacking and to actually work for an optimum way of life."

A Proclamation of Wellness Week was signed Tuesday, April 8, 1986 by Chancellor Robert Swanson. This proclamation asks each member of the University and community to engage in lifestyle improvement activities in order to develop their individual lifestyles.

According to McNaughton the Stout community is very lifestyle improvement oriented. Student clubs, extracurricular activities and academics focus upon the dimensions of Wellness.

Wellness programs emerged on college campuses in the late 1970's, when the term was coined. Now, in the 1980's, these programs are flourishing. McNaughton said, "Wellness is appealing to college campuses because we are dealing with a community which is very developmentally oriented. They are growing and improving not only intellectually but as well as physically and spiritually. The college campus is an ideal place for this kind of lifestyle improvement program."

Wellness is much more than physical health. According to the Counseling Center 54 percent of deadly diseases are thought to be related to lifestyle. This lifestyle includes your unique pattern of daily living, how you handle stress, tension, loneliness, how you relax, how and what you eat, how you use drugs, alcohol, and cigarettes, how you use safeguards or take needless risks and how you stay in or get out of shape.

> Wellness takes us beyond not being sick,
> —Dr. David McNaughton
> Wellness Program Coordinator

Basic to a person's Wellness is self-responsibility. According to McNaughton this means being one's own chairperson of one's own well-being. He said, "I would encourage everyone who has the time and interest in Wellness Week to get involved. If we can get a spark lit in each one of us to direct us toward improving our lifestyles, that is the purpose of the week."

Wheels turn in play by fine Dakota Caravan

Amy Pagel
Arts Reporter

The Dakota Theatre Caravan appeared Tuesday night in the Great Hall with "In the Heart of the Hills". This play was about the controversy of strip mining in the Black Hills.

The play took place in South Dakota at Mount Rushmore and in the towns of Cascade and Jack Pine. These towns are supported by tourism, lumber and mostly mining.

Mark Van John and Michelle Hogan are the main characters. Mark, a native of Cascade, had attended college in Milwaukee with Michelle. During school they were among the "radicals" out to change the world.

At the time of the play Michelle had given up her poetry writing and was editing text books. She is on vacation camping and visiting her old boy friend ,Mark. Mark is the town Commissioner and a cafe owner in Cascade.

As Commissioner, Mark must vote for or against the expansion of the strip mines. After hearing both sides of the issue, he votes against the mine and four other votes.

The story ended as Michelle decided to move out to Cascade to be with Mark. At the close of the play there were a few slides shown of the beautiful scenes of South Dakota and the Black Hills.

"In the Heart of the Hills" is a very political play which is quite different from the usual stories the Dakota Theatre Caravan does. Their plays have usually been more historical. "Dakota Roads" is about a prairie family, "Welcome Home" is the story of a small town's centennial celebration, and "Dusting Off the Thirties" about farming in the depression and just plain survival.

The four actors in the Caravan presently are Joe Nelson, Maggie Affelser, Rhonda Smith and Paul Higbee. The four play various characters and contribute many talents through out the show.

Joe Nelson is co-writer of the play and is manager/producer as well as actor. He has been with the Caravan for five years after working in the theater since 1972. Joe was a cow boy, storyteller story gatherer, song writer and guitarist. He has spent most of his life in South Dakota.

Paul Higbee is from Iowa and has been acting professionally since he graduated from Black Hills State College in South Dakota in 1976. He is a social worker as well specializing in troubled adolescents. Paul writes short stories and plays which have been published and staged. He is a site director for the young playwright's program of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts.

Presently from Chicago, Maggie Affelder, joined the Caravan for this play. As a professional actress she has appeared in many plays which were toured nationally.

Rhonda Smith as co-originator of a similar group and touring with Shakespeare in the Parks is very familiar with this type of acting. "We do plays about things that are local and can be related to better by the audience because we talk about things that happen to them." Rhonda said.

All the scripts are based on interviews done while researching the topics of the plays. "We always want to hear your story and what's happening around you." Paul said. The cast invited the audience to tell them stories before and after the show.

The Dakota Theater Caravan was here as part of their five week tour. This will take them in and out of Wisconsin, South Dakota, Minnesota, and Iowa. Their activities will include performances of "In The Heart of the Hills" and theatrical workshops.

"It's nice to be on the road again and seeing some beautiful country side." Rhonda stated. All of the actors were happy to be out traveling.

After a few days in Minneapolis the Caravan will be moving of the other performances including stops at a few of the other Wisconsin Universities.

Students offered a fun alternative to drinking with special night club

Beth Reid
Arts Reporter

"Dance the Night Away" was the theme on Saturday night in the Great Hall of the Student Center, and that's exactly what everyone did. Students danced to the sounds of rock 'n roll, pop, funk and rhythm and blues in the "night club" atmosphere from 10 p.m. until 3 a.m.

The event was the idea of Seniors Derek Gibson and Derek Perez, along with the help of John Patterson, and the Student Center technical crew. "We came up with the idea because we wanted to offer students an alternative to drinking," Gibson said, "and we wanted to give them somewhere to go and dance."

This is the second night club activity they have had and so far they've been "mostly trying to see what kind of a turn out we would get." The turn out was quite good, especially for a Saturday night. The dance floor was never empty and there were a number of people sitting at the candlelit tables.

The music played was from Gibson and Perez's own collection of albums, along with some contributions from their friends. Gibson and Patterson were mainly in charge of the music and handling the sound, while Perez took care of reserving the room and taking care of the food.

"We each sort of pulled our own weight," Gibson said, "and took care of a separate part. That way, we got it all worked out to provide the type of atmosphere we were looking for — a new and different place to go besides the bars."

> ...we wanted to offer students an alternative to drinking.
> —Dick Gibson club organizer

Gibson and Perez are hoping that they may be able to eventually have a night club on a regular basis. "We're still in the experimental stage," Gibson said. "So far, the Union has been covering the costs of the food and the decorations. We're testing the idea out and we want to get the students' ideas and see how they respond."

To do this, students were asked to fill out an opinion survey at the door. Questions were asked regarding the type of music played, the overall atmosphere, the cost (which was $1.50 per person or $2 per couple) and whether they felt alcohol and food should be served.

Although hors d'oeuvres were available, no alcohol was served. Gibson felt that this didn't hurt them too much, because "a lot of people are looking for somewhere to go where there isn't a lot of drinking. They want a place to dance, and those types of places are so limited in Menomonie."

He felt that they also benefited by having the activity right on campus. "Students don't have to go so far for something to do," Gibson said, "and since we had a dress code, it helped make it more like going to a real night club."

There will be two more night clubs coming up this semester. The next one is scheduled for Friday, April 25 and the final one will be on Thursday, May 1. "We're looking to see what day of the week seems to be the most popular," Gibson said, "and to keep improving after we get the results from the surveys."

So far, Gibson feels "the event has been pretty popular. More people were at this one than were at the first, and I hope that people continue to tell their friends about it, maybe then we'll be able to hold them on a weekly or monthly basis next year."

Netters capture Augustana tourney title

Paul Wehking
Sports Reporter

The halved UW-Stout men's tennis team won six of their eight matches this weekend in tournament play.

The first team traveled to Rockville, Ill., where they competed in the Augustana tournament while the second team stayed in Menomonie to host the Blue Devil Invitational.

In the Augustana tourney, the men's netters racked up four wins to take home the tournament honors. The first match showed St. Ambrose College, who are ranked 14th in the NAIA rankings, getting throttled by the Blue Devils with the score stretching to 8-1. All of the nine matches against St. Ambrose were decided after the second set.

Coming up on the losing end in the match was the first doubles team of Rob Oertel and Mike Friedman. They dropped the match 7-5, 6-3 to their St. Ambrose opponents. "It was a close match and we lost a couple of no ad games. It was probably my fault, I lost my concentration," Friedman said. Oertel added, "Were not playing well together. We've both been down lately."

The second match proved to be a tough but big win for the Blue Devil team. This time they were matched up against Wheaton College and the teams battled to a tight 5-4 finish. The gravity of this win is due to the fact that in earlier play this year, Wheaton defeated Carleton College who is ranked fourth in the nation in the NAIA. The Blue Devils will face Carleton April 24. "It gives us a slight psychological edge to know that they (Wheaton) beat them (Carleton)," Oertel said.

It proved to be a tough weekend for first man Oertel. With the loss against St. Ambrose included, Oertel found himself on the losing side of the court three times during the two-day tourney. Oertel, who is currently ranked 17th on the NCAA Division III poll, lost to Wheaton's Jon Burnham 6-1, 1-6, 0-6 and Oertel and Friedman dropped their second doubles match of the weekend also to Wheaton. "He was the best player I've played this year. He beat a couple of ranked players in the tourney other than myself," Oertel said in reference to Burnham. Also coming up short for the Blue Devils in singles play were Joel Vogler and Tony Pheifer.

The turning point of the match against Wheaton was in the second doubles match where John Leehy and Mark Paine outlasted their opponents to win 7-5, 4-6, 7-6. The Blue Devils were behind 3-1 at the start of Leehy's and Paine's match. If they would have lost the match Wheaton would have obviously collected the victory. "That was our toughest match as a doubles team but it turned out that we won the match point," Paine said.

Stout also found good competition from the Central Iowa team. The final match score, 8-1, is somewhat deceiving. "It doesn't show the true score but it looks good and it reinforces our team ranking," Oertel said. Five of the nine matches went all three sets before decisions were reached with Stout winning all but one of those five. Number four man, Paine, lost to his opponent 3-6, 6-1, 6-2 giving Central their only win in the match. "He was a good player. He used a lot of underspin on the ball and capitalized that way," Paine said.

Along with the team win, Oertel gained much satisfaction from his singles match. Oertel went three sets with Central's Jeff Scheenkloth before emerging victorious. The interesting point of this victory is that Scheenkloth beat Oertel last year when the two met. "Last year he blew me away but I was really up for him this year and I was out for revenge," Oertel said. Sweet revenge was gained after Oertel beat Scheenkloth 6-2, 4-6, 6-1.

In their fourth and final match of the tourney the Stout netters pounded Elmhurst College with a very convincing 9-0 defeat. Tony Pheifer managed to come back after dropping his first set to win 5-7, 6-2, 6-3 and the troubled doubles pair of Oertel and Friedman hung on to win 6-1, 6-7, 9-7. "The first set went easily and then we relaxed a little. Tennis is a mental game and it can turn on you very quickly, as it did on us. We just weren't very aggressive during the whole match," Friedman said.

The other half of the Stout squad found the going a bit tougher. They won two of their four matches in the Blue Devil Invitational.

In their first match, Stout's second team netters were pitted against the University of Illinois, Chicago. Stout managed to win 5-4 but encountered difficulties early on in the match, losing the first three singles matches to Chicago. "I started missing shots and he started making them," Jarrod Barnard said. Barnard lost his match 6-3, 7-6. Also feeling the wrath in singles were Bill Johnson and Jim Peters. Johnson lost in three sets and Peters lost two 6-4 sets.

Three singles matches were won however. Todd Trabant and Eric Tidquist both won in two sets with 6-1, 6-3 and 6-1, 6-1 scores respectively. Troy Kelly then collected a forfeit in the sixth position.

In doubles play against Chicago, the pair of Barnard and Johnson lost their match 10-6, which was played with "pro-set" scoring. In "pro-set" scoring the first team to reach ten points is declared the winner. This loss was the start of a long weekend for the doubles pair who would eventually lose all of their doubles matches in the tournament. The second doubles team, Trabant and Eric Tidquist won in a close 10-8 match. "Both teams played well but we got the points when we needed them," Trabant said. Peters and Kelly received a forfeit which proved to be the winning edge for Stout.

In their second match on Friday, the Stout netters served a 7-2 defeat to UW-Green Bay. The Blue Devils lost one singles and one doubles match to their Green Bay opponents.

Jim Peters had to endure the longest match of the day which went three sets and a tie breaker that Peters eventually lost 10-6. "We both played very well. It was probably my best match of the year," Peters said. The other loss came from the Barnard-Johnson duo who lost 7-5, 2-6, 6-4.

On Saturday the balances began to even out for the Blue Devils. The University of Minnesota-Duluth aced the Stout squad 8-1, deflating their sails in a big hurry. "UMD is a good team. We would have had trouble with them even with our first team," Coach Bob Smith said.

The only bright spot in the Duluth match was shined by Tidquist who won his match 6-1, 4-6, 6-4. Tidquist was shining quite brightly all weekend. He managed to win all four of his singles matches while only losing two of the four in doubles.

To finish out the weekend, Stout took on Mankato State and once again came out a bit behind on the scoring slate.

Stout's two wins were collected by Peters, who received a forfeit and Tidquist, who won 6-4, 7-5. Mankato forfeited the singles match because it was the last match and their team was getting anxious to leave for home. "It made me mad that I didn't get to play. I had to wait around all day too," Peters said in disgust.

Overall, the split Stout netters fared well over the weekend winning six of their eight matches against their tournament opponents.

Augustana Tournament
Stout 8, St. Ambrose 1
Stout 5, Wheaton 4

Stout's Eric Tidquist, shown above in the match against University of Illinois-Chicago, trounced his UI-Chicago opponent 6-1, 6-1. Tidquist was among Stout's second team of netters who participated in the Blue Devil Invitational this past weekend. The men's first team traveled to Rockville, Ill. and captured first place in the Augustana tournament. 'Free beer' draws crowd

Rochelle Buhr

It was lousy out Saturday. Dreary gray black stuff was in the sky, and little spit spritzes fell from this shadowed yuck.

What a great day for the Second Annual Sigma Tau Gamma Keg Toss and Tug-of-War.

I had heard this was going to be a fun shindig, and also that there was free beer.

I moseyed down to the Carriage House by myself. The structure where these frat boys live and entertain in looks nice enough. It sort of reminds me of quasi-Gone with the Wind in a cute powder blue.

Music supplied by The Slant blasted from the blue building in the backyard as I started to begin my quest to see who was in charge of this and where were these take-and-no-pay brews.

I walked into this blue shack and saw a bar with a bunch of people who didn't look like they were running the festivities standing around.

"Hey," I said, "who's in charge?"

One guy came up to me and said that he would direct me to the kingpins. As I walked out with this fellow I grabbed a plastic cup of beer off the bar. I guess I grabbed someone's beer, because someone was screaming at me about AIDS being on the glass.

The guy pointed out to me the organizers and I thanked him and decided to check out the action before getting stats and stuff.

The women were throwing the 1/4 barrels. I watched the winner of the 135 lb. and under category, Mary Keogh, hurl the rotund ball of steel on the gravel. She had an effective shot-put-like style.

"This is the first time that I've done this," Keogh said. "I love to compete, and winning feels wonderful."

Next, I watched the 170 lb. and under class of guys, where Scott Shaver was competing. He had a Don Johnson-type stubble that was supposed to help him throw the farthest. It didn't help, I guess, because he didn't win.

"How much do these 1/2 barrels that the guys were throwing, and the 1/4 barrels that the women were throwing weigh?" I asked.

Someone weighed them, and found that the 1/4 barrels weighed about 12 pounds, and the 1/2 barrels weighed about 15 pounds. I overheard some guy say that he could throw that little quarter barrel all the way to the garage on the property which happened to be a lot farther then anyone could even throw close to. Yeah right Pal, I thought to myself, what time did you start taking advantage of the free tap?

Bill Haskell, one of the organizers of the event and a member of Sig Tau, told me that 28 people had paid a buck each for three tries at winning the illustrious beer light.

How far were people throwing the kegs?

"Between 25-30 feet," Haskell said.

Any charity involved?

"Nope just a good time for everyone, and a promotional deal for Old Style beer," Haskell commented.

The Tug-of-War seemed to be a bit more exciting, perhaps because more people were involved, or maybe because, by this time, everyone was juiced up.

Four teams had signed up to participate in the tug challenge. The requirements were that you could have up to ten people (8 guys and 2 ladies) weighing in no more than a total of 1700 pounds on a team.

One guy had to strip down to his jockeys to make the weight, and then someone came up to him and helped him lose an extra pound by ripping down his underwear.

He was exposed, and I only heard about it.

It took a while for the Tug-of-War to get moving, but when it did it was mud and guts.

One team, I noticed, happened to be cheating by wrapping the rope around a tree for leverage. They lost anyway.

After the mud settled, the Marion Bar emerged victorious and each team member was presented a coveted Old Style hooded sweatshirt, the forerunner of collegiate fashion.

While wandering around the grounds, I informally asked a few people why they decided to come to this particular event.

To observe intense keg throwing skills? Or to watch gut-wrenching strength in the Tug-of-War?

To sum up the responses, one guy said that he had noticed a few signs up that said the magic word in front of "beer". This was "free" and Sigma Tau Gamma had a successful day because of it.

Men's track team places third in WSUC Indoor Championships

Wendy Johnson
Sports Reporter

Last weekend the UW-Stout men's track team traveled to Oshkosh to participate in the 18th Annual WSUC Indoor Track and Field Championships. Stout placed third out of the nine teams competing.

Lou Klitzke, who is the long distance runners' head coach for Stout, commented, "We are very happy with the results of the meet. Overall we feel we were quite successful."

UW-La Crosse had 12 first places out of the 19 competitions. They earned the first place title with 203 points, UW-Stevens Point took second with 103 points.

The Blue Devils only first place for the meet was Delmar Johnson, who won the 60-yard dash with a time of 6.55 seconds.

Klitzke said, "We're especially proud of Todd Fox." Fox finished second in both of his races. He competed in the two-mile run on Friday night, where his time was 9 minutes 3.50 seconds. Back on the track Saturday afternoon, Fox raced in the three-mile run, and finished his race with a time of 14:16.84.

"Fox and the other top five runners would have placed at the national championships with these times. Also Fox probably would have been named All-American, if this meet would have been the championships. That shows how good Fox's times were," Klitzke commented.

Stout's Head Coach Brent Tischer said, "Fox is on the verge of showing how well he can do."

Paul Bons ran the one mile for Stout, and had a finishing time of 4:17.95, which earned him second place. Bons commented, "I'm real happy with my time. It is the best time I've had in a indoor meet." Bons also ran in the 880-yard race. He had a time of 2:00.07, putting him in fourth place. Bons said, "I'm happy that I placed fourth, but I had hoped to have a better time."

Klitzke said, "Robert Hackley surprised us with his race." Hackley also ran the one mile and placed fifth with a time of 4:19.80.

Scott Romenesko earned a third place finish for the Blue Devils in the pole vault. Romenesko also participated in the pentathlon, which is a series of five events. These five events included the 60-yard dash, the 60-yard dash hurdles, the one-mile, the shot put and the long jump. Romenesko received 2929 points in the pentathlon and placed third.

Larry Sorenson, Stout's captain, sprinted to a third place finish in the 440-yard dash with a time 51.19.

The 880-yard relay used team work to place third for Stout. Johnson, Sorenson, Dan Doucette, and Steve Hoeschele all added something to receive the time of 1:33.92.

Stout's Eric Bretl finished fourth with a time of 2:16.92 in the 1000-yard dash.

Doucette, a Blue Devil hurdler, raced in the 220-yard hurdles and crossed the finish line with a time 25.69. That time gave him a fourth place ranking.

Joe Prestigiancomo placed sixth in the long jump.

Sorenson, Steve Todey, Doucette, and Holschele participated in the mile relay in which they placed sixth with a time of 3:31.98.

Guerrero out for three months

Pedro Guerrero, the Los Angeles Dodgers' MVP, will not be playing for at least three months after rupturing a tendon below his left kneecap. Guerrero was injured while sliding into third base on an attempted double steal against the Atlanta Braves.

Casy wins it for Michigan

Casey Close of Michigan hit a grand slam in the 10th inning to help his team win the Wheaties Tournament of Champions. Miami was ahead 5-3, the bases were loaded, Close was up, and there were 2 outs and 2 strikes. Close came through though and was also named the most valuable player of the tournament.

Hawks win title

The Chicago Blackhawks obtained the National Hockey League's Norris Division Championship after defeating the St. Louis Blues 3-1. This is the first title that the Hawks have won in three years.

Bradley wins big

Pat Bradley finished one-under-par to win the Nabisco Dinah Shore and $75,000. This is the biggest prize on the Ladies Professional Golfers Association tour.

Snow Chief an easy winner

Snow Chief led almost the entire way and won the $500,000 Santa Anita Derby in Arcadia, Calif. The win was worth $275,000 to Snow Chief. Snow Chief's trainer, Mel Stute, believes that he might have another Secretariat on his hands.

Spikers defeated by Bethel College, 3-2

Kim Steger
Sports Reporter

Coming back from a game-free month, the UW-Stout men's intramural volleyball team was defeated by Bethel College, 3-2.

Bethel College won three out the five matches with the scores of 15-6, 15-6 and 15-8. Stout won two of the matches with the scores of 15-11 and 15-10.

Team member Mike Dresen said, "We were rusty. We can't always get practice times set up in the fieldhouse. The team seems to play in spurts. We do great in some games and not so great in others."

The team was short two players during Sunday's game due to one player being out of town and due to the team's captain, John Wise, having mononucleosis. Dresen said, "We needed Wise really bad. He's a strong player." Wise should be back to play in two weeks. He feels he'll be back to compete in the conference meet which is April 18-19.

Observing the game from the sideline, Wise commented that by watching instead of playing in the game it was obvious that the team wasn't mentally prepared. "It was the mental lapse that killed them out there. They were missing leadership," Wise said.

"This was an important loss because now we'll be seeded below Bethel in conference," Wise said. Seeding for conference depends on how a team finishes in their division.

Team members for this year include Dresen, Wise, Dave Conant, Hugh Peterson, Mike Bajczyk, Mike Rollins, Eric Carlson, Chuck Balastrari and Bob Nachtendonk.

"When we're playing good, we could beat everyone in our conference. We have more talent than Bethel College. We just had a rusty game on Sunday," Dresen said.

The team is hoping to place within the top four or five places in conference. They expect tough competition from the University of Minnesota and from North Hennepin. "The rest of the games should be close ones. All the teams are pretty even in talent," Dresen said.

The team's next game will be this Saturday against UW-Eau Claire and UW-Stevens Point.

Ciacura competes in national lifting tourney

Paul Wehking
Sports Reporter

He stands approximately five feet six inches tall, weighs 165 pounds and has squatted nearly four times his own body weight while competing in a state powerlifting tournament.

The name that goes along with this feat is Rob Ciacura and four times his body weight figures out to about 615 pounds. Ciacura, who is a junior at UW-Stout, competed in the United States Powerlifting Federation's Collegiate National Tournament. Thirty-two colleges and universities were represented at the tournament. The tournament was held at the University of Illinois, Chicago and Ciacura traveled there in hopes of breaking the national record in the American Drug Free Powerlifters Association in the squat lift which stands at a hulking 622 pounds.

The difference between the USPF and the ADFPA is that the USPF requires drug testing only at competitions on the national level whereas the ADFPA requires testing at all competitions. The tests are taken at the meets themselves and results are available within approximately four weeks. If a lifter is tested positive, he is disqualified from the tournament and all the other lifters move up one slot in the placing. Ciacura is a member of both powerlifting organizations.

Powerlifting meets consist of individuals being grouped into one of the eleven weight classes ranging from 114 pounds to super heavyweight (275 lbs.). These lifters must perform three different lifts — squat, bench press, and deadlift (in that order) to obtain a competitive total. The lifter has three chances to achieve his maximum weight in each lift.

Rob Ciacura

The lifter with the highest total wins first place honors in his weight class. A "Best Lifter" award is given to the competitor who obtains the highest coefficient with the Schwartz Formula. The formula compares an individual's body weight to his total weight lifted.

Ciacura got his start in powerlifting as a sophomore in high school. "My brother was into it [powerlif-

Sluggers belt St. Mary's in double-header

Louie Filkins
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout baseball team dominated St. Mary's College winning both make-up games of their double-header, 8-1 and 15-4. The Blue Devils were rained out of their original meeting with the Redmen which was planned for last Saturday. Two games with Hamline University were also cancelled last Sunday because of the weather.

In the first game, strong pitching by Mike Charbonneau helped Stout seal the victory. Charbonneau went the distance, giving up only one run and six hits during the game. The right-handed sophomore walked just three Redmen and recorded eight strikeouts. "I'm pleased with Mike's performance this year. He throws a good breaking pitch. They didn't hit anything hard off him all game," Head Coach Terry Petrie said.

Offensive power overcame the Redman as Stout scored 15 runs in just five innings.

Charbonneau got himself out of trouble nicely in the top of the third inning with K's for the second and third outs with bases loaded. Charbonneau bettered his performance in the next inning with three consecutive strikeouts to strand three base runners.

The Blue Devils also showed their reputation for scoring runs by slugging in eight runners across home plate. Leading off in the second inning, co-captain Jeff Kloes started Stout off right by launching a home run over the fence in right center. The Devils scored six runs in the third, five of them coming with two outs.

Senior shortstop Jim Miller sparked the rally with a stolen base after he was walked. Greg "Oz" Osowski drove him in with a single and the rout was on. After Osowski stole second, Kloes was intentionally walked. Two more stolen bases and a wild pitch gave Stout another run. Designated hitter Bob Effinger drove in a run with a base hit and Scott Aschenbrenner crushed a two-RBI double to left center field. Eric Nystrom hit the speedy Aschenbrenner home with a single to capture the last RBI of the big inning.

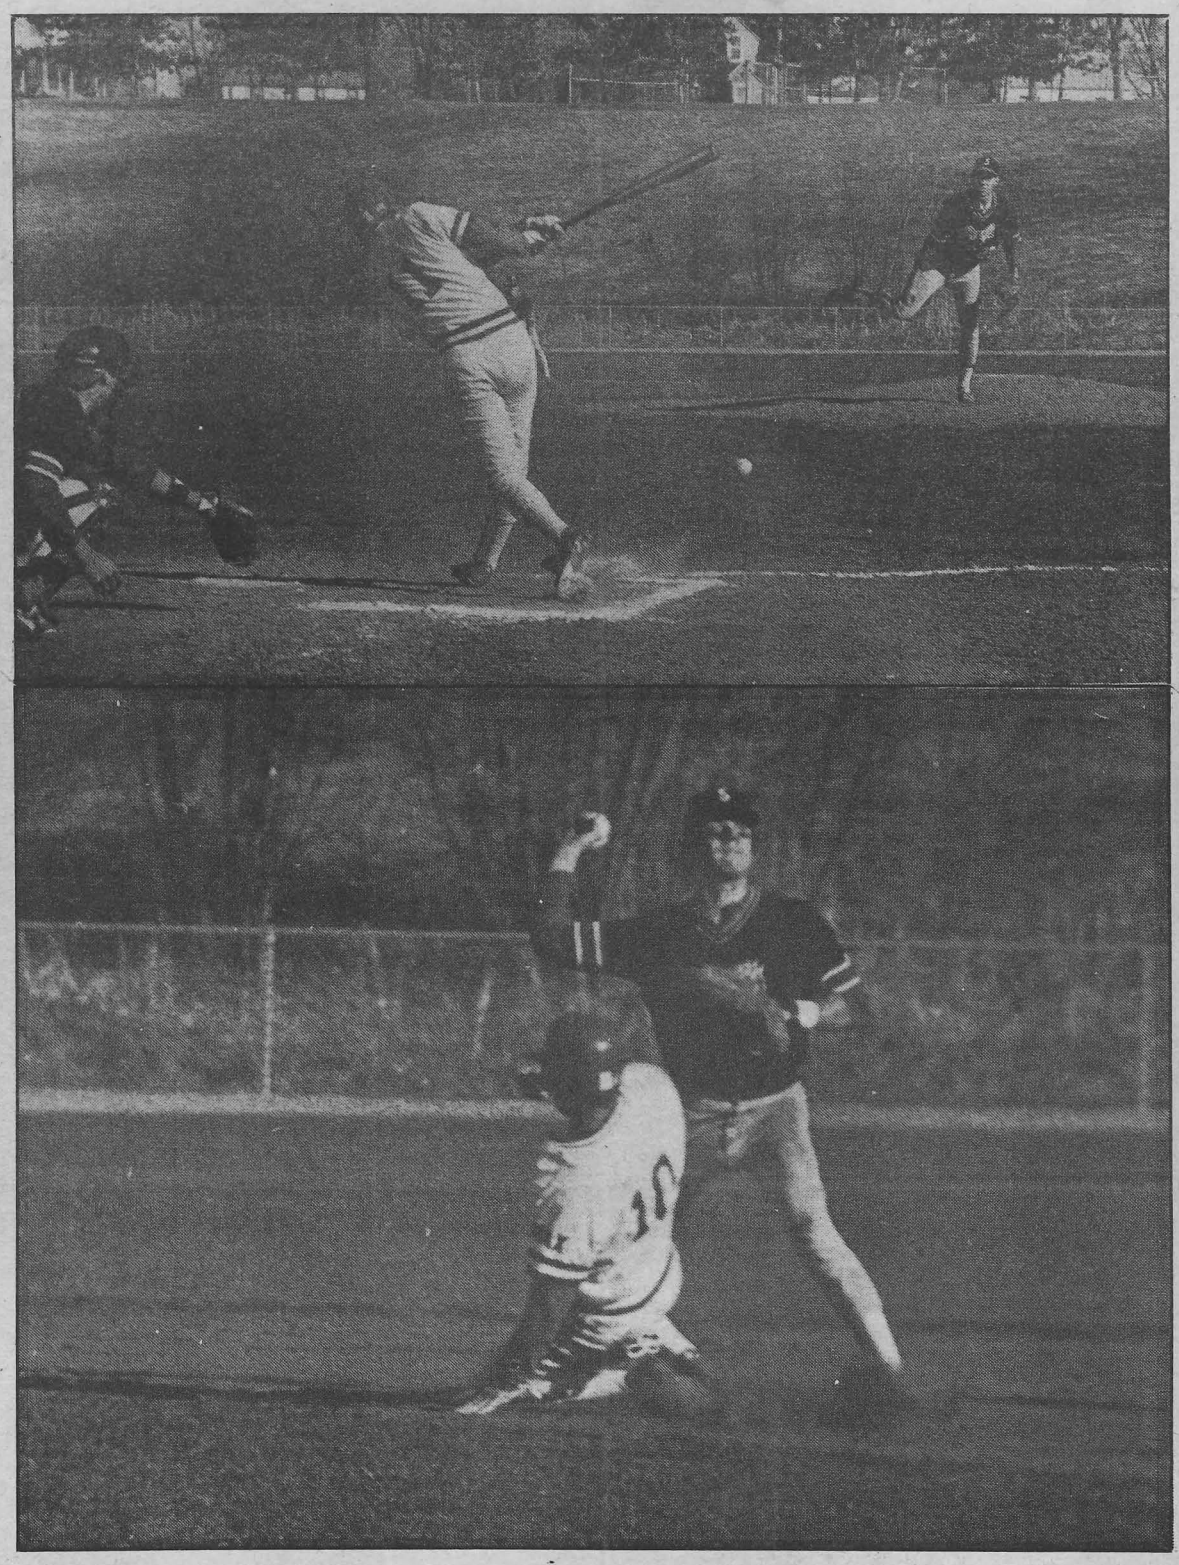
Nystrom, who was two for three in the game, singled in the sixth and pinch hitter Ed Space brought him in for the Blue Devils' last run of the game. Aschenbrenner was also two for three in the game and led the team with two RBI's. Stout scored eight runs on nine hits and had four errors.

The second meeting was a blowout. The game was called at the end of the fifth inning because of the ten-run-lead rule (15-4). John Schmitt started as pitcher. He gave up four runs with six hits, one of them being a grand slam home run. The big right-hander Joe Schopp came in the top of the fifth to finish off St. Mary's.

Offensive power overcame the Redmen as Stout scored 15 runs in just five innings. Nick Ghelfi had two RBI's, while Dukat, Osowski, Kloes and Effinger each had three. Kloes continued his hot hitting in the second game. He was three for four with another home run. Greg "Ozzie" Osowski hit four consecutive singles during four at bats for a perfect game.

Junior right fielder Nick Ghelfi hit the first pitch of the fourth inning out of the park. "He threw a high, hanging slider. I got it up into the wind a little and it carried over the center field fence." Ghelfi said. The Redmen brought in a relief pitcher after Ghelfi's home run, however he was ripped worse than the starter. The Blue Devils scored seven runs with seven hits during the fourth to put the game away.

The baseball team will meet a tougher UW-Eau Claire team which is "better than last year" according to Coach Terry Petrie. "Eau Claire is off to their best start ever (9-3). They've beaten some good schools like University of Minnesota-Duluth and St. Cloud State," Petrie also said. Stout plays the Blugolds at home on Saturday at 1 p.m. and St. Thomas also at home on Sunday at the same time.



(Top) The Blue Devil baseball team played pitch and hit, St. Mary's pitched, and the Blue Devils hit all over the place. (Bottom) Devil defense showed its muscle by converting a double play while under pressure by a St. Mary's baserunner. (Stoutonia photos by Brad Kautzer) ting] and then he got me interested in it too," Ciacura said. Ciacura then started lifting competitively when he was a junior in high school. "I have been lifting seriously for six years now," he said.

Ciacura has competed in, and placed first in, three state tournaments so far this year. He also captured the best lifter award in two of those tourneys. In one of those tourneys he managed to heft up 615 pounds in the squat lift which was only seven pounds shy of the ADFPA national record. The problem was that the tourney was not a nationally sanctioned event and the lift did not count toward any national records.

In order to compete at the national tournament, Ciacura had to qualify with a minimum total for the three lifts of 1366 pounds. Ciacura managed this and as of November of 1985 he was ranked sixth in the squat and 18th in total weight categories nationally by the ADFPA.

Ciacura and lifting partner Steve Schlundt left Menomonie last Thursday evening for Chicago. The competition itself took place on Sunday.

"I didn't do very well at the tournament. I missed my first squat and that hurt me psychologically," Ciacura said. He failed his first squat attempt at 567.5 lbs. but legged up his second try at that weight. His third attempt was at 600.7 lbs. which he also failed, giving him a 567.5 total in the squat category.

In the bench press, Ciacura succeeded on his first try only, pushing up 281 lbs. He failed in his next two attempts which were both at 292 lbs.

This brought on the deadlift competition. Ciacura started by hoisting up 540 lbs. in his first lift, following that with another successful lift at 551 lbs. His third attempt at 562 lbs. eluded him.

These three lifts combined gave him a total of 1399.5 lbs. which landed him the seventh place finish in the 165 lb. division. Ciacura was far off his personal bests in these categories which are: squat, 615 lbs., bench press, 290 lbs., deadlift, 578 lbs. These numbers add up to a whopping 1483 lbs., which is almost one hundred pounds more than the amount Ciacura compiled last weekend. Knowing this one can understand his disappointment.

Ciacura plans to keep on lifting but will not compete in another tournament until next year. "I'll take the summer off to work and most of the tournaments are in the fall anyway," Ciacura said. When he does return to competition however, you can bet that his sights will again be set on the national record that escaped him this time.

Sabatino resigns post at chancellor's request

Tim Hopkins
Pat Miles

UW-Stout Chancellor Robert Swanson decided to instruct the Dean of Education and Human Services to have no further contact with the graduate student who was the complainant of alleged sexual harassment.

Swanson's decision was made one day after Dean David Sabatino tendered his resignation as dean of the department effective September 1 of 1986. Sabatino will remain a tenured member of Stout faculty.

Swanson asked Sabatino to submit his resignation because of what he said was a series of events including the sexual harassment complaint and a second complaint that is pending.

The decision to instruct Sabatino to have no further contact with Kirsten Hoffenberger had no relation to Sabatino's resignation on Monday Swanson said. "I was trying to make clear that those are two different things," he said. "His resignation is not the outcome of that hearing and my decision had no relation to his resignation," he said.

The chancellor's decision began by stating the university's policy against sexual harassment but indicated no conclusion that sexual harassment had occurred in the case. The chancellor did say that, "In the context of the present case, if it is assumed that sexual harrassment occurred because an intimidating, hostile or offensive environment was created by the respondent's sexual remarks, it also appears that such harrassing behavior ceased some time ago, and that the complainant's work environment no longer includes the respondent and is not intimidating, hostile or offensive."

Chancellor Swanson concluded saying, "Accordingly, it is my decision that the respondent be instructed to have no further contact with the complainant, that he refrain from making any evaluations of her work or entering evaluative material on her record, and that he be mindful of and sensitive to the university's prohibition on sexual harassment in his future conduct."

Either party may file an appeal with the Board of Regents if they are dissatisfied with the chancellor's decision. The Board may choose to grant a review of the decision based on the record.

Asked for her response to Chancellor Swanson's decision, Hoffenberger said, "I'm not pleased. This isn't what I had expected." She said, "This process

Nutrition education conference aids area nutritionists

Beth Reid
News Reporter

The "New Markets For Nutrition Services" Continuing Education Conference, designed to aid area nutritionists in considering new markets for their services, was held Friday, April 11 in the Great Hall of the Student Center.

The conference featured four keynote speakers throughout the day, who presented information on the advances in the field of nutrition, sports nutrition, career possibilities and growing trends.

The conferences began with a presentation by registered dietitian, Ann Grandjean. She is the Associate Director for the Swanson Center for Nutrition in Omaha and is also a consultant to the U.S. Olympic Committee-Sports Medicine Division.

Her speech, "Sports Nutrition: Career Possibilities and Advances in Knowledge" discussed ways for nutritionists to get started in the field. "Visibility is the key," Grandjean said. "You also need to develop your communication skills to their fullest potential, both your ability to listen and your verbal skills."

She continued by stressing the importance of being open-minded and flexible. "You need to be able to adapt to change," Grandjean said, "because the field of nutrition is constantly growing and changing."

Grandjean's presentation went on to discuss the lastest advances in knowledge in sports nutrition, stressing the importance of water in the athlete's diet. "Water loss for an athelete can be critical," Grandjean said, "and in severe cases can lead to death. Maintaining an adequate water level can be easy if you understand the importance of water."

The second presentation, "The Application of Sports Nutrition to the Diabetic Individual" was given by registered dietitian, Marion Franz. Franz is the Director of Nutrition at the International Diabetes Center in Minneapolis. She has written several books, pamphlets and manuals on the topic of diabetes.

Franz provided the audience with a great deal of information on working with the diabetic athlete, stressing the importance of monitoring glucose levels and setting up an appropriate exercise program and diet to maintain these levels.

> You need to be able to adapt to change...
> —Ann Grandjean
> Registered Dietician

"Exercise benefits everyone," Franz said, "but exercise can be especially beneficial to diabetic individuals." Franz discussed how exercise can help lower blood glucose levels, decrease insulin resistance, decrease triglyceride and cholesterol and lower blood pressure.

Her speech also gave information on some of the risks that may be involved, including precautions and guidelines for the various types of diabetics.

The afternoon portion of the conference began with keynote speaker Donna Haverstock. She is Senior Manager of the Consumer Nutrition Center for the Campbell's Soup Company, and works to coordinate nutrition programs for consumers, nutritionists, educators and other health professionals.

Haverstock's presentation, "Nutritious Goes Delicious: Or How to Market Healthy Concepts", discussed the attitudes and behavior of consumers and how to present nutrition information to the public. "In the complex market place," Haverstock said, "it is becoming clear that nutrition themes may be advantageous for some products, but not for others."

She stressed that there is a growing concern for nutrition and that the interest in nutrition is found throughout all age groups. The problem is that although nutrition awareness is increasing, this does not necessarily mean that people are changing their eating habits. "Only half the number of people who say they are concerned are actually doing something about it," Haverstock said. "We are faced with the dilemma that consumers often describe what they would like to be eating (healthy food) not what they actually eat."

Haverstock feels that the answer to this dilemma is to set product development objectives that are consistent with today's concerns. "We need to engineer new products to deliver high taste and flavor," Haverstock said, "with moderate levels or absence of ingredients, such as salt, sugar, fat and additives."

The final presentation was given by Amelia Catakis. She is a registered dietitian and Director of Professional Services, Health Care Division for Marriott Corporation in Washington.

Her presentation, "The Role of the Dietitian in the Hospitality Industry" discussed career possibilities for nutritionists in the area of food service. "Nutritionists

American bombers hit Libya

Tripoli, Libya-Air Force F-111 bombers from bases in England and Navy aircraft from U.S. aircraft carriers in the Mediterranean Sea attacked strategic terrorist targets in Libya early Tuesday morning. The U.S. aircraft attacked targets near Tripoli and Benghazi in response to proof that Libyan terrorists were responsible for the bombing of a German disco which killed one U.S. citizen. One American bomber failed to return from the raid and the crew is presumed dead.

Kremlin cancels summit

Moscow, USSR-In response to the U.S. raid on Libya, the Kremlin announced on Tuesday that the May meeting between U.S. Secretary of State George Schultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Shevardnadze had been cancelled. The two were to meet in mid-May to lay ground work for a second super-power summit between President Reagan and Soviet Leader Mikhail Gorbachev. In response, White House spokesman Larry Speakes called the cancellation a "mistake" and said that the U.S. would continue to accept the Soviets at the summit later this year.

Contra aid controversial

Washington D.C. In confusing issues before Congress, the President made a plea to the house to reconsider the $100 million Contra aid package by saying that Khadafy was responsible for the problems in Nicaragua. "Let us not underestimate the reach of Khadafy's terror" said the President. The Reagan request for Contra aid lost by only 12 votes last month when it come up before Congress.

Bill attempts to end rowdyism

Madison, Wi-Sneaking alcohol into, and body passing at, Camp Randall Stadium became illegal Tuesday when Governor Anthony Earl signed Senate Bill-570. The bill, introduced by Senator Daniel Theno of Ashland, is an attempt to ebb rowdyism at UW football games. The bill provides a non-criminal fine of up to $50.

Stout Co-ed faces $50,000 suit

Whitewater, Wi-Two tavern owners in Whitewater have filed a civil suit against a University of Wisconsin-Stout female, claiming that she caused their establishments to be fined and put their liquor licenses in jeopardy. Sandra Grace, who lives in Whitewater, allegedly entered their taverns on July 4, 1985 and used a false I.D. to obtain alcohol. The tavern owners are seeking $1,200 to cover their fines, and $50,000 in punitive damages.

Their loss/our gain

The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries , commonly referred to as OPEC, was created in 1960 at a Baghdad, Irag meeting chaired by Venezuela. The founding members in attendance, in addition to Venezuela, were Iran, Iraq, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia. They were later joined by Algeria, Ecuador, Gabon, Indonesia, Libya, Nigeria, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates.

In 1979 when the world-wide consumption of oil hit an all-time high of approximately 65 million barrels per day, the OPEC nations were producing approximately 32 million barrels per day.

Yet, in the first quarter of 1986, according to the Petroleum Intelligence Weekly, the world-wide consumption of oil dropped to 59.2 million barrels per day while the daily production of the OPEC nations dropped to approximately 18 million barrels per day.

OPEC is currently facing its greatest challenge as a cartel since its inception. The current world oil glut has come about for a variety of reasons. Many experts believe that the Iran-Iraq war, which has caused these two countries to produce a much as possible to fund their war efforts, contributed to the decrease in the cartel's effectiveness.

Others believe that Great Britain's oil find and production in the North Sea, taking into account that Great Britain does not belong to OPEC, was a major factor which brought the organization to its current state.

Although the price for a 42-gallon barrel of oil peaked at $35 per barrel in 1981, United Arab Emirates Oil Minister Mani Said al-Oteiba predicted that the price per barrel could fall as low as five dollars.

Yet the OPEC nations are not the only ones currently suffering from the current oil glut. A section of the American work force is feeling the negative consequences as well.

The states which benefitted the most from the oil boom of the 1970s, particularly Texas, Oklahoma, Wyoming, Alaska, Denver and Louisiana, are now reeling the most from the current glut.

Every $1 drop in the per barrel price of oil costs the state of Texas 25,000 jobs and approximately $100 million in State revenue.

Last year, in the city of Houston alone, 16,600 mortgages were foreclosed. In addition, 29 percent of the City's office space currently is unoccupied.

Yet Oklahoma and Texas, with unemployment rates of 7.8 percent and 8.4 percent, respectively, are still better off in the employment arena when compared to Louisiana's 13.2 percent unemployment dilemma.

Kerry Malone, the editor of an Oklahoma oil-industry publication, was quoted in the April 14, 1986 issue of Time magazine as saying that "No one is jumping out of windows yet, but they're looking at the edges."

Girl Scouts gain insight about disabilities

Beth Reid
News Reporter

Area Girl Scouts gained firsthand knowledge about disabilities during a "Girl Scout Disability Awareness Workshop" held on Saturday, April 12 in the Home Economics Building. The event, based on the theme, "That's What Friends are For", was designed to aid young women in learning to understand and accept persons with various disabilities.

The five hour workshop began at 10 a.m. with a puppet show, entitled "Count Me In". The program consists of a group of mothers from the Durand school district who volunteer their time with life-size puppets. The show presented information about various types of disabilities, including cerebral palsy and epilepsy. After the show, the Girl Scouts were allowed to ask the puppets questions about the different disabilities, including questions about what it felt like to have a seizure or how they felt after the seizure was over.

The puppets then taught the girls a song called "Count Me In", which talked about the fact that although we don't all talk or walk the same, everyone still wants to be included. The song also included a line which the girls learned how to sign using sign language. "Our main goal is to increase disability awareness," one of the mother's said. "We want to show the girls that disabled people can do a lot of things you and I can do, if they are given the chance."

After the show, the 70 girls broke into groups and were given tours of the Vocational Rehabilitation Building. The tour included going into the Evaluation Center, where handicapped people learn what types of skills they have which could be used for various jobs.

Our main goal is to increase disability awareness.

The girls also had a chance to see how bathrooms are adapted for people in wheel chairs and how braille is used in buildings to designate room numbers. The tour proceeded into the technology lab, where they were shown different aides for disabled people, including a talking calculator, which prints out messages for people who can't talk; a light talker, which uses a laser light to say things or turn on the lights in the house or turn on various appliances, such as a popcorn popper. "All of these things are designed to allow disabled people to live more independent lives," Gretchen Russert, Progam Director for Vocational Rehabilitation explained.

The tour also included the opportunity for the girls to try out a wheelchair and a bike designed for a person who is paralyzed on one side. They also had the chance to see artwork which was done by disabled people,to show them that, from looking at the paintings, a person would never know that it had been done by someone who is handicapped.

During the afternoon, the girls attended various 30 minute workshops in the Home Economics Building. These included presentations on Accesibility for Handicapped People, Table Top Dexterity, Blind Sensitivity,and the chance to go on a "Blindwalk" using blindfolds. The workshops gave the girls a chance to "try on" disabilities to see firsthand what it's like to be in a wheelchair, to be visually impaired, or to have limited use of their arms and hands.

They also met a visually impaired man who uses a guide dog and a woman who reads braille, along with other individuals in wheelchairs who demonstrated how independent they can be.

The event, presented by the Stout vocational rehabilitation students in cooperation with the Indian Waters Girl Scout Council, was part of Handicap Awareness Week. For their participation and the experience gained at the workshop, each girl earned a Girl Scout Badge.

As part of Handicap Awareness Week, Menomonie area Girl Scouts learn about the needs and adaptability of disabled people from a puppet show and workshop. (Stoutonia photo by Brad Kautzer)

Student Center dedication Friday

A new dedication plaque will be presented at the dedication ceremony for the new Memorial Student Center.

The dedication will be held Friday, April 18, at 1:15 pm in the Crystal Ballroom in the Student Center. A reception will follow immediately in the Concourse Lounge.

Dedicating the new Memorial Student Center will be marked by a ceremony on Friday, April 18, at 1:15 in the Crystal Ballroom. The ceremony will feature speakers from SSA, the Vet's Club, and various member of faculty and staff. (Photo by Brad Kautzer)

The ceremony includes several speakers: Lucy A. Nicolai, Memorial Student Center staff; Joann Prange, President of Stout Student Association; Paul Brown, Vice-President, Physical Planning and Development; Terence J. McArdle, President of UW-Stout Vets' Club in 1970; Chancellor Robert Swanson, Chancellor of UW-Stout.

Lucy Nicolai is co-chairperson for the dedication. "The basic purpose of the ceremony is for people to attend and to remember," Nicolai said. It is dedicated to "The students of Stout State College who have died in war that others may live".

The ceremony was planned by a committee made up of ten people. "Their were a number of people involved from different activities," Nicolai mentioned. The UW-Stout Vet's Club was very active in planning this event. Their will be a presentation of colors provided by them.

Bob Johnson, Director of the Student Center and also a member of the dedication committee, was impressed by the way things were coming together for the ceremony. "The dedication committee has done a lot of work in planning and arrangements of the ceremony," Johnson said. "I expect it to go very well."

Graphic Center will open next January

Kelly Cohorst
News Reporter

UW-Stout has announced a fund raising campaign to well equip a new $3.1 million graphic arts facility in the old student center.

The university plans to open the new 57,000 square-foot graphic art facility in January 1987, according to James Herr, program coordinator. About 37,000 square feet will be devoted to classrooms and laboratories.

John Enger, University Relations Director, said insufficient funds were allocated because new equipment is needed. The university had to go out of the system to the Revere Press Co. to donate enough money to equip the new facility.

"This is the first time in the history of the program that we have gone outside the university for substantial help," Herr said. In most cases when the university needed money, they either would try to allocate the money or they would do with out the idea.

Herr was disappointed that "only $150,000 was available for equipment, far short of the $1.7 million we requested in the planning stages.

"Our program is the second largest in the country. A successful drive will help us maintain our momentum," Herr said. "The national campaign will target five groups--the graphic arts industry, private foundations, friends of the university, program graduates and parents of students.

"To mount a campaign of this size, you must be well organized," Herr said. "We feel we are. The university's Board of Business and Industrial Advisers is assisting us."

Breakfast meetings are planned with industry representatives in Wisconsin, Minnesota and Illinois. A direct mail and telephone campaign is also scheduled.

The graphic arts campaign was originally going to be in Bowman Hall. That's when the plan was to build on to the student center, rather than to building another facility.

"We are excited about graphic arts at Stout," Herr said. "We are challenged by the opportunity to be not only among the largest programs in the nation, but one of the best. Our tradition of qualified graduates working in the industry should serve us well in this campaign."

Stout has approximately 300 students enrolled in the program. The university has experienced a near perfect placement rate. Donations are tax deductible through the Stout University Foundation Inc. A brochure explaining the campaign has been developed. Further information regarding the campaign can be obtained by calling Herr at (715) (232-2232).

Air raid sirens

The predawn air raid ordered by President Reagan on five targets linked to terrorist activities in Tripoli and Benghazi may have been designed to send a clear message about America's intolerance of terrorism. The question is, did the administration pause to think about the repercussions to international relations?

Confusion predominates in Libya at this time primarily because the Libyan people misunderstood the meaning of the attack as an act of war. No message was received by Libyans concerning terrorist activities.

Our supposedly defensive action has created a surplus of offensive reaction. A front page headline in the St. Paul Pioneer Press declared "Future Libyan terrorism, U.S. retaliation expected." The American action has succeeded in escalating terrorist action. Already, a U.S. Embassy employee in Sudan has been shot and wounded following an anti-American protest sparked by the bombing.

The protests that have occured daily in West Germany, France and Spain should be alarming to all Americans. Is America trying to isolate itself even from its allies?

America has gained the world's attention with this attack. Now is the time to effectively negotiate foreign policy. No matter what happens, everyone has been put on edge in this military chess game where the players wait nervously for the next move.

Without effective negotiation of foreign policy our "defensive attack" on Libya this week will result in a continuing escalation of terrorist reprisals.

To date, beyond the panic created by this attack, our opposition to Libyan terrorism has been blotted out by the increased propaganda from both the U.S. and Libya concerning the other country's supposed atrocities.

Libya has published pictures of babies and children killed in our attack and uttered statements that echo Reagan's verbal attacks on Khadaffy for his terrorist led Abu Nidal attacks on Americans young and old.

Since Khadaffy's infant daughter was killed in the attack, he not surprisingly has started calling President Reagan a baby killer. The propaganda match seems to be reaching a fever pitch as President Reagan is now accusing Khadaffy of sending $400 million in aid to the Sandistas in Nicaragua to support their effort of standing up against America's attempt to destroy their hold on their country.

The fear is that as these shouting matches escalate between the U.S. and Libya we lose sight of what has brought us to this precipice and as a result we lose the opportunity to establish peace between nations.

Crash and Burn

Boost in drinking age brewing

Matt Kalina

The junking of the 19-year-old party age is upon us.

Any chance for Wisconsin to preserve a legal drinking age of 19 crumbled when Gov. Tony Earl and three notable democratic legislative leaders moved for the go-ahead on a special session to jack up the drinking age to 21 last week.

This is a direct turn-about for Earl, Attorney General Bronson LaFollette, Senate Majority Leader Timothy Cullen and Assembly Speaker Thomas Loftus, who were once bull-headedly opposed to raising the drinking age. It's as if they don't really want to do it, but they can't tolerate the feeling of getting their arm twisted.

Earl's position changed overnight. Although he has admitted qualms about whether a higher drinking age can hog-tie traffic deaths, he said he still would bulldoze for its enactment.

Seems the pressure's getting a little too strong for the Madison boys. Can't hang tough anymore. A tavern lobbyist even said the age boost is unavoidable. Even to many political hot-shots, the push is destined for victory.

Democratic legislative leaders have said that they decided to go along with Earl and urge a special session on the issue, even though they also do not favor a higher drinking age. The momentum is too great. Twenty-one can't be stopped. The going discriptor — inevitable.

Predictions have already been made that the measure would pass in a special session this spring, as soon as May 20.

Under the scheme, Earl would ask legislators to increase the legal drinking age to 21, effective Sept. 1, the same date the Minnesota law takes effect — just in time for first semester.

The Governor has said the raise would be bad public policy, it wouldn't do anything for highway safety or alcohol safety and it wouldn't have a drastic impact on young people. But in a father-like way, he said we ought to make the best of it. That's nice dad.

If Earl, a long-time foe of raising the age from 19, admits that the hike would not put a big dent in the problem of drinking and driving, and that it would be difficult to enforce, why would he perform a metamorphosis? Two reasons.

First, Earl wants to prevent Wisconsin from becoming an island for border-hoppers from neighboring states that have already decided to raise their drinking age. He wants to prevent border towns like Hudson from becoming circuses with loaded, out-of-state, red-eyed crazies.

Secondly, Wisconsin stands to lose $21 million in federal highway funds. Earl is bowing out to federal blackmail.

Good or bad, drinking is a big part of Stout students' lives. Every sane person knows that a state law will not stop drinkers from doing what they relish. Underage students will continue their quest to soak themselves silly with ethyl alcohol.

Carry-out sales and drinking off campus will increase dramatically. Major raids on underage house parties will shoot up like a popped can of shaken brew. "Drop the beer, or I'll shoot."

It's not going to be fun to sort out the mess that age 21 will generate on campus, including Student Center programming, homecoming and other sport events. Alcohol may be banned entirely in dorms because most of those that hole up there are under 21.

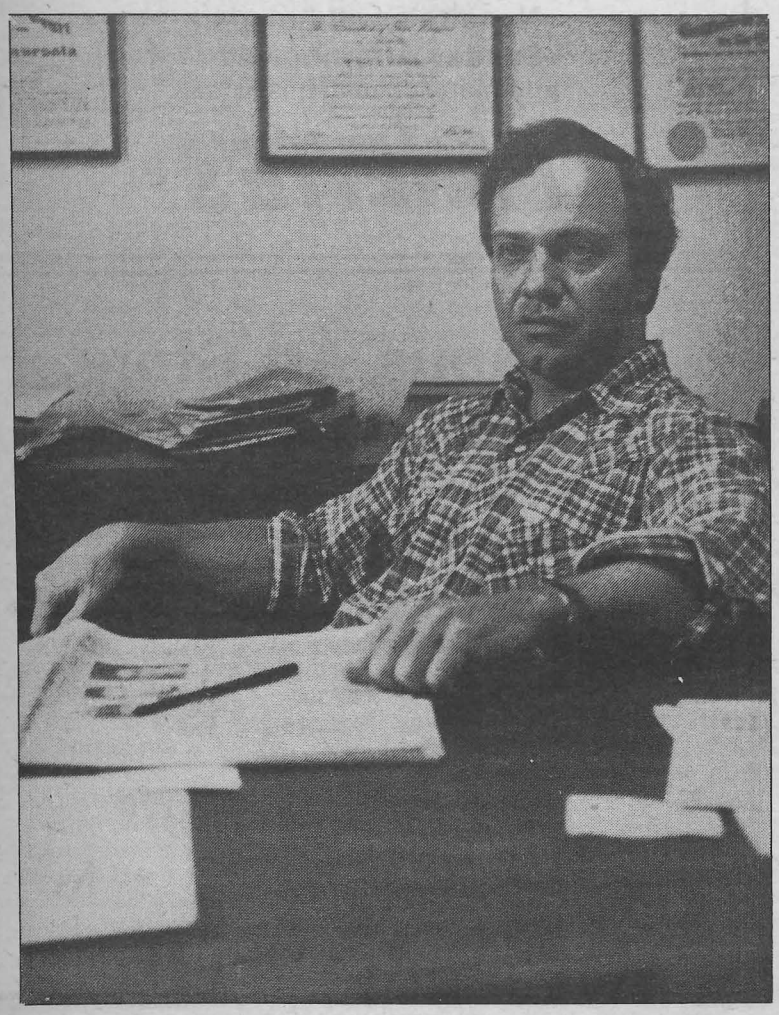
Let's not forget the slump in tavern business. Some say that it will hurt 25 percent of tavern businesses in the State. In Menomonie, if a beerhouse is not sandbagged to bankruptcy, it will be severely walloped because many count on serving the 19- and 20-year-old crowd.

There may be a silver lining in the dark clouds hanging over disgusted young gulpers. The Governor predicted that eventually there would be a move for a return to beer bars where kids ages 18 to 21 could drink beer with a reduced alcohol content.

Watered-down beer is a weak compromise, but maybe it's better than nothing. Maybe not.

SPOTLIGHT/ Mike Wagner

Subject: The impact of the mayoral referendum on the future of Menomonie



Mike Wagner

Text by Matt Kalina

Mike Wagner, 37, was defeated in his bid for city councilman April 1. He has practiced law from 1976 to 1984 at a law firm in St. Paul. Presently, Wagner does part-time legal work in Menomonie and owns an interest in The Tap bar.

STOUTONIA: WHAT DID THE "LONELY ONE" THEME MEAN FOR YOUR CAMPAIGN?

WAGNER: Well, there were two citizen groups. There was the citizens committee to "Save Our City," and then there was the "Concerned Citizens for a Responsive Government." There were seven candidates. Three were endorsed by "Save Our City" and three were endorsed by "Concerned Citizens." Mike Wagner was endorsed by nobody. So therefore, I was tagged the lonely candidate.... I don't feel good about it, because neither of the coalitions contacted me asking about my credentials or qualifications. I heard through the grapevine that the fact I have ownership in this college tavern was a serious problem to them, and therefore I wasn't approached.

STOUTONIA: WHAT IMPACT DO STOUT STUDENTS HAVE ON THE CITY GOVERNMENT?

WAGNER: Specifically in this last election April first, there's absolutely no doubt in my mind that if it were not for the students, we would still have our city manager today. And I really thank the students for voting "yes" for mayor and I think that they are going to find that this will have an impact for many generation of students. But the impact is going to be for the better. There is going to be communications in time with the City and with the student population because the mayor, whoever it is, will have to account to the students because they're voters. Whereas our city manager did not have to make an accounting to the students.

STOUTONIA: WHY DO YOU THINK STUDENTS GENERALLY VOTED FOR THE CHANGE IN GOVERNMENT?

WAGNER: Well, I think that my campaign was pretty much in favor of the mayor. I was out trying to get votes for myself, but as a postscipt to that, I asked students to vote yes for mayor and I explained why because they would be better represented with the mayoral form of government. It is my understanding that this Concerned Citizens coalition did speak with some of the RAs and hall directors the week of the election and they certainly gave their pitch for the mayoral form of government. Frankly, I just think that students are enlightened, and they thought it out for themselves. It doesn't take a genius to figure out that they would get better represented by a mayor. If it were not for the students, the mayor form of government would have lost by one-hundred and forty votes for sure, more than likely, three hundred and forty.

STOUTONIA: HOW DO YOU REACT TO CRITICISM REGARDING DRIVING PEOPLE TO THE POLLS?

WAGNER: Well, Wisconsin state law says that we have a right as candidates to transport persons to the polls and is completely legal as long as you're not campaigning within five hundred feet of the polling place. And I guess that I would say that campaigning would be passing out literature and holding up signs and this type of thing....Obviously when you drive somebody to the polls in a van, you're going to talk to them. But I don't consider that campaigning.

STOUTONIA: WHAT DIRECTION DO YOU THINK MENOMONIE WILL TAKE WITH THE MAYORAL FORM OF GOVERNMENT?

WAGNER: Well, first of all I think that Menomonie will stop borrowing money. The biggest issue that I see right now is the amount of our debt. And Menomonie is about seven point seven million dollars in debt with general revenue bonds and this type of thing. The debt service alone, principle of interest in 1986, will be one million three hundred and thirty-three thousand dollars of which eight hundred eighty-one thousand is interest. I think we're going to stop spending with borrowed money. That would be the first thing that would happen. I think as far as the students are concerned, the immediate impact on the students will be that they will have a forum to go to if

Bikers beware at night

To the Unknown Female Bicyclist...that I almost hit as I turned left onto Broadway at 7:15 Monday evening...I am very sorry, I scared both of us, however, I did not see you (as you probably guessed). Please, to everyone on bicycles, don't ride after dusk without a light, and if you do, assume that drivers will not see you. Reflectors and reflective clothing are great, but they only reflect, and that instant of reflection in front of my headlights may not do either of us much good. To the bicyclist, I'm sorry, I probably caused your heart to skip a beat, but you were also at fault for not "driving defensively", as well. Let's both be more cautious in the future.

CAMPUS SLANT/ Do you think Stout students are concerned about current events?

Text by Matt Kalina

Jenna Sue Martin,
Sophomore,
Business Administration

Not enough I don't think. My own friends don't even know that the drinking age is going to change to twenty-one in Wisconsin and half of the people never show up for things on campus because they don't hear about them. There is just not enough awareness.

Jim Bowman,
Senior,
Hotel Restaurant Management

I don't think they are aware of what is really going on. Just from reading the Campus Slant, you see a lot of nonsense answers. They don't care, and they're not interested. Instead of watching the news they watch "Barney Miller."

Scott Ledermann,
Senior,
Industrial Technology

I don't think people are too aware of what's going on. I don't know how many people actually read the paper. I see some people reading the paper, but not too many. I believe a lot of them are concerned mainly with the world issues. They understand, I guess, to a point.

Dawn Thorpe,
Freshman,
Early Childhood Education

For me, I'm not aware of much going on because I don't listen to the radio and I don't have a TV set to watch the news. The only way I find out about things are the major events...by watching TV [in the Student Center] or catching hold of a newspaper.

Teri Nelson,
Junior,
Hotel Restaurant Management

They are pretty aware. I think that the TV and the media helps. Students learn I think they look into what's available. It does help on certain issues like the tuition hike. I think students are concerned.

Hidden Dimension

Of violence, change and freedom

Ali Vazirabadi

The terrorist attacks are still going on with great violence, which is creating more fear and violence around the world. Today the greatest and most essential concern is how to solve the foregoing new wave of terrorism and prevent it from happening again. The terrorism from the Middle East comes from the unfinished war between Israel and Palestinian people.

Recently, the process of peace negotiation between Israel and The P.L.O., in accordance with help of Jordan and other concerned countries of the Middle East, was reaching an agreement. The problem started immediatly after the P.L.O. representative met with the ambassador of the Soviet Union in Amman and soon thereafter the whole negotiation froze.

On the other hand, countries like Syria and Libya, as the puppets of Moscow, increase the tension by helping and supporting small and isolated groups such as Abu Nidal. These groups terrorize innocent people in airports and public places, claiming they can achieve their revolutionary goals by this kind of unjustified deeds.

So far, the history of the foregoing bloody war between Arabs and Israel shows us that neither the bombarding of the Palestinian Camps nor the terrorist attacks on innocent people could make a safe home for Israel and a homeland for the Palestinian people. The more achievable and realistic way is "honest participation," from both sides. It is the responsibility of every country and individual to support peace and negotiation to end the foregoing nightmare of the century.

The new changes in the political future of Pakistan is becoming more obvious. It's been only 10 days since the opposition leader Benazir Bhutto, daughter of executed Prime Minister Zulfakar Ali Bhutto, returned home after being in exile in London.

Zia Ul-Haq, military president of Pakistan, seems to be getting into the same situation that Marcos was in. The important questions are how the opposition leader will challenge Zia and what the future of the political system in Pakistan will be.

The great concern to the U.S. government should be how to approach the opposition leader in Pakistan. Pakistan obviously needs a free election and the return of civilian government to power. In the long run the United States should consider friendship with the Pakistani people.

The problem with U.S. foreign policy-makers is that they are always late in finding and deciding who's on their side and who is not. Concerning Pakistan, the fact is Zia is going the same way as the Philippines went. The U.S. should take appropriate action to the opposition of Zia Ul-Haq.

You know, everyday that I stay in this country, I feel more free and get a feeling of equal opportunity. I read about Abraham Lincoln and how he became President of the United States. He started from nothing and earned the presidency of this country, with the belief he had in people and justice: He freed all black people from slavery. I just love it, whenever I think about it.

I read more U.S history and studied about the great people that started from scratch and came to serve their country. They did a good job. I have a problem however, when I study the history closer to my age era. I get a somewhat scary picture of a new wave of self-made people running this country.

An example is the new mayor of Carmel, Calif. Yes, I'm talking about Dirty Harry, oh, excuse me I meant Clint Eastwood. "Make my day," is the slogan of the future President of the United States in the year 2000, when negotiating with the Soviet Union on arms control.

Now another prediction would be that Madonna will run for the vice presidency just like a virgin. Imagine how fast we're going to an entertaining political system. I can not predict anymore for this week because my insurance policy does not cover it.

needs a lot of polishing up."

Admissions Director Don Osegard, Chairman of Positive Action Committee Number Three which heard Hoffenberger's complaint said of the process that, "It just seems like all these rules we had to follow were designed for a lot more minor things. I really don't think they had something as serious as sexual harassment in mind."

Osegard said of Chancellor Swanson's decision that, "what he came up with was not one of our recommendations. We didn't have anything quite that mild in there. In effect, all the chancellor said was don't do that anymore."

Chancellor Swanson has asked Positive Action Committee Number Three chaired by Admissions Director Don Osegard to meet with him Friday afternoon.

Hoffenberger pointed to the committee's conclusion in their report to the chancellor that, "This evidence strongly suggested to the committee that sexual harassment had occured."

Hoffenberger, a graduate student working to receive her Masters in guidance and counseling next month, could not say right now whether she would appeal the decision.

She initiated the complaint against Sabatino alleging that incidents of sexual harassment that took place early in 1985 while she was working with Sabatino as a graduate assistant.

Attorney Elaine Fitzgerald, a business professor at Stout, was an advocate for Hoffenberger in her complaint filed with the committee. Fitzgerald also was an advocate for graduate student Sally Miemietz-Hoeldorf for the Positive Action Committee Number Four hearing Tuesday afternoon specifically addressing her complaint against Sabatino.

The two committees, three and four, with different chairman and different committee members, were formed separately to hear the two complaints made by Hoffenberger and Miemietz-Hoeldorf against Sabatino.

Questioned about Chancellor Swanson's decision on the committee's recommendations of possible disciplinary actions, Fitzgerald said, "I have a real concern as to whether this policy serves any useful purpose."

Miemietz-Hoeldorf requested that Tuesday's Positive Action Committee hearing be postponed and that it would be in the best interest of the university to work out an informal agreement with the chancellor.

Asked if he would agree to a postponement, Sabatino said, "I'm here and ready to go. I don't believe there's any validity to the charges of sexual harassment and I need this hearing."

The committee decided to proceed with the hearing. When asked if she would prefer the hearing to be open or closed, Miemietz-Hoeldorf said she wanted it to be open. Sabatino said he would like the hearing to be open but that his witnesses wanted a closed hearing which left him in a dilemma.

Following a brief recess, the committee decided to close the hearing which started at 1 p.m. and continued until the early evening.

The committee has 35 days from the April 15 hearing to submit a written recommendation to Chancellor Swanson. The complaint will be dismissed if the complainant fails to meet the burden of proof and the committee believes that insufficient evidence exists.

Computers influence hospitality industry

Nitin Nadkarni
News Reporter

The computer, hailed today as one of the greatest discoveries of all times, has finally arrived in the hospitality and lodging industry. It took a long time for computers to make their advent in the hospitality and lodging industry.

The hospitality conference "Rising To The Top" held on April 9, 1986 in the Home Economics Building featured speaker George Zugmier, the chairman and president of Lodgistix, Inc. Lodgistix was founded in 1978 by Zugmier and is involved in the computerization of the lodging industry. Lodgistix has developed and now markets, installs and supports a variety of computerized hotel/motel management systems. The systems operate on several hardware products provided by the IBM Corporation.

Zugmier has been called the man behind the computerization of the lodging industry. The organization which was started about eight years ago, is now a multi-million dollar operation. Zugmier said the opportunities for automation in the hospitality industry are unbelievable.

Lodgistix today has a sales turnover of about $25 million. The company has recorded an average growth of over a 100 percent, with their fastest growth rate being a little above 300 percent one year.

Lodgistix currently provides products to properties from 200 to over 2000 rooms. It has over 600 installations in the world, with 22 percent of these being located outside the United States. It also has systems running in five different languages.

Zugmier encouraged students to enter "this new and exciting field". An average salesman for the company earns around $75,000 a year with commission and other benefits included. A top salesman netted more than $1 million last year.

In America, Lodgistix today is the number one company in the field of hospitality automation, according to Zugmier. Most of the business comprises the big hotel chains and management companies.

Zugmier said that automation encompasses most of the operation in the hotel today, rather than just being used for front office operations.

The system in the hotel could be used for determining various information on the guest, like the guest's preferences, money spent by the guest, etc, which could be used by the front office to form a data base on the guest. "This would help the sales and marketing department and also help the formation of the central reservation system for the whole chain," he said.

Kropp to serve as acting mayor

Bridget Record
News Reporter

Menomonie City Council elected Alderman Dennis Kropp as their new president at a special organizational meeting held Tuesday night in the Dunn County Courthouse. The council elected Kropp over Alderman Jay Schroeder in a five to two vote.

Kropp, who has been an elementary school teacher in Menomonie for 16 years, has served on the city council for three years. He is married and has one daughter.

Kropp thanked the members of the council as he took the seat of his newly acquired presidency. As city council president, Kropp will serve as acting mayor for the city. Menomonie is now going through a transition of a city manager to mayor-council government. The council will decide on a process of selection for mayor at the next meeting which will be held May 1.

Ken Schofield, the city council's attorney, emphasized that a special election is necessary. He said that he was advised by the League of Wisconsin Municipalities and the Special Elections Board that this election should take place as soon as possible. Schofield explained that the reason for their advisement of speedy election is that provisions for an acting mayor have never been tested in court proceedings.

Schofield says that regulations state that the election must take place 62-67 days after it is amended. The candidates must also have a certain amount of signatures on their nomination papers to run for the position. If there are only two individuals running, a primary election does not have to take place.

"The mayor's seat is a two year term which becomes effective today, regardless of when the election is held," Schofield said. "On April 1 the council voted to become a mayor-council government. We are in essence creating a fiction saying there is a mayor when there isn't one."

> My main concern is to work...to bring the community back together.
> —Dennis Kropp
> Alderman

Kropp says he has not decided yet if he will run as candidate in Menomonie's first mayoral election. "My main concern is to work as the city council's president to bring the community back together," Kropp said. "The people had differed in opinion about Menomonie's change in form of government, and I want to put that all behind us."

Another issue on the council's agenda was the mayor's compensation. Alderman Richard Emmert made a motion that the issue be elited until the next meeting on May 1. "This will give us time to get input from the people on what they think about the mayor's compensation," Emmert said.

The council also elected an individual alderman as a representative to the Planning Commission, the Recreation Advisory Board, the Redevelepment Authority, the Community-University Relations Committee, the Landmarks Commission, and the Library Board. Two alderman were co-elected to represent the Board of Review and the Community-University Relations Committee.

Semester in Scotland

UW-Stout students will have an opportunity to spend a semester studying in Scotland through a new study program being sponsored by the West Central Wisconsin Consortium. The consortium consists of Stout, UW-Eau Claire, UW-La Crosse and UW- River Falls. The Wisconsin in Scotland Study Center was approved by consortium trustees in November.

Students participating in the program will receive instruction from Stout staff members Robert Melrose, who will teach history, and David McCordick, who will teach English. Their instruction will be supplemented by Scottish professors who will provide an introduction to British civilization, which will be required of all students.

Spreading fashion news

"Spreading the News" is the theme for a UW-Stout student fashion show to be held at 10 a.m., Saturday, April 19 in the Great Hall of the Student Center.

This annual event is an activity of fashion promotions classes at Stout. Members of the classes make all arrangements for the show, choose models and develop publicity.

Clothes and accessories are being contributed by retailers in Menomonie, Eau Claire and the Twin Cities. Models in the show are also Stout students. Admission is free.

Alumni may win for giving

UW-Stout's alumni annual giving program has been selected as a finalist in both the Sustained Performance and Improvement categories of the 1986 U.S. Steel Alumni Giving Incentive Awards Program.

Housing hunting season opens

Patty Strassman

We all hate to admit to the cold fact that once again it's time to either resign a new contract to stay in the house we've resided in for the last year, or start hunting for that ideal, close to campus pad that will carry us comfortably through the next year.

Everyone looks for different attributes in a house or apartment, and it's important to keep these attributes in mind while looking.

There are several steps you can follow in your hunt. By talking to upper-class persons who are moving out of their house, you ought to be able to find out what their situation was. Concerning the specifics affecting your decision whether or not to rent, you can ask what the landlord is like. Is he willing to see that needed repairs are readily made? Is he concerned with keeping the house in good condition? What about the cost of heating and electrical bills?

Another way to locate housing is to pick up an available housing list at the SSA office. Many local leaseholders rely on general contract and do not advertise, so arrange visits to several complexes. Talk to building managers to set up appointments for visits.

Many people feel it is more expensive to live on your own, and you have to budget your money carefully.

Several people are surprised to find they have to pay rent over the summer when they don't plan on living there during that time.

You will find there are many surprises in living off campus if you don't do the proper investigation beforehand.

So start now before it's too late and look closely at every detail. Your long term housing condition is dependent on your motivation.

SSA letter drive for 'Stop 21'

Kelly Cohorst
News Reporter

Representative Shoemaker addressed the Stout Student Association (SSA) Tuesday night about Wisconsin's drinking age proposal.

Minnesota's drinking age is going to change to from 19 to 21 as of September. Governor Earl has called a May 20 special session of the legislature to raise Wisconsin's drinking age to 21. This will be after most spring semesters are over.

"If the proposal goes through and the drinking age is raised to twenty one, there's only one reason why; it's simple and easy." said Shoemaker.

Fewer than 5 percent of drunk driving convictions involve 19 and 20 year-olds. 40 percent of those charged are under 19 years of age." Shoemaker stated.

"The whole issue is a political decision; if the legislature was really worried about the border hopping or drunk driving or even under age drinking they would add amendments to the current law," he said.

"Do you really think that the 21 drinking age will stop the 14 and 15 year-olds from drinking? No, way! The only thing it will do is revert students to drinking in there cars," he continued.

The legislature is currently trying to move the legislative session back a couple of weeks so the schools would still be in session.

Shoemaker suggested to the council that if students want to "stop 21", then they should write letters to their congressman.

Shoemaker said that the students should be able to drink if they can be drafted and work on jury duty.

Toni Kuntsman also spoke at the SSA meeting concerning the Organization of Adult Students at Stout (OASAS). This organization held a conference on March 14 and 15 in order to help the non- traditional students. The OASAS meeting dealt with many changes, from student loans to child care.

During the business meeting, a motion which would have taken away the voting rights of the University Programming Board on budget matters, because of their bias, failed due to lack of decision after an attempt was made to amend the motion to take their voting rights away on all financial matters.

In the last motion of the session, Gary Harder moved that President Prange should get a pie in the face at next week's meeting. The motion carried with unanimous consent.

they have any complaints against the city. Because I think that the mayor, if he doesn't he should, welcome students with arms open and find out what their specific problems are with the City and what can be done to iron them out. And you don't always have to say, "Yes, I'm going to help you." All you have to say is, "Yes, I'm concerned." And sit down and talk with them. The students might not get what they want, but at least they are going to have someone to listen to them, and I think that will do a lot overall for the student relationship with the City.

STOUTONIA: ARE YOU PLANNING ON RUNNING FOR MAYOR?

WAGNER: Well, let's put it this way, my hat is in the ring right now, unless a better candidate comes along that I can support. If a better candidate comes along that I think can be better for the city than myself, I'll get behind that candidate and support that candidate.

STOUTONIA: IF YOU DECIDE TO RUN FOR MAYOR, WHAT DO YOU HAVE TO OFFER AS A CANDIDATE?

WAGNER: I feel that I'm a good product. And the reason I feel I'm a good product is first of all I come from a middle class family, and I'm the second oldest out of six children. My dad performed miracles. He worked for the Post Office. He doesn't have a high school education and he managed to buy a house and pay for the private education of all the kids through high school. I wish we could run the City that way, because to me that's absolute magic. He had one rule: If you don't have the money to pay cash, you don't buy something, other than the house which he made mortgage payments on. So I feel that I'm really part of the general population. Let's face it, there's more of us middle class people than there is the upper class and rich people. So I do think I'm more representative of the majority of the people. Secondly, I deal with the students on a day-to-day basis, and I dealt with them for seven years. I was a student myself for eight years after high school, so half of my life has been spent going to school. I know what the students mean to Menomonie and I think that there's a lot more involved with an education than just going to school and taking your classes. I think that education involves learning how to socialize, and I think we have to have social establishments like these college taverns in our town so people can learn their limits and learn how to deal with a social setting where there is alcohol involved.... Let's make our mistakes now, and learn from our mistakes. I think it is going make you a much better person once you're out of school. So the second thing is, I think I have a very good repoire with the students. And I think that all students that have ever dealt with me feel comfortable in coming to me if they have a problem. I think they would continue to feel that way if I were the mayor.... I think with my experience in dealing with businessmen on a professional basis and the fact that I have a well rounded background through an educational standpoint and from a professional standpoint, I think I can deal very well with the businessmen in town.... So then I should have generally mass appeal. I should appeal to those people that are laborers, if you want to call them that, the middle class, working class. I should appeal to the business class as well as the students. I think it's going to be very hard to find someone else who has appeal to those three sections of the city.

STOUTONIA: WHEN DO YOU ANTICIPATE THE ELECTION WILL TAKE PLACE?

That's a tough question because it involves complicated statuates and the interpretation of those statuates. I would hope that it will be addressed in the November election, possibly at the very latest in April first of nineteen eighty-seven. But talking with City Council members, it's their position that they want to have a special election as soon as possible, so we once again have a head of the government in Menomonie....

Through newsletters and various training programs, the company kept in touch with its various clients. "The company also helped its customers with updating their system as more and more efficient software systems evolved," Zugmier said.

The average cost of a system for a 200 room property was less than $25,000. Zugmier advised buyers of computer systems to check if the company they would be buying from had the resources to continue to enhance the program.

"Our objective is that we want 50 percent of the market. All we want to do is design and manufacture the brain of the lodging industry" Zugmier said. Lodgistix has now expanded its hardware technology to include and support other hardware systems, thus giving it more flexibility and further impetus to expand. "Together we have the most comprehensive technology and the most dominant sales and servicing organization," Zugmier said.

Zugmier said the greatest challenge facing Lodgistix was the integration of all the different pieces of technology to produce a system that would perform all the operations in a lodging property.

Dr. Leland Nicholls, Department Administrator for the Habitational Resources Department felt it was an honor for the department to be associated with a company such as Lodgistix. "The department has taken a cautious and deliberate development program because of the complexities involved in implementing hi-tech programs" Dr. Nicholls said. Lodgistix has licensed the Department of Habitational Resources to use its current and future software programs. "It is rare that a software company will share the inhouse industry information." Dr. Nicholls said.

According to Dr Nicholls, as a result of the hospitality conference, the company would now start recruiting on campus and continue to assist the department in acquisition of equipment, as well as program and industry awareness for the University of Wisconsin-Stout.

Support encouraged to spruce up the Dunn County community area

Maria Wagner
News Reporter

This week is Spruce Up Week for the Dunn County Area. From April 19 through April 26 Stout students and organizations will join area students, organizations, groups and residents in beautifying the Dunn County after a winter of garbage collecting along river banks, streets and parks, to name a few areas.

The Menomonie Chamber of Commerce has organized this event (which is in its seventh year) and encourages area support. They are requesting Stout students help in beautifying residence halls, common areas and off-campus living areas.

Approximately 100 cards were sent out to area organizations requesting a committment from groups to clean-up the area of their choice. According to Kathleen Phillips, volunteer chairman of the committee, the response has been very good. This year the publicity has also been increased.

Some of the areas that will be focussed on are the lake banks, roadsides, cemetarys and ravices. The area Boy Scouts, for example, are committed to cleaning up the Lake Bank Trail. Businesses are encouraged to "spruce up" the area around their buildings or store fronts.

The lower grade schools (kindergarten-sixth) in the Dunn County area will become aware of the weeks events by a coloring contest of "Mr. Spruce". It is then hoped that they will clean up around their schools.

According to Mark Nickels, a member representing the Stout Student Association, Stout students will be contributing in various ways. One sorority has agreed that their pledges will clean up an area of town, and JTC SSA representative Robb Zimdars has challanged other residence halls on campus to clean up their halls as well. Nickels feels that the students involvement in this event will help university/city relations.

Phillips believes that this week-long event will help make people aware that we all have a responsibility to keep our community looking good.

Duane J. Bauer of the Menomonie Area Chamber of Commerce, said that in the past, there has been a tremendous turnout and expects the same this year. Bauer said that this event is a "nice time when everyone pitches in and helps pick up the dust and debris left from the long winter."

are going to be more and more in demand in the hospitality industry," Catakis said. She feels that this is an important area for inspiring dietitians to consider if they are not interested in the hospital environment.

All of the speakers provided handouts to the audience and included references for where to obtain more information. Members of the audience were also allowed to ask questions of each of the presenters. This was the 16th annual conference to be sponsored by the Food and Nutrition Department and the School of Home Economics.

Fine Arts Association hosts graduates

Karen Heagle
Arts Reporter

The Fine Arts Association hosted two studio art graduates from this university over Thursday and Friday, April 10 and 11. The two graduates of 15 years ago are Bruce Lepage, and his wife Chris Carspecken-Lepage. Chris is a ceramic sculptor, and Bruce is a metalsmith. They both presented demonstrations, and both are making a living as artists.

They lead a way of life which both are quite proud of. Chris said, "We are part of a 10 year period where people were really interested in doing things with their hands, being idealistic, and getting away from technology." Chris feels very strongly about avoiding high-tech production methods. Instead of using the traditional pug mill for mixing clay, she uses a wading pool and mixes it by foot, with a little help from her three-year-old daughter.

Chris believes that since there is not a lot of money in working as a craftsperson, not many people are interested in such a job. Her husband Bruce explained what exactly crafting involves for them, "Business and asthetic aspects of making and selling your crafts, running a shop yourself, and having a kid."

Their way of life has its hardships, and Chris admits, "We would have benefited in a way, with a few more tips on marketing, but if you emphasize that too much then the art suffers."

The two have made a vacant creamery just south of Madison into their studio. The facilities of the creamery are roomy, and well suited for a studio.

Thursday's activities started at 9 a.m. in Room 103 of Applied Arts, when Chris began her presentation on ceramics. She introduced her demonstration with a brief background of herself, as well as her work. It lead to a sawdust firing behind Applied Arts. A group, consisting of interested art students watched with much enthusiasism. Lepage herself was quite enthusiastic discussing her work, and sharing techniques with the students as well as a few of the art faculty.

She continued her presentation by demonstrating certain techniques of throwing and sculpting with clay and was eager to be sharing her experiences with this group of students.

> Graduate school was an excruciating experience, but that was good - nobody said it was easy.
> —Bruce Lepage Metal Smith

At 2 p.m. her husband Bruce presented his demonstration one room down the hall. Before a group of serious art metal students, he began demonstrating engraving techniques and answering questions. He left the gathering quite impressed by his precision and detail.

On Friday he presented a workshop for all interested students. The workshop gave students a chance to experience engraving, and tool sharpening techniques, while Bruce helped them.

Bruce had a display of engravings on guns, which he claims is his specialty. The gun designs displayed a flare of Colonial America. Bruce has done lettering, as well as many other metal arts.

Both artist's works were featured in a slide lecture in the evening. The lecture gave a history of the works the two artists have created in their 15 year careers.

While at Stout Bruce worked a lot with ceramics, but as a graduate student in Madison he became seriously interested in art metals. After an art proffessor tossed his first projects, which Bruce was quite proud of, into the garbage. This inspired him to develop some incredible works. He said, "Graduate school was an excruciating experience, but that was good — noboby said it was easy."

His projects to come were much much better received by his professors. He developed an interest in working with iron, and a style which he called, "spaghetti" which is a very wavey, decorative pattern of linear structure. Several of his pieces twisted with this "spaghetti." He created tables, stools, fireplace tools, vegetable choppers, mailboxes, and several other functional metal pieces all with the look of "spaghetti."

As he got away from these designs, he began experimenting with engraving. His fondness for engraving got him interested in gun engraving. Bruce is commissioned to make up to five guns a year. He hopes to become highly specialized with this craft.

Bruce has work in the Smithonian Institution, and was one of 10 American metalsmiths selected to represent the United States at a blacksmith conference in Europe.

Bruce supplements his income by doing repairs and basic engrav-

Six dimensions highlight the philosophy of wellness

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

"Well-come to the Wellness Way of Life!" This is Wellness Week 1986, April 14 - 18. It is a time to explore a healthier style of living. This week has been filled with special events and topical sessions sponsored by the UW-Stout Wellness Club, University Wellness Program, Student Health Services and the University Counceling Center.

On Monday this special week commenced with a Wellness Fair in the Student Center. There booths and activities were organized to make people more aware of wellness and how to integrate it in their styles of living.

Wellness is a philosophy of life encompassing six specific human dimensions. These dimensions include emotional, physical-nutritional, spiritual, intellectual, occupational-vocational, and social-environmental. The Wellness Fair primarily dealt with the physical and nutritional dimensions.

Nancy Gehlhar, President of the Wellness Club said, "The purpose of the fair is to find out where you are in your life style and to work on those aspects that need improvement. Wellness is working toward the optimum state of health."

Booths at the Wellness Fair were piled high with information about health food, fitness, nutrition and preventitive health tips. After nibbling on seeds at the Menomonie Food Co-op booth, the fair participant could get his blood pressure checked, flexiblilty and body fat measured and nutrient intake calculated.

Mary Beth Lvoncek, owner of the Menomonie Health Food Store said, "The purpose of this booth is to make people aware of the supplements available for their nutritional needs in order to support their body and mind functions." One third of this store's clientel are students and most of them are athletes.

Wellness programs are becoming an integral part of the health care field. In Menomonie, the Myrtle Werth Medical Center has a Werth Wellness Program. Sandy Thorson, Director of Education at the Center said, "There are so many changes taking place in health care, that putting Wellness in the system is necessary." The Medical Center in Menomonie has community programs ranging from aquacise to stress management.

> It is process rather than a goal.
> Rev. Tim Megordan Luthern Campus Pastor

The Stout Nutrition and Food Association brought computerization to the fair. By filling out a questionaire, one's nutrient intake could be analyzed in order to make improvements upon one's diet.

The American Cancer Society has caught onto Wellness. According to Chuckie Cohanek, Public Education Chairperson of the local chapter, this is the first time she has had information to hand out which dealt directly linked cancer and the diet.

Cohanek said, "I am all in favor of Wellness. It is the one thing you can do for yourself to stay healthy by staying in shape and eating the right foods." The American Cancer Society display also addressed the timely issue of sun tanning with a catchy brochure, "Fry Now Pay Later."

At the Cedarwood Racquetball and Fitness Center exhibit, body fat percentages were measured and heel cord, shoulder, hamstring and trunk flexibility were calculated. By using a device with a pinching mechanism, Gail Fieber, Director of the center measured body fat. She said, "By letting people see body fat percentages we want to emphasize weight alone is not important." According to Fieber a person weighing 140 pounds with a low body fat content is healthier and more fit than a person of the same height weighing 115 pounds.

Reverend Tim Megorden, Lutheran Campus Pastor of the Ministry to Sout, addressed spirituality at a Wellness session Monday afternoon. This session was entitled, "A Glimpse at the Spiritual Side of Wellness." In this session religion, beliefs, relationships and values were discussed. According to Megorden spirituality, like Wellness, is a way of living. He said, "It is a day to day choosing. It is a process rather than a goal."

One of the topical sessions on Tuesday looked upon eating disorders. Pinckney Hall, Counseling Psychologist at the University Counceling Center, and Nancie Ziemke-Rasmussen, Registered Dietician, outlined both the nutritional-physical and psychological aspect of anorexia and bulimia.

Causes of these disorders are overlapping. Emotionally these disorders spring from the lack of control, depression, family problems and perfectionism. Society plays a factor on these disoreders as well. The press gives a paradoxal message to be slim but to gorge upon such things as fast food.

Sessions and activities during the remainder of the week dealt with other segments of the Wellness concept. The point of the week was to begin a healthy change. As pointed out in a poster, "Neither Rome nor a Wellness lifestyle can be built in a day."

For Those About to Rock

Righteous rock

David Chase

I did something today that some believe will cause me to face the furious flames of hell. Yes, it's true, today I played Led Zeppelins' "Stairway To Heaven" on my stereo, and worse yet, I sang along to it.

But what's strange is, I felt no surge of evil. I felt no impending doom. In fact, I wasn't even compelled to commit an act of violence or disobey mom and dad. And do you know why?

I didn't play the song backwards, listening for evil messages. Nor did I play the song at the wrong speed anticipating satanic chants. No, I listened to the song — forward, at normal speed, and of course at maximum volume.

There are those who feel rock and roll is an instrument of the devil. Rather than giving a long tedious argument opposing this narrow minded view, I'll let Christian rock performer Larry Norman give his view.

"There are some who wrongly feel that contemporary rock music is a satanic, destructive force, and is not conducive to communicating the gospel."

Larry Norman/January, 1975

Speaking of Larry Norman... Norman has been around rock and roll for a long time. You will find his albums in Christain book and record stores all around the world, I myself have four of his albums. I've also seen him twice in concert, and have met him in person.

Surely a man as devoted to Christianity as Larry Norman would never have anything to do with the likes of those musicians, would he? Well it just so happens he does.

On his In Another Land Lp, Norman sings about "A Small Circle Of Friends". These friends are Bob Dylan, Paul McCartney, Eric Clapton, and Charlie Watts from the Stones.

A special guest appears on the Lp, his name is Dudley Moore. No — it couldn't be, not the same Dudley Moore that acted out that sex scene with Bo Derek promoting Adultry — could it?

On the inner sleeve of the Lp is written...

"... Larry sang at the Fillmore, Avalon and other top American rock palaces with Jimi Hendrix, Janice Joplin, Jefferson Airplane, The Grateful Dead, The Who, Van Morrison, The Byrds and even Dylan..."

On Norman's Only Visiting This Planet he gives "Special thanks to George Martin for his assistance." He wouldn't be refering to the Beatles infamous producer George Martin would he? Not the same guy who produced and inspired acid rock groups. Who would believe it?

John Wetton is also on the Lp, who's John Wetton? Well lt's see, he's played for King Crimson, Roxy Music, Uriah Heep, Brian Ferry and Asia.

Now please do not think Larry Norman is evil and is going to hell. Anyone who has heard his music knows he is sincere in faith. But has he already condemned people? I think not.

Kerry Livgren used to play for the band Kansas, but when he became a Christian he began making a Christian Lp. His first album was a good one, but look who's on it.

Ronnie James Dio, former lead vocalist for both Black Sabbath and Rainbow sings on a few of the songs. Barry Barlow, Jethro Tull's drummer, also plays on the Lp. So does Paul Goddard of the Atlanta Rhythm Section and a few of the members of Kansas.

There is a new heavy metal Christian band called Striper, all their lyrics are clean and promote Christianity, isn't it funny that they have the same record label as Motley Crue?

Mylon Lefevre is another rock and roller that only puts out Christian Lp's. But Phil Bailey, ex-Earth Wind And Fire member plays on his latest effort, Wolf In Sheeps Clothing. I saw the band in concert, a very good show.

Randy Stonehill is a great Christian rock musician. All his lyrics pertain to Jesus and positive attitudes toward life. Yet on an inside record sleeve of his Welcome To Paradise Lp it says...

"...He is a professional who has sat in on sessions with Paul McCartney, and Todd Rundgren, and has hummed a few bars with Robert Plant, Ringo Starr, Rod Stewart..."

Wait a second, that can't be true. Randy Stonehill sing with Robert Plant? Wasn't Robert Plant the lead vocalist for that satan worshipping group Led Zeppelin? Their not refering to Rod "Don't You Think I'm Sexy" Stewart?

Am I making my point? I hope so. My intent is not to discredit Christian rock and roll, but to help some people realize the stupidity of stereotyping people in rock and roll.

Can the actions of a few represent a large population? I hope not. What if Jesus were to revisit earth to decide if we were worthy of his kingdom? What if he were to come during World War II, while Hitler and his armies were persecuting millions of his fellow jews. What if he decided after observing all of this that the human race was not worthy?

God himself does not judge many for the actions of one. But then, why would he, why would anyone?

The night will be spent dancing to the versatile sounds of the Stan Haugesag Orchestra. Hors d' oeurves will be served, and a cash bar will be available.

Beaux-Arts is a historic school of fine arts in Paris, France. UW-Stout celebrates the arts with this annual ball involving the school and the community.

Optional French costumes from the past to the present or semi-formal attire is required.

The Beaux-Arts Costume Ball is sponsored by the University of Wisconsin Stout Student Chapter of the American Society of Interior Designers and the Parents' Weekend Committee.

The tickets can be purchased through an A.S.I.D. member or contact Sandy 235-6230 or Karen 232-3771 at $6.00 a person. or... $6.50 at the door the evening of the ball. Persons under the age of 19 years must be accompanied by an adult.

Dance Club

The University Dance Club will be performing at the Pawn Patio in the Memorial Student Center on Friday, April 18 at 4 p.m. & 6:30 p.m. and Saturday, April 19 at 1 p.m. & 4 p.m.

Their performance will include tap, jazz, and ballet styles.

Student Center Dedication

University of Wisconsin-Stout extends an open invitation to all faculty, staff, and students to attend the Dedication Ceremony for the New Memorial Student Center.

Dedication is on Friday, April 18 at 1:15 p.m. in the Crystal Ballroom of the Memorial Student Center. A reception, immediately following the dedication, will be held in the Concourse Lounge of the Memorial Student Center.

Oklahoma

"Oklahoma!," the Rodgers and Hammerstein hit musical, will be presented by University at UW-Stout Thursday, April 17 through Sunday, April 20. Performances in Harvey Hall auditorium are at 8 p.m., except for April 20 which will have a 1:30 p.m. matinee.

Tickets, which are $3 for adults and $2 for students, may be purchased at the box office in Harvey Hall.

Natalie Bothwell, who directs the performance, described the show as "uplifting, memorable and good family entertainment."

"Oklahoma!" revolutionized musical comedy. It was the first show to have songs and dances integral to the plot. It was also the first to use everyday people in the show and a character who was evil.

New technique developed for gardening

Beth Reid
Arts Reporter

Now that the doldrums of winter are passing, imagine summer's garden, lush with vegetables, brought to the table fresh off the plant. Now stop dreaming and face up to the fact that a garden, no matter how small, does not flourish on its own. There are weeds to pull, insects to combat and plants to water and thin out.

Gardening can be a daily task, but there is an alternative way to have fresh vegetables without all the trouble. This method which uses pots or tubs rather than garden plots can be done anywhere, inside or outside and is easy to begin.

First select a container. These can be large or small, as long as the plant has ample root space. "For growing vegetables, a minimum-size container is a six-inch diameter pot with an eight-inch soil depth," Margaret Haapoja of the Minnesota Horticultural Society suggests.

Adequate drainage is another requirement for growing vegetables in containers. Most commercial containers come with holes, but if the container lacks drainage holes, "you can provide a drainage layer with rocks or pebbles in the bottom of the pot." These will hold any excess water and help prevent root rot.

Container gardening demands a special soil mix, one able to hold water and nutrients well enough through hot, dry weather. "Most gardeners find that a "soil-less" commercial potting mix works well," Kathryn Arthurs of the U.S. Department of Agriculture suggests. "If you choose to mix your own mix, a good potting soil consists of equal parts sharp, washed sand, good garden or potting soil and organic material, such as peat moss."

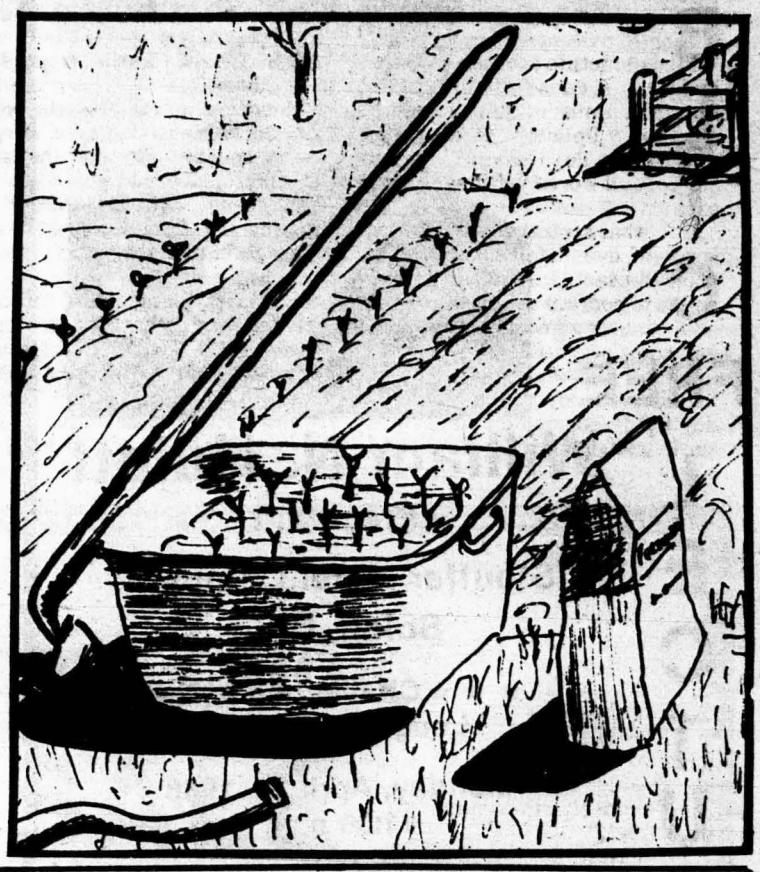
More plants grown in containers fail from improper watering than any other single cause.
—Kathryn Arthurs U.S. Dept. of Agriculture

Fertilizer is another important consideration. Plants in containers require more nutrients than those planted in the ground. Most will need to be fertilized every couple weeks with a solution of water and water-soluble fertilizer.

Water is probably the most important factor in growing vegetables. "More plants grown in containers fail from improper watering than any other single cause," Arthurs said. Plants that get too much water deyelop root rot, while those that don't receive enough may wilt and die. Ideally, potting mix in a container should be evenly moist throughout and not waterlogged.

Vegetables that grow best in containers are those which have determinate growth habits, need minimum support and produce a large enough crop to make your efforts worthwhile. Leaf lettuce, herbs, peppers, radishes and squash work especially well. Larger plants, such as tomatoes and cucumbers work well, but will require larger pots. Root vegetables, such as carrots, potatoes and turnips will need a deeper pot to allow the vegetable to grow down into the soil.

No matter what type of vegetable is selected, with a little TLC, anyone can enjoy the summer's bounty of fresh vegetables whether they are grown on a two acre garden or in a clay pot on the window sill.



Campus Cuisine

Chocolate chip tips

Linda Konkol

Believe it or not, the chocolate chip cookie is the result of a recipe flop. This failure - turned - success occured in 1931, when Ruth Wakefield experimented with a popular cookie recipe of the time. The cookie, known as the "Butter Drop-Do" has been described as "a straightforward, yellowish thing made from flour, butter, sugar, eggs, and vanilla."

Mrs. Wakefield tried adding a chopped up chocolate bar to the Butter Drop-Do, thinking the chocolate would melt and spread throughout the cookies during baking. However, the cookies cooked faster than the chocolate melted, and chocolate remained in chunks throughout the cookies.

Mrs. Wakefield served them to the customers at her Toll House restaurant anyway, and they were an instant success. Nestle heard of the cookies' popularity and began marketing chocolate bars that were scored and packed with a cutting tool for making chocolate chunks.

In 1939, Nestle packaged the first chocolate chips with Mrs. Wakefield's recipe printed on the back of the bag. The cookies continued to grow in popularity, and today statisticians estimate that Americans bake over seven billion chocolate chip cookies a year. They also buy eight billion dollars worth a year.

Chocolate chip cookies are enjoyed by all ages, being called "confectionary poker chips of kids' lunchboxes" and a "grown-up indulgence."

With their high sugar and fat content, and high calorie count (about 142 calories per cookie), chocolate chip cookies really are an indulgence. However, mixing cookie batter consumes about 325 calories per hour, and jogging in place burns up 550 calories per hour.

Therefore, authors of The Complete Chocolate Chip Cookie Book contend that if you mix the batter slowly and jog in place while the cookies are baking, the effort of making the cookies will burn up the calories taken in by the body.

Controversy over cookie texture has accompanied the chocolate chip cookie's rise to fame. Some cookie lovers like their cookies soft and chewy, while others insist on "well-done" crispy cookies. Food producers now manufacture both types of cookies to cater to all tastes.

Various factors can also be manipulated when baking cookies at home to produce the desired texture. Cookies tend to be crisp if they have a high fat and sugar content, longer baking time, and small and thin shape. The reverse conditions produce softer cookies.

Storage can also influence texture of cookies. Crisp cookies are best stored in a container with a loose fitting lid, while soft cookies should be stored in tightly covered containers. If soft cookies harden, a damp paper towel or an apple slice placed in the cookie jar will restore them to their moist, soft state.

In my search for the perfect chocolate chip cookie, I tested several recipes last weekend in the "Campus Cuisine Test Kitchen." A not-so-random sample of taste testers pronounced this recipe the best. It produces cookies with

Make me laugh

Jef Maynard

If your smile were on your backside, people would have to do a lot of running around to see if you were having a good time.

Your sense of humor shows up on the face first. That is a convenience. When dogs wag their tails to show how much fun they're having, they have to bend themselves in two to get the message around to the front. Maybe humor and laughter are valid responses, right in your face the whole time.

Take all seriousness seriously, someone once said. Well fine, but that doesn't mean that your response has to be entirely serious. Here are two examples: Drop a few hundred gallons of non-toxic paint in garbage bags on Khaddafy's neighborhood in Libya if you're so upset Mr. Raygun, or you Gen. Wine-in-the-burger. Bomb those suckers with really dumb colors, regular brown, eggshell, pastel yellow, mint green and so on. Everyone there will get nauseous from looking at the pukey colors but they won't die. (Morons laugh at everything. I wrote this column before all the unpleasant monkey-business started.)

Another classic humorous/serious comeback is slavery abolistionist Charles Sumner's response to a minister who impertinently asked why Sumner didn't take his anti-slavery speeches into the South where it existed. Sumner said, "You are trying to save souls from hell, aren't you. Why don't you go there?"

I live for the funny things that happen. A really good quality joke can be worth as much as the next breath, and might only last as long. Frail things are jokes, like newborns, dependent on the environment, time and temperature. Once again, that number is 235-0123.

You might be wondering about the photo that accompanies this column. What does humor have to do with the two guys throwing the bikini-bound cutey into the briney brink. Add this actual caption to the action: "Movie idol Tab Hunter and Chicago disc jockey Howard Miller prepare to throw lovely Natalie Wood into the water from Miller's yacht." [Get this next part, folks] "Don't fret Nat — they're just kidding." Oh, bust a gut! Who's kidding who? Thanks to the ever-alert Rob Price who dug this masterpiece out of a Hit Parader magazine.

The joke has punch. It may be utterly poor taste to make a joke like this, but the joke was told in a 1956 movie magazine or sometime in the fossilized past. Plus it's that banal art form known as "kitsch." (My heart is pounding as I prepare to write this next line.) This joke is the 30-year old entry in the "Punch, Past, and Kitsch Contest." Bust another gut.

A joke is not a single feeling, but an emotional process. Especially a good quality joke. Some jokes lead you on to a mild, playful point of interest then tell you "Give up, everything you know it wrong."

Like this one: You know, I've been looking into the dairy interest in this state and the whole problem with price supports. I think I have found out why cream is so much more expensive than milk. It's because the cows hate to squat on those little bottles.

Maybe you don't know that cream used to come in bottles or that those bottles were usually small pint size.

If you played along, then you thought: Dairy, oh yea, Wisconsin, Holsteins... Price supports, I know something about that... Milk, cream, sure cream costs more, supply and demand curves right? No, the cows hate to squat on the little bottles.

You laugh, (if you did) because you tried to solve a small playful question, low stakes, some interest. Then someone said, "It's ok, you don't really need to know anything."

Who do I think is funny? Charlie Chaplin is funny, but more beautiful and poetic than funny. I think my two favorite funny people are W.C Fields and the quickest wit of all, Groucho Marx.

Marx was once asked if he knew what Army Intelligence was. "Sounds like a contradiction in terms to me." Groucho Marx is responsible for some of the greatest gag lines of all times.

"Either this man is dead, or my watch has stopped." "I don't have a photograph, but you can have my footprints. They're upstairs in my socks." "While on safari one morning, I shot a zebra in my pajamas. How he got in my pajamas I'll never know."

W.C Fields also had one of the most admirable quick wits of anyone ever to spend a day on this planet. "Tiddley winks huh? Very exciting. I went to the World Championships in France. Very exciting," he drolled in his sideways speech. "Many people were killed." Crazy, man.

I think I'm pretty funny sometimes but it might not do well on records. Once a friend and I were riding our bicycles along a barren road in western Minnesota. A car pulled out ahead of us, in the dusky light. We were afraid the people couldn't see us, and would run us over. "It's ok," my friend said, "they're going the other way." I said, "So are we."

I don't like riddles. Question and set up answer humor is too much like the incessant one-liners on so-called television comedy. The humor factor is too desperate and too formalized to be spontaneous.

When the Marx Brothers and W.C. Fields had parts in a script, it usually said, "Groucho enters..." Find some humor. Let it find you, better yet. Enter laughing. I exit laughing.

Art Exhibit

There will be an art exhibit in Gallery 306 of the Applied Arts Building from April 15 through Saturday, April 19. The works featured will be by Mary C. Cloutier and Sue Schlough. The hours of Gallery 306 are 3 p.m. until 5 p.m.

Milan, Venice, Florence

The largest, most prestigious international furniture design show of the year happens this September in Italy. This credit tour, sponsored by UW-Stout Art Department, leaves Minneapolis on September 16 for Milan, Venice and Florence.

The Milan exhibition is an annual event, attracting all disciplines within the design field. Professional guides along with Orazio Fumagalli from the Stout art department will provide guided tours of the three cities, with emphasis on the history of the architecture.

Cost of the tour is $1,460 and includes a round trip flight departing and returning to Minneapolis; hotel accommodations for 12 nights; daily continental breakfast and dinners for 12 nights; transportation within Italy; and sightseeing.

To reserve space, a deposit of $300 is requested by April 23.

Participants also have the option of earning two academic credits for the tour. Additional information can be obtained by contaction Jean Starkweather, Art Department, UW-Stout, Menomonie, WI 54751, phone (715) 232-1141.

Foreign film portrays hardships of life

Jef Maynard
Arts Reporter

Threads of life that weave through the human social fabric common to all people: birth, work, love, death, parenthood. The World of Apu is the world of everyone at times. The Foreign Film Society has brought us the world; it looks good in black and white.

Apu is a man. Living in Calcutta, striving to be a whole man, professionally he aspires to be a writer.

Preview

The youth in Soumitra Chatterjee's face, the player of Apu, is fresh, idealistic, optimistic.

He knows the future lies ahead. He knows what he wishs to predict about his own future, how to assess his own character. The world holds the cards, but the game looks fair.

Apu lives in a decent squallor, a writer's squallor who has yet to earn a place in the literature of his people. Apu is a young man as yet unscarred by the bludgeon that has fallen. He was an orphan; he is not bitter.

The balance of Apu's world is on a low fulcrum, the stakes are only a step off the ground. He owns little, owes a little, pawning his finer volumes to pay the rent on his humble room.

His neighbor, Mr. Roy, reads his mail. This day good news: a short story is to be published in the Bengali Literary Monthly. Not overnight fame and fortune, it is a small smiling step.

Looking for work, he is overqualified for a school teacher's job, and under-enthused about a sweat shop job in a factory that hand pastes labels.

Throughout the film, the beauty of life, in squallor and splendor, pungent or pristine, is aptly filmed and symbolized in glorious, truthful black and white. Subtrata Mitra was the photographic director and possessor of a large parcel of poetic skill through the lens.

The music of life was composed and performed by Ravi Shankar, the main figure in music of the Indians, presented for the west.

Plot is carried through the door in the person of former schoolmate, Pulu. Apu is invited to Pulu's ancestoral village for a wedding.

While walking, Apu and Pulu discuss the future and philosophy. During the night, Apu tells his friend of the novel he is working on. The man in the story knows he is destined for greatness, but he doesn't make it. Instead he finds wholeness, and love.

The man in the story knows he is destined for greatness, but he doesn't make it...

Apu bases the character on his own estimation of his life, though he has never been in love, or "within ten yards of a girl," his friend points out playfully. The novel sets up a theme for the remaining scenes. A man lives his life, and failing at the material goals, he succeeds at the spiritual quest. He does not turn his back on life.

Aparna, exquisitely beautiful cousin of Pulu is to be married. The wedding ceremony is prepared and all is set in quiet splendor until the groom arrives.

Arriving with a pipe band procession, playing what I am sure is the tune to the children's song "The Bear Went over the Mountain," the groom has a fit of heat induced lunacy. There is no telling if it is permanent, but you can imagine the mother of the bride, and her apprehension.

If there is no wedding, the family is disgraced beyond hope, and the bride is cursed. Apu is chosen for the replacement groom, initially against his will. He refuses.

Finally succumbing to some noble aspirations, he agrees to marry the unseen bride. After the wedding, Apu presents his poverty and simple life. She is truly to be a wife in the old Vedic way. Their marriage roles are to enlighten and serve each other. Money has little to do with either.

They return to Calcutta. As they arrive, the neighborhood takes note. The beautiful bride walks up the tenament stairs as if she weighs nothing. She is all that grace and beauty can be. Her perfect Indian beauty is the foil for their perfect squallor.

Their marriage is strong at first through necessity and tradition. She takes the squallor to heart and works with love. He is determined to provide well for her. They serve and enlighten. She cooks and he teaches her to read.

Throughout the film, trains play a special role. He lives near the train yards. In one poetic scene, she prepares the cooking fire which billows smoke over the porch. In the background, the train billows smoke from its stack. It whistles loudly, hurting her ears, like an amplified echo of his flute music. The train moves on; life moves on. The train shows again and again as a symbol for the movement of life, in so many forms.

Another prophesy is told in the film they watch, in a theatre. There is much in the brief scene of youthful god Krishna, and his faithful resistance to the ill deeds of fate.

Aparna returns to her village to be with her family, a child is coming. They exchange many letters. He reads her final letter in the privacy of the trainyard. Her love is unmistakable and fine.

The saddest thing happens. Her brother arrives to tell Apu that his wife has died in childbirth. Apu has a complete depressive collapse and remains in isolation. He abandons his unseen son, and his life. Travelling alone, he wanders in terrible agony.

At the ocean he only knows waves of eternal grief. In the growing forest he finds serenity and the new music of rebirth. On the hilltop, overlooking the sunrise and valley, he casts the pages of his novel, the theme of his life, to the wind. The float beautifully to the sweet music and the wind.

The son he does not know, lives and grows with the family of the beloved lost Aparna. The son is presented in the film as a full character, masked and unmasked.

Friend Pulu, feeling chagrinned at the failure of the marriage he arranged, makes an attempt to reconcile the boy Kajal and estranged father Apu.

Apu has a realization that he abandoned Kajal because he blames the death of his wife on the birth of the son. Pulu has planted seeds of rebirth.

When Apu returns to his son, on the porch of the grandfather, the pages of a bound book flutter in the wind. The pages blow in the wind yet are held in place by the binding, free as leaves, yet collected. It is the binding that ties. The rest should be obvious.

The World of Apu will be shown Thusday, April 17 and and Friday April 18 in Room 321 Applied Arts at 7 and 9 p.m.

ing. Most of his income comes from commissioned work, whereas Chris sells her work at art fairs, and to galleries.

Chris tries to make her ceramic pieces somewhat functional but as she says, "I always ended up making something stranger." She has created pitchers, cups, vases, and other functional pieces with a slightly abstract feeling about them.

Chris has always loved drawing from life. She admits that finding models outside of a college art program is hard. In any event, Chris has found models. She often incorporates the human figure into her works. Frequently her works have linear drawings of landscape-like contours. She loves the landscapes of the midwest, and she has even found inspiration in snow drifts.

One of the most amazing qualities of her work are the flash marks created by saw dust firing techniques. A technique she practices often. Sometimes these white slashes in a black background, created in the firing produce the illusion of a photograph somehow reprinted onto the pots surface. Other times the flash marks create a surprisingly spectacular design.

Chris believes there is a certain degree of "magic" involved in this process of firing. She is always excited upon opening the firing barrel after a pot firing is complete.

Chris began her art career as a teacher and taught art at a technical college. The college was for adult education, and it was a non-credit school. The job was part-time so Chris still had time to work at her ceramics.

Chris said of the teaching job, "It was an excellent situation. There was no grading and the people were there just because they wanted to. It was an ideal teaching situation." Soon, however, Chris found that teaching was not in her nature, and left the teaching field to pursue her career as a craftsperson.

Chris and Bruce Lepage had much to say about their lives as a craftspeople, as well as their specific crafting techniques. Chris recollects the experiences of their lifestyle and remarks, "We've had honors but they weren't as signifigant as just the fact we survived this long with attitudes that resemble ones we started with."

Cuisine

crunchy edges and chewy centers, a suitable compromise for varied chocolate chip cookie tastes. The recipe was created by Consumer Reports magazine.

Crisp and Chewy Chocolate Chip Cookies

2 1/4 cups flour
1 tsp. baking soda
1 tsp. salt
3/4 cup granulated sugar
3/4 cup brown sugar, packed
1 cup (2 sticks) butter or margarine, softened
1 tsp. vanilla
2 eggs
12 oz. pkg. (2 cups) chocolate chips

Combine the dry ingredients and set aside. With an electric mixer, mix the two sugars briefly at low speed. Add the butter gradually; beat until the mixture is pale, light, and very fluffy. Beat in vanilla and eggs. Mixture should look creamed, not curdled. Mix in the dry ingredients. Add chocolate chips. Drop by teaspoonfuls onto ungreased cookie sheets. Bake at 375 until the cookies are pale golden brown (9 minutes in an electric oven, 10 to 11 minutes in a gas oven). Makes about 5 dozen.

Here's a variation on a basic recipe.

Peanut Butter Chocolate Chip Cookies

2 1/4 cups flour
1 tsp. baking soda
1 tsp. salt
1 cup (2 sticks) butter or margarine, softened
1 2/3 cups brown sugar, packed
1 cup peanut butter
2 eggs
1/4 cup water
1 tsp. vanilla
12 oz. pkg. (2 cups) chocolate chips

Combine the dry ingredients and set aside. Cream the butter, add sugar and cream well until fluffy. Add peanut butter; mix. Beat in eggs, vanilla, and water. Add flour mixture and stir until well blended. Stir in chocolate chips. Drop by teaspoonfuls, 2 inches apart, onto greased cookie sheets. Bake at 375 for 10 to 12 minutes. Makes about 5 dozen.

Sports

Parents Weekend features sports events

Wendy Johnson
Sports Reporter

This Parents Weekend, students and parents may want to show some school spirit by involving themselves in the sports world.

Baseball

The UW-Stout baseball team will be busy this weekend, with games starting Friday and lasting until Sunday.

Friday at 1:30 p.m., Stout will take on UW-River Falls at Nelson Field. Stout's record is 14-11, and they will be facing a tough battle against River Falls.

On Saturday the Blue Devils will be facing UW-Superior at the same time .

Normandale College, a junior college by the Twin Cities, will face the Blue Devils on Sunday at 1:30 p.m. to close out the team's weekend schedule.

Students and parents who are not baseball fans may want to consider cheering for the tennis team.

Tennis

Stout's men's tennis team competes against UW-Platteville at 3 p.m. on Friday on the tennis courts behind the fieldhouse.

UW-Whitewater, the number two team in the conference, will be the first team Stout faces in their double match on Saturday. Stout is ranked number one in the conference. The match will start at 9 a.m.

UW-Oshkosh will be Stout's second opponent Saturday at 2 p.m.

Rugby

At 2 p.m. at Gallway Park, which is on 21st and 9th street, the Blue Devil Rugby team will be fighting against St. Cloud State University. Todd Johnson, a member of Stout's rugby team, commented, "St. Cloud is a strong team. So come on down and watch the game, it's free of charge."

Stout went up against the St. Paul Pigs last weekend, but was defeated 24-16. The St. Paul team is a city side team, which is made up of members that are not in college. Johnson said, "They were more experienced, and we were slightly offset because of the absence of two of the starting players. We played the non-conference team to gain experience."

Bowling

Anyone who is looking for a sport to participate in with their parents might want to consider entering the Parents Weekend "Welcome" Tournament on Saturday at 1 p.m.

The student bowls, and if both of the parents want to bowl, they can alternate turns. Each pair will bowl three games, but there will be a slight scoring difference. The difference is if a person knocks nine pins down, it will be considered a strike. The cost for the student is two dollars and the parent is free.

"Boxing is 75% mental and 25% physical," said Mark Hamley, a boxer student at UW-Stout who plans on starting up a boxing club for interested Stout students. (Stoutonia staff photo by Dan Banach)

Hamley hopes to start boxing club at Stout

Suzanne Schroeter
Sports Reporter

He looks like a basketball player or a track star, but Mark Hamley has a right hand and style that make him one of the best amateur boxers in the state. He also has the desire to start a boxing club here at Stout.

Hamley feels that people have the wrong idea about boxing. He said that boxing builds up peoples' confidence because it is more a mind sport than a physical one. Hamley also believes that boxing would be an alternative or for some an addition to karate.

Hamley, a freshman at UW-Stout, started boxing when he was fifteen. He would watch and imitate his older brother who was in the Al Moreland Boxing Club in Milwaukee, which is the number two ranked club in the nation. His brother noticed that he had a real natural right hand and good style while shadow boxing with him.

Hamley started going down to the gym with his brother and worked on the heavy and speed bags. The trainers at the gym liked his style and his fast hands and were able to set up a fight for him. In his first fight Hamley won with a knockout.

Since then he has continued on to win 23 amateur fights and lose only one. Five of these wins were won by knockouts. Hamley has also won all-state competitions including state silver gloves, golden gloves, and the WABF Junior Olympics. His brother seemed to be right about Hamley's natural right hand.

Hamley maintains that his dedication to boxing is the major factor to his success. "Boxing is 75% mental and 25% physical," Hamley commented.

Hamley would like to start a boxing club here at Stout for next year. His plans include bringing all the equipment including boxing gloves, jump ropes, and heavy and speed bags when he comes back to school next year. Hamley would start an exercise program and training right away. He would also like to run the club through the entire school year.

Hamley is looking for at least ten people to start with. He again stressed that he needs people who are going to be dedicated. He said that he would start everyone out the same and treat them equal. He figured that he could probably get them into their first amateur fight within two months but added that he would not let anyone fight if they were not ready.

He said that there were twenty to thirty other clubs in the state with which he could set up matches including some in Eau Claire. As for the frequency of the fights Hamley said that it would depend on how well they are doing. "I could have them fighting once every two months if everything is going okay," Hamley said. He said that this would be enough time so that they would be peaking for the fight. Hamley also commented that this was the average frequency of fights for an amateur boxer.

Hamley has put a lot of thought into planning a boxing club and feels that he could make it work if he can get a few dedicated people. He doesn't claim to be the best but feels that he has enough experience and is able to judge how well people are doing to make a boxing club work here at Stout.

As for his own future in boxing he plans to continue working out and to see what happens. Hamley will return to Milwaukee in the summer and work out at Al Moreland's. He also will be fighting at the Ohio State Fair in June. "I'm going to stick with it and see what develops," Hamley said.

Out of Bounds

Chasing the little white ball

Rochelle Buhr

Why would someone want to hack a little dented white ball on some short grass, and ultimately aim it into a hole with a flag sticking out of it?

I've done this before, played golf that is.

My dad spurred my interest in the sport.

I knew how my dad acted when he would play a rotten game of golf. It could mean silence at the dinner table, or worse yet, not being able to have the car that night.

What was this game golf? Why do doctors play it on Wednesdays? Why does my dad have to play it each week? Why does my dad act funny when he has done lousy? What's the big deal?

I had to find out.

I didn't do very well my first outing on the greens. At times, I would kill a ball 250 yards, and other times I would swing like a wildman and the ball would never leave the tee.

I never lost a ball in the woods, or just didn't pay attention to where it landed, because I never really hit the ball far enough to lose sight of it.

Putting is what drove me crazy. It seemed so easy to be able to gently stroke a egg-sized ball into a cup on a smooth hand-tweezed surface.

Each time that I was close to the flag, it took me about nine tries to get that ball in the hole. Needless to say, I was discouraged.

I shouldn't be discouraged, my dad had said to me. He kept telling me that I was a "natural." If I was a natural, how come I didn't feel like I could give Nancy Lopez a run for the money?

I observed Nancy Lopez in a tournament once. I was awestruck at how far she could crank the ball. She must have eaten her Wheaties.

Anyway, the golf outing was not all lost. In between holes, we did cookies with the golf cart around the course.

I like driving the ball at driving ranges rather than chipping fruitlessly toward a small cup target that is probably 1/100,000 of a golf course. These odds stink.

At a driving range you can hit the ball like a maniac, and never be off target, because there isn't a target. Well maybe there is a target, a moving one. It's that ball snagger that is encased in a cage. Once I hit it and me and everyone around the range cheered like I had won the lotto.

Although golf is supreme with my dad and millions of other Americans, it just doesn't do much for me. However, if I could win thousands of dollars like Jack Nicklaus and the rest of the pros on the golf tour, I could learn to pick my teeth with a tee. I would even wear knickers.

This is my last column.

As sports editor, I had a lot of fun. I especially found it amusing when people would see me out and agree or disagree with whatever they read in my column that week.

I had the strongest opposition after I wrote a pseudo letter to Sports Illustrated about their swimsuit issue. All from guys.

I also had the most support for my Sports Illustrated piece, from the girls.

This was not surprising.

Netters extend winning streak to 11 with impressive WSUC victories

Paul Wehking
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout men's tennis team extended their winning streak to eleven matches last week, bringing their total match record up to 19-5.

Last Thursday, the Stout netters took on a young UW-River Falls team and handled them easily. Stout shot the Falcons out of the air with a 9-0 defeat. "Stout is a very good team. We don't expect to come over here and beat them," River Falls Coach Don Page said.

Stout Coach Bob Smith jockeyed his lineup to accommodate the weak UW-River Falls squad. Four of Stout's first six players didn't play in the match giving Stout's other players some time on the court.

All matches were decided in two sets except for one match in doubles. The pair of Eric Tidquist and Jarrod Barnard dropped their second set 1-6 but managed to score a 6-2 victory in the third giving them the win.

On Saturday, the Stout netters traveled to UW-La Crosse where they administered another defeat to their opponents.

This time, Stout's first team was in place and they served La Crosse an 8-1 trouncing. The doubles pair of Joel Vogler and Tony Pheifer lost to their opponents in three sets, tallying Stout's only loss in the match. Neither of the two could be reached for comment.

Stout was to also play Eau Claire on Saturday but the match was rescheduled for Wednesday of this week due to rainy conditions.

Stout's second team was also on the road last weekend playing at Mankato State University. In Friday's matches, the Stout netters played Mankato State and Augustana.

Against Mankato, Stout dropped four singles matches and one doubles match making them the losers of that bout.

In the Augustana match, the Blue Devils fared much better. Stout lost only two matches, one in both singles and doubles, to give them a 7-2 victory.

Day two at Mankato proved to be quite long for the Blue Devil second team. They faced St. Cloud State, which the first team beat 8-1 earlier in the season, and were mauled 9-0 by the Huskies.

The second knife of the day was inserted into Stout's side by the University of North Dakota. This time, the Blue Devil netters were defeated 8-1 by UND with Troy Kelly coming up with the only win for Stout.

In the new Division III national rankings Stout found themselves in a six-way tie for the eleventh spot. Earlier in the season the Blue Devils were ranked ninth in the nation in Division III. The setback is most likely due to the loss to Claremont, California, who is now ranked tenth, earlier in the season. "It's really not that much different. When we were ranked ninth we were tied with about six teams too," Rob Oertel said.

In order for Stout to make the national tournament they must finish in the top ten of all Division III schools in the country. To do this, they may have to beat both Carleton and Gustavus Adolphus who are currently ranked eighth and ninth respectively.

In singles, Rob Oertel maintained his rank of 17th in the national poll and barring a catastrophe will play singles in the national tournament regardless of whether or not the team makes it.

The doubles pair of Oertel and Mike Friedman, currently ranked 14th, also have a shot at playing in the national tournament. "I think they have a good chance at going to nationals," Smith said.

In addition to two away matches this week, Stout will host UW-Platteville on Friday at 3 p.m. and UW-Whitewater and UW-Oshkosh on Saturday at 9 a.m. and 2 p.m. respectively. Whitewater has, for the last few years, been Stout's toughest conference opponent.

Sluggers achieve three weekend victories

Louie Filkins
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout baseball team improved their Northern record to 5-1 over the weekend by splitting a double-header with UW-Eau Claire last Saturday and taking two games from St. Thomas College last Sunday.

The Blue Devils defeated Eau Claire 3-1 in a pitcher's battle in their first game on Saturday. Leadoff batter Tim Buswell started Stout off with a ground-rule double that the quick Buswell may have stretched into a triple if the ball hadn't bounded over the left field fence. It turned out to be irrelevant when the next hitter, Nick Ghelfi, singled to bring home Buswell for the Blue Devils' first run. Blugold errors led to Stout's next two runs, and their total offensive show came in the first inning.

Three runs would be all Stout needed to overcome their opponent as strong pitching by Mike Charbonneau held Eau Claire to just one run with five hits. "Mike did a super job for us again this week, he just missed a shutout. Eau Claire was never really in the ball game," Head Coach Terry Petrie said about his sophomore pitcher. This is the second week in a row that Charbonneau has gone the distance and held his opponents to one run. "My breaking ball is working well for me and my fast ball is coming along," Charbonneau said.

Stout dropped the second game of the double-header 7-6 in a very close game that they could have easily won. Starting pitcher for the second game, John Schmitt, said, "I just wasn't loose." Eau Claire scored five runs in the first inning, however Schmitt, a freshman right-hander, gave up just three hits. "A quick error in the infield and then another in the outfield hurt us early. It was hard for us to come back from a five-run deficit," Coach Petrie said.

The Blue Devils did mount a comeback in the second inning when Mike Dukat singled to lead off a five-run inning. Carl Drezek walked and Scott Aschenbrenner followed with a single. After two strike-outs, Buswell walked and the hot-hitting Nick Ghelfi slapped a two-RBI double to right field. "With two strikes I was trying to protect the plate when he threw a high outside pitch that I pushed into right field," Ghelfi said.

Ghelfi, a junior right fielder, also crushed a "seed" late in the sixth inning that could have possibly won the game for Stout but an outstanding over-the-shoulder catch by the Blugold left fielder dampened the Blue Devils' hopes. "I would have traded in all my hits over the weekend to see that one go out," Ghelfi said.

The baseball Blue Devils swept their double-header with the St. Thomas Tommies 3-2 and 7-2. Chuck Dugger started on the mound in the first meeting. Dugger threw well, allowing St. Thomas just two runs through six and two-thirds innings. With two outs and runners on second and third, the big right-hander Joe Schopp came in to record the final out and the save.

Stout bats were somewhat quiet in the first game for what their fans are used to. They recorded only six hits and scored three runs. One of the hits was a round-tripper blast for Nick Ghelfi with one out in the first inning. After Jeff Kloes walked in the fourth, Ed Space and Carl Drezek had back-to-back singles to drive Kloes home. The final, and winning run came with two outs in the sixth inning when Scott "Snack-bar" Aschenbrenner hit a full-count single. The next batter, Mike Dukat, drove him in with another base hit.

The Blue Devils dominated the Tommies in the second meeting. Head Coach Terry Petrie used four different pitchers throughout the game who held St. Thomas to just four hits and two runs. Starting pitcher Chris "Fuzzy" Fasnacht said the following about his performance: "I gave up a couple of bleeders right away, but other than that it was the best I've thrown all year."

Much improved lumber gave Stout seven runs off seven hits in the second game. Kraig Kucaba, Mike Dukat and Greg Osowski all hit .500 in the game. Kucaba drilled a triple in the first inning to score Space. Aschenbrenner followed with a two-out single to bring Kucaba home and round off a four-run scoring drive by the Blue Devils. With the help of a double by Jeff Kloes, Stout scored three more runs in the fourth inning to put the game out of reach.

The Blue Devils face UW-River Falls this Friday, UW-Superior on Saturday and Normandale Junio College on Sunday. All games ar at home. "River Falls has alway been tough. They're a good-hitting scrappy ball team," Petrie sai about Friday's game. "We've bee working on our hitting this week we'll have to score more runs tha we have been to beat them." Stou will play the Falcons in a double header. The first game starts at p.m.

MEMORIAL STUDENT CENTER UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN—STOUT MENOMONIE, WISCONSIN 54751

Center dedicated to those who died in war

Beth Reid
News Reporter

Students of UW-Stout and those from the Stout State College era who died in war so that others may live, were honored last Friday in the dedication of the Memorial Student Center which occured in the Crystal Ballroom.

The ceremony began with the Presentation of Colors by members of the U.S. Army, U.S. Navy and U.S. Marine Corps. Reverend Tim Megorden of the Campus Ministry continued the ceremony with a short invocation, remembering those who have served.

The first speaker at the dedication was President of SSA, Jo Ann Prange. She expressed her feelings about the importance of dedication, explaining that, "We dedicate buildings as an opportunity to recognize accomplishments of others." She went on, saying that "the students we are dedicating the Memorial Student Center to gave the most precious gift — the gift of life.

Prange said she feels that the Student Center represents an important feeling and said, "My hope is that the feeling this building represents will never die, but continue burning in the hearts of students like the eternal flame."

The second speaker at the dedication was Vice President of Physical Planning and Development, Paul Brown. He discussed the planning and funding of the Union development, including how the site of the Student Center was chosen. "We picked this particular site because we wanted a focal point at the crossroads of campus," Brown said, "and we wanted to attract students as they were going to and from class."

He described the functions inside the building and how these were chosen. "We wanted to provide things for students to do on weekends and give them the opportunity to interact with other students," Brown said.

Brown went on to say that the remodeling of the old Student Center was going well and that the graphics arts students will be pleased with the results.

The ceremony continued with a short speech by Terence McArdle, who is a Veteran of Foreign Wars of U.S.A. and a 1972 graduate of Stout. He began by asking what the United States flag and the Memorial Student Center have in common. He answered his own question saying that, "These things are each a symbol of this great country."

Seventeenth Congress takes hold of SSA reins

Kelly Cohorst
News Reporter

A cake in the face was JoAnn Prange's farewell gift from the Stout Student Association (SSA) at the opening of the last sixteenth congress meeting.

The cake in the face for lame duck SSA presidents has traditionally been the encore of congressional sessions. This year the honor was given to off-campus senator Lee Michaels, who "graciously offered to bake the cake."

On a more serious note, Prange was given a wall hanging with the lettering from the window of the old student center. Prange gave her final report and thanked the congress for the great year that was shared in SSA.

The new senate was then sworn in and Paul D. Nelson, newly elected SSA President, got down to work immediately by appointing his new executive staff.

Wes Stead was appointed Administrative Assistant. The Administrative Assistant works with the president and the congress in various areas.

Appointee Rob Zimdars will serve as United Council Director. The United Council is a state wide organization that brings the University Schools together with academic and state issues.

John Lee was appointed Landlord/Tenant Representative. This is a position that works with the off-campus tenant and landlord problems.

> Lee Michaels graciously offered to bake the cake.
> —Gary Harder

Appointee Kristen Bayerl will serve as the Executive Secretary. Bayerl's job will be to take all SSA notes during the meetings.

Denise Hoeft was appointed Media/Advertising Coordinator. This position administers public relations between the SSA and the students.

Appointees Catherine Reszka and Mark Betz will serve as off-

Hostages murdered in Lebanon

Beirut, Lebanon - Two British Journalists and American Peter Kilbourne were found murdered in reprisal for the U.S. raid on Libya. President Reagan called the slaying "a tragedy," demonstrating that "terrorism is something that we have to deal with once and for all, all of us together." Ali Treiki, Libya's ambassador to the United Nations, denied that his country had anything to do with the deaths. "We have have nobody in Libya, I think," he said.

Gorbachev wants Summit

Potsdam, East Germany - Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev said that he was still prepared to meet President Reagan this year despite recent U.S. actions that he said were "poisoning the atmosphere." He did not say what U.S. actions had "poisoned the atmosphere," but appeared to be referring to the U.S. raid on Libya and recent U.S. nuclear tests. A senior U.S. official said that the administration remained convinced that the Kremlin leadership recognized the need to narrow U.S. - Soviet differences.

Lawsuits on the decline

New York, New York - The American propensity to sue, fueling a litigation explosion in the 1980's, is just another "in a long line" of myths about the court system, a research study showed Sunday. According to statistics from the National Center for State Courts, the number of court cases has actually decreased from 1981 to 1984.

Capone's vaults crumble

Chicago, Illinois - Geraldo Rivera, former ABC news correspondents, hosted a live two-hour program on the opening of Al Capone's secret vaults in the Lexington Hotel Monday night. The IRS was present in hopes of recovering its $800,000 dollar claim against Capone's estate. They found no treasure except for several coke bottles. Rivera apologized at the end of the program.

Ex-Chief loses suit

Bloomer, Wisconsin - An Eau Claire County Circuit judge decided against John Parkhurst, the former Bloomer police chief, in his lawsuit against the city. Judge Gregory A. Peterson ruled that the City of Bloomer did not wrongfully terminate Parkhurst in 1985 when Bloomer's mayor did not reappoint Parkhust to the chief's position.

Schertz may face charges

Iola, Wisconsin - A hearing examiner says it will be about two weeks before he presents his recommendation about misconduct complaints filed by the Village of Iola against suspended Police Chief Michael Schertz, who was tried and aquitted of murder in the death of a fellow police officer. The complaints stem from alleged gun thefts.

Perspective

'Mad dog of the Middle East'

Compiled by Brian Kraimer

Is Muammar Kaddafi the "mad dog of the Middle East" Newsweek, or just obsessed by a ruthless, messianic vision?

Kaddafi sees a united Arab Nation, stretched from the Persian Gulf to the Atlantic. He believes he is here to unite all the Arab nations and show their great power to the Western World.

Kaddafi was raised in the desert as a shepherd. He went to military school at a young age. He believed that "the desert teaches you to rely on yourself." He was kicked out of secondary school after he started a student strike. Later he joined a military academy and became a devoted follower of Gamal Abdel Nasser, whom he tried to imitate.

In 1969 Kaddafi led a bloodless coup to overthrow King Idris. It was a complete success. Kaddafi then ousted British and American bases in Libya and got the country's economy moving forward.

But his vision of a united Arab country led to a vicious and ruthless fanaticism. He came to believe that the ends are justified by any means, however bloody.

Kaddafi has used his perceived insanity to his advantage. His madness keeps his enemies off guard. He refers to the U.S., one of his major enemies, as the devil. Meanwhile the U.S.S.R. is referred to as a friend.

Libya's foreign policy authored by Kaddafi seems harsh when he says, "My people have the right to liquidate opponents inside and outside the country."

In Libya, terrorism is allowed and condoned by its leader. Kaddafi has not only allowed terrorists into the country but supported terrorists with weapons and money. Only last week, Kaddafi offered $100 million for custody of the American hostages held by terrorists in Lebanon.

Kaddafi is obsessed with wiping Israel off the map. He hates America because it supports the Jewish nation, and considers the U.S. his ultimate enemy because of this.

The late Egyptian Prime Minister Anwar Sadat was just one example of an Arab leader who hardly saw eye to eye with Kaddafi. Sadat once called the Libyan leader "100 percent sick and possessed of the devil."

Participants reflect on Parents Weekend

The 1986 Parents' Weekend at UW-Stout was titled "A Taste of Stout" and ran through April 18th to 20th.

As early as Friday morning, business on campus was booming in preparation for the activities. The Stout Chapter of the American Institute of Plant Engineers (AIPE) sold roses and carnations on the Cobblestone Court. Joy Sternberg, a Stout student, picked out a red rose for her mother who was celebrating her birthday during the weekend.

The father of one of the aspiring plant engineers owns a florist shop. He provided the AIPE with flowers on credit so they could raise funds. Jim Bannister, Treasurer for the organization, said, "Parents' Weekend is one of the more exciting things that happens on campus."

Members of the Hotel Motel Management Association sold brats and soda outside the Student Center. Sales were especially brisk Saturday after the clouds lifted and the sun came out.

Parents' Weekend also has an effect on businesses in the city of Menomonie. Steve Vandeberg, manager of the Best Western Motel, said, "This is the busiest weekend of the year, in terms of demand for rooms."

Toby Brown and Betty Klotz were advisors to the Parents Weekend Committee this year. Brown said that the committee was able to provide everything free to the visiting parents, with the exception of meals, because of the $6,000 budget they receive. The Inter-Residence Hall Association provides $4,000 and the balance of $2,000 comes from the Special Events Commission.

Brown described the mission of the Parents' Weekend Committee as "showing the parents just exactly what it's like for their sons and daughters here." The work is done by students who have been meeting once a week since early September, he said.

Not everyone's parents attend Parents Weekend. Kim Langenfeld, whose parents are in Germany, is not upset that she will be without a visit from her folks, however. "It would have bothered me when I was in Eau Claire (in her first years of college)," she said. "But being an older student, it doesn't bother me as much. And I do have an uncle and aunt coming up to see my cousin, who is also a student here."

Saturday was the big day for events in the new Student Center. The Great Hall had been set up the day before for the first event: the Fashion Promotions class style show titled "Spreading The News."

The show had been listed at 10:30a.m. on the Parents' Weekend schedule but started at 10a.m.. A number of people mulled around in the doorway, unable to squeeze into the back of the hall to see the show.

Stout student Kathy Molczan, had brought her mother, Irene Boe, to see the show. "This would have been the highlight of the activities for my mother," she said. They were still planning to see the musical "Oklahoma!" on Sunday afternoon.

Hotel and restaurant major, Tisha Spahr and her mother, Audrey, were some of the over 800 people who packed the Great Hall to see the show. Ms. Spahr said that the show was "very professional." Her mother said, "It was much better than I had expected. I thought the fashions would be way out, something a mother would find it hard to identify with. But instead it was very tasteful."

The Great Hall was packed again by early Saturday afternoon for a concert provided by the Stout Music Department. The parents of Sue Tomasek, Vice-Chair of the University Programming Board, could not find a place to sit to see the concert. Instead, the family went across the hall to the Crystal Ballroom to see Harvi Griffith, master harpist.

Leona Tomasek, Sue Tomasek's mother, said that she liked Parents' Weekend better this year than last. Her husband, John Tomasek, said that the event was more coordinated than last year's had been.

Taffy Jackson, a second semester freshman in business administration, also brought her family to hear the harpist play. Jackson was wearing a turquoise polo shirt, identifying her as a member of the Parents' Weekend Committee. She is also the chair of HKMC's Parents' Weekend Committee.

The HKMC Parents' Weekend Committee provided additional attractions to its visitors. They showed a videotape of a staff meeting, a slide show and a talent act to visiting parents.

Taffy Jackson's grandmother, Mrs. Jones, said, "Everyone I've talked to whose children have graduated from Stout have been pleased and they've all done well in whatever field they've chosen." Mrs. Jones favorite harp pieces were the jazz standard, Misty and the theme song from M.A.S.H.

Also visiting with the Jackson family was Rochelle Callendar, who graduated from the University of Alabama-Tuscaloosa with a master's degree in Speech Pathology, said "Taffy enjoys Stout." She added that the presentation of a black harp player was a cultural aspect provided by Stout that pleasantly surprised her.

The family of Nancy Schneider, a vocational rehabilitation major, was visiting from Rhinelander. They cancelled the boat ride and picnic outing they had planned for Saturday. As Nancy Schneider's mother, Roxanne Schneider, put it, "The sun forgot to shine." Instead, the family toured the academic buildings which were holding open house.

Difficult weather also effected the University Dance Club recitals. On Friday the rain drove them inside the Pawn for two performances. The dancers drew an audience by performing twice on the Pawn patio in the afternoon sunshine on Saturday.

The Dance Club's president, Kaleene Kenning, said she was very pleased with the level of interest that the newly-formed group has seen. "We feel the level of interest in dance has been very high for a long time but that it had no outlet." Ms. Kenning praised the togetherness and organizing of the club's executive board for making the organization a success.

Because of her busy schedule, Ms. Kenning said that the only time her visiting parents were able to see her was when she was on stage. "My parents have sat through every show." she said. "They're just wonderful."

Expressive vandalism painted on Applied Arts can cost plenty

Pat Miles
News Reporter

The bombing of Libya on Monday, April 14 has provoked several people to voice their opinions in relation to terrorism and Muammar Kaddafi. Someone here at UW-Stout has made his/her feelings toward Libya known on the east wall of the Applied Arts building.

In bright fluorescent orange spray paint are inscribed the words "Blow Libya to Hell." Voicing an opinion is legal. Although, spray painting graffiti is vandalism which is illegal.

It is not yet known at this time who vandalized the Applied Arts building. According to UW-Stout's Protective Services, persons providing information leading to the apprehension of a criminal are eligible for an award of up to $100 per incident and may remain anonymous.

If a person is caught, the University would turn the complaint over to the District Attorney. Any person caught would be subject to penalties which include payment of restitution, which in this case the amount could range anywhere from $200 to $400. Other disciplinary action by the University would vary depending on the extent of damage and the person's criminal past if any.

According to Protective Services, there would also be a fine of approximately $77.50. The chance of the authorities apprehending a criminal depends partly on cooperation from students and citizens. Protective Service urges anyone who knows anything about any such crime to call Protective Services at 232-1632.

Need to face problem

Since Governor Earl recently endorsed raising the legal drinking age from 19 to 21 the death knell began to sound for the STOP 21 movement.

The lobbying effort to increase the drinking age to 21 nationwide has been an emotional effort led by groups such as Mothers Against Drunk Drivers (MADD). These groups can be expected to celebrate the day when the nationwide drinking age becomes reality.

The efforts to raise the drinking age have taken on the All-American sort of aura related to motherhood and apple pie. As a result, the political argument against raising the drinking age is difficult to support when you are concerned about your political survival.

The STOP 21 forces and the raise the drinking age coalition possessed a multitude of statistics which pointed out the need to take up their respective sides on this cause.

The proposed solution of raising the drinking age presents a pleasant panacea for groups concerned about alcohol abuse by the youth of America. The major question that needs to be addressed is, what causes alcohol abuse and how can we learn to use alcohol without abusing it?

Prohibition merely succeeded in creating a solid basis for organized crime. The increase in the drinking age will simply force 19 and 20 year-olds to drink in their own private enclaves.

We should be wary of this new drinking age limit simply because Congress used "federal blackmail" against the states to force them to raise the drinking age.

We all recognize the perennial loss of thousands of lives on America's highways due in large part to drunk driving. It's time that we as a nation agree on a substantive solution to this tragedy.

There is no age limit to alcohol abuse. Many start abusing this depressant drug when they are 15 or 16 years old. The 19 year-old drinking age didn't effect them. How can you expect the 21 year-old drinking age to have any effect?

Americans can start by identifying alcohol as a drug. Too often we hear the expression of "drugs and alcohol" which indicates that alcohol falls into a totally different category separate from drugs.

With the money invested in lobbying for the increased drinking age these groups could have started a campaign to educate America's youth and the public at-large on the price we all pay for alcohol abuse.

Then the public would have the needed information to decide for itself the impact of alcohol abuse and effective ways of treating the problem rather than merely attacking the symptoms.

The Bottom Line

Maggots II: The Dragnet

Rich Brueckner

This is the city: Menomonie, Wisconsin. Over thirteen thousand men and women live here. When they start giving each other a hard time, I go to work; I carry a badge.

It was Tuesday morning. It was cloudy in Menomonie. My partner and I were working the day-watch out of Vice Division. My name's Friday.

The captain called us into his office and closed the door. He asked us what we knew about sexual harassment. My partner poked me in the ribs and started laughing.

"Hey, this is serious you two. We got a complaint and I want you to check it out," he said.

Our first task was to define sexual harassment. This investigation resulted in "Latenite" type list. Here are the Top Ten Sexual Harassment Questions:

1. "Is a grievance policy set up for grade-gripes any way to handle a situation that might devastate an individual for life?"
2. "Do Deans use cave talk?"
3. "Is a Ph.D. the death of hope?"
4. "Is there a fine line between sexual harassment and obnoxious behavior?"
5. "If a crime is committed, is it O.K. if you just promise not to do it anymore?"
6. "What is the difference between tenure and amnesty?"
7. "Is it possible to get a Master's Degree with your virginity intact?"
8. "Would you want your daughter to go to Stout?"
9. "Did the saying 'What we don't get — we take' ever appear on a departmental report?"
10. "Does the Chancellor have better things to worry about?" The captain became furious when he read our report. He wanted to know who thought up all this stuff.

I told him that if I had indeed written it, I couldn't get in any trouble because I wasn't writing it anymore. Hell, I have tenure too.

My partner's outlook on the whole situation became apparent when he blurted out, "Luckily this kind of thing didn't happen on a campus which spent its first semester in flurry of well deserved rape paranoia. That would be ironic."

It was obvious that we had to come up with some answers. We brought the suspect in for questioning.

"Why did you do it?" I asked.

"I didn't do anything, Friday," she said, "I want my lawyer."

This suspect was one tough cookie. It's no wonder that the poor guy she harassed wound up impotent and got laughed out of school.

We collected all the evidence we could for the Positive Action Committee hearing. The committee made several disciplinary recommendations to which the Judge reportedly put his feet up on his desk and responded, "I'm not accountable to you people. Who do you think set up this grievance policy anyway?"

The Judge's decision was milder than any of the committee's recommendations. It was carefully worded though, and as one official stated, "It doesn't say a whole lot, does it?"

Our police psychologist testified that the M.O. was familiar in this case. "I'm a behaviorist," he said, "It might be good therapy for the suspect to find a new hobby."

We met the complainant after the hearing. "I always used to think that having a teacher come on to me would be heaven." he said, "Now my sex-life is shot and I can't even meet the burden of proof. This aint heaven — this sucks!"

The District Attorney told us that there was no precedent case involving a male getting sexually harassed. We had no choice but to "kick her loose."

We came to a dead end. It seemed that this was a serious offense that was dealt with by not dealing with it.

My partner was definitely influenced by the Judge's decision. With a demented grin on his face, he poised his hand above our secretary's rear end and said to me, "You are about to witness a crime."

The story you have just read is true. The sex has been changed to protect the innocent.

Subject: Residence Halls Director talks about possible changes ahead

Text by Rich Brueckner

Judy Spain

Judy Spain has been the Director of Residence Life at Stout since 1972. She has a Bachelor's Degree in Library Science and a Master's Degree in Student Personnel Counseling from the University of Iowa.

STOUTONIA: WOULD YOU PREFER THAT THE TERM "RESIDENCE HALLS" BE USED IN THIS INTERVIEW INSTEAD OF "DORMS"?

SPAIN: Yes, I would like that very much. We definitely have residence halls.

STOUTONIA: WHAT CHANGES WOULD YOU PERCEIVE IN RESIDENCE HALL POLICY AS A RESULT OF THE IMPENDING 21 DRINKING AGE?

SPAIN: It would depend on how the legislation was written. We may have to get together with some staff and students to see how it would affect the residence halls. I would hope that we would be able to continue to assign students as we do now. As University authorities, we will continue to enforce State policies and regulations that would pertain to the students just as we do now.

STOUTONIA: DO YOU THINK THAT THERE WILL BE MORE NON-ALCOHOL FLOORS AS A RESULT OF THIS CHANGE?

SPAIN: I would suppose those could happen naturally because we could end up with more floors if it went to 21 because we might have floors where none of the residents are of the legal drinking age. We now have five non-alcohol floors. The way that people are assigned to those floors does not pertain at all to the legal drinking age. They are floors that are available to students who choose to live in an atmosphere where there is no alcohol.

STOUTONIA: THERE WAS A STORY IN THE APRIL 17 STOUTONIA ABOUT AN R.A. THAT IS BEING SUED BY A WHITEWATER TAVERN FOR ALLEGEDLY USING A FAKE I.D. CARD; IN YOUR EXPERIENCE, HAVE ANY R.A.'S BEEN INVOLVED IN LEGAL OR CIVIL SUITS?

SPAIN: Sure, they're human beings. I have a great amount of respect for the individual you mentioned. I know her quite well. She does a good job. In addition to her regular responsibilities, she is further involved in planning some R.A. training. She is an enthusiastic, highly motivated, creative individual. I think that its an interesting case. I think that if they award the tavern any amount of money at all, that ought to put those under age on notice. They could find themselves in a lot of trouble if other taverns follow suit and I can't see why they wouldn't try to recapture their financial losses.

STOUTONIA: WHAT WOULD AN R.A.'S RESPONSIBILITY BE IF SHE KNEW OF A RESIDENT'S USE OF A FAKE I.D. CARD?

SPAIN: We would expect the R.A.

Letters to the editor

Christian Rock defined

I believe David Chase's article on "Righteous rock" has many misinterpretations.

One is what Christian rock is. Christian rock glorifies God and His character. Christian rock is written by Christians specifically to praise God. It is pure in its intentions.

Secular rock is the other type of rock and roll. Its purpose is to glorify man, some aspect of man, and anything else but God. Secular songs may make references to God, but they do not follow God's principles. They definitely do not worship God's holy character.

The film "Rock and Roll — A Search for God" mentions that secular music can be used by Satan. Satan exists. Famous murderers like Manson and last summer's "Night Stalker" in L.A. absolutely worshipped Satan. Satan's most potent weapon is deception. He wants people to believe Rock and Roll will have no affect on their behavior, thoughts and attitudes.

I believe it insults human intelligence to say that you are not aware of what is being said, if you listen to the same messages over and over again. This technique is used in brainwashing. Ignoring the music's intentions is dangerous. As Christians we believe that we should see the whole picture, look at all the facts, weigh the facts with sound judgement, and make a decision.

The article conveys the message that Christians condone secular music. This is proved by showing that they associate with non-Christians. That is guilt by association. Just because Christians talk and befriend non-Christians doesn't mean they condone secular music. How are Christians to reach the world for Christ if they do not talk to non-Christians? Jesus was a very loving and accepting man. He hung out with the tax collectors, prostitutes and other sinners. (Matthew 11:19) But he never condoned sinful actions and behaviors.

It states in Galatians 6:16-21, "But I say, walk by the Spirit, and do not gratify the desires of the flesh. For the desires of the flesh are contrary to the Spirit, and the desires of the Spirit are contrary to the flesh; for these are opposed to each other, to prevent you from doing what you would. But if you are led by the spirit you are not under the law. Now the works of the flesh are plain: immorality, impurity, licentiousness, idolatry, sorcery, enmity, strife, jealousy, anger, selfishness, dissension, party spirit, envy, drunkenness, carousing, and the like."

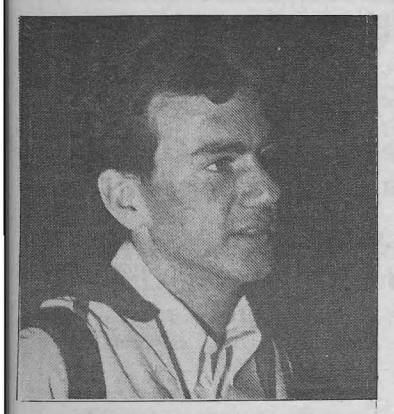
CAMPUS SLANT/

How do you feel about raising the legal drinking age to twenty-one?

Text by Brian Kraimer

Photos by Todd A. Nelson



Mike Donegan,
Sophomore,
Applied Technology

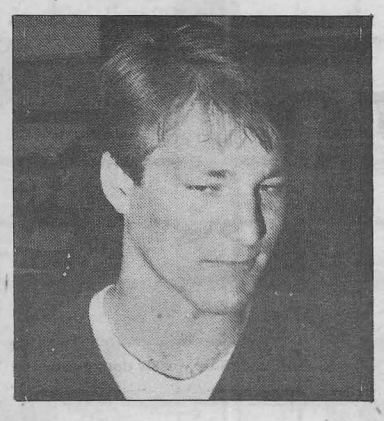
It will hurt the sales for the bars, and I don't think it is necessary to stop people from drinking, they will just drink in other places.

John Robichaud,
Concerned Citizen

I think there seems to be a lot of irresponsibility with people who are of the age of nineteen and twenty when it comes to drinking and driving. So I'm all for it. I went to college and know what it is like. I think there is to much of this party thing going on in the colleges now a day.

Julie Weiss,
Junior,
Child Development and Family Life

I don't think the causes of drunk driving are the nineteen and twenty-year-olds. Only four percent of the drunk driving accidents are caused by people between the ages of nineteen and twenty. Raising the drinking age to twenty-one is not solving the problem.



Fritz Pirsch,
Junior,
Business Administration

I think too much revenue will be lost. Twenty-one is too high of an age, twenty is a more comparable age if it to be raised at all. It is not going to solve the problem.

Blaine Yost,
Senior,
Industrial Technology

A lot of businesses will lose revenues because a lot of their business is from people under 21. I don't think they should raise it. I think there will be a lot more drinking on the roads now because high school kids will drink and drive because they can't go in bars.

The decision that never was

Tim Hopkins

UW-Stout completed a learning process last week involving the interpretation of sexual harassment policy. The conclusion of this process was that many more questions need answering concerning the policy.

It was made clear throughout the process of the Positive Action Committee Number Three hearing of Kirsten Hoffenberger's complaint of alleged sexual harassment against David Sabatino that such a hearing had never been held before at Stout.

The chancellor chose to reject each of the four recommendations of disciplinary action the committee submitted to him. He spent a weekend consulting with UW-System lawyers prior to making his decision to instruct Sabatino to refrain from having any further contact with Hoffenberger.

Hoffenberger was aware of her precedent setting action against Sabatino at Stout. In an interview last week she told of the many concerns she had deciding to file the complaint. She said that her friends' emotional support was instrumental in her decision.

She said she was not concerned about the effect the chancellor's decision had on her. She was concerned about how the decision might effect others at Stout who found themselves faced with the decision of whether or not to file a complaint alleging sexual harassment.

Elaine Fitzgerald echoed further concerns that Hoffenberger had about the chancellor's decision when she said, "I have a real concern as to whether this policy serves any useful purpose."

If you were an alien looking at Chancellor Swanson's decision you probably would have shaken your head after wading through the paraphrastic cajolestry and said to yourself, "Does this decision say much of anything?"

Sabatino has as many rights as Hoffenberger and that's as it should be. When it comes down to deciding the question of possible disciplinary actions for alleged sexual harassment, you have to question the fact that only one of the five Positive Action Committee members was a woman.

Another question brought up by committee members as well as the complainant concerned the fact that the committee seemed designed to review relatively minor complaints.

What can be done to ensure that in the future the hearing of such complaints is not tied up in confusion about the rules and focuses on the issues at hand?

There are indiscretions committed daily against women of which the average man is totally unaware because often as not he is committing them. The human race has an endless tradition of sexism which shapes and effects every day of our lives.

In light of this reality it would have been prudent to have had two of the five committee members hearing the complaint be a woman. My concern is over the future effectiveness of such committees when they are asked to decide on complaints of alleged sexual harassment.

All I know is that as a man I have been a party to sexual harassment on numerous occasions and nothing was done because the lady in each case never went so far as to file a complaint.

One of the quirks of American society is that rape is the only crime that I know of where the victim has to prove that she didn't want to suffer the attack.

In the case of sexual harassment, the attack may be more subtle, a sort of rape of the mind. I can remember a history teacher jokingly telling the girls in my high school class that girls were historically no good at studying history. Sexual harassment or merely intimidation?

I've sat in enough offices where men sexually harassed the women verbally and all I did was laugh. If the occasion remains memorable for me, imagine the effect on the harassed ladies?

The question remains what constitutes sexual harassment? A possible argument against sexual harassment takes the "one person's ceiling is another person's floor" stance. What one person finds harassing activity another might find a novel come on. The question that we need answered is where do you draw the line?

We have little if any idea what happened in the alleged incidences referred to by Hoffenberger in her complaint against Sabatino since we had no access to the testimony. For all we know the testimony may have shown that no harassment occurred. The real tragedy of this experience results from the fact that as a community we are no closer to defining the sexual harassment policy as applied at Stout.

Stout grad demonstrates crane safety

Rich Brueckner
Co-News Editor

The ground shook as novice operator Mitch El Dorado fired up the multi-ton crane. Mitch, a building construction major, tried his hand at the controls during the crane safety demonstration just north of the general services building.

The demonstration was given by Ed La Venture, a Stout graduate who received his Masters Degree in management technology in 1979. La Venture gave a broad overview of his philosophy of safety and loss control through management and planning.

"La Venture Crane Service has saved a lot of money by making safety its number one priority," he said. His company has a spotless safety record with no accidents or injuries. He also stressed the importance of proper equipment maintenance.

La Venture took over his father's 43 year old business in 1974 after completing a tour of duty as a heavy equipment operator in Da Nang, Vietnam.

The discussion ranged from methods of rigging loads, to the various mishaps of local crane contractors. One recent situation he described was an accident where a competitor was lifting a slab of concrete by the Sanna plant. The slab slipped out of its rigging and the boom of crane snapped back into some power lines. "He lived but he arced-out the whole valley." said La Venture.

Cranes need to be blocked up and leveled to be safe, he said. "Being just three degrees out of level can reduce your safe lifting capacity by 50 percent."

He also stressed that all blocking should be done with wood. "If you ever see anyone using cement to block something up, grab a piece and hit them over the head with it." he said.

The demonstration was sponsored by the Construction Safety class which is being taught by Mark Miner, a graduate student. Miner announced a Construction Safety Conference that will be held here in September. The conference will be sponsored by the American Society of Safety Engineers and will feature demonstrations by Minneapolis contractors.

Libyan terrorism creates protest

Charles Keller
News Reporter

"Nuke Libya" is the latest chant to hit the UW-Stout campus after the series of conflicts between US and Libyan forces in the disputed Gulf of Siddra and the Libyan main land.

The anti-Libyan sentiment has come about because Libya's leader, Col. Muammar Kaddafi, has been linked to international terrorism and the killing of American citizens abroad. One of the more recent terrorist acts was the bombing of a Berlin night club. Two persons were killed, including one American, and many others were injured.

They aren't freedom fighters, they are just paid US Mercenaries...

—Dave Burnside

Not all students on this campus are ready to nuke Libya, however. Persons for Peace, a newly formed club at Stout, has been vocal against the Reagan administration policy in the Middle East and Central America.

The small grassroots group has set a list of objectives which include informing students on foreign policy, human rights and international peace. The group members also plan to provide information on peaceful alternatives to conflicts facing people in the world today.

"The club began with the proposal for a $100 million aid package that President Reagan wanted to provide the Contras in Nigaragua," said Duke Davis, one of the founders of the group. "We just couldn't justify where the money was going to be spent, and with the domestic cuts being as they are, we wanted to inform the student population what the Contras really are."

"The Contras are no better than the Sandinistas, who are currently in power." explained Dave Burnside, another of the clubs' founders. "The Contras are just a creation of the CIA and are composed mainly of Somosan guards. They aren't freedom fighters, they are just paid US mercenaries, fighting in disguise."

The club has affiliated itself with the Young Democrats and Oxfam America, a support group that provides food and agricultural supplies for the people of Central America and other Third World nations.

"We don't feel it is the right of this country to intervene in the rights of democratic nations," said Burnside. "Ronald Reagan is the President of the United States," Burnside continued. "He is not the President of Central America."

Anyone wishing to get involved with Persons for Peace, contact Dave at X-3401, Duke at X-3381, or Chris at 235-4422.

Henry Todd speaks on tourism industry

Nitin Nadkarni
News Reporter

The Society for the Advancement of Tourism Industry (SATI) invited a speaker to UW-Stout on Thursday 17 April 1986. The speaker was Henry R. Todd, Jr., Director of the Office of Tourism for the Minnesota Department of Energy and Economic Development.

The SATI was founded at UW-Stout in the spring of 1973. This organization was been recognized as an official Student organization by the Stout Student association in October 1973. SATI is a student organization dedicated to the advancement of the tourism industry at both education and professional levels. SATI has earned a professional reputation nationally through an affiliation with the Travel and Tourism Research Association. SATI sponsors talks featuring hospitality industry professionals,a post card, weekend trips to resort areas activities that contribute towards the advancement of tourism, peace and international understanding.

Mr. Henry Todd spoke to the group last Thursday, is a member of the Board of Directors, a council of the Travel Industry Association of America. He was elected vice chair of the National Council of State Travel Directors and became a member of the Board of Trustees for the United States Travel Data Center.

Todd spoke on tourism marketing and the increased importance of tourism in today's world. He said that the reason an amount of approximately 215 million dollars was spent on tourism in the combined fifty states was an indication of the growing awareness of tourism on the part of State governments.

Todd spoke on the similarity of the various marketing programs used by the different states and stated a need to "get out of the clutter" by developing a new and unique strategy. He said that the Office of Tourism had recently started work on a newspaper meant to portray the niceties of the State of Minnesota and thus market it. The newspaper, Minnesota Explorer,vibrant with colors, illustrates various places of interest, various events of interest to tourists and useful information about Minnesota for prospective tourists.

First published in the fall of 1985, Todd said, the newspaper seemed to be a suitable media in which to advertise and market establishments. "We wanted to do something different and at the same time something creative, and that is what we have achieved " said Todd. The newspaper was very critical in the new marketing program, he added, "We are spending a lot of time with the communities in Minnesota, getting them into the newspaper" emphasized Todd. The newspaper is published for the fall, spring and winter seasons. There are different marketing programs for the different seasons. The winter and fall editions are devoted to print advertising, to advertise Minnesota and surrounding area. The summer program concentrates on broadening the market and reaching as many people as possible , he specified.

> We wanted to do something different and at the same time creative...
> —Henry R. Todd, Jr. Office of Tourism for Minnesota

Advertising through television has also been a new strategy for the Minnesota Tourism Office. As a result of the new marketing program and coverage through television, the Office was inundated with inquiries and requests. That office has received about 135,000 inquiries since January, said Todd. Films like Minnesota Overtures, were also used to market Minnesota. The Tourism office put out several other publications like directories and special brochures.

Cooperative marketing schemes are undertaken with Minnesota's neighboring States and the region as a whole is promoted internationally. Nationally, however, the theme to promote Minnesota is 'Explore Minnesota', something similar to the 'Escape Wisconsin' theme, which Todd praised as being effective and effiecient.

Inviting writers and radio stations like the "Voice of America," on a tour of Minnesota were among the other promotional efforts implemented by the Tourism Office. The recent article in the Wall Street Journal on the winter carnival and the ice palace created a deluge of visitors and as a result national and international media were drawn to the event. The carnival had a record attendance this year, Todd said.

Low interest loans to tourism businesses, equity programs with banks, tax incentives, and technical assistance to the various tourism businesses were other methods used by the Office of Tourism to promote and develop tourism in Minnesota. Mr. Todd's talk was well received by the students. The session ended with a lively question and answer period.

Hidden Dimension

Foreign policy does not work

Ali Vazirabadi

The question these days is what's next after the attack on Libya? Has the terrorism lessened against America and other countries? Is this attack the last attack or will more bombs be dropped on Libya? Is Reagan really doing best to solve the foregoing problems in a nonmilitary manner? What is the future of the U.S. foreign policy in The Middle East? These are the questions that every responsible human being should ask.

Recently, after a long research on the foreign policy of Ronald Reagan, I found out that the U.S. foreign policy in The Middle East is "not having any foreign policy." I'm not joking at all. Just remember that 250 Marines lost their lives in Beirut for this policy, and soon thereafter Reagan decided to pull the Marines out of Lebanon. It showed the military force didn't work because of just not having a consistent foreign policy.

The Reagan Administration is suffering from a lack of experts in The Middle East, and the reason for that is the failure of Reagan's foregoing policy. The outcome of the attack on Libya is a very mixed up and complex conclusion. For example, in the U.S. people felt more satisfied about the attack. On the other hand, in Europe the attack was mentioned as an act of terrorism. Thatcher's government was under attack by the opposition in Parliament. Three innocent Americans and British lost their lives in Lebanon, and in Sudan one employee of the American Consulate was shot. Another bomb also exploded in an El Al airplane in London. God knows by the time I finish this article how many more people will lose their lives.

The outcome of this attack was opposite the expectations of the American policy makers. Khadafi has become more popular and was named a hero of The Middle East. But none of these events solved the problem of terrorism around the world. One of the strongest reasons for this is a lack of consistency in the peace negotiation in the regent by the United States. Since Reagan came to power, it not only reduced the tension in the area, but it ended with occupation of Lebanon by Israel and 250 Marines blown apart in Beirut. The United States should start the peace negotiation, otherwise, the problem of terrorism will not be solved. For example if the U.S. gets rid of Khadafi, some other crazy leader will do his job. Also Mr. Reagan should spend less time watching "Rambo" and "Delta Force" movies, and spend more time on the peace process in the Middle East. It should be obvious now, the Carter Administration had better feeling and guts for solving the problem through negotiation and not by B-52. God help us.

Reagan, Khadafi, Gorbachev, Daniel Ortega, and Ayatollah Khomanie, sang the song "We are the world" in the United Nations with hope to make a more peaceful world.

Senator Kasten announced that he is organizing a group called "SADD", which stands for Senators Against Drunk Driving.

Finally, the Soviets pulled their troops out of Afghanistan. The reason for that was it cost too much for our comrades to keep them there.

Mr. Wood said the hours of the Stout library will be increased to 12 midnight by the year 2001. And also, he appreciated the students patience.

Date Rape Wrestles Vulnerable Concerns

Karen Smith
News Reporter

Date rape has become a major concern to many here at UW-Stout. Some believe that we are faced with the problem that many of the assaults that occur on campus are not reported.

A discussion about date rape was held Monday, April 21 at 8 pm in Bowman Hall. This seminar was the third part of a series that took place on Stout campus. The previous topics had been cocaine and AIDS. Judy Tomesh and Karen Nistler, both workers in the University Counceling Services, led the discussion. Although the group which attended was small, they showed interest.

Tomesh began by asking what the common image of a rape would be. Most people, she said, tend to think of dark alleys and violent men jumping out of bushes. Although this can occur, her facts show that the majority of rapes occur between people who are acquainted. One half of reported rapes happen in the victims home.

A rapist can be almost anyone, Tomesh said. Usually men, young, she said that half are under 25 years old. 3 out of 5 rapists, she claims, are married. They also tend to be repeats, or men who have raped before. Yet, Tomesh also mentioned that it's not always the man's fault. Men, she said, can also be raped by a women, as well.

Alcohol has been proven to be involved with a majority of the incidences, she said. Alcohol has many different effects on each individual. Tomesh pointed out a few, such as; becoming "looser", less defensive and maybe a little wilder. "The first thing that goes is our reason after we've had a few too many," Tomesh said. "Girls tend to become much more vulnerable."

The bar scene tends to be a common area the stage to be set for acquaintance rape. A girl may be attracted to a boy, Tomesh said, and accept an to go home with him at bar time, maybe to have a beer or split a piza. Little may she know, Tomesh suggested, that he had other ideas for the night.

"Even though they may know each other, if the girl says 'no', yet, is still forced to have sexual intercourse, it would be considered rape in a court of law," Tomesh said. "This accounts for the fact that many rapes aren't reported. The girl may not realize that she was raped."

Tomesh said that there is also an old saying that "when a girl says no, she really means yes." Also, a girl may feel that people would say that she may have asked for it.

One woman attending the meeting commented on this. "Some girls put out the message that they want to be raped." The question was asked whether girls have the right to dress wild or sexy, if they want to. The majority who attended the discussion answered yes.

The victims, of rape that occur in this area, are taken to the rape crisis center in Eau Claire, said Tomesh. Many victims of rape, she said, do no report it, because of fear or embarrassment. It is estimated that ten rapes occur for every one that is reported to the police or hospital. What people must be aware of, Tomesh reminded, is that most of the rapists are repeat offenders.

There have been things done here at Stout to make students more aware of the date problem. Discussions similar to this, which gave general information about rape, and women's self-defense have been provided to students. There have been annual "Take Back the Night" marches, which included speakers, singers, banners, and marches. The events were held to make people more aware of the problem of rape and women's safety.

Many people, Tomesh concluded, do not think much about rape until something happens here on campus or when it happens to them. It is always wise to remember that it can happen to anyone, even by someone who was thought of as a friend. If rape does occur, the most important thing Tomesh said a person should remember is the importance of reporting it. Tomesh suggested that the more rape is reported, the less it will occcur.

Ragstock fashion show at Silver Dollar Saloon featured students

Tracy Lea Landis
Co-News Editor

Two Fashion Merchandising majors from UW-Stout did volunteer work with a local businesswoman, putting together the Menomonie Ragstock's third style show to be paraded across the bar at the Silver Dollar Saloon, which is known to most as the Buck.

Paul Bennett and Bonnie Jo Daniels, co-managers of the show worked cooperatively with Linda Leuck, manager of Ragstock and drew from the talents of many Stout students. James Taylor, known as J.T. by most, was the master of ceremonies, with sound provided by Starstruck Productions, a business operated by Troy Bystrom and Jon Dahl. The models were also students from the University.

Leuck, Ragstock's manager, said that she was very pleased with the students work. "And they're not doing it for a grade or anything." Model Londa Dorr said "We're just out to have fun!"

Though the show drew heavily from the talents of Stout, it appealed to all types of pub patrons. Norman Scheil, a farmer from Prairie Farm, brought his wife Marilyn 30 miles south into Menomonie for an appointment with her eye doctor, stopping by to spend his waiting time at the Buck. He was pleased with the show, paying particular attention to the mini-skirts in the collection. The Scheil's have a daughter who will be attending this summer session at Stout for the second year in a row.

Show co-manager Paul Bennett said that the Ragstock show was more fun than those he was trained to organize in Fashion Promotions class. "The shows we were taught to plan," Bennett said "are geared more toward department stores with higher price range clothes. Working with Linda, the show had to be geared more to the store philosophy of fun." This called for a less structured show, where, as J.T., the M.C. pointed out, "you can get something to wear to an interview for less than 40 dollars."

Scheduling changes which put the Ragstock show near the same date as that of a show Bennett organized for Northwest Fabrics in Rochester, Minnesota for his field experience paper, caused him to rely on co-manager Bonnie Jo Daniels, whose work he praised. Daniels said that the Ragstock show was "a very good experience" and pointed out that they had kept a theme in mind for each set to give coherence to the show. "This was a technique," Daniels said "that we learned from Dr. Welsh." Dr. Welsh is the instructor of the Fashion Promotions class at the University.

campus senators. Their main objective will be to open communication between the off-campus students and the SSA.

Vice President of Academic Affairs Julie Weiss asked for senators to stand on committees during their elected term. The major job of the VPAA is to see that all committee positions are filled.

Mark Nickels, Vice President of Legislative Affairs will inform the students of government actions that effect them at local, state, and national levels.

Vice President of Financial Affairs Gary Harder spoke to the senate about the cooperative programming system that will be new to the financial affairs committee.

A reception for both congresses was held after the meeting. A "mock awards ceremony" was held during which former VPLA Chuck Keller won the "I finally learned my job two weeks ago award."

New off-campus senator, Meyer, seeks to help other non-trads

Bridget Record
News Reporter

On Tuesday, Daniel Meyer took his seat as an Off-Campus Senator in the Stout Student Association (SSA) at the age of 65.

Meyer is currently a freshman at UW-Stout and commutes each day from his home in Barron, Wi. He is majoring in industrial technology with a concentration in manufacture engineering.

Meyer said that he has owned a farm and manufacturing business for the past 10 years, which he is now in the process of selling. Meyer decided after retiring that it was time to get his college degree.

Meyer explained that after he graduated from high school, the United States was about to take part in World War II. He enlisted in the Navy before he had a chance for a college education.

By the time the war ended, Meyer was married and had a child. He then took a job at Sears Robuck Company working as a salesman. "Not having a college degree, a person had to demonstrate that they were dedicated to the company," Meyer said. "My goal was to become the best salesman they had. This took about one week."

For 10 of his 22 years at Sears, Meyer held the position of National Merchandise Buyer and Sales Manager of the Sporting Goods Department. This job allowed he and his wife to travel all around the world three or four times.

After graduation, Meyer says he plans to either start another business or work as a consultant for another business. Meyer plans to stay in employment until he dies. "I do not think people should retire until they are physically unable to be productive," Meyer said. Meyer explained that he became involved in S.S.A. because he wanted to do his part as a student. "The state pays for a lot of a college student's education, and I just want to give a little back in return," Meyer said.

Meyer emphasized that he wants to do what he can to help students understand why they are here at college. He said that he has heard a lot of students complain about going to school. "A college education is not something a person should take for granted," Meyer said.

Meyer said that he does not know what he wants to see happen while he sits a seat in S.S.A. His major concern is the lack of communication between students. He proposes a daily newsletter announcing what is happening around campus as a solution.

Meyer also points out that 15 percent of the students enrolled at UW-Stout are non-traditional. Many of them have troubles adjusting to college life. He feels that being on SSA and being a non-traditional himself, he may be in a position to help them.

Meyer says that as a businessman, he is used to selling his time. While he is on SSA, he will be devoting his time and efforts without pay. This is something he feels might take some adjustment. Meyer says that he is looking forward to the experience he will gain as a member of the Stout Student Association.

Auto show attracts record entries, crowd

Beth Reid
News Reporter

Despite hail and showers, the 19th Annual Auto Show and Swap Meet proved to be a record breaking event. "There were 238 cars on display," Gary Schettl, President of the Stout Antique Auto Club said, "which broke our previous record and over 1800 people attended the show."

The show, held last Sunday at the Dunn County Fairgrounds contained cars of all shapes, sizes, and colors imaginable. Those who entered registered their car in one of four judging categories to compete for trophies.

The categories for this year's show included: pre-1940; 1940 to 1962; 1962 to present date; and modified, which is any car that has been altered for show purposes. Each category had a first, second and third place award. There were also two special awards given out for the participant who traveled the farthest distance and another for the people's choice.

"The judging was done on a zero to ten point basis," Schettl said, "using a panel of judges to judge for areas of the vehicle." The areas of judging included overall appearance, exterior appearance, engine and chassis appearance, and interior appearance.

"We had some of the best looking cars this year," Schettl said, "and there were a number of old antique originals that were really well restored, including the oldest car, which was a 1928."

The Muscle cars from the mid-60's to early 1970's, were the most popular autos at the show. "People seem to like cars from the 1960's the most," Schettl said. "The least popular category was the new models. People just aren't as interested in the newer cars because they can see them every day on the road. While with the antique cars, most of them aren't even driven on the road except for when they're driving to shows."

Among those attending the show was Ernest Logo, who was the first President of the Stout Antique Auto Club when it originated in 1967. He will be attending next year's event to assist with presenting the trophies.

The Auto Show is the biggest event for the club and the money raised through the event will be used for the club members to attend other shows, rallies and races. The club also owns a red DeSoto which the members work on to enter in other auto shows.

The Stout Antique Auto club currently has 28 members, "but we are always encouraging new people to join," Schettl said. "We have something for anyone who is interested in cars, and although many of the members own old cars, this is not a prerequisite for joining." The next meeting will be held on Monday, May 5 at 8:30 p.m. in the Pioneer Room of the Student Center. Anyone interested in joining may either attend this meeting or contact Gary Schettl at 232-3132.

Professor on economics

Eugene Soroko
Contributing Writer

On Tuesday April 15th, the U-W Stout Speakers Series Commission sponsored a lecture by Dr. Bronsilaw Oyranowski, gentlemanly professor from Poland, The lecture was on comparative economics in the Great Hall.

Dr. Oyranowski did his graduate study in England and was an advisor for the United Nations. He has had 20 years experience as an economist in capitalist economies and 20 years in the centrally-planned economies. His credentials qualified him for this lecture.

He described three different economic systems in the world: 1) Developed free market economies, such as America and Western Europe, with a collective population of about 1.5 billion people. 2) Centrally-planned economies, such as Russia and China, with about 1.5 billion people. Lastly, he listed 3) Under-developed economies, having 3.5 billion people.

Dr. Oyranowski pointed out some flaws in the capitalist system. He said that large corporations control the bulk of the economic power. The problem with this is that these companies are oligopolistic; they set prices and they do not compete. Using the car industry as an example, he said that the prices are all the same. The only difference between companies are sales gimics. This refutes the myth of market competition, in his view.

Another flaw of the capitalist system that the professor described was the unemployment rate. Because of the fluctuating business cycle, people lose their jobs when the economy swings down. Some may get their jobs back when it swings back up, leaving our economy at less than full-employment.

Capitalist economies, according to Dr. Oyranowski, operate at 70 to 80% capacity. This, said the professor, keeps jobs and goods out of people's lives.

In centrally-planned economies, Dr. Oyranowski said that industry operates at full capacity and everyone is assured a job. There is also no business cycle to disrupt peoples' lives.

Dr. Oyranowski cited problems in centrally-planned economies, also. He described an atmosphere which lacked incentive for people to work. Noone gets fired from their job. Joking after the lecture with students, Dr. Oyranowski translated a Polish saying, "You get paid as much for laying down, as you do for standing up."

Operating at full production, as they do in centrally-planned economies, causes problems, he said. It takes alot of time to make production changes and Dr. Oyranowski said that industries in centrally-planned economies have problems with long set-up times in production.

After a thoughtful pause, Dr. Oyranowski mentioned that the unused economic capacity of the capitalist system allowed economic growth even during wartime. In a centrally-planned system, resources which go toward a war effort are directly diverted away from the citizens.

After the lecture, Dr. Oyranowski was asked whether he was told what he could and could not say. He answered, "Don't make me laugh." He explained that he was allowed to write academic evaluations of the economy and have them published in Poland. The number of publications would be limited to 10,000. He said that this was true in Poland, but that other countries have different restrictions.

Dr. Oyranowski said that Germans followed a more disciplined structure, while the Poles were alloted more room for their traditional individuality. Dr. Oyranowski illustrated this point after the lecture with a story of two dogs, one Czechoslovakian and one Polish. The two dogs conversed at the border of their two countries.

The Polish dog was thin and scraggly. The Czech dog was plump and had glossy fur. The Czech dog, proud of his condition, said that it was a pity that the Polish dog's master treated him so. To this the Polish dog replied, "Yes, this is true. But can you bark."

STOUTONIA: WHAT IS THE RESIDENT STAFFS OBJECTIVE?

SPAIN: We want to contribute to the mission of the university which talks about preparing people well for their careers and for a variety of other roles in their community and family. We feel that we can contribute a lot by providing people an opportunity in which to practice good citizenship, to give students a considerable amount of responsibility in determining the quality of the living environment in which they will live. The basic goal is to try to provide quality housing and dining service.

Transition from college to work outlined

Kelly Cohorst
News Reporter

Nancy Wellhouse of the Fort Mc Coy Military Base spoke at the Women in Management club meeting Monday. The main topics discussed were "The transition from College to work" and "Discrimination of women on the job."

Wellhouse received a degree in Business and Administration from UW Steven's Point in 1984. In her job at Fort Mc Coy, she travels to various states and speaks to Army reserve units.

Wellhouse found that a major difference between work and school is that at school you basically work with two different age groups and everyone has their place. In a working situation the spectrum of people is much wider and more diverse.

For students that are just starting in the work situation, Wellhouse has suggested several pointers that might help out.

First of all, Wellhouse suggests that a new worker should spend the first week observing and learning the way things are run. Being cautious helps the new worker develop a good working relationship with the boss and the co-workers.

Find out who is in control, learn from that person's proficiency and watch how they use their power.

Secondly, find out who is in control, and learn from that person's technical proficiency and watch how they use their power. Observe and learn what to do and what not to do on the job, she said.

Having experienced discrimination in several working situations, Wellhouse explained to the Women in Management club how she handled these awkward situations.

While she has worked in the military, Wellhouse said that she had to break the female stereotypes. She did this by putting the men in their place to help them realize that she didn't go to college to "type and make coffee."

The best way Wellhouse found to deal with the discriminating situation was to prove her position. At times she had to go above and beyond her call of duty in order to fully prove herself. At times many of the older, more established personnel had a hard time accepting her in a higher or equal position to the one that took them 10 to 15 years to earn.

By recognizing her co-workers in their position and by backing down at times to their experience, Wellhouse slowly gained respect from her co-workers that were previously resentful.

PACKAGING EDUCATION HONORED—

Student Dedication

McArdle discussed the efforts of those students, who attended Stout and later went on to serve, were committed to the preservation of freedom for all. "Their efforts should never be forgotten," McArdle said.

The final speech was given by Chancellor Robert Swanson. He pointed out the variety of names used to refer to the Student Center. "Some call it the Union, others call it the Student Center, and it has even been referred to as 'the shopping mall at 302 10th Avenue'," Swanson said, "but officially it is called the Memorial Student Center because it represents the memory of those students who enhanced our freedom."

Swanson said that he feels that it is fitting that the Student Center is at the crossroads of the campus, rather than in some quiet corner, because it is now the center of attention. "As students come and go," Swanson said, "my hope is that they will think about what this building represents."

The finale of the ceremony was the unveiling of the new dedication plaque. The original 1959 plaque from the old Student Center will be moved to the South entrance of the lower level and the new dedication plaque will replace it, across from the Grandview Terrace near the North entrance. Immediately following the ceremony was a reception in the Concourse Lounge.

Magician entertains, mystifies audience

Beth Reid
Arts Reporter

The Great Hall was filled with an air of magic and mystery on Saturday, April 19 as Kevin and Cindy Spencer performed before a full house. The performance was truly entertaining as Spencer combined his magical talents with lighthearted humor.

He began by saying that, "You are going to have to believe because seeing is believing." But as he began his 75 minute performance, audience members frequently caught themselves trying to analyze the tricks and rationalize how he could make a newspaper, which was torn into several pieces, reconstruct itself and become whole again.

"People have a hard time understanding magic," Spencer said, "they have difficulty differentiating between reality and illusion." He explained as he tore a copy of the Dunn County News into pieces, that what the audience was seeing was an illusion and not real. "You only think you see me tearing this paper," Spencer said, "but as you will see when I unfold it, the paper could not have been torn, because it is completely intact."

His performance was made more entertaining as he involved various members of the audience. Two volunteers were taken from the audience to assist with a rope trick, tying secure knots around Spencer's wrists, through his legs and behind his back. The volunteers were told to race Spencer, by attempting to blow up balloons before Spencer could untie himself. Before they even began, the ropes were on the floor and Spencer was free.

The show continued with the popular trick of "cutting the lady in half." Music played and the excitement rose as the audience watched Spencer's wife, Cindy, split in two pieces.

One of the most entertaining parts of the show involved several members of the audience as they participated in a Batman and Robin skit. Spencer dressed one student's father in a Batman costume, while others sang the atman theme song. The skit was interweaved with magic as a single red scarf, representing the dynamic duo, was placed in "Batman's" hand. Another yellow scarf, representing the Catwoman was stuffed into a popcorn box (the Gotham City National Bank), and disappeared, reappearing in "Batman's" hand tied to the red scarf.

The level of intrigue continued as Spencer took a dollar from the audience, cut it in half and burned one portion of it. The ashes were placed in a paper bag with an orange, which was selected by an audience member. Another volunteer removed the orange from the bag of ashes, and cut it in half to reveal half of a dollar bill. A round of applause was given from the puzzled audience as the two halves of the dollar bill were compared and the serial numbers were identical.

A highlight of the show was Spencer's recreation of Houdini's Metamorphosis Act. The suspense continued to build as Spencer was chained, tied in a bag and locked in a trunk. Cindy stood on top of the trunk and held up a curtain and gasps were heard from the audience as she disappeared behind the curtain and was replaced by Spencer, who had just seconds before been locked in the trunk. Spencer concluded the act by unlocking the trunk, to recover Cindy, who was now chained and tied inside the bag.

As a finale of the performance, Spencer performed Houdini's milk can trick. In this act, Spencer's wrists were chained and he climbed into a water-filled milk can which was not much larger than himself. Spencer took a deep breath of air and lowered himself into the water as the lid was closed, locking him in. A curtain was then raised around the can and the minutes were counted down, because Spencer explained that he could only hold his breath under water for three minutes. The excitement rose as the clock ticked by and two minutes had passed. In approximately two and one-half minutes, the curtain dropped and the wet and breathless Spencer stood on top of the milk can, which was still locked shut.

The audience applauded his performance with enthusiasm as Spencer caught his breath. He concluded the show by advising the audience to "always believe, because there's a little bit of magic in everything— sometimes you just have to look for it. But don't ever stop shooting for the stars."

Oklahoma receives outstanding review

Jef Maynard
Arts Reporter

Before the beginning, I could tell the happy lights were on the cast of Oklahoma!. Saturday's performance in Harvey Hall Auditorium left little doubt about the mood of the production. Anytime there is applause and laughter even before the overture, you have to expect you are due for a good time.

The bassist Paul Kniesz, drummer Dan Fabisiak, and cellist Kurt Hoff for the modest, but determined pit band, started in a quiet little improvised jazz-blues bit. It went along with no pretentions other than a morsel of pre-show pasttime. When the trio cut it off, they were greeted by an equally impromptu round of applause. Hams to the bone, they took a bow. When conductor Rob Kuchta entered to traditional applause, the trio took another bow.

The Overture also set a tone for the evening. The band was a humble ensemble with a curious instrumental mix. Without asking, I guessed that conductor Kuchta took what he could get among the available musical volunteers. This school once again was treated to a lessened experience because of the anti-emphasis on the arts, like music and dance.

Staging on the set was also modest but the efficiency of James-Michael Miller's set made the mood believable without devouring the limited stage. The simple linear elements that implied Aunt Eller's roof were aptly, economically descriptive.

The set was a marvel of motion to the audience during scene changes. Pieces were gracefully hoisted out of sight, other pieces lowered. The set looked compact and well-designed.

While Aunt Eller sat churning butter in the opening scene, the singing cowboy, Curly McLain, played by Thomas Knudten, serenaded, coming through the audience from the right rear entrance. His voice, while not fully mature, was pleasantly on key, and so well modulated with emotion that a distinct sense of apprehension was given relief. A good singer in a musical can prevent violent seizures in the audience.

When female lead, Renee Ertl, who played Laurey Williams, came on stage singing, my appreciation for quality voices doubled. Remarkably, all but a few of the voices were much finer than I had expected. Ertl had the pleasant, maidenly look Laurey should have.

The singing part of Curly has some tough notes to hit with a split-second cue from the band. Knudten did a fine job hitting the cues and notes without any apparent distress. His confidence was necessary and he rarely let up on his presence.

Make-up was a weak spot. While some minor characters looked better in excessive makeup, some had the look of young actors who are trying to look older by wearing some charcoal dust on their smooth faces. Ali Hakim, portrayed in a strange "Persian" accent by Dennis Crawley and Aunt Eller, (Katie Redeker), did their mellodramatic best acting and singing, but their make-up didn't add much to the make-believe notion that they were either Persian, or aged.

Oklahoma! is prone to over-acting. It is an exaggerated story with exaggerated emotions. Craig Hartfield, who played Will Parker with a particularly entertaining flair, and Ruth Verstegen who played the darling, naively promiscuous Ado Annie both had an engaging and successful approach to over-acting.

Hartfield's looney, hilarious dance routine during "Everything's Up to Date in Kansas City," was so wierd and funny, that the audience roared. When he and his fellow cowboy/flamenco partner joked with the sex roles in the dance, the audience uneasiness was tickled all the more.

Verstegen, had a genuine sex appeal and a naievte that fit the role perfectly. Her stunning red dress with white polka dots, white ruffle and interesting low neckline had the audience fully under her spell, even in Sunday's low-key matinee.

The humor in Oklahoma! might have been a perfect choice for Parent's Weekend. The comic lines about boys and girls and protective fathers was well understood by the parents. One such clincher was sung by a chorus of cowboys: "It's getting so you can't have any fun, 'cause every girl's got a father with a gun."

Every Girl's Got a Father With a Gun

Along the same line was the scene with the amorous Ali Hakim, the peddle and Ado Annie and her papa. "He called me his 'Persian kitten,'" Ado Annie said to her papa, "because they're the ones with the soft round tails." This led Ali to a double-barreled marriage proposal.

Wendy Swiggum, also had a role that called for some over acting. Gertie Cumming has this traditional character trait, it's a laugh. It is a propellor-driven giggle three octaves above middle-C that lasts too long. Swiggum took the laugh for all it was worth.

The scene that I enjoyed most is the "funeral scene" duet sung by Jud Fry, and Curly. Steve Crowley played the dislikeable Jud Fry with proper festering villainy. Jud is the sleazy ranch-hand who harrasses Laurey, more like the troll under the bridge than the boy next door.

Curly goes to Jud's hovel in the smokehouse and sings a funny/melancholy song trying to hint that Jud might want to hang himself so the women will mourn his passing. "Pore Jud is Daid," is the closest thing in this musical to existentialism. Jud joined in on some fine harmonies with Curly in the number which was very well received by the audience.

Another weakness of the production was the limited dancing. The large group dances were saved for the second act and were carried off with enough vigor and coordination to be worth watching. Nothing extraordinary, however.

Knudten, who wore leather chaps, a gun, cowboy boots and hat, must be commended for gracefully moving at all times with the cumbersome costume.

One scene that had a brawling realism to it was the rumble between the farmers and the cowboys at the Box Social. The men in the cast put a rough edge on the comic brawl.

The University Theatre production of Oklahoma! was no less than ambitious considering what limitations there are in Stout's available performer pool.

Curly, Ado Annie and Will Parker might have stolen the show if it weren't for the backflip in cowboy costume during a dance solo by Todd Ihrke. This was a nice move in the limited choreography and a cowboy hat.

Another cowboy who deserves special mention is Ward Rudolph. Rudolph has a heavy build and a good face, with a squint for the part of Federal Marshall from years on the Oklahoma territory. His dancing was a delightful parody of dancing.

Oklahoma! is a happy show, packed with endless American home-spun humor and catchy, if not corny, popular music. The University Theatre cast pushed where they could and pulled off some personalized gags that sprung a healthy laugh from the receptive audiences. They used their personalities to the best advantage and took a complex show for a comic ride on the range.

Committee sponsors Spring event

Helen Murphy

"Move Your Feet to Beauty and the Beat." Spring is upon us and the School of Home Economics is going to celebrate. The Dean's Student Advisory Committee is sponsoring a spring event entitled "Beauty and the Beat", Wednesday, April 30, 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. at the center courtyard of the Home Economics Building.

At this celebration the beauty of spring will come alive with the beat of live entertainment. The line up of entertainment includes Daren Bloomquist, an acoustical guitarist, a winning Air Jam band and the area band, The Slant. Student organizations will be vending refreshments and the Antique Auto Club will be displaying some classic automobiles.

"The purpose is to celebrate the idea that we are all alive. It is to take a minute away from the everyday concerns and say,'Hey, look life isn't bad,'. Dr J. Anthony Samenfink, Dean of the School of Home Economics, said.

Voluntarily the entertainers are offering their talents to the Stout community for the afternoon. Each performer will play for 15 to 30 minutes.

Bloomquist, playing the guitar, will entertain with selections from artists such as Simon and Garfunkel, Neil Young and the Beatles. Bloomquist is a graduate student and has learned to play the guitar through the music department at Stout. This will be Bloomquist's first outside performance, but he has played at the Pawn and at the Tap. "I am doing this as a challenge to myself and because it will be fun," Bloomquist said.

The Slant has played voluntarily for other functions in the Menomonie area. Hagen Gunderson, a member of the band, said, "We are doing it for publicity and because we like to play." The Slant will perform a variety of "good time" music.

The Dean's Student Advisory Committee, who is sponsoring the event, comprises of student representatives from each degree program within the School of Home Economics.

"This committee is a liason between Dean Samenfink and the students. Also it keeps interaction between the whole school by doing events and keeping the students informed," Judy Amundson, representative of Home Economics in Business said.

The Dean's Student Advisory committee meets weekly with the dean to discuss student welfare, events and individual degree programs. Representatives also meet with their respective program directors and programatic committees in order to give student input upon program changes.

Patty Jilek, Child Development and Family Life representative said, "I see our committee as an action committee. When we see something that needs to be done we discuss it and make sure there is a concensus amoung the majors. We take action on whatever we see a need."

According to Sue Guenther, Hotel and Restaurant Management representative, "We are not only action people but motivators. We try to see an overall perspective of what is going on, what is happening around campus and we aid and help in order to make things better."

A spring celebration is sponsored annually by the committee. Last year the group organized the popcorn party and people picture. Stout students formed the word "people" and aerial photos were taken.

Although "Beauty and the Beat" is sponsored by an academic committee, its purpose is for sheer enjoyment. David Loftness, representative of Food Service Administration and co-chairperson of the event said, "The event is to get people together to have a good time and let them know that we are concerned with more than studying and academics." Rain date for the event is May 1.

Historical architecture discussed by speaker

Amy Pagel
Arts Reporter

Art History is the subject of Claudia Smith's lecture here at Stout, but it also extends into her out of class time. "I'm pretty involved in art all the time." Smith said.

Smith is presently a member of the Menomonie Landmark Commission and the State Review Board for Historic Preservation. Recently she has been involved in the presentation of the downtown Menomonie area as a historic district. The buildings included in the district are, along Main Street from Broadway through the 500 block, and Harvey Hall, Bowman Hall and Ray Hall.

Last Monday the proposal was presented to the Town Board. This presentation included a historian's view of the district as historic and a representative from the State Historic Society to explain what this declaration from the National Register would mean.

Smith has done some independant study of architecture for Menomonie through the board and presented a historic architectural summary of the buildings. Also presented were the designs of nine students to illustrate what the district could look like.

The students did these designs as part of independant study advised by Smith, Herold Mewton, and Magdalena Laszkiewicz. Each student picked a block out of the designated area and redesigned the buildings in that block to look more historic.

Smith says, "The drawings show ideas of how to reinforce historical characture and commercial uses." Students also redesigned and repositioned signs to be in better view for pedestrians and motorists that would work in with the historic theme.

"We'd like to even see some buildings renovated to their original state." Smith stated. The drawings will be shown again to the downtown business men and building owners. "We are hoping some ideas would be adopted or influenced some renovation." she said.

The drawings will be displayed in the Applied Arts building the May 9,10,and 11. Then they will be at Mable Tainter into the summer so people can get a better idea of what may happen and generate more interest.

The proposal was greatly accepted by the town Monday. On Friday the official nomonation went through in Madison at the state level. Within 45 days the town board will be notified if the Federal level accepts it. When this happens downtown Menomonie will be recognized in the National Register as a Historic District.

Claudia Smith is also affected by art history through her study of ancient Roman mosaics. She did her undergraduate work at Northwestern and received her PhD from the University of Minnesota in the area of Ancient Roman Art and Archeology.

Graduate work took Smith to Italy, Tunisia and Yugoslavia where she did various archeological studies. These were done in very different cultures and tempurate areas. Smith said, "It was really strange to come from Rome to Menomonie."

While in Tunisia, she catologed mosaics. She visited cities like El Jem (formerly Thysdrus), Utica and El Fahs (formerly Thuburbo Majus or Major).

In Yugoslavia Smith worked on the mosaics at the ruins of the Palace of Dio Cletian who was a Roman Emperor. These ruins are in Split which is on the edge of the Adriatec Sea. The heat of the day would only allow workable conditions from 6 a.m. to 2 p.m.

"It's interesting to find an object and know what it tells you about a culture. With a vessal the rim is the best part to find because from there you can reconstruct the entire shape."

A whole building can be dated by using chronologic framework from items that are found. Clay used to make pots is distinctive by region. Dating is told by the pot's ornamentation and the firing technique used.

Smith's main interest, mosaics, also help to date some ruins. Mosaics are pieces of cut glass or ceramic set into the floor of wall. Most of these pieces are found by surface shirting where small areas are graphed out and carefully scraped or even dusted to reveal objects.

Art history also comes into Smith's life in her leisure time. She likes to look and buy antiques, visit museums, and collect old postcards, and photography.

Stout apparel designers to display work

Helen Murphy
Arts Reporter

Ideas and thoughts can be literally recorded, musically composed, carved in stone, painted on canvas and even sewn on a sewing machine. Apparel and textile designers at UW-Stout have artistically composed their thoughts in the form of apparel.

On Saturday, April 26, these designers will show their works in the "Ultimate Stout Apparel, Made in America" designer show. This show will be held in the Harvey Hall Auditorium at 2p.m.. Tickets are being sold for $2 in the Memorial Student Center from 11a.m. to 2p.m. and they will be sold for $3 at the door the day of the show.

As a combined effort, the Apparel, Textile Design Association and Retail Directions are sponsoring the designer event. This will be the fourth annual show of its kind held at Stout.

"It is a stimulating thing as far as letting students know what can be done in the design area," Dr. Annette Fraser, Apparel, Textile Design Program Director and advisor for the show, said.

Preliminary judging took place a few weeks prior to the show. Criteria for the judging included, overall design quality, construction details, compatibility with design and fabrics, and quality of construction.

> It makes being an apparel, textile, design student a little more glamorous.
> —Miki Schmitz

A special categrory was developed for textile designers, surface design. Fabric is designed and an article of clothing is sewn using an original or commerical pattern. Surface designs were judged according to compatibilty of design to the fabric, compatibility of design to the garment and general construction.

Final judging will take palce Friday, April 25 at the dress rehearsal. Criteria for this judging will be based upon aesthetics, creativity and marketability. The surface designs will be judged with the same criteria plus the technique will be evaluated.

Judges for the designer show were selected to represent various viewpoints. The judges are Dr. Marcia Metcalf, professor of the Apparel, Textile, Design Department, Lauren Shefchek, a former Stout student and now a designer based out of Chicago and Nanette Hanson, owner of Nanette's clothing store in Menomonie.

Prizes will be awarded for the designs receiving the highest scores. Prizes will be awarded for the highest scores in the three areas of aesthetics, creativity and marketability. A special prize will be awarded in the surface design category and the best wool grament will be chosen. The awards have been donated by various apparel and textile producers in the United States.

Approximately 50 articles of clothing will be modeled on Saturday. Practice for the show began early this week. According to Miki Schmitz, an apparel, textile, design student and co-choreographer, the models will do their own style of dancing. Designers give the models special instructions in order to show off the features of each design.

An annual designer show gives students the opportunity to display their own works and see the styles of other designers. Schmitz said, "It makes being an apparel, textile, design student a little more glamorous."

A show such as this is especially helpful for those students pursuing a couture design career. Fraser looks forward to the future, when big name designers will come to the Stout's designer show.

According to Laura Kay Reek, co-chairperson of the show, organizing the event was more work than expected. The design committee has met weekly for the last semester to plan the show.

Designs in the show will range from sporty to formal wear. Some of the clothes will be traditional in style while others will be abstract. None the less, all of the apparel will be original.

The Abstract

The Metamorphosis

Julie Abel

The spotlight focused on that soul position on the stage. The people in the audience, elevated to heights of suspense, were sitting on the edges of their seats as they awaited the cue from Cindy Spencer telling the audience volunteers to close the circle. "Ready!" The curtain went up and around Cindy and down in a swift movement, but Mrs. Spencer was gone, and in her place was Kevin Spencer. The Metamorphosis had ocurred!

Metamorphosis is originally the escape of the ever-elusive Eric Weiss, better-known as the infamous Harry Houdini. By definition, a metamorphosis is a complete change in character, appearance, and condition.

In the world that we exist in, metamorphosises occur everyday, and everyones lives are affected by them.

The changing of seasons is a dramatic metamorphosis, especially in this Northwestern area of the United States. Within each season there are also many transformations with the most evident occuring in the autumn and the spring.

Spring itself is the restyling of the earth. From the white, grey, and black of winter to the green with speckles and splashes of bright color from the palette of Monet.

The chirps of the newborn birds, and the grace of the white swans as they return from their southern vacations. The transformation of a larvae to a cocoon to a beautiful moth — a seed to sprout to a food producing plant or vibrantly colored flower — evaporation to condensation and finally to a form of precipitation.

There are other metamorphosises occuring which directly affect our bodies. The change from an egg to an embryo to a newborn infant is a miracle within itself, but the path of life is yet another transformation.

From chefs to painters, artists are metamorphosires. The painter transforms a blank canvas with raw pigments of color to a representation of an organized still-life or landscape. The chef performs a metamorphosis with a chaotic mass of ingredients and a recipe, creating both delicious and beautiful edibles for consumption by the human race.

The potter modifies a wet and sloppy clay to exquisite forms of ceramics. Perhaps vases, or bowls or even representations of the human body.

The musician creates beauty with the transformation of notes on paper and an instrument to sounds of music. Another great metamorphosis is the sequence of the transformation of thoughts to music.

The infamous Michaelangelo is an example of a great metamorphosire, along with Claude Monet, Julia Childs, Vincent Van Gogh, Wolfgang Amadeus Motzart, and many others.

The metamorphosis by Harry Houdini is definately magical - an illusion within itself, but nature has its own magical metamorphosises that are not at all illusions.

For Those About to Rock

Rock Trivia II

David Chase

Once again it's time for Rock Trivia, where you, the reader, are able to test your rock and roll knowledge. As you may recall, there were five levels of rock and roll knowledge; The Freshmen, Sophomore, Junior, Senior and Graduate level.

For todays column, I will add a special rock and roll level, I call it the "Professor" level. That's right, now you can be a "Professor" of rock and roll. So let's get on with it...

Freshmen

1) Can you name the three bands that Paul Rogers sang lead vocals for?
2) Who wrote the song "I Shot The Sheriff," which Eric Clapton recorded and hit -1 with?
3) Who is the only member of Yes that has been on every one of the bands albums?

Sophomore

1) What "Lowdown" singer/guitarist once played for the Steve Miller Band?
2) What rock band played backup for Linda Ronstadt in 1971?

Recovering alcoholic dramatizes experiences

Karen Heagle
Arts Reporter

The truth about the effects of alcoholism and other drug abuse; was the goal of an intense one act play presented by Jean Sable, sponsored by S.U.D.S., Students Understanding Drinking Sensibility. Sable, a recovering alcoholic, reinacted the horror of the last night she spent as an drinking alcoholic.

The play, Please Remember Me, was Sable's attempt to make a statement about the horror of alcohol and drugs, and how they just about destroyed her, and her family. And quite a statement she made.

She opened her show portraying a boisterous street drunk, a stereotypical skidrow drunk. Suddenly she questioned the audience "Do you believe that this woman is acting the way all drunks do."

She introduced herself as a recovering alcoholic. From that moment on the audience was in silence. She is not a skidrow bum, or a criminal. She is the mother of three children, and wife to a wonderful husband. She told the audience,"We were not the perfect family, and we weren't the Brady Bunch, or the Walton's, but we cared a lot about each other."

Her problem began as her son, Tom, started the seventh grade. He became very withdrawn, from his closely knit family.

Sable was very worried, but when she spoke with counselors and her neighbors they all believed it was a phase that all kids his age went through. Unfortunately things only got worse. Tom began strange habits of excessive sleeping, and eating, hot temperness, and a very poor attitude about life in general. His grades were also steadily dropping, and he was very argumentive. She said, "Nobody could say anything right."

Sable could not bear to watch her family fall apart. This is when she began drinking excessively. The situation only got worse.

Upon her son's eighteenth birthday he left his family. Only after they had found out about their son's drug abusing. It was not just their family, the neighbor children were affected also. They were skipping school to go to these parties. The town of Whitewater, Wisconsin was destined to lose seven lives of these young people in this neighborhood, all drug related. The deaths included suicide, overdoses, and car accidents.

The one act play took place in Jean's room after a hard days work. Her husband was away, and her two daughters were baby sitting. Since this was a one person play, most of the story was gained through her conversations on the phone with various people in her life including her neighbors and her daughter.

She also told her problems to the dog. Often her eyes filled up with real tears of pain. This made the performance extremely emotional. The audience could sense the nightmare being simulated in the play.

In a flyer which was distributed at the play Dr. Ray Griffith, a member of the English department at the University of Wisconsin Whitewater commented,"The members of the audience know they have not just been entertained, they have not just been informed, they know their lives have been permanently enriched by Please Remember Me."

The play was dramatically intense. This play is an incredible display of courage on the part of Sable. She relives the whole episode so that she can share her experiences in hopes of discouraging alcohol and drugs.

One intersting example brought up by Sable was the fact that drugs like tylenol, sold over the counter, due to the recent contamination, took the lives of 10-15 people. Alcohol takes the lives of nearly 2500 yearly. Sable can't understand why there isn't as much fuss made over alcohol related deaths.

Sable presents her play at care centers, high schools, junior high schools, and college campuses. She sells video tapes, and scripts. With the money she makes shes hopes to eventually start a home for alcoholic recovery.

She wrote in her flyer,"For many years I have spoken to groups to share my experience, hopes, and dreams," she continued, "I believe prevention education to be a mighty weapon in stemming the tide of alcohol and other abuse in our country and around the world."

Fine arts' features students artwork

Noreen Spraner
Arts Reporter

Saturday, April 19 was the date set for the Fine Arts Fest, the Fine Arts Association's Parents' Weekend festivities. The events lacked some of the hoopla seen in other campus events, making the Applied Arts building a quiet, but interesting interlude.

Among the planned activities were an art exhibit, a raku demonstration, a senior art show, and live music.

The art exhibit featured current student life drawings, prints, and paintings. There were also some work from the Fine Arts Association's permanent collection, which are seldom seen. Overall, this made the exhibit worthwhile to look at.

The Paint Your Own Painting booth was a popular spot. Parents and students alike could not resist filling the canvas with their own exquisitely rendered flowers, scary faces and I love you Mom and Dad's. The whole thing worked together to form quite an abstract expressionistic statement.

The senior exhibit of Mary Cloutier and Sue Schlough titled "Interse" drew a varied response from parents and families. Cloutier noted that people quickly walked by her charcoal drawings of nudes, a little embarrassed perhaps, not knowing that they were meant to be studio studies.

Schlough's painting of a duck hanging by its neck from a rope drew quite a variety of response, from laughter to shock, as some people thought that she must hate ducks. She really hates paintings of ducks.

The musicians that played for the Fine Arts Fest did a commendable job despite having to play for a crowd that only appeared in sporadic waves, and the rather awkward spaces on the third floor.

The Ramsamooj Brothers, a trio from Trinidad, featuring Delip Ramsamooj on synthesizer, Suresh Seedoo on tabla, and Ojar Ramsamooj on sitar. They played selections of classical Indian music and music from Indian movies. The undulating rhythms of the tabla combined with the intricate melodies of the sitar and synthesizer had their small, but appreciative audience spellbound.

The whole thing worked together to form quite an abstract expressionistic statement.

Tony Del Fiacco playing a little later than scheduled, chose a nice spot between two of Schlough's colorful canvases in Gallery 306. His solid guitar playing and soft voice leant themselves well to his tasteful selection of original, and soft rock/folk tunes.

While all of this action was taking place on the third floor, outside the raku firing was going on. Raku is a form of pottery making that originated in Japan. Raku means reduction, and that is what happens. The red hot, just bisqued pots are buried in sawdust, or other smoulderable material and covered with upturned trashcans. This causes oxygen starvation and produces a crackling or "crazing" effect on the pots. There were quite a few parents and students on hand to experience the often beautiful results firsthand.

The Fine Arts Fest all in all turned out to be a pleasant, and interesting, though relatively low key activity for visitors. It showed off some of Stout's hidden talents.

Night In Paris theme by Interior Designers

Stephanie Weiss
Arts Reporter

Imagine this: soft orange candle light, dimmed lighting, women in tea length and formal length dresses, men in suits and ties, an eight piece band playing jazz, classical, and mellow rock, you have "A Night In Paris." American Society of Interior Designers (A.S.I.D.), along with the Parents Weekend Committee, brought a relaxing evening with enjoyable music to Stout.

The theme for this years annual A.S.I.D. ball was "A Night In Paris," in celebration of the Beaux-Arts fine arts school in Paris, France. The ball took place in the Union's Crystal Ballroom on Friday, April 18 from 8 p.m. until midnite. The funds raised from this annual event go to A.S.I.D. with which they hope to begin a scholarship fund for Interior Design and art students. Invitations were extended to alumni members, students, faculty, and others were welcome.

The Stan Haugesag Orchestra provided a variety of music. Classical and mellow rock, jazz and a couple Bee Gees tunes were only the beginning of an evening of dancing and fine music. Solos were featured on piano, trumpet, trombone, and saxophone. One listener said of the Stan Haugesag Orchestra, "They played a wide variety of enjoyable melodies."

Karen Johnson, along with Gina Nepper, both members of A.S.I.D., acted as co-chair persons with Hal Newton as their advisor. While speaking with Johnson on her feelings about the ball she enthusiastically stated, "It's great that parents are coming to get 'a Taste of Stout!'" Added Mike Crull, member of A.S.I.D. and maitre'd for the evening, "The Beaux-Arts ball adds a touch of class to Stout."

The attendance was somewhat mixed, including Chancellor and Mrs. Swanson, students and parents, and even half dozen guys from the University of Minnesota. All in attendance agreed that the ball went very well.

Chancellor Swanson said the "Beaux-Arts ball is done very well," going on to add that "it gives the members of this society, (A.S.I.D.), a chance to practice what they study." Mrs. Swanson said, " 'A Night In Paris' offers a reasonably priced evening's entertainment." Mark Weber, a student of the U of M said, "the costume ball is an exciting annual event," with buddy Eric Olson adding, "the band is absolutely great."

Last year's ball was held in the Thunderbird Mall with a southern, "Gone With the Wind" theme. Karla Slinde spoke about this years location, "It's more ritzy than the mall, and because it is on campus, people can walk over rather than trying to find a ride." Slinde also added that the ball offers "a relaxed atmosphere, a nice place to bring your parents, and a change from being uptown and having beer spilled on you."

Gina Nepper, co-chairperson, said that A.S.I.D. hopes to have next year's ball in the Union's Crystal Ballroom. Nepper also hopes to work with the Parents Weekend Committee again as it "brought a unity between parents and students work." Regarding next year's theme Nepper stated, "There is talk of having the theme based on the Renaissance, but that is still only a general idea."

Sluggers tied for first after 3-1 weekend

Louie Filkins
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout baseball team fell victim to April showers last week as two of their four double-headers were rained out. However, in the games that Mother Nature did permit, the Blue Devils went 3-1, improving their record to 17-12. Stout also moved their conference marks up to 4-2, which ties them for first place along with UW-River Falls and UW-La Crosse.

The Blue Devils split a double-header with La Crosse one week ago. The first meeting was an embarrassment for Stout as they lost 15-0. Starting pitcher Chris Fasnacht had control problems early and the Indians jumped out to a 12-0 lead. Chuck Dugger relieved Fasnacht in the second inning, however poor hitting and sloppy defense (8 errors) enabled La Crosse to bludgeon the Blue Devils.

"It was just one of those games. They hit everything we threw at them. We played terrible," Head Coach Terry Petrie said. Stout came back into form during the second game as they won 4-2. Starting pitcher Bob Lindberg threw an exceptional game allowing just three hits during the entire meeting.

The two games against UW-Superior last Saturday were both pitchers' battles, literally. Five Superior players were reportedly suspended from the team for consuming alcoholic beverages, and worse yet, in the company of females. This unfortunate turn of events left mostly pitchers to take on Stout. The Blue Devils swept the Superior "pitchers," 7-6, 4-2.

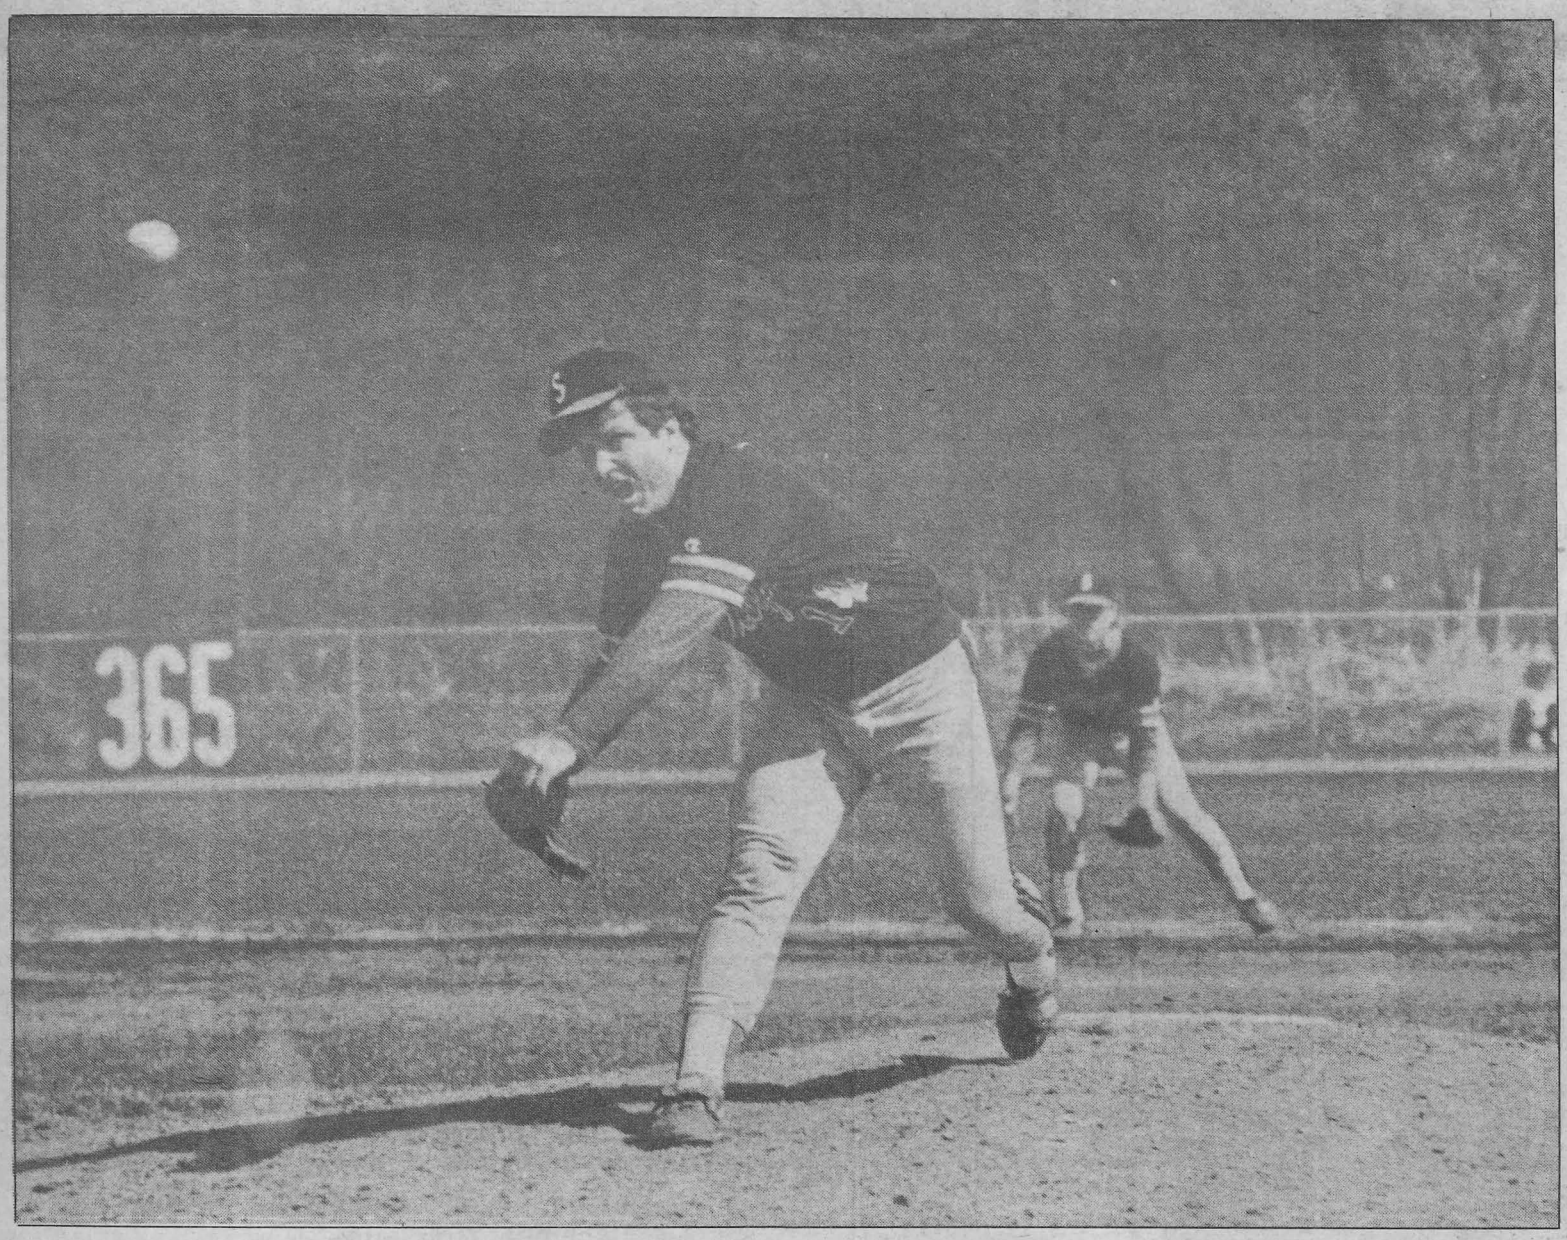
In the first game, Stout waited until the sixth inning to put some runs on the board. Kraig Kucaba led off the inning with a base hit. Nick Ghelfi followed with a round-tripper to give the Blue Devils their first two runs. Kucaba and Osowski were both two for four in the game. Senior Jeff Kloes, who was two for three, singled next to bring in Osowski. A wild pitch, a sacrifice by Scott Aschenbrenner and a double by Ed Space tied the score at five. Jim Miller drove Space in and the scoring surge was over for Stout.

Two quick errors in the top of the seventh helped give Superior one run and the tie. The Blue Devils needed a run in the bottom of the inning for the victory. With the bases loaded and one out, the big Aschenbrenner came to the plate. With dreams of a towering blow in his mind, "Snackenbrenner" glanced down the third base line to see his coach, Terry Petrie, give him the suicide bunt signal. "Seeing that I've only bunted successfully once in the last three years, I was quite surprised to see Petrie give me the sign," Aschenbrenner said. "The pitch was high and outside. I had to lunge for the ball. "I got it down and Ozzie came in for the score."

Stout also won the second game of the double-header, 4-2. In the third inning, Senior Jim Miller was walked and then stole his 12th base of the season. Ghelfi walked and "Ozzie" crushed a three-run home run to put the Blue Devils up 3-0. "He threw a high curve ball. I got it up into the wind," Osowski said. Stout added one more run in the sixth to wrap up a 4-2 win. Strong pitching by Junior Denny Polinski also helped edge the Yellowjackets. Polinski went five innings allowing only two hits and one run.

"Of course we're happy to go 3-1, but we've got to start hitting the ball more. I'm moving Ghelfi to center and putting Dukat in right to hopefully give us more offense. Effinger will also be coming back as the D.H.," Terry Petrie said about last week's games.

The Blue Devils have a very busy schedule as they have three make-up double-headers. They also play their Alumni game on Saturday at home and Normandale Junior College away on Sunday.



Stout pitcher Tim Fuerst tosses a ball against a UW-Superior opponent. The Blue Devils swept last Saturdays double header 7-6, 4-2. The Blue Devils will be busy having to make up three double-headers before the end of the year. (Stoutonia photo by Dan Banach)

Teamwork helps spikers achieve sixth place at conference tourney

Wendy Johnson
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout men's volleyball team placed sixth at the conference tournament in Iowa.

"We played well as a team," commented Chuck Balistrieri. Stout showed their teamwork when they won their first game on Saturday against St. Thomas College.

The Blue Devils had problems getting the gym for practice because of other conflicts that arose. The lack of practice time had some effects on the spikers when they fell short against North Hennepin and Carleton College in very close games.

After defeating St. Thomas in their first game, Stout went against North Hennepin. The Blue Devils lost to North Hennepin, but they put up a good battle.

In the first game Stout was down 10-0 right away. Stout mounted a comeback scoring 10 points, but ended up losing the match. John Wise said, "We had a slow beginning. It took us awhile to warm up."

The second game Stout also had a few problems, losing 15-9.

The third match Stout faced Carleton College. The match didn't look promising for the Stout spikers when they lost the first game.

The Blue Devils had a turnaround by winning the second game. They couldn't hold out though, losing the third game, and the match. Wise commented, "We played well but we haven't played together for awhile so that might have hurt us."

The conference tournament ended the Blue Devil careers of Wise and Mike Bajczyk, who are both seniors, and Hugh Peterson, who is transfering to UW-Madison.

Eric Carlson, Mile Dresen, Chuck Balistrieri, and Mike Rollins are all members that will probably be returning next year for the Blue Devil spikers. Wise said, "The team has a lot of rebuilding to do next year."

Next year the men's volleyball team is hoping they can make a few changes, such as getting more practice time on the court. They are also looking into asking two girls that play volleyball to coach them on the sides. Rollins feels, "It will help improve us, because it's hard to see what you're doing wrong while you are playing on the court."

Balistrieri commented, "The team should be OK next year. But we will have to see what talent the team has. We're hoping to get more students to come out for the team next year."

If anyone is interested in being a part of Stout's men's volleyball team contact Mike Rollins at 232-3074.

Editorial ideas investigated

Paul Wydeven

To be courteous and professional, the first thing needed is an introduction. I am Paul Wydeven, The Stoutonia's new sports editor.

The previous sports editors here at The Stoutonia left me confused with a few questions to be answered. The first question was what do the readers want to see different in their sports editorials?

This led me to hours of research into the papers produced by other universities in the Wisconsin System. Most of these papers have two to three pages of sports, covering subjects from exceptional athletes to classes offered at their university which involve sports.

The University of Wisconsin-Madison, our father school, considering its size, had only two pages of sports. The Oshkosh Advance Titan had the best and worst examples of sports editing for a school paper.

The worst example came from an editorial by Harry M. Ness. Harry misspelled his byline, instead of writing "sports editor," he wrote "spurts editor."

The best example came from Kris Olsen, who was writing her last article for the Oshkosh paper. Kris mentioned that working for the paper was a great experience and that she knew this affected her grade point but said she would not trade the experience for an improved GPA.

I liked what most of these other papers presented and I think The Stoutonia has done the same for the past few years that I have been here. The sports coverage in The Stoutonia is bigger than most of the other papers. Hopefully now we can present better articles pertaining to sports.

My investigation took me farther than the other university papers. I looked to professional sports editors Bud Lea from Milwaukee and Don Riley from the Twin Cities.

The editorials I like best come from Bud Lea, who after every Green Bay Packer game, gives the team a report card broken down into offense, defense, special teams, and overall performance. That way if one part of the team does lousy, his column lets you know at a quick glance.

The funniest editorial I ever read was from Don Riley. After the Minnesota Vikings lost at home against the Packers, Don said something to describe Green Bay as "They looked like kids frolicking in a sand box."

Sorry, but the editorials will not mention which games are boring or players in GQ magazine.
I really do not feel these are areas that relate to sports and should not waste the space in sports editorials.

Back to my first question — what do you readers want to see different in the sports editorials? My answer is stories pertaining to sports presented in a professional manner. I can not promise perfection, but the editorials will definitely pertain to sports.

I also plan to make the editorials for the readers' enjoyment, not the editor's enjoyment. If you have any comments or suggestions please feel free to share them. They will always be welcome.

One last thing I would like to mention is a new sports reporter on The Stoutonia staff. This reporter is Jenna Sue Martin and her column "Fitness Survival" should add another dimension to The Stoutonia's sports section.

Oh, I almost forgot my second question — who are the Milwaukee Bucks?

Good health and fitness possible at Stout despite college lifestyle

Jenna Sue Martin
Sports Reporter

Health and fitness at Stout? Impossible! This is a party school. How can you drink beer and stay fit at the same time? Believe it or not, it is possible.

What do you need for fitness? Legs, arms, comfortable clothing... Hey, have you heard Stout even has a swimming pool and a weightroom? Maybe you have noticed the metallic sheds behind the fieldhouse on your way to the Pleasure Dome. You don't even have to be muscle-bound to lift there, even I'm a regular.

To keep fit doesn't mean you have to throw out all of your Domino's, Rocky's, and Ted's coupons. We're in Menomonie — pizza capitol. There are ways, however, to maintain your weight and keep that body feeling fit.

You don't need to spend tons of money on equipment or health club memberships to enjoy fitness. There are several alternatives, of little or no cost, which you can find right here on campus. Grab yourself a pair of running shoes and take a jog around the track or campus.

The Red Cedar trail, which runs along the river by Riverside Park, is a plus for nature lovers who want to see the sights and get in shape at the same time.

Anyone for aerobics? Calisthenics? Borrow a Joanie Greggins tape from a friend, make up your own moves to music, or join an instructed session and really learn the moves.

The fieldhouse provides you with several possibilities. Take someone on in a tennis match, shoot some buckets with a friend, go for a swim in the pool, journey out to the weight training building and pump some iron. There are also several intramural teams which you can join. To keep updated, read the Open Rec schedule published here in The Stoutonia or call the Johnson Fieldhouse for further information.

How can you drink beer and stay fit at the same time?

I haven't covered everything but I hope you realize that the search for health is a difficult journey at college, but one which can be conquered. I'm eager to begin learning more about how I can keep myself in shape and hope you are too.

Together we can explore the fitness possibilities Stout provides. We will learn how to improve our nutritional habits, where and how to exercise and what is happening with health on campus.

I hope you find health to be as interesting and enjoyable as I have. Come search for health with me and let's prove to ourselves that fitness can survive, even at Stout.

Bucks Win First Two over Nets

The Milwaukee Bucks defeated the New Jersey Nets 111-97 and now lead 2-0 in their first-round best-of-five playoff series. Terry Cummings dominated the game scoring 28 points.

Zoeller Marks Ninth Career Victory

Fuzzy Zoeller won the Sea Pines Heritage Classic with a round of par-71. The win was worth $81,000 and raises his season earnings to $221,335. This is Zoellers' ninth career victory.

Horses Race for Open House

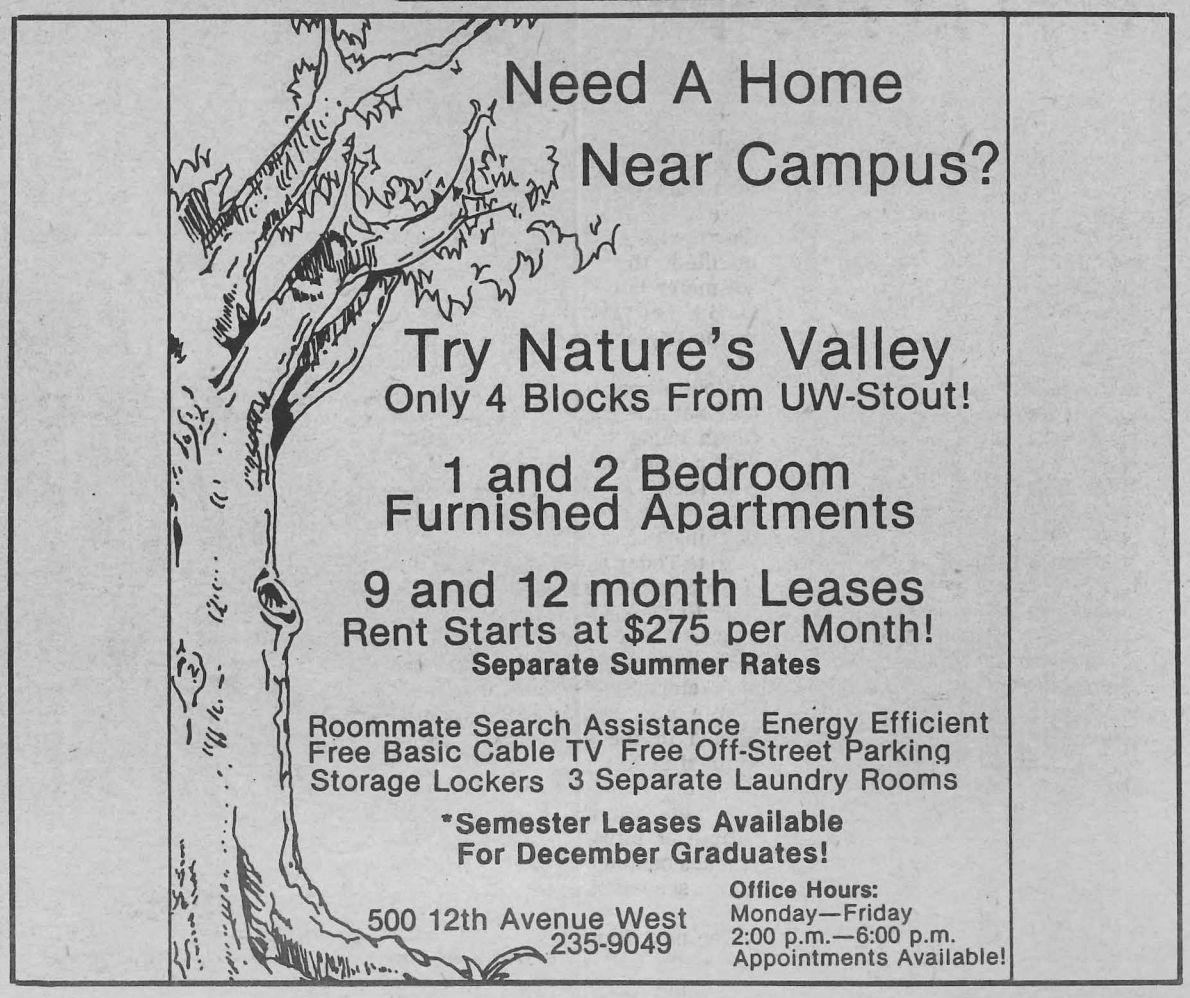
The Cantebury Downs had an open house Sunday which included exhibition races, demonstrations of track operations, and some time to just wander around. People got the feel of horse racing and betting but only used play money. The track opens for real racing Friday at 4 p.m.

Gophers beat Badgers

The University of Minnesota defeated the Wisconsin Badgers 6-1 and 8-3 Sunday in a Big Ten baseball series. These wins extend the Gophers' winning streak to 18 games.

Spinks Decision Winner

Michael Spinks beat out Larry Holmes in a split 15-round decision to win the International Boxing Federation heavyweight title. Holmes had a chance for a knockout in the fourteenth round but let it slip by only to be defeated.



Netters win 3 and capture WSUC title

Paul Wehking
Sports Reporter

Enroute to extending their record to 24-5, the UW-Stout men's tennis team captured the WSUC dual match championship by compiling an unblemished 7-0 record against conference opponents.

In conference play last week, the Blue Devils won three straight against UW-Platteville, UW-Whitewater, and UW-Oshkosh beating them 8-1, 7-2, and 9-0 respectively.

On Friday the Blue Devils found little trouble with the Pioneers from Platteville. Coach Smith gave some of his other players court time against Platteville.

Joel Vogler, who usually plays lower on the first team ladder, headed the squad from the first singles seat. Vogler handled his opponent easily beating him 6-0, 6-1. "Platteville is a really weak team. That's why we didn't play them with our first team. Coach wants to give the other guys some experience," Vogler said.

Jim Peters collected the only loss for the Blue Devils, losing to his opponent in three sets. Ignoring that loss, the Blue Devil netters worked the Pioneers over and sent them back to Platteville.

On Saturday, Stout took on conference rivals Whitewater and Oshkosh. Whitewater, who has placed a close second behind Stout for at least the past three years in the conference tournament, was Stout's first opponent of the day.

"Whitewater was very tough. We had to play one of our best matches of the year to beat them," Smith said. Rob Oertel started off with a very tough match against Whitewater's Eric Arvold. Oertel lost the match in three sets, scored 6-2, 4-6 and 7-5.

Oertel, who has had a friendly rivalry with Arvold for four years said, "He is a very good player and I should have played him differently." Oertel commented that he shouldn't have come up to the net as often but rather "pick and choose" the best opportunities to approach the net. "Rob went break point with him (Arvold) four times and only won one. He had chances to win those but he just didn't," Smith said.

Another tough match in singles play was had by third man Joel Vogler. Vogler went three sets and a tie breaker before emerging victorious. "It was a tough match because his game matched up so well with mine," Vogler said. The final set scores for Vogler eventually rested at 5-7, 7-6, 7-1 and 6-3.

In doubles play, the pair of Oertel and Mike Friedman had to endure a close 4-6, 6-4, 6-4 match before collecting their win. Vogler and Tony Pheifer also found good competition in their Whitewater opponents. The Blue Devils were defeated by their Whitewater foes 7-5 in the tie breaker set.

After the dust had settled, the scoreboard showed Stout winning by a margin of 7-2, but, according to Smith, the match could have easily ended with a score of 5-4. This win put them one match away from being the undisputed WSUC dual match champions.

In Stout's second match on Saturday they demolished the Oshkosh netters, blanking them 9-0 and consequently capturing the dual match championship with an impressive 7-0 record.

This weekend the Stout netters will travel to La Crosse to compete in the NAIA District 14 Championships which they will have to win in order to compete in the NAIA national tournament.

Blue Devil tracksters first in Hamline meet

Kim Steger
Sports Reporter

Last Saturday the UW-Stout men's track team raced away to a first place finish in the Hamline Quadrangular meet held in Richfield, Minnesota.

Stout placed first with a total of 74 points, St. John's University took second with 49.5 points, Hamline University was third with 43.5 points and Bethel College came in fourth with 10 points.

The Blue Devils had nine first place finishes out of seventeen events. Racing to a first place finish in the 1500-meter run was Matt Christenson with the time of 4 minutes, 9.2 seconds. Bob Hackley placed third in this event with a time of 4:9.8.

Delmar Johnson sprinted to a victory in a close 100-meter race winning with a time of 11.1 seconds. Kenute Connell was given third place in this close race dashing in with an 11.2 time. Missing third place by one-tenth of a second was Darrin Swagel with the time of 11.3.

Taking first place in the javelin was Chris Hagen with a throw of 150-10. Hagen also jumped 6-6 to a victory in the high jump. Chuck Klann took third in the high jump with a leap of 6-0.

In the 100-meter high hurdles, Dan Ducette placed third with the time of 15.5 and Brian Kohls placed fourth with a time of 15.8. Ducette hurdled to a victory in the 400-meter hurdles with a clocking of 55.1. Ducette also placed fourth in the triple jump with a leap of 41-9.

Stout placed consecutively in the pole vault event with a first place finish going to Scott Romenesko with a vault of 14-6. Taking second was Terry Lorenz with a 14-foot effort. Steve Ruf took third place, vaulting 13-6.

Mike Todey was victorious in the 800-meter run with a time of 1:58.1. Eric Bretl ran to second place in 1:58.6.

Ducette placed first in the 400-meter hurdles, coming in with a time of 55.1. Ducette also placed second in the long jump with a jump of 21-2.

Racing to a victory in the 5000-meter run was Paul Bons with a time of 15:04.2. Coming in two seconds behind Bons was Todd Fox with a second place finish.

The next Blue Devil track meet will be the Leo Schnur Open. It will be held in La Crosse on April 25.

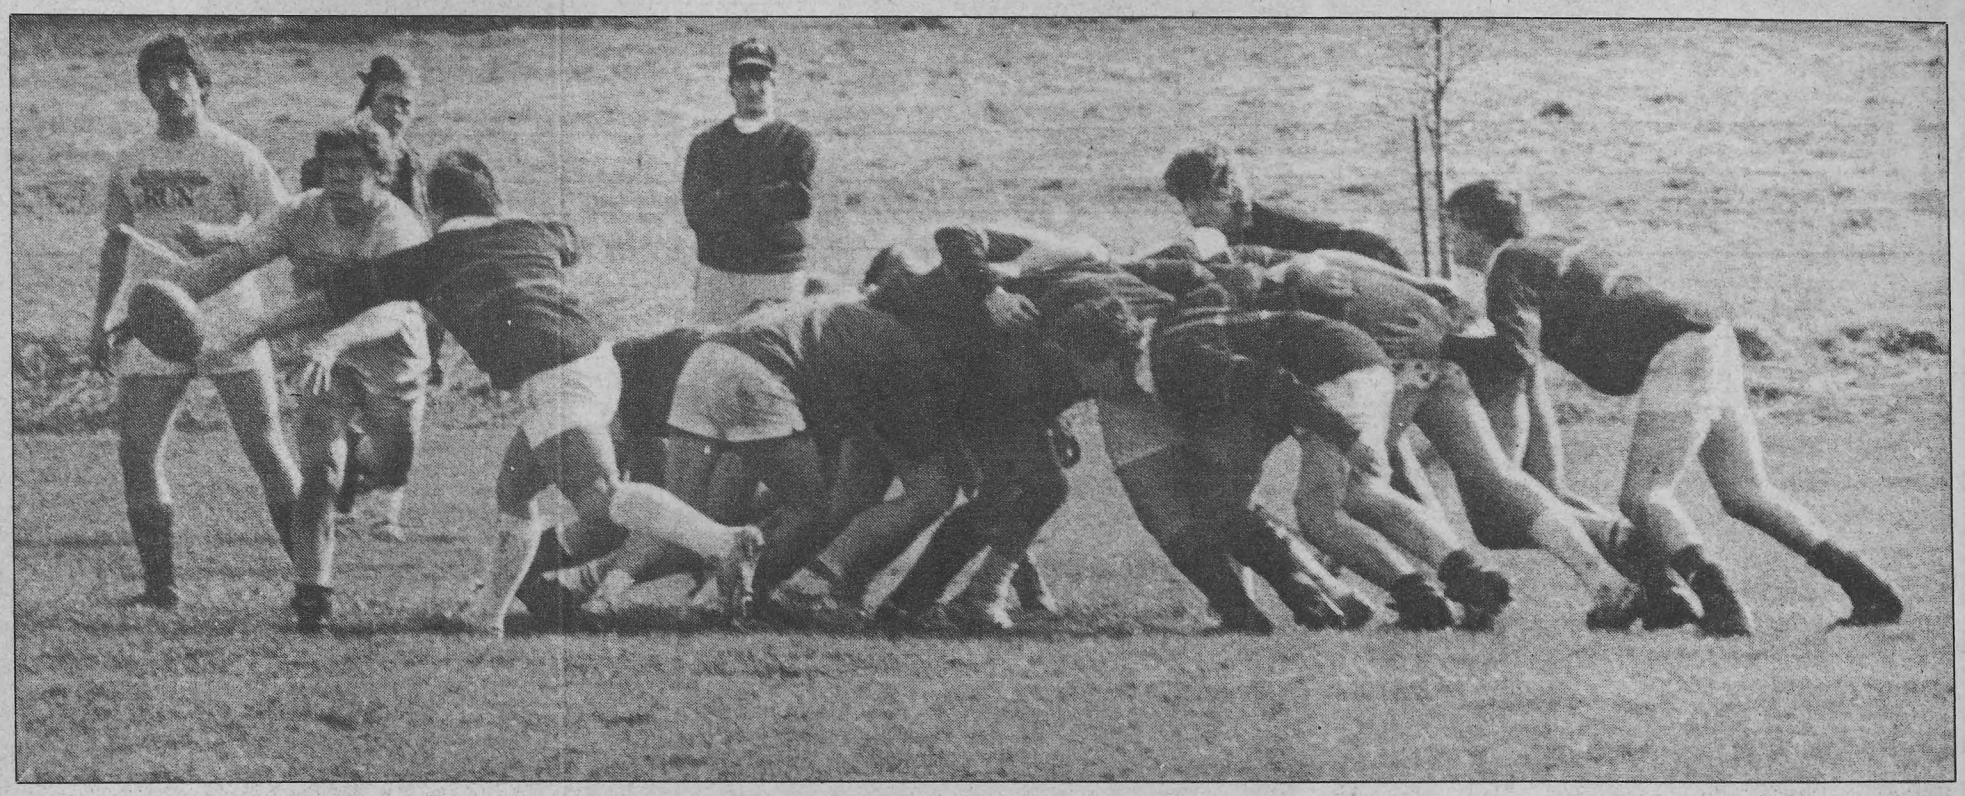
STOUT OVERPOWERS ST. CLOUD



STOUT RUGBY—

Last Saturday, the Stout Ruggers blew out St. Cloud from Minnesota. The A squad Ruggers scored 46-0 and the B squad Ruggers won 24-3. Stout's next match will be this Saturday in Milwaukee on the lake front. They will play Milwaukee's B-side.

So far this season the ruggers record is 2-1-1. The only defeat was against the St. Paul Pigs a city league team. The wins by Stout were over a Milwaukee city league team and over St. Cloud. (Stoutonia photos by Dan Banach)

Questionnaire reveals faculty's morale

Rich Brueckner
Co-News Editor

A Task Force, set up to determine factors that affect staff morale here at Stout, submitted its initial report to the Faculty Senate April 22. Morale problems were cited in a summary of an open-ended questionnaire completed by 189 faculty and staff members.

The items on the questionnaire were as follows:

1. What factors and conditions at Stout are motivating and cause you to feel good about your work?
2. What factors and conditions at Stout hamper your work and discourage you?
3. What would help you do your work more effectively?
4. Comments?

This questionnaire was introduced by a cover letter which asked the respondents to be candid, with the promise that responses would be anonymous and confidential. Staff comments in the area of administration and leadership "covered a full range from highly praiseworthy to extremely critical. The majority of comments, however, were expressions of factors and conditions that hamper one's work and discourage one and comments about administrative changes which would help one do their work more effectively," said the report.

"Individual staff comments about certain Deans included language as strong as arbitrary, vindictive, authoritarian, inhumane, intimidating, and inept. Much anger, frustration and distrust were expressed.

"Frequent comments about the top-level administration involved the impression that the Chancellor was insulated from the workforce to the extent that leadership could not be responsive or effective. The Chancellor and Vice-Chancellor were frequently described by the perception that they are only concerned for the welfare of staff at the Dean's level and higher.

In general, too much support for administrative positions at the expense of teaching positions, a sense among staff of being laborers and poorly respected as people, or of being professionals with no one to go to with a problem, were reported.

> ...language as strong as arbitrary, authoritarian, inhumane, intimidating, and inept.

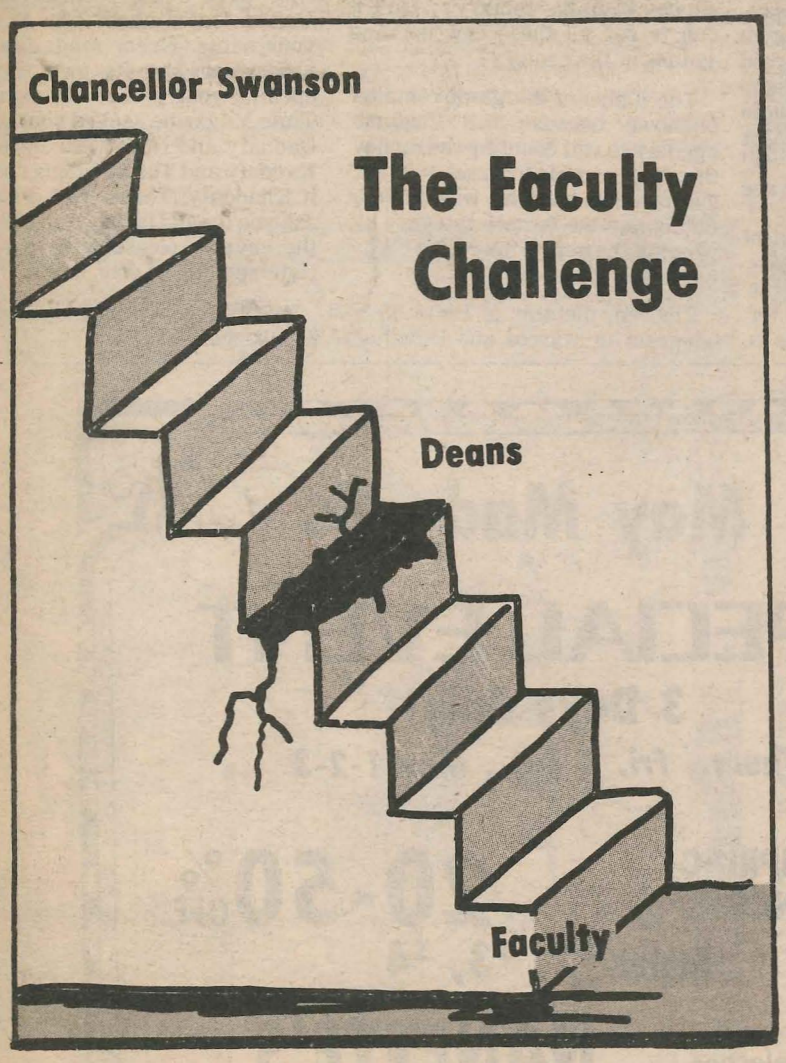
"Comments regarding what is needed involved clearer expectations, more personal involvement in decisions, more access to administration, better communication, more awareness of personal needs, fewer administrators, reduced statistical tail-wagging, more respect for teachers and teaching, more training in personal management and, in general, a more trusting relationship between staff and administration."

In the area of philosophy and goals, "lengthy and varied lists of complaints and concerns were raised. Few policies were left uncriticized. Promotion, merit, enrollment, shared governance, staff involvement in decisions, emphasis on research, de-emphasis on teaching and de-emphasis of Stout's reputation for the practical were most frequently mentioned...negative intrinsic factors were less frequent, but involved apathy about prospects for positive change, lack of recognition and a sense of being treated like a disposable commodity. More encouragement and emotional support, comradery and recognition were recommended."

560 questionnaires were campus-mailed to staff members on March 3, 1986. "It soon became apparent that numerous staff never received their questionnaires," said the report, "In fact, none were delivered to the Home Economics Building. Why questionnaires were never delivered or what happened to the hundreds which were not delivered was never ascertained." Additional questionnaires were sent to the Home Economics staff on March 19.

"The representativeness of the sample remains unknown. Several staff indicated to members of the Task Force that they would not complete the questionnaire because they feared they could be identified through demographic characteristics and feared retribution by administration."

The report concluded with a motion that the Faculty Senate receive the Task Force's initial report and approve the continuation of their charge into the 1986 fall semester, when a more detailed survey will be conducted.



Nelson creates council to promote relations between campus groups

Bridget Record
News Reporter

Paul Nelson, newly elected Stout Student Association (S.S.A.) President held the first President's Council meeting on Wednesday, April 23.

The President's Council was organized by Nelson to create communication and understanding between the campus organizations. "The meeting's main objective is to help solve problems in common areas and talk about new ideas," Nelson said. Of the 147 campus organizations invited to the meeting, approximately 20 representatives were present.

The Council will meet once a week and act as a sounding board for any complaints or proposals that an organization might have. Nelson wants to keep the meetings as informal group discussions. "If there is no rigid structure, people are not afraid to communicate." Nelson said.

Nelson pointed out that there were three goals that he would like the Council meetings to accomplish: establish awareness and cooperation, discuss mutual problems, and increase financial standing.

When Nelson asked the meeting participants to name the major problems that existed in the groups, lack of motivation, club attendance, and the structuring of their constitutions were the three issues mentioned.

Lack of attendance to the organization meetings was cited as their biggest problem. Many believed this is a result of the strict advertising policies in the Memorial Student Center.

One organization representative pointed out that advertisement posters can not be placed just anywhere in the Student Center. Posters must be authorized at the service desk, and restricted to one of the four bulletin boards in the building. It was also mentioned that banners were not allowed to be hung in the Terrace Cafe.

One person stated that these rules were made because the University wants the Student Center to be kept neat and tidy.

Nelson brought up the idea of getting kiosks constructed around campus. He explained that these are cylinder-shaped objects projected from the ground and are designed to display advertisement in a organized manner.

"I was pleased to see that there are organization members who want to get together and discuss their problems with others," Nelson said. "The President's Council is a perfect opportunity to do so and I can only see good things coming out of it," Nelson added.

Nelson said the next President's Council meeting will focus on motivation, delegation, and leadership. "We want to get the ball rolling before everyone goes home for the summer," Nelson said.

Nelson said that he is also aware that everyone will have money questions. At the next meeting, Gary Harder of Financial Affairs will be present to offer service and guidance about any financial issues.

Chernobyl melts down

Kiev, USSR - The Soviet Union admitted Monday that a serious meltdown accident had occurred at a nuclear power plant. The TASS news service said that there were as many as 200 casualties and that one reactor had been damaged. Radiation levels 100 times normal were detected as far as one thousand miles away in Stockholm. Kiev (population 2.5 million) may now have a contaminated water supply.

Nation

Third World builds weapons

Washington, D.C. - According to a congressional study, more third world nations are developing the the capacity to build weapons. The Congressional Research Service report predicts that "substantial numbers (of missiles) could be deployed in most regions of the world in the not-to-distant future." The nations involved include Israel, Syria, Egypt, Iraq, Libya, India, Pakistan, Taiwan, South Korea, North Korea, North Korea, Brazil, and Argentina, the study said.

Covert operations questioned

Washington, D.C. - Secretary of State George Shultz said Sunday that the US Government should make better use of covert action. "There are many things that need to be done secretly, and we have to have a greater capacity in our country to recognize the importance of being able to do things without having them publicized ahead of time." The administration sharply criticized the Washington Post disclosure of a covert CIA plan to destabilize the Libyan government last November.

FBI agent sells secrets

New York, N.Y - An FBI agent whose heavy gambling forced him to moonlight as a taxi driver, is under investigation for selling government secrets to the Russians or the mob, the New York Daily News reported Sunday. A specialist in Soviet counter-intelligence, who "had access to everything," worked at the bureau's computer center in Washington, the newspaper said.

State

Drinking Age Costs

Madison, Wisconsin - Raising the drinking age to 21 would cost Wisconsin's treasury $2.2 million in the 1987-88 fiscal year and $3.2 million in 1988-89 because of reduced tax revenue, a legislative staff analysis says. Governor Earl wants the Legislature to raise Wisconsin's legal drinking age from 19 to 21 as of Sept. 1, when Minnesota's higher drinking age takes affect.

"Stop 21" rally

Eau Claire, Wisconsin - A rally to "Stop 21" was held at the center of campus Tuesday morning. Speakers included Mike Wagner (owner of The Tap in Menomonie) and SSA Vice President of Legislative Affairs Mark Nickels.

Hidden Dimension

The competition is hot

Ali Vazirabadi

Ladies and gentlemen, forget Jeopardy, forget the Wheel of fortune. This is the most exciting and unbelievable competition of the year. I don't know why NBC, CBS, and ABC Sports didn't cover this live competition in their Saturday Sport shows, but this competition with its low publicity makes it more exciting to see and find out who's the winner. Well, actually the competition is still going on, so the winner is still unknown. The competition is between the Department of Defense and NASA, and the name of the game is "who pays more for less," yes, isn't it exciting to see who pays more money to buy cheaper items.

Analysts say that the Defense Department is making its best effort to win this competition. For this reason Caspar Wienberger goes jogging everyday to keep in shape for when he's offering and contracting to pay more for less.

In one of his offers for a screwdriver from K Mart he paid $760. He paid $1500 for a silicon chip priced at $4.95 apiece at Radio Schack. On the other hand, NASA employees are looking for the "O" ring in the ocean, but still they are paying more for less.

Now don't you think instead of watching Dynasty or The Colby's you'd rather switch the channel to the game show that pays more for less? I'm telling you the game is hot, so when you're watching TV, make sure to have a fire extinguisher handy. Along with this new game comes a whole series of games developed by federal and state governments. An example of another new game is "Who cuts more budget for students?" featuring a battle royal between the Federal government and the state.

Reagan cuts the budget for loans and grants and the state raises the tuition. Actually, this second game has two winners, the federal government and the state, so they both can feel better about achieving their goals.

Now since the foreign countries don't want to lag behind the fashion of new games, they are making their own games and rules. One recent game is between Marcos and Duvalier, and the name of the game is "Who can steal more money from his country?" Isn't it fun to see all these new exciting games of the century?

The winner of this game remains unknown because U.S Customs agents are still counting the money that Marcos stole from his country. On the other hand his wife Imelda dominated the female category by winning the new game called "Who has more shoes?"

Pinoche, dictator of Chile, in a telegram to Marcos and Duvalier said he's getting ready for this exciting game in the very near future, but he is still trying to suck more money for the final round of the competition in the Republic of Banana Island on the planet Mars.

The other new scary and deadly game is called "Who can get hostages and explode airplanes, and who can retaliate and get even?" So far, there are only a few participants in this game, such as a group from Abu Nidal and Lybia. On the other side of this competition are the U.S Air Force and also Delta Force. As far as I know the winner of this game gets only a one way ticket either to hell or heaven.

Airplane created by construction class

Cosmas Whitten
News Reporter

Look, up in the sky; it's a bird, it's Superman. No, it's the 170-560 Aircraft Construction class' newly-constructed airplane.

Located in the Applied Arts Building, room 112A is an actual airplane in the making.

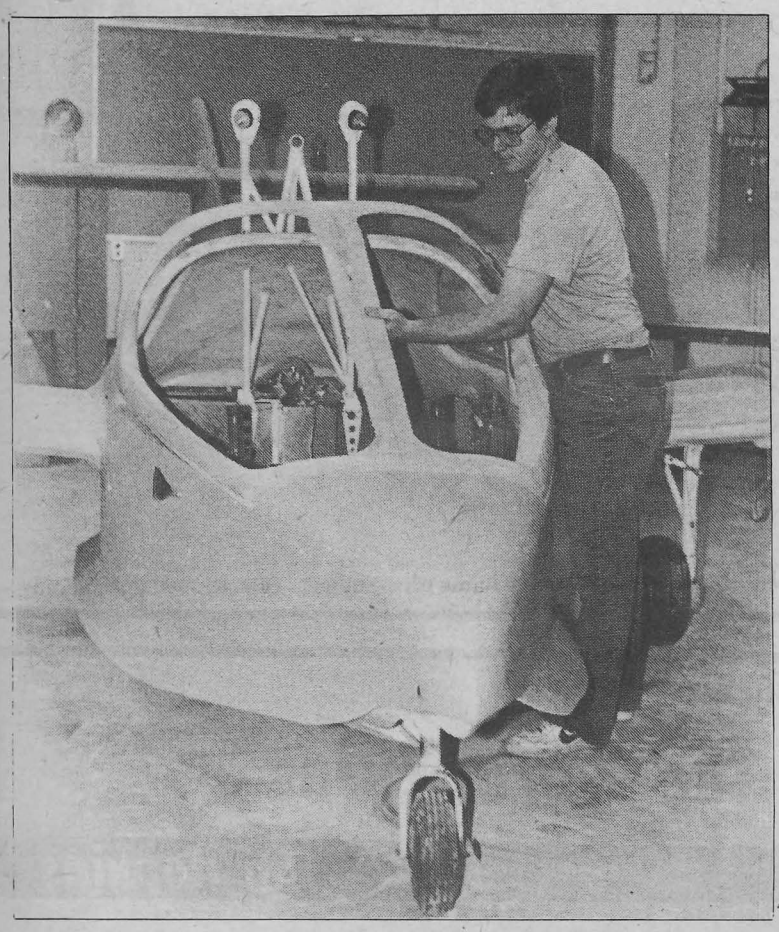
The airplane construction class has been offered for 15 years and has constructed 13 airplanes. The majority of students taking Aircraft Construction are majoring in Industrial Technology and Manufacturing Engineering. Stout also offers a minor in Aviation and Aerospace Studies. Completion of aircraft construction is a requirement for the minor program.

The construction class airplane they are making is an Osprey 2. It can land on hard ground or water. It is made of wood, fiberglass and foam. All materials used to assemble the airplane were fabricated by Stout students. The Osprey 2 is the second amphibious airplane to ever by constructed at Stout.

The Osprey 2 has been in the making for 6 years, and is scheduled to be completed this summer. It will not be flown until the summer of 1987 after it passes FAA inspection.

Wayne Thibado has been the instructor of Aircraft Construction for the past five years. Thibado is a licensed pilot and plans to be the first to fly the Stout constructed Osprey 2.

This class plane project will be the first experimental aircraft to fly out of Lee Score Field, Thibado said. Lee Score Field is the new municipal airport east of Menomonie.



Gary Vinge worked on the Osprey 2 during the airplane construction class. The plane will be flown out of Menomonie's new airport next summer.

The students who are presently at work building the aircraft are: Brian Axdahl, Cary Phillips, Todd Debique, David Brenden, Steve Krahn, Shahid Khan, Brian Schlessel and Antonio Marin.

Aircraft Construction is a 3 credit class, consisting mainly of construction of the airplane. The workshop is open from 4 until 7, Monday through Thursday. Students are required to put in 9 hours of work a week.

"The most beneficial aspect I received from class is meeting different people and working in a team with them." Antonio Mirin said. He enjoys the workshop's informality because it makes for a fun atmosphere with less pressures.

Library hours may be shortened due to budget cutback reductions

Troy M. Franke
News Reporter

"The library is more than just turning a key and letting people in," said Joe Jax, Director of the UW Stout Library Learning Center. That turning of the key to let people in, may be turning people out next year - out of work and/or reduced library hours.

During the coming school year 1986-87, the Gramm-Rudman Act (a federal budget balancing law) will begin to have its effect on students and faculty in universities across the United States. The Gramm-Rudman Act involves cutbacks in federal and state financial aid assistance. These cutbacks will involve thousands of dollars and affect hundreds of students here at Stout.

Already in the UW system, seven libraries have had to reduce their library hours. The reasons for the reductions are related to past budget cuts. "Cuts in state payroll could force a cut-back in our library hours. It is going to be a tremendous challenge to keep the library hours, the necessary hours, after the Gramm-Rudman Act takes effect," Jax said.

> It is going to be a tremendous challenge to keep the library hours...
> —Joe Jax

If students who do not receive financial aid think they are not affected by Gramm-Rudman, they will soon find out that they are wrong. The above is an example of how the cutbacks may effect students who are not on the work study program or receiving some type of financial assistance.

The work study program budget is tentatively set at $570,369 federal/state for the 1986-87 school year. That will be a 3.6% reduction or roughly $21,000 in cutbacks.

According to Kurtis Kindschi, Director of Financial Aids, a proposal has been brought up to ease the work study program reduction problem here at Stout.

"Instead of reducing the number of people on that program, the maximum level of earnings will be brought down from $1300 to $1250. That, in essence, would only reduce a person working 15 hours a week to 14 1/2 hours," Kindschi said. "Dealing with the reduced Pell Grant program, which represents a $500,000 cut, will be more of a problem," Kindschi added.

Although this school year has not been completed, school administrators are not sure what the effects of cutbacks in financial aid programs for next year will be.

Mini-Olympics for Kinship kids organized by Sigma Tau Gamma

Karen Smith
News Reporter

Last Saturday, accompanied by sunshine, a number of children involved in the Kinship program participated in a Mini-Olympics event at Nelson field. Sigma Tau Gamma fraternity organized the event as their community project, the fraternity brothers and sisters made all of the arrangements. It was so successful that the organizers plan for it to become an annual event.

Jill Liebenow, chairman of the event, enjoyed it thoroughly. "Everyone had an absolute ball," Liebenow said. "The kids had the best time." She also mentioned that the college kids, parents, and big brothers and sisters had a good time as well.

The track meet consisted of six events, with six kids competing in each. There was a 100 yard dash, 50 yard dash, long jump, softball throw, 4x100 relay and a shot-put event. All of the kids left with a ribbon and a coupon for Hardees and Dairy Queen.

After the track meet, everyone went to the Sig Tau house for refreshments and games. One of the games played was "Duck, Duck, Goose."

"Even the adults were having a good time," Liebenow said. "We really got great feedback from everyone."

Tana Ludwig, one of the participating Kinship kids, enjoyed the day. "I had a lot of fun," Ludwig said. She participated in the 50 yard dash and the softball throw. "My friends had fun too. I would do it again next year," Ludwig said.

Sue Noye, President of the Kinship organization in Menomonie, thought the kids really enjoyed it. "Everyone was having a great time," Noye said. "The kids were running their hearts out." She also mentioned that the fraternity organized it well. "Everyone got really involved with the kids," she said.

Nuclear Fallout

Fate provided a strange twist this week as America and Russia continued to stock pile nuclear arms with the potential to destroy the world many times over. The nuclear disaster in Chernobyl resulted from a failure in man's attempt to harness the power of nuclear energy for constructive purposes.

The confusion and concern which resulted from the Chernobyl disaster serves the purpose of allowing man to step back a moment to review his priorities as he strives toward progress.

This disaster occurred because of faulty management by the Soviets of their aggressive program to double their capacity to produce nuclear energy by the end of this decade. It has been the Soviet policy that there has been no need to build containment domes over their nuclear reactors as long as they know that every piece of each reactor was put together correctly.

This one tragedy demonstrates the risks involved in implementing this policy. The U.S. and other nations have chosen the reasonable course of no longer employing the graphite-water design used at Chernobyl since they found it both risky and inefficient.

The world-wide impact of a nuclear disaster is clear as we begin to learn of the impact on the people and the environment of neigboring countries. What is scariest is how long it took for the Soviets to pass the bad news along to the rest of the world.

The scare created by the tragedy is good because we will all learn more about the risks associated with creating nuclear power. We can feel comforted that the Nuclear Regulatory Commission oversees all the planned development of nuclear reactors in America. There are slightly more 100 reactors in America to date.

In the upcoming battle between the pro-nuclear and the anti-nuclear factions we must not lose sight of what we have gained from the efficient use of nuclear energy.

An opportunity is presented for the world to exchange notes on nuclear safety programs world-wide and we have the opportunity to negotiate with the Russians in their moment of apparent weakness.

We won't quickly forget this tragedy since the world is the loser in the case that we fail to diminish the threats that we can whenever we develop and manage nuclear power.

Diversionary Tactics

The Worm Turns

Tim Hopkins

Suffering from the Ides of March, I sat at my desk racing through the gaps in my mind straining for the ideal column topic.

I had settled on the definite paucity of proper fenestration in The Stoutonia office, the supposed window of the world for the UW-Stout community. The next thing I knew, a story walked through the door in the form of our seriously stressed United Council Director.

He radiated a no-nonsense manner as he sat down next to me saying, "Tim, have you got a minute?" I knew then that I was about to venture into as yet uncharted waters. Swallowing the remainder of a pretzel rod, I turned to him and said. "Give it to me straight Dave, I can take it."

Two weekends before this meeting I needed to quell the insomnia raging within my body. I headed to the monthly UC meeting being held on campus and learned that next time around if Stout hadn't a Minority Affairs Senator all the UC representatives would lose their voting privileges.

At the time, I jokingly said, "I'm a minority." After all, as a 32 year-old, red headed, juvenile diabetic, with liberal tendencies, I knew the hardships of being a minority at Stout.

The joke went further than intended as the Stout Student Association (SSA) had had as much success getting a minority affairs senator as a sand box salesman working the Mojave Desert. These guys couldn't agree on the style of SSA t-shirt for the year. So it's asking a bit much for them to recruit a valid Minority Affairs Senator.

With little question, the SSA accepted my minority status on this prearranged one shot deal. I was on my way to the UC meeting at UW-Parkside. This experience would look great on my resume in case I needed a little filler.

I was not told how I was to pick up the needed knowledge to participate effectively in the meeting of all the UC Minority Affairs Senators, so I assumed I must know all that's needed.

The meetings contained a veritable plethora of information to take back with me. Unfortunately, I hadn't taken a note book. I had learned long ago the best way to avoid stress was to simply not concern myself with what lay ahead. In this case, my policy of unconcern came up short.

What was most pleasant about the PARKSIDE EXPERIENCE was that I learned that UC members party to the nth degree out of their sense of fidelity to their legacy of debauchery.

The meaning of my attendance at the Pre-Spring Break meeting was layed out before me when I was informed that I needn't worry about making a report to SSA members at their next meeting.

I so wanted to discuss being awakened at 3 a.m. on an unknown coach in the anonymous house in Kenosha where we all went to engage in a serious dialogue concerning the ramifications of the evening's affairs. By unanimous consent, we all decided to pass out.

My time at the next day's meeting was seriously divided between deciding on the next UC President and when to depart to catch an early afternoon plane out of O'Hare.

Back at the O.K. Corral, in the SSA Presidential debate, loud objections were raised about the number of minorities on the panel and the "excessive" number of minority oriented questions.

Accusations were tossed around about who set up this panel that non-minorities considered unfairly biased toward minorities. The worm turns.

When the dust settled I was lucky to learn that the questions which at first glance may have appeared disappointingly similar offered the candidates their chance to show their awareness of problems facing the members of two distinctly different minorities on campus.

SPOTLIGHT/ Pat Barnes

Subject: The problems limiting the usefulness of Minority Affairs Reps

Pat Barnes

Text by Tim Hopkins

After getting her M.S. in Guidance and Counseling at UW-Platteville, Pat Barnes came here three years ago to begin her job as the Coordinator of Black Student Services at UW-Stout. As part of the services provided by Stout's Ethnic Services Center, Barnes assists black students at Stout in their initial orientation to the community and she works to assure their retention at Stout.

She has observed the many problems facing minorities enrolling at Stout and she offered her perspective on the situation as well as possible solutions.

STOUTONIA: HOW CAN THE MINORITY AFFAIRS SENATOR EFFECTIVELY REPRESENT THE NEEDS OF MINORITIES AT STOUT?

BARNES: You have to get down to the real basics with them because they can not represent ethnic minority people unless they know the history of the people. Because, no matter what they try to do, they are not going to understand where they are today if they don't know where they come from and why they're there today.

I have found that to be a problem especially when you have people who have had no interaction with ethnic minorities. If you look at the Minority Affairs position, ethnic minorities are going to be the majority in that group. You've got international students in there too. They're a larger group.

You've got to know the history of the groups and that's going to take you a semester before you can do anything for the groups. It's just very hard to get somebody to handle all of that. For example, you've got to have somebody truly objective. Is there a student that's going to be able to know about the minorities and the gays and the international students?

STOUTONIA: HOW IS IT POSSIBLE FOR THE MINORITY AFFAIRS SENATOR TO BECOME SENSITIVE TO THE NEEDS OF INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS FOR INSTANCE?

BARNES: They had rap sessions from each group from the international students. Now, I don't know who the Minority Affairs Representative is but they should have been at that. They had the Caribbean viewpoint, how they feel being in Menomonie. They had the African. They had the British and they had one other group. Now, the Minority Affairs person should be at things like that.

The SSA President, or whoever in the organization, should look out for things like that and say, "Hey, you should go to this," because they would have gotten some insight without picking up a book and trying to read, "Oh, let me see what the international students [think]." You're not going to find that in a book and those students are not going to open up to you in one semester. You're going to find yourself having to build some rapport and it's not going to happen over night.

It's just basic human nature. People just do not jive and open themselves up and tell you all their problems. You've got to build a rapport and if somebody is in and out of the Minority Affairs position every semester where is the rapport? When is it ever going to be built? What can you get done if you don't have rapport?

STOUTONIA: DO YOU SEE ANY IMMINENT CHANGES IN THE SSA AND ITS APPROACH TO MINORITY AFFAIRS IN THE NEAR FUTURE?

BARNES: I think since the Stout Student Association has Bill Siedlecki as their advisor that he

"The Poles are very philsophical about problems from the East. They aren't surprised by much of anything."

ABC Correspondent David Ensor commenting on the immediate Polish reaction to reports of a nuclear melt down in the vicinity of Kiev.

IRHA lives

In regard to your April 10 issue of The Stoutonia, we have just one question — what ever happened to unbiased coverage of the news? One look back to that issue will show what we mean. As newly elected officers for the 1986-87 Inter-Residence Hall Association Executive Board, we are very insulted by your one-sided report of the SSA/IRHA elections. After your editor promised present IRHA Vice-President Anne Charneski complete coverage of our election, we see no justification for your headline of the day: "SSA elections run smoothly." You totally deleted the fact that it was a joint election! Delving further into the paper shows at least six more articles dealing with SSA topics. Of course there was very complete coverage of Mr. Paul Nelson, former editor of The Stoutonia and newly elected SSA President — could it be coincidence? Seeing that our Miss Charneski was one of the main people behind the SSA/IRHA elections, we cannot believe you overlooked us again.

We are not out just to get our names in print. We simply wish to point out that we have not overlooked the many times you have over-played SSA's role on this campus while underrating IRHA's equally important role. We are a hard working, dedicated group of people, and we feel it is time Stoutonia readers are alerted to this fact through thorough, accurate coverage of our part in campus events.

CAMPUS SLANT/ What do you think about evaluation week here at Stout?

Text by Brian Kraimer

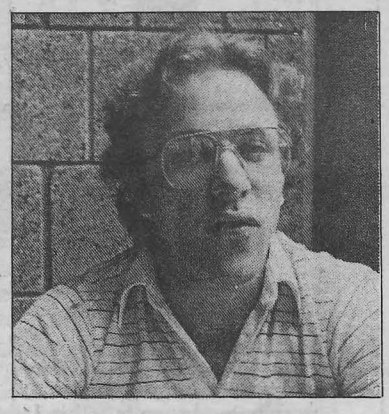
Angela Bias,
Interior Design,
Freshman,

I am in favor of evaluation because I think we need more time between classes to study for other tests. Well, I'm a freshman and have never taken tests any other way, and I think you need more time to study, especially if they are comprehensive tests.

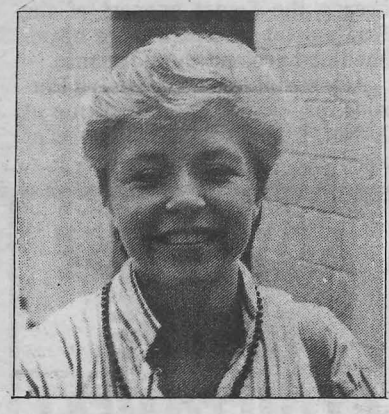
Lisa Mahowald,
Interior Design,
Sophomore,

Yeah, I think it's great because last year I went to a technical school and we had tests all the way through the last two weeks, and it is nice to have it all in one week, even though it is a little bit crowded.



Mark Nickels,
Business Administration,
Junior,

I don't think there is anything wrong with it. We're going to have finals anyway and I think it's kind of a neat set up anyways. I don't see what the big deal is anyway between this and what quote "finals" is.



Michael Le May,
Fashion Merchandising,
Junior,

It's okay. I think it wastes my time, all those days off. I'd rather be in class and review then and just study before.

Denise Hoeft,
Business Administration,
Junior,

I don't like it, because mostly it has been a slough week for me. I usually just go take my tests and that's it, and usually they're not comprehensive tests.

During these last few weeks of Stout, some students, hungry for acceptable grades, punch their fingers to the bone in front of computer terminals or typewriters in the dead indoors for hours, while others claim a tanning session the biggest highlight of their day.

"Betty, what did you accomplish today?" Calvin asked.

"I tanned my day away," Betty declared. "What did you do today Calvin?"

"I finished my accounting problems, re-read my history notes and wrote a science paper," Calvin blurted.

"Oh, that's too bad," Betty mouthed.

Lying in front of the sun requires no skill, practice or brains. Why is it done then? That's easy. It requires no skill, practice or brains. Catching rays, both the A and the stronger B variety, is relaxing as hell. It's considered an activity, but you don't have to do anything at all; you just lie there.

Most tanners don't do much while they tan. A few stray weird-o tanners manage to perform simple operations while they bathe in the sun, like reading. Others can only handle listening to tunes, drinking beer, or for the well-coordinated, both. But for all, it's a steamy, ultra-pleasant, trance-inducing trip. It's hard to be in a vile mood while lying in front of the seductive sun as it transforms you into a meditative state. You feel mellow as you bake and glow. You feel like a comatose glow-worm.

The purpose of tanning is not merely an opportunity to relax. Instead it is an informal occupation, a habit, a lifestyle. Students strictly set aside this "tan time" to ponder thoughts they normally don't have time for. They schedule this time to melt away in the sun, not to think about the standard issues on the national and international scope, but instead, something more obscure, much more obscure. Weaving in and out of a normal human function, they mull over the unsophisticated and off-beat.

What, then, goes on in the mind of the average young tanner? Not much. Tanners become engrossed and absorbed in the minor thoughts of life. Totally mysterious, exotic bits and pieces of semi-intelligent information enter and exit the marshmallow mind.

"Is Johnny Carson just background noise for reading while waiting for Letterman?"

"What impact will the giant Burger King Chicken Tender scarce have on America?"

"If I kill that ant crawling on my knee, is that considered animal abuse?"

"When Charles Manson was considered for parole, saying he would like to either go to Libya or go to see the Ayatollah Khomeini, was he interested in diplomatic relations or just good clean fun?"

"What effect does chewing gum have on the human body when it is accidentally swallowed?"

"How many Popsicles can I eat in an hour?"

"When surgeons in Pakistan removed a tumor weighing 99 pounds from the stomach of a 35-year-old Pakistani woman, was that the quickest, mass weight loss recorded?"

"What ever happened to the 'Misfits of Science' on NBC?"

Tanners are known to fantasize while lying in the prone position under the blazing sphere. They may have recurring fantasies about becoming a contestant on "Wheel of Fortune," striking it rich and making a decent impression on Vanna White.

Maybe the reason why tanning is so celebrated is that it isn't complicated. There are no hard-care demands or restrictions. It requires no effort at all. It is a simple, unconstrained escape from the monotonous strains of college life — you know, projects, exams and papers up the ying-yang.

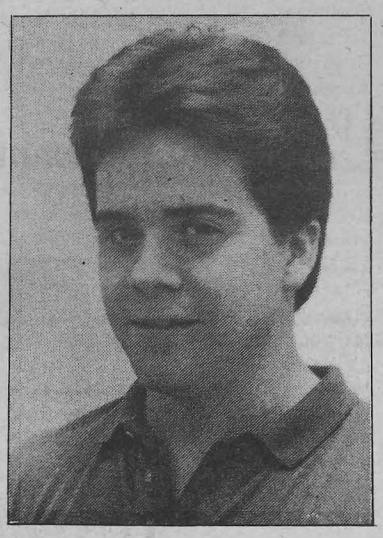
Sure, many dermatologists and other specialists give a blanket condemnation of tanning, saying that long-term exposure to the sun ages the skin very quickly, causing irreversible wrinkling, cell mutations and increasing risks of skin cancer. Besides, sunburns are painful and deep leathery tans are dangerous and ugly. But, the avid, confident tanner ignores these health hazards as he does the jeopardy of his other favorite activity, regular jaunts to his favorite smoke-filled tavern.

As tanners spread out in swarms on grass, on balconies, on benches and on roofs this week, they may not be as anxiety-plagued by the annoying shadows of cirrus or cumulus clouds, but more apprehensive about clouds of low-level fallout from the Soviet meltdown that may cruise across the sunny skies.

But what's a little more radiation going to hurt, glow-worms?

Persons for Peace in need of student support

Dave Burnside
guest editorialist



Dave Burnside

I am a Business Major and a founding member of Persons For Peace here on campus. The opinions expressed in this editorial are solely those of the writer.

A recently formed organization on campus came together under one message; Persons For Peace is a small peace group that originated in Dr. Dennis Bolstad's Humanistic Psychology class that really hasn't made much progress due to the lack of support it has received on campus. Although it has not officially been recognized as a campus organization, the group has made one vain attempt to gain support.

The group's founding members don't feel its essential to become an internal organization. We attempted to circulate fliers on campus roughly a month ago but because we are not officially recognized as a campus organization, we were unable to achieve the desired result. The group's founders want to avoid the formalities and red tape that they feel is entailed in becoming an internal organization.

We have established a list of objectives which includes informing students on foreign policy, human rights and peace. The group members also intend to present a balanced view to conflicts around the world today. The group primarily concentrates on the situation in Central America. We are opposed to the way Reagan Administration is handling the conflict in Nicaragua.

We feel that Reagan is evading the issue. The issue is not a communist threat to our southern border; it is whether or not the US has the right to intervene in the affairs of a sovereign nation.

Reagan is rejecting the lessons of the past; intervening in another nations's affairs has caused this nation to grieve before: as in the tragedy in Vietnam.

We feel that the Reagan Administration is handling a political problem militarily. An increase in aid to the Contras will only increase the Soviet support of the Sandanistas, promise more bloodshed and prolong the stalemate.

Anyone interested in joining Persons for Peace can contact me at X-3401, Duke at X-3881, or Chris at 235-4422.

Hotel President gives advice, insight

William N. Huelett, president of Stouffer Hotels, spoke to students about the constant transition in the hotel industry. He said that managers must have flexibility to adapt to change.

Nitin Nadkarni
News Reporter

UW-Stout students had the grand opportunity, on Monday, April 21, to listen to a distinguished speaker, Mr. William N. Hulett, President Stouffer hotels. Stouffer is one of the leading hotel groups in America.

Stouffer is a subsidiary of the Nestle Company, an international food processing company with a turnover of 23 billion dollars. The Stouffer group owns 22 hotels. Eighteen Stouffer hotels have a 4-diamond rating, which means that the properties are of a very high standard. Stouffer is also the owner of a 5-diamond property in Hawaii, which is exceptionally luxurious.

Mr. Hulett was brought to Stout as part of the Colloquium Speakers Series, sponsored by the Habitational Resources Department. The objective of this series is to bring to Stout the highest level leaders in the hospitality industry.

Dr. Leland Nicholls, Administrator of the Habitational Resources Department, said, "We hope in the Department of Habitational Resources to introduce as many students and faculty as possible to the individuals making and responsible for the decisions influencing their respective corporations."

Mr. Hulett praised Stout's Hotel and Restaurant Program, calling it "far-sighted". He said that Stout has kept pace with growth and changes in the hospitality industry. He complimented the faculty and staff for providing adequate education in the hospitality field.

Hulett spoke of the constant transition the hotel industry undergoes in challenging marketing conditions, while meeting the changing needs of the travel market. "This perpetual state of transition causes substantial pressure on the hospitality manager. At the same time, it presents substantial opportunities to those who perceive it and respond to it intelligently and precisely," Hulett said.

Looking back at the hospitality industry in the past, the word progress did not exist in the lexicon of this industry. Today, according to Hulett, the word is seen in bold letters and is seen as characteristic of the hospitality industry.

"The experience of the recession of the 1970's has forced the hospitality manager to be more professional and progressive," Hulett said. "The hotel manager must have the flexibility to adapt to change and be aware of the growing changes in the environment," Hulett added.

Hulett maintains that the hotel industry is doing a much better job in planning and marketing today. There has been a major change in the area of personal management, he said there has been a move toward effective planning and better utilization of human resources and organization.

"We are light years ahead of where we were three years ago," Hulett emphasized.

Hulett said that a computer serves several purposes. "They are increasingly used for several functions: energy saving, security, sales, marketing and forecasting. The hotel industry being a highly labor intensive, an effective automation system is an imminent necessity to maintain high standards," Hulett said

Other major computer applications in hotel management were the use of computers in reservation making, and cutting down the negative flow of revenue by reducing the number of no-shows. Market research and the compilation of guest data, are other important uses that Hulett mentioned.

By implementing these changes, Hulett expects the Stouffer group to stay close to the cutting edge and slice for themselves a bigger piece of the pie in the hospitality industry.

Hulett listed the aspects of quality that are major issues in the hospitality industry. Quality of will try to assist them in some more diverse thinking because he's that type of person.

STOUTONIA: SINCE THERE WERE ONLY SEVEN VOTES MADE IN THE ELECTION OF THE NEW MINORITY AFFAIRS SENATOR, DOES THAT REFLECT THE FAILURE OF THE SSA TO ADEQUATELY PUBLICIZE THE POSITION?

BARNES: First of all, the position probably was created without a whole lot of input from the ethnic minorities. I've been the advisor for several organizations that dealt with ethnic minorities and I don't ever recall them having any input on the Minority Affairs Senator position.

I think when you create a position like that, you have got to have someone with some kind of expertise in the area you are trying to deal with having some kind of input because, if they feel there is another way that they could impact without having that position per say, maybe that would help the SSA come to some kind of solution for a lack of minority participation. I think that is the first step.

First of all, you show the importance of the position by rewarding the person that is in it. And if you're not rewarding them with pay, you're telling them that you don't think that that is important where as you think some of the other positions that are paid are more important.

STOUTONIA: WHAT DID YOU THINK OF THE NEGATIVE RESPONSE TO THE LARGE NUMBER OF MINORITY ORIENTED QUESTIONS ASKED BY PANELISTS AT THE SSA PRESIDENTIAL DEBATE?

BARNES: If minority students do not ask questions on those types of panels, there will be no questions that address the minority issue. And I feel that's the same thing with the Stout Student Association. If minorities are not present in that association in any form, then nobody's going to even think to address minority issues because they're interested in the majority. Many of them don't even know that there are any issues for minorities that don't affect anyone else.

STOUTONIA: HOW DO YOU THINK THE MINORITIES ON CAMPUS MIGHT BEST BE UNITED TO BENEFIT THE WHOLE?

BARNES: Each group has different concerns. The gays' concerns would not be the same as the blacks' concerns. That is why everything is broken up into different groups because different groups have different concerns.

I think the problem that I have seen a lot of times is that these different umbrella groups that want to serve minorities, they want to just lump everybody into the same category and say, "These have been identified as things that are concerns for you and this is what we're going to address." And that might be the concern of a black person and it might not be the concern of a gay.

STOUTONIA: WHAT PROGRAMS DO YOU HAVE TO EASE THE ORIENTATION PROCESS BETWEEN THE COMMUNITY AND ENROLLING MINORITY STUDENT?

One program that we have is the guided work experience. In that a minority student is matched with a community person in a business and they're to do 50 hours shadowing that business person. They're to learn what they are majoring in. For the business community, that gives them free help number one, but that wasn't our purpose. Our purpose was to let the business community get to know minority students as responsible contributing people, not just seeing them walk in the stores and never have any interaction with them. That has been great.

STOUTONIA: WHAT ABOUT THE ORIENTATION OF STOUT STUDENTS TO MINORITIES?

BARNES: As far as Stout. That's a different story. We've had in-services galore. We've had panels with minority students speaking and all kinds of stuff. So we can orient the Stout faculty and staff to the students.

The turn out that we get for that are the people who really don't need it. These are the people who come year after year. You see them at everything that we offer that would give them some insight about the minority student.

The folks who really need it and the folks who minority students really complain about the most are not there. So what do you do? All you can do is offer it.

You always here the reply, "The minority people are trying to take something from the majority," and I think a lot of that comes from ignorance.

management means the application of professional procedures to motivate employees towards meeting the goals of the organization. Quality of service means meeting customers needs and fulfilling them correctly. Quality of marketing means carefully focussing the various promotions towards the prospective customer with a view to attract them.

"In today's customer oriented world, one must deliver the product consistently, at the right time and the right place," Hulett emphasized. He said that an astute manager provides traditional service with advanced technology built into the product.

Advising students, Hulett said that their success depends upon their determination and the decision that they make in the next few years. "One ought to develop enduring determination and self reliance to achieve success," the Chief Executive Officer of the Stouffer hotel group, said.

Hulett's advice to the future manager was, that they realize that graduation is not an end to learning. In this changing world of expanding technology and competition, learning is a life long process, he extolled.

Second, Hulett said, hotel management is a complex business and one has to strive to stay at the top. Selection of an organization to work for, based solely on the financial benefit, is not the thing to do. Rather, he cautioned, one ought to see ones future plan and then decide. He urged students to take advantage of the continuing education programs and to indulge in a self- development program by reading trade journals and management magazines.

Dr.Leland Nicholls, Administrator of the Habitational Resources Department, said "The objective of the colloquium speakers series is to bring to Stout the highest level of leaders in the hospitality industry.

"It is important that the Stout community be privileged to high level industry insides. Sometimes these insides are best heard from the individuals at the top." said Nicholls.

The talk ended with a lively question and answer session, well attended by eager students who had the unique opportunity to listen to an expert in the hospitality business.

rangements. The fraternity needed to do a community project to update the triple A rating that they have had for two years. Haleem said that everything went better than expected. "I think participation was excellent, with it (the event) being one of our best shows," he said, "Everyone showed up mostly to play with the kids." Haleem was so impressed with how the event turned out that he also hopes Sig Tau will continue it annually.

Haleem also mentioned the excellent help they received from area businesses. "They were more than willing to contribute donations for the event," he said. He added a special note of thanks to Sue Noye for her participation.

The Menomonie High School donated the equipment for the track meet. Food was donated by Beatrice Grocery Products, Don's Super Value, Hattie Maxwell's, Snyder Drugs, McDonald's, Dairy Queen, Hardees, and Coca-Cola Co. in Eau Claire.

The UW-Stout Chamber Singers, pictured here, perform vocal and improvisational jazz. The Chamber Singers and Symphonic Singers have just returned from a four-day tour of Green Bay. Both groups will be performing with the University Choir in the Mabel Tainter Theatre on Tuesday, May 6th at 8 p.m. The concert is free to the public. (Photo by ITS)

Career services offer job vacancy lists

Dale Bohnert
News Reporter

The UW-Stout Career Planning and Placement Services is sponsoring an "End of the Year Sale" of jobs. This sale promotes the job vacancy lists which are available at the Placement office in the Administration building and posted across campus.

Over 150 different job opportunities will be posted and the lists will be renewed each week.

Job vacancy lists are only one of the many ways Placement Services assist Stout graduates and students nearing graduation. Their offices can also help develop effective resumes and arrange on-campus recruitment for students who have registered with them.

Bob Dahlke, Director of Placement Services, is glad that the office has been successful. He estimates that nearly 60 percent of Stout students are employed with jobs associated with their major at the time of their graduation.

Dahlke estimates that 94 percent of Stout graduates are employed within 6 months of their graduation. Nearly 80 percent of these are the result of successful campus recruitment or the job vacancy lists.

There are differences in successful placement among majors. Hotel and Restaurant majors, for example, will find more opportunities than teaching or design majors. Dahlke explains that the differences exist because of supply and demand.

Response from faculty has been tremendous. Dahlke says that faculty are "the backbone for the success of Stout graduates," and adds that "they don't receive nearly enough credit."

Placement Director Dahlke said that he feels, however, that "Stout seniors are not taking full advantage of Placement Services tremendous resources, especially the weekly job lists." He expressed his hopes that the "End of the Year Sale," a one-time promotion, will spurt student response.

"Time is short," warns Dahlke. He urged students to plan ahead and get involved.

Career Planning and Placement Services are proving to be successful. Dahlke adds, however, "Until everyone gets the job they want, I'm not happy."

Stout's Career Planning and Placement Services has a new gimmick - an "end of the year sale" on jobs. Banners resembling those that Don's puts up before deer season appealed to Amy Scholl (left) and Katherine Laesl. (Stoutonia photo by Dan Banach)

Communication conference aids women

Beth Reid
News Reporter

Designed to promote the advancement of women in all fields of communications, the Women in Communications Job Quest was held on Saturday, April 26, 1986 at Hamline University. The conference was sponsored by Women in Communications, Inc.

The seven-hour conference included a number of speakers from various areas of communications, beginning with Susan Stuart-Otto, who is the president of her own public relations company. Her presentation, "Getting Your Foot in the Door and Keeping it There" provided advice on job hunting, resumes, cover letters and interviews.

She began by stating the three things she believes are most important in job hunting. "First and most important, be creative, don't be a clone," Stuart-Otto said. "Be creative in your work and your approach to work, don't try to create someone else's image. Second, maximize your greatest point of interest — what makes you different from everybody else. Each one of you has a unique quality or skill, so build on it! And third, be a little eccentric. Know yourself and what makes you feel good. If wearing bright colors makes you feel good, then wear bright colors to an interview."

In expanding on uniqueness and eccentricity, Otto-Stuart went on to discuss what she calls the "blue suit epidemic" in downtown St. Paul. "If you walk down the streets of downtown St. Paul, you'll see that practically all the women are wearing a navy blue skirt and jacket," Otto-Stuart said. "Now you can't tell me that all those women love wearing blue, and many of you probably have a color you'd rather wear. Well by all means, go ahead and wear it. You don't have to look and act like everyone else to find a job. Be unique!"

She went on to discuss some of the things everyone needs during job hunting. These included: infinite patience, polite persistence and knowing yourself inside and out. "Don't ever stop looking and use all of your contacts," Otto-Stuart said. "Try using press marts, the newspaper, look for new companies that are opening up or expanding to new areas and one of best ways is through networking. Keep your eyes and ears open for possibilities and just keep telling everyone that you're looking for a job. Who knows when someone may have a contact name to offer you."

The conference continued throughout the rest of the morning with a panel of first-year professionals who talked about how they landed their first job. "Networking is the key, " Angela Coleman, of Group Health said. "Keep making contacts and often it's helpful to call the company and ask for an informational interview. This will help you to learn more about the company and will give you a chance to meet people in person, rather than just sending them a resume."

Libby Gagnon of First Banks stressed the importance of doing internships. "These experiences will give you something to key in on during the interview," Gagnon said. "By telling them where the internship was and saying what your responsibilities were, you can find a job, just continue to be persistent and don't give up."

Another panel member, Kitty Shea of Minda Associates used what she calls the two-fold approach in finding a job. "Cover all your bases," Shea said. "Get your skills to top notch level to help you build up your confidence. Then get your contacts and think of them as friends. These people are human beings, don't think of them as being up on a pedestal, but rather as people who can help you learn more about your field and possibly help you find a job."

All of the panel members stressed that it is not impossible to find a job, though sometimes it may seem like it. "Don't be intimidated by statistics," Shea said, "You will show them how qualified you are and what type of skills you have."

After lunch the conference included six hour-long workshops. Those attending were allowed to attend three of the six. The workshops included professionals from various areas of communications who talked about their job responsibilties, the skills required and how they got started. The idea of doing internships and getting background experience was brought up several times throughout the day.

Along with the workshops, a panel of professional conducted resume reviews. They read through each person's resume and offered ideas and suggestions for ways to change and improve the person's resume.

The Women in Communications group is a 75-year-old professional organization which includes over 12,000 members who work in advertising, communications, education, film, magazines, newspapers, photojournalism, public relations, publishing radio, technical writing and television. The organization helps to promote high professional standard throughout the communications industry by holding meetings, conferences, career seminars and other special programs. The Women in Communications, Inc. is a good organization for anyone who is interested in working in communications. Interested people can contact Dan Riordan, 232-1344 for more information.

Nigerian students elect Umaru president

Tim Hopkins
Editor in Chief

After reviewing their successes in the 1985-86 academic year, members of the Nigerian Students Association (NSA) elected Yakubu L. Umaru association president in a highly competitive election between Umaru and Ernest D. Bestman.

The NSA represents the 75 students from Nigeria who make up the largest group of foreign students at UW-Stout and approximately one percent of the student body.

Umaru pledged to proceed where the outgoing officers left off. He stressed the need for cooperation between association members saying they need to work on selling more of Nigeria to the university and the Menomonie community.

Umaru said he would work to get things organized in the NSA and focus on the socialization process of Nigerian students into the community.

Umaru defeated Bestman by a margin of four votes, even though Bestman offered a financial award program of "$50 for academic excellence to any Nigerian student who makes a G.P.A. of 3.5 or better, provided two-thirds of his/her total semester credits come from technical courses."

Both candidates stressed the need for unity among Nigerian students. A major concern that remains to be addressed is the required $5,000 deposit from Nigerian graduate students.

The highly competitive nature of the election was a real plus for the NSA according to their advisor Professor Elaine Fitzgerald. "This organization has come a long way," she said.

Reviewing the activities of the past year, Fitzgerald said, "Everyone has worked hard and everyone appears to have been in a relatively cooperative mood."

> We were able to... work towards our good image.
> —Ibrahim Dan-Baki

She congratulated the NSA for achieving their major goal "to gain understanding with our fellow man regardless of what color or country of origin."

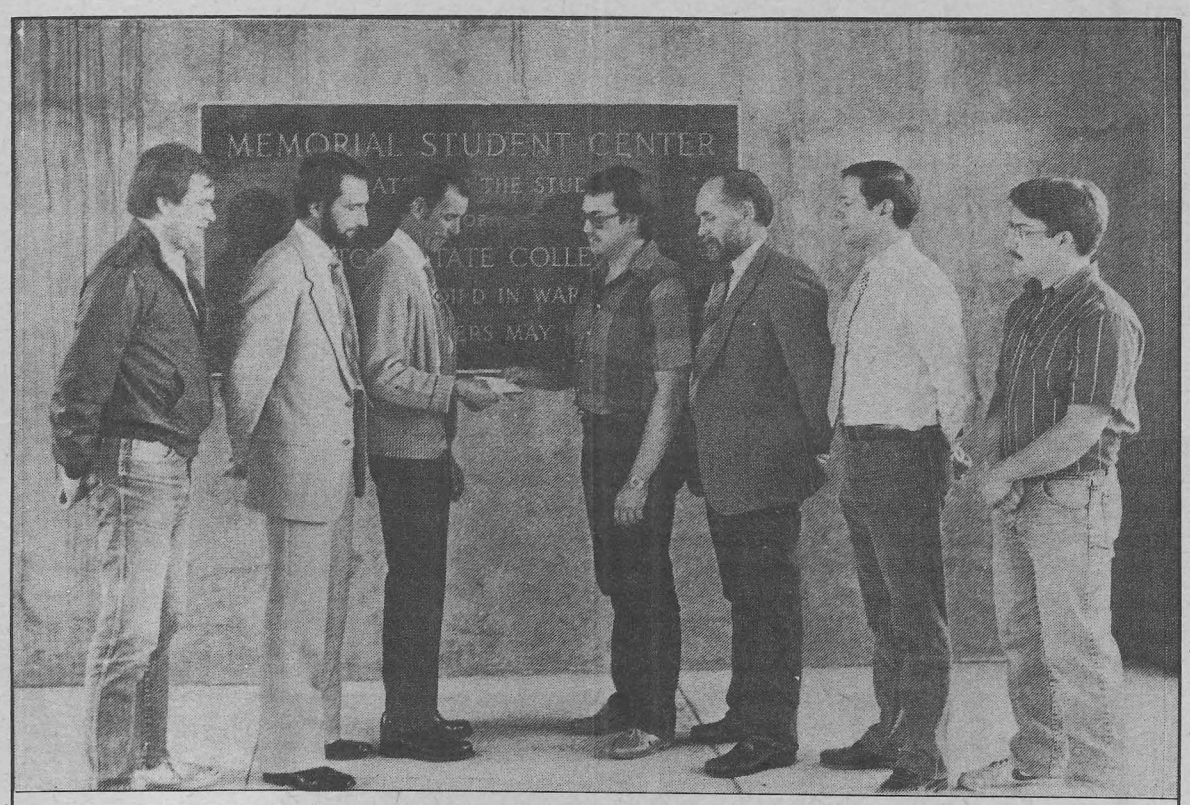
Outgoing NSA Secretary Ibrahim Dan - Baki presented the annual report for the 1985-86 session. The 25th anniversary of Nigerian Independence Day on October 1 was the most outstanding NSA activity although outgoing NSA President Dadu Yusuf said that their participation in the International Student Dinner last November was memorable also.

Chancellor Robert Swanson, Admissions Director Don Osegard, and NSA Advisor Elaine Fitzgerald were thanked for having "contributed immensely and vigorously to the success" of the Silver Jubilee of Nigerian Independence.

The NSA takes on the annual job of welcoming and orienting Nigerian students to Stout. For their valuable assistance in the orientation program, the NSA thanked Musa Aliyu for his help conveying students from the airports and the members of the International Office for aiding the organization of orientation.

In the area of Nigerian student and community relations, Secretary Dan - Baki said this had been one of the most successful years since there were no reports of "malpractices" by Nigerian students. He said this success was the direct result of NSA officers working to prevent any problems before they could occur. "We were able to listen to ourselves and work towards our good image," he said.

Other winners in the annual NSA election were Vice-President Adesola Adisa, Secretary Robert Akor, Treasurer Patrick Nwagbogu, Social Secretary Shafa A. Abdul and Financial Secretary Ayoola T. Olaoye. All ran unopposed.



The UW-Stout Vet's Club donated $200 to the Donna Kado Liver Transplant Fund. The donation was made from proceeds collected from the Budweiser Vet's Club Snowmobile Speed Run on February 15th. Greg Graves, past President of the club, expressed a challenge to all organizations to make a similar donation. Student Grievances Concern of SSA

Kelly Cohorst
News Reporter

The first Stout Student Association (SSA) meeting of the 17th Congress was brought to order by President Paul Nelson. The Positive Action Committee was the major topic of discussion.

"The Positive Action Committee was set up for the student, to hear the students grievances in dealing with the staff," said Vice President of Academic Affairs, Julie Wiess.

Several years ago the Positive Action Committee was eliminated at the school level and as a result students were no longer allowed to participate. The committee was eliminated because it was considered to be "out of their jurisdiction," according to university officials.

Recently, students have complained of receiving no student representation on the university level.

At The SSA meeting Tuesday night, a motion was passed unanimously by the Congress saying the students want representation on the Positive Action Committee and the current lack of student representation is unacceptable to the Congress and the student body.

Wiess said that, if they don't receive a place on the University Positive Action Committee, then they'll go to the Board of Regents.

Nelson announced that the first President's Council meeting was successful and looks like a worthwhile project to continue with. Out of the 140 presidents that were invited to the council only 20 showed up.

Several questions were asked regarding the 16th Congress with the most frequent being, "What happened to all the business that carries over to the 17th Congress?"

Nelson answered by saying every issue from the 16th Congress was "tabled", which means that it was in affect, put on hold until the 17th Congress feels desires to bring the motion up for due consideration.

Next week's SSA meeting will be the last meeting for the 1985-86 school year. The first SSA meeting for the 1986-87 will be held Tuesday, September 2 at 7 p.m. Julie Weiss and Mark Nickels were appointed summer delegates on campus.

Comedian Scott Jones Entertains Stout crowd

Denise Cain
Arts Reporter

There is a meeting point between comedy and classics, between the punch line and the piano, it is . . . The Jones Zone. The Jones Zone began in North Dakota with the birth of Scott Jones. The delivery nurse mistook the bundle of joy "for a frog". In high school, the frog grew into Midget Man where he first broke through the comedy barrier.

On April 29 at 9 p.m., The Scott Jones Show came to UW-Stout's Great Hall. Before a full house, emerged from the fog, a Sleestack with a black and white afro. Opening his show with, "children should be obscene and not heard", Scott Jones set the stage for a night of stomach aerobics.

Jones is a variety pack of energy and entertainment, successfully juggling stand-up comedy, music, rubber devices and exotic toys. He channeled his own versions of golden oldies, such as "Memories", into college level humor. Jones feels that comedy and music are a nice balance, adding that "comedy loosens people up, lets them relax so they'll listen to music and then they can laugh more".

Stout student, Jane Ellis commented, "I love the perversion and piano."

Scott Jones has travelled throughout the United States, much of his comedy coming from travel through small towns. Some of Jones favorite towns are: Toadsuck, Arkansas; Escanaba, Michigan where "most people in town are crosseyed"; and Athol, Massachusetts. All of these adventures have been incorporated into his comedy and slide show.

Jones feels his comedy has been influenced by his parents and personal experiences.

"I think I was definitely a nerd in 7th and 8th grade," Jones said, "but was funny to other nerds." Being funny only to nerds changed with the coming of Midget Man in high school, where he became more accepted. Later Jones graduated from UW-Madison with a Political Science major.

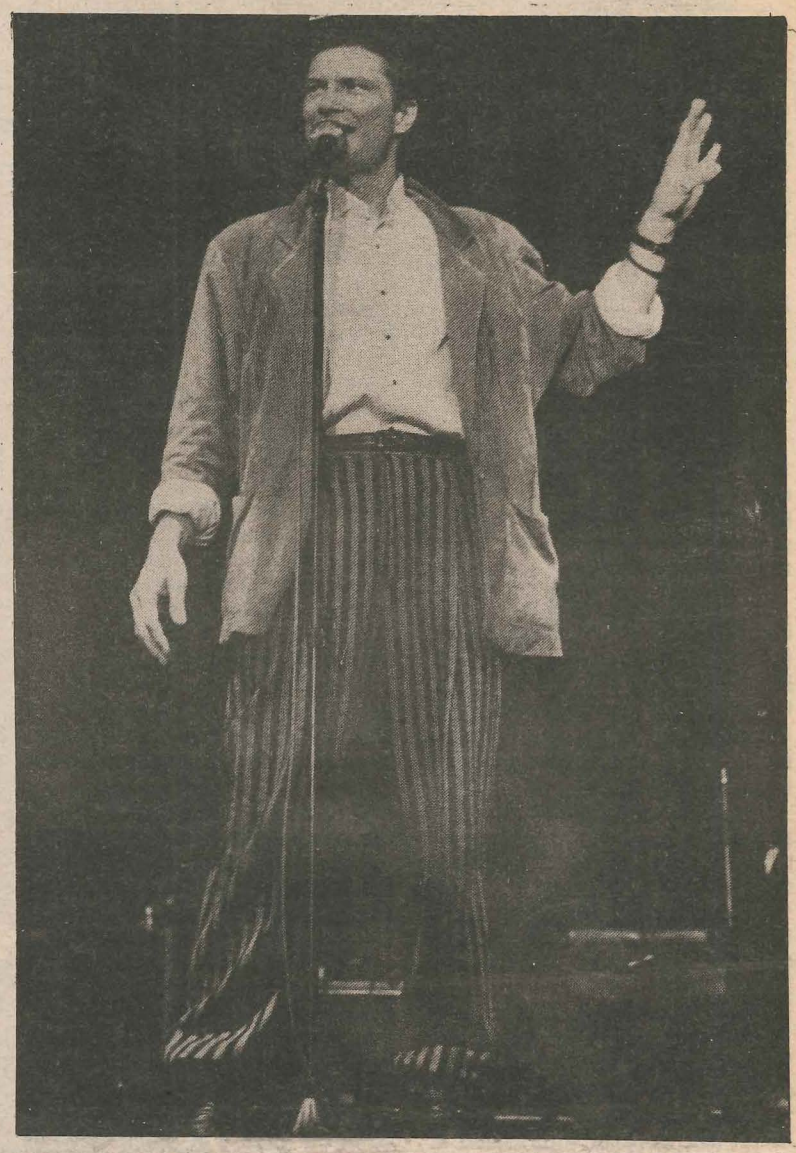
"I went to school during the Vietnam war, I wanted to find out why I was radical," Jones said. "I lost my sense of humor for awhile".

Judging by his performance and the audiences's response, it is clear that Jones has recaptured his spontaneous sense of humor. But Jones'act goes far beyond that of comedy, reaching into the realms of serious compositions. His talents include artistic works on both the piano and the guitar.

Unlike most comedians, Jones has the unique ability to entertain his audience with both hilarious comedy and stimulating musical works. This allows Jones to bring a wide variety of people to his performances. Whether you are there for the comedy or to simply hear him play, you will leave with a smile on your face.

Some future plans of Jones' include; recording an album of his original music, writing The Book of One's, a possible line of greeting cards, and the production of a live album from his performance here at Stout. The Book of One's will define what a "one" is. "There goes one", "She's the one", and "That's the one, over there", are examples of "ones".

In these trying times Stout students often find themselves under tremendous pressure. Homework, tests and final projects tend to take their toll. Scott Jones' blend of comedy and music was much of a relief for those who attended his performance. By the reactions of the audience, one can expect to see Scott Jones on stage at Stout for still another performance in '87.



Comedian Scott Jones entertains Stout audience Tuesday night at the Great Hall. Jones unique blend of comedy and music was well received by a large enthusiastic crowd.

Design contest reflects talent of the best Stout fashion designers

Karen Heagle
Arts Reporter

One of the most sensitive subjects on the minds of many college students is the clothes they wear and the clothes other people wear. Fashion is a broad area and Stout has a program in Apparel, Textile, and Design, a major part of the fashion industry.

On Saturday, April 26th, the department featured their annual apparel contest. The show was titled, "Ultimate Stout Apparel--Made in America", and 28 aspiring fashion designers displayed their work in an extravagant fashion show.

The categories displayed in the show included career wear, sports wear, evening wear, and entries in textile surface design, and lingerie.

The competition was high as judges viewed the creations of these students. The actual viewing of these fashions took just short of an hour. The climax of the show came as the awards where announced.

Eighteen students received honorable mention. The gifts given for honorable mention included, six hat, mitten, and scarf sets, three Singer sewing reference books, a one year subscription to "Sew News", and four gift certificates for the amount of $25 from Northwest Fabrics.

A special award of a sheep pelt made of wool went to the best design made of wool, which was a coat designed by Wendy House.

The top four prize winners received cash prizes. Florence Eiseman, Inc., a popular children's fashion designer, donated $250 dollars that was divided into $25 for fourth place, $50 for third place, $75 for second place and $100 dollars to the top contender.

The designs were judged by two area professionals and one alumnus of Stout's apparel design program. Dr. Marcia Metcalf, a professor of home economics and Nanette Hanson, owner of "Nanette's" on main street, both respected area experts on the subject of fashion.

Laureen Schefchik, a graduate of Stout who is now employed as a designer and owner of Max Diante Contoure Designs of Chicago, Illinois, also served as a judge. In 1982 Schefchik won the first place honor in the fashion show that year.

This year's first place winner was junior, Barbara Schwartz, for her satin lounging pajamas. She said, "I was really surprised." She had entered the contest unfamiliar with the judging process or any of the contest's practices. She was quite honored to receive the first place award.

DCver/Obsession rock Stout audience

Dave Chase
Arts Reporter

The DCver/Obsession concert was an excellent opportunity for Stout students to get their dosage of rock and roll. This heavy metal prescription of hard driving rock was relentless in it's attempts to bring down the roof.

The concert took place last Thursday night at the Great Hall, in front of a small, but rowdy audience. The concert was free, sponsored by the members of CMP.

DCver

DCver opened the show with an eerie "Omen" type intro, that led into their first tune Out In The Fields. The opener was well received by the crowd, as were the 12 tunes that followed.

DCver's set included some classics like Up Around The Bend, a Creedence Clearwater Revival hit of the early 70's; and Fantasy, by Bon Jovi. I was impressed with the manner in which the songs were played, little revision and a lot of heart.

The musicians themselves were in top form, proving to the crowd that one does not have to drive to the cities to see a good rock and roll band. Lead guitarist Keith Ross looked particularily sharp as did the laid back bassist Jef Maynard.

Other members of DCver were Todd Welsch on rhythm guitar and Mary Gunderman on Keys.I also could not help but notice the voice of Andy Leverenz; who at times leaves the distinct impression of Ozzie on your mind.

But the main man for DCver Thursday night was Eric Bretl, it's too easy to let a drummer go unrecognized, but not this time. Bretl's drumming was both powerful and demanding, a style that lingered hints of the late great John Bonham. No, I'm not willing to place anyone in the ranks of Bonham, but Bretl was damn good.

The highlights of DCver's show were the songs Princess, written by rhythm guitarist Todd Welsch, Schools Out, a classic Alice Cooper tune and Surrender formerly done by Cheap Trick.

Overall DCver gave an impressive showing and will only improve with time, I DCeive you not.

Obsession

As the clouds rolled by creating thunder outside, Obsession created their own thunder inside, taking the crowd by storm. More than just a concert, Obsession gave the crowd a performance.

I knew Obsession would be good, but I had no idea of the raw talent this band possesses. The group has gone beyond bar-band quality and with the right breaks, can look forward to great success in rock and roll.

They didn't hesitate to let the audience know what they were there for, they were there to rock. There opening song was We Will Live Forever, a hard driving tune that was played with wild enthusiasm.

But Obsession is not limited to just heavy metal, as shown in their blues rock number Non Stop Saturday Night, and Beatles classic I Wanna Hold Your Hand. I was astonished that they did the song in the first place, but was overwhelmed at the quality at which they did it.

Most of the two hour set Obsession performed was of their own material. Songs like Good Personality, a song about a girl with no spiked hair, no black leather, no JD - just personality', and I Found My Peace Of Mind were two of the bands better tunes.

Obsessions lead guitarist, Jeff Loven, is a superb guitarist. He's both quick and precise, possibly the best guitarist to come out of the cities in a long time. His skills were best recognized during a long solo in which he displayed intricate finger work as well as personal style.

Lead vocalist, Neal Sundet, was also quite impressive, as he would need to be since most of Obsession's members can hold a tune themselves. Rhythm guitarist Brynn Arms also sang lead on a couple of the bands tunes.

The other members of Obsession include, Greg Eidem on bass, and Todd Mac on the drums. Together the members make a unified rock and roll band, ready and willing to jam.

Obsessions highlights were the songs, Street Fighting Man, a Stones classic that was peaked with an excellent guitar solo by Loven, My Generation, a Who classic done with flare and brilliant rendition, and last but not least, Rock and Roll by Led Zeppelin.

After a minute long "Obsession" chant, the band reappeared to play their encores. As if fulfilling a quest, Obsession closed their two hour set with Long Live Rock, a Who statement that says rock is here to stay. With talent like that found in Obsession, rock may very well live forever.

Art show exudes 'Cislunar' character

Karen Heagle
Arts Reporter

With graduation coming up soon, UW-Stout studio art and art education seniors are presenting shows. Shows containing the best of their work created throughout their education at Stout.

One artist, who's show opened Tuesday, April 29, and will run through May 2 is "Cislunar." The show is presented by Catherine Kalmon. Her show consists of paintings, drawing, and prints that she has created in her years as an art major at Stout.

When the time came for Kalmon to find a title for her show she struggled with several ideas. She feels that the title of the show is a very significant part of the show. She explained, "titles are really, really important to me, even though some of my works are untitled. If I can't find something that is perfect for my work I won't title it."

Then, while she was doing dictionary work for a creative writing class, she came across the word,__ cislunar'. "I looked at the word and couldn't believe it. It had been just what I wanted."

So she has titled the show "Cislunar." The word refers to the area between the earth and the moon as well as the orbit of the moon. Kalmon admits to having a fascination with the moon, and its female connotations. She believes it relates to her work better than using a recognizable word such as lunar itself. It just wouldn't have the same impact as using a strange word like cislunar.

She said,"They don't recognize the word, so they have no conceptions about what the show is like." This was one effect that Kalmon was looking for. She hopes the element of mystery will help to lure students into the gallery.

Before her education at Stout, she had no formal training in art with the exception of a few high school courses. Upon her graduation from high school Kalmon entered the Registered Nursing program in Marshfield. She worked two different nursing jobs and then got a job working with emotionally disturbed children in public schools. She admitted, "I learned alot from them."

She worked in the public schools for two years. Then, she suddenly realized she was getting no place. She had begun doing painting as a hobby and her love for it grew. In time she found herself in need of changes. "I realized that making art was as important to me as breathing."

She met some disapproval upon her decision to take up art for a living, let alone the expense of schooling. She explained, "A lot of people didn't understand because nursing brought in a lot of money." But Kalmon had made up her mind that she "had" to do art.

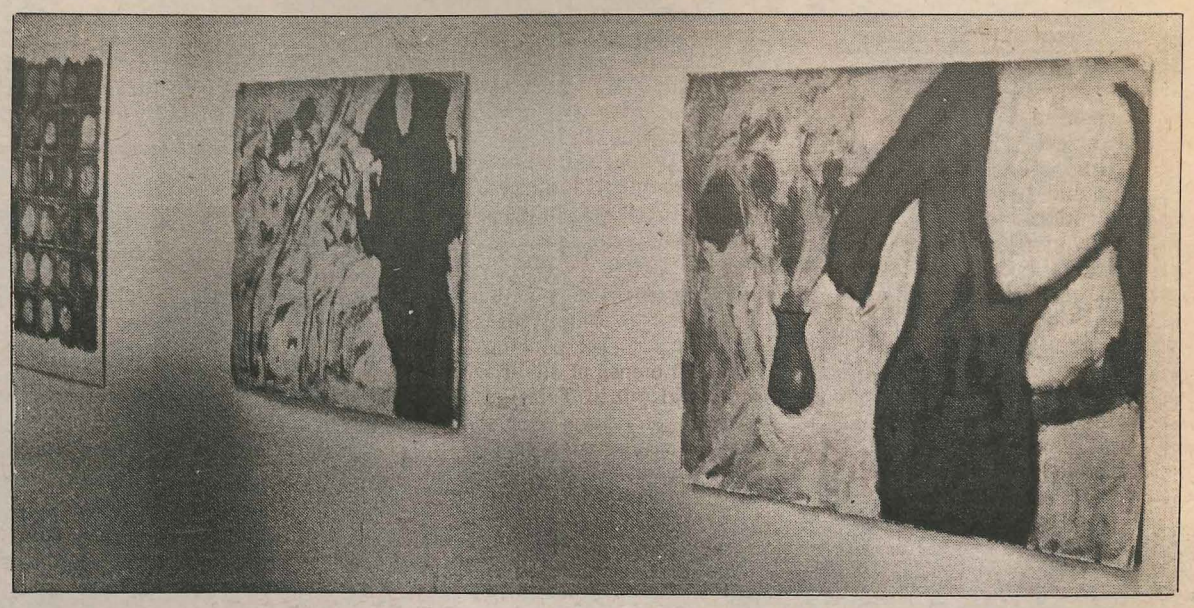
Kalmon did not feel intimidated having not entered college at a younger age. She values her previous experiences, "It was good to be older, not that that's good for everyone,"she continued, "It was good to have done other things before coming here because you have something to work off of, you have something to draw, paint, or print about."

Kalmon was eager to learn as she entered Stout's art program. "I came here with ideas in an embryonic stage. Being here has given me the tools I need," she went on to say,"I'd rather learn techniques than have techniques and no ideas."

Now that she is looking forward to graduating, she looks back on her studies as very important. She commented, "Being at Stout has been very important to me. It's been a great place to grow, as a person, as well as in my chosen field of study."

She has come to feel comfortable with the staff. "The teachers here know you. You're not just a number." She finds this a very significant factor in the success of Stout's art program.

Kalmon welcomes anyone to come and see her works. She can't really site the appropriate words to describe her work. She did say, "My work is comments, it's my perspective, my reality." She realizes that other people will see something different in the work. In any event she welcomes anyone, and everyone.



Catherine Kalmon says she came to UW-Stout "with ideas in an embryonic stage." Kalmon's graduation exhibit shows the technique which she learned at Stout which gave her the tools to express her ideas. The show hangs in the Upstairs Gallery, Room 209 Applied Arts. (Photo by Brad Kautzer)

For Those About To Rock
Wanted: Rocker
David Chase

Now that I've acquired the job of arts editor for the Stoutonia, I feel this overwhelming surge of responsibility. My time is now limited and for the school year of 1986-87 I___ ll be busier than ever.

So in order to make time for myself, I have decided to find an individual that would like to share a column with me. Someone who could offer a new outlook on music and the people involved. I need someone who loves music; who loves rock and roll.

I took a step back and looked objectively at my column. In doing this I realize I neglected several areas of music. These areas include jazz, classical and several forms of contemporary rock. I did not avoid these areas of music because I dislike them, this was not the case. I stayed clear of these areas due to lack of knowledge.

I consider myself an authority on certain areas of music, but certainly not all music. I feel most Stout students are into rock and roll, rather than jazz or classical forms of music. But rock and roll comes in several forms, some which I can appreciate, some which I have no interest, and some which I have a hard time comprehending. Whatever the form may be, it's still rock and roll to me.

What I need for the column is an outlook of todays contemporary rock. Someone who knows the music well, and can express their views in an artistic way. I need someone who knows more than just the hit song and video, I need someone who is able inform the readers of what they don't know.

A lot of the popular bands of today, XTC, Wham, Duran Duran, Prince etc... are familiar to me, but my knowledge of these bands is limited. Of course there are alot of bands to be recognized, and no one is expected to have a vast knowledge of all of them, but the more you know, the more qualified you are to share my column.

Your taste in music does not have to be the same as mine in order to qualify for the position. In fact, I would prefer us to have different taste. After all, variety is the spice of life.

So if you feel you may be qualified, or you know someone that is, leave your name and number at the Stoutonia office and I'll get back to you.

Rock on...

I would like to use the rest of my column to pay tribute to a man named Richard Manuel. Manuel was a key member of "The Band", playing the piano on all 13 albums the group released. Sadly enough, Manuel committed suicide in his hotel room by hanging himself.

You may recall the success of The Band, with hit songs like "Up On Cripple Creek," "The Night They Drove Old Dixie Down" and "Rag Mama Rag." If you don't recall, you may want to check them out, they're worth looking into.

Metalsmiths present works and advice

Noreen Spraner
Arts Reporter

Wednesday, April 23, was a big day for arts metals students. Two visiting metalsmiths, Komelia Okim and Lynda LaRoche, were here at Stout to lecture and critique advanced art metals students' work.

That morning Okim, a professor from Montgomery College in Rockville, Maryland, who is currently a visiting graduate professor at UW-Madison, gave a workshop featuring metalworking techniques. She learned these techniques from a National Living Treasure of Korea, while on an exchange lectureship there.

One of the techniques, called Poe mock-Saang-gaam, or cloth inlay, is like the western Damascene technique. Very fine copper, gold, or silver wire is inlaid into soft steel without soldering. The soft steel is prepared by first chiseling fine lines into it. The lines, chiseled in four directions, resemble finely woven cloth.

The other technique she demonstrated, was called Keumboo or gold overlay. This technique is used for embellishing already finished pieces of silver with very fine gold foil in a design. Not requiring soldering either, the finished piece is annealed (heated) a few times, and pickled (dropped in a chemical solution) to bring out the silver. The gold inlay is then applied , using a hot plate, electric torch, or torch for heat.

Later that afternoon Okim gave a slide lecture featuring her work for interested faculty and students.

They were inspired by such things as the human figure...African masks, and even ET.

Her work, both holloware and jewelry, showed her varied influences. They were inspired by such things as the human figure, Korean women's folkdress, Korean cityscapes, African masks, and even ET. Her teapots with their round forms, and long, gracefully curved handles were inspired by dance. These pieces, intricate and abstract, would often combine the use of different metals, wood, ivory, and some stone settings. Well designed and uncluttered, they could stand on their own as sculpture.

At 7:00 that evening Lynda LaRoche ,an artist entrepreneur, gave her lecture entitled "Business Alternatives for Artists." She owns and operates LaRoch Ltd., a gallery she started herself, which specializes in limited edition, and one-of-a-kind jewelry and holloware. She has shown her work both nationally and internationally since 1970.

She recounted how she had received her B.F.A. in painting and planned on supporting herself, and her painting with jewelry making. What she found was that she wasn't spending enough time at either one to really make it. She decided to concentrate on jewelry because she enjoyed it more.

She was already successfully selling her metalwork when she decided to return to Indiana University for her graduate degree in art metals in 1976.

Her slide presentation gave an extensive overview of her work for the past 10 years. Stylistically, she and Okim are a world apart.

The Art of Grilling

Denise Cain

It has been a very long year of eating at the commons and the union and if your stomach is revolting like mine, it's time to do a little cooking on our own. Since the weather has warmed up it is an excellent time to break out the charcoal or Weber grill and do some barbecuing, college style.

Barbecuing is a great form of entertainment that brings friends together for some casual, spirited socialization. Many men like to barbecue because it brings out the rugged outdoorsman in them and many woman like to because they can show off their cooking skills in front of the men.

You want to be sure and buy the right meat for grilling. The best steaks to grill are sirloin and tenderloin because they are very tender. When barbecuing chicken, select whole or halved broilers. Chickens may also be purchased in parts. The breasts, drumsticks, and wings are suitable for the barbecue.

My brother Paul, nicknamed "Cookie" around the Weber prefers porkchops on the grill. Rib porkchops or center cut chops are the best, most tender pork chops to barbecue.

When grilling, always have the meat at room temperature before cooking. This allows the meat to cook more evenly. Turn the meat only once and always use tongs or a wide spatula. Never use a fork because it pierces the meat, allowing the juices to escape.

Jeff Bjork, Sports Information Director here at Stout, is the unofficial authority on the grilling of bratwurst. Jeff feels that butcher shop brats are better than factory made brats because they are fresher, less dry, and have a better blend of spices and meat. However, if you can't get butcher shop brats Jeff recommends Abbyland brats from Abbotsford, Wisconsin.

Jeff's special recipe for preparing bratwurst is:

fresh brats
beer
tomato sauce
cornstarch diluted in cold water onions
oregano

Simmer the brats with the beer until they appear done. Remove the brats. Save the remaining beer and combine with tomato sauce. Add onions and oregano to suit your taste. Thicken with cornstarch base over low heat and save. Grill the brats, pricking them with a fork to let juices escape. Serve Jeff's special tomato sauce over hot grilled brats.

Here's my tribute to the common's "Stoutato":

Barbecued Potatoes

Select medium size potatoes, scrub and pat dry. Rub the skins with soft butter or margarine. Wrap each potato tightly in a double thickness of heavy duty aluminum foil. Lay potato on top of hot coals and barbecue for 45-60 minutes or until done. Turn several times during baking and serve with butter, melted Wisconsin cheese, or sour cream.

Cheese Topped French Bread

Cut a loaf of french bread lengthwise. Brush generously with butter seasoned with garlic salt. Sprinkle liberally with grated Parmesan or sharp Cheddar cheese. Put halves together; wrap securely in a double thickness of heavy aluminum foil. Place on grill 10 to 12 minutes or on briquets 6 to 9 minutes. Slice crosswise and serve.

This is my first column for Campus Cuisine. I am finishing my sophomore year in dietetics and will be using my almost vast knowledge of food to write this column next year. If you have any suggestions or comments please let me know at the Stoutonia office.

Fashion Show

Following her was sophomore Sandra Grace, for her entry of a coat. In fourth place was Angnes Salvador, for a beautifully done white linen dress.

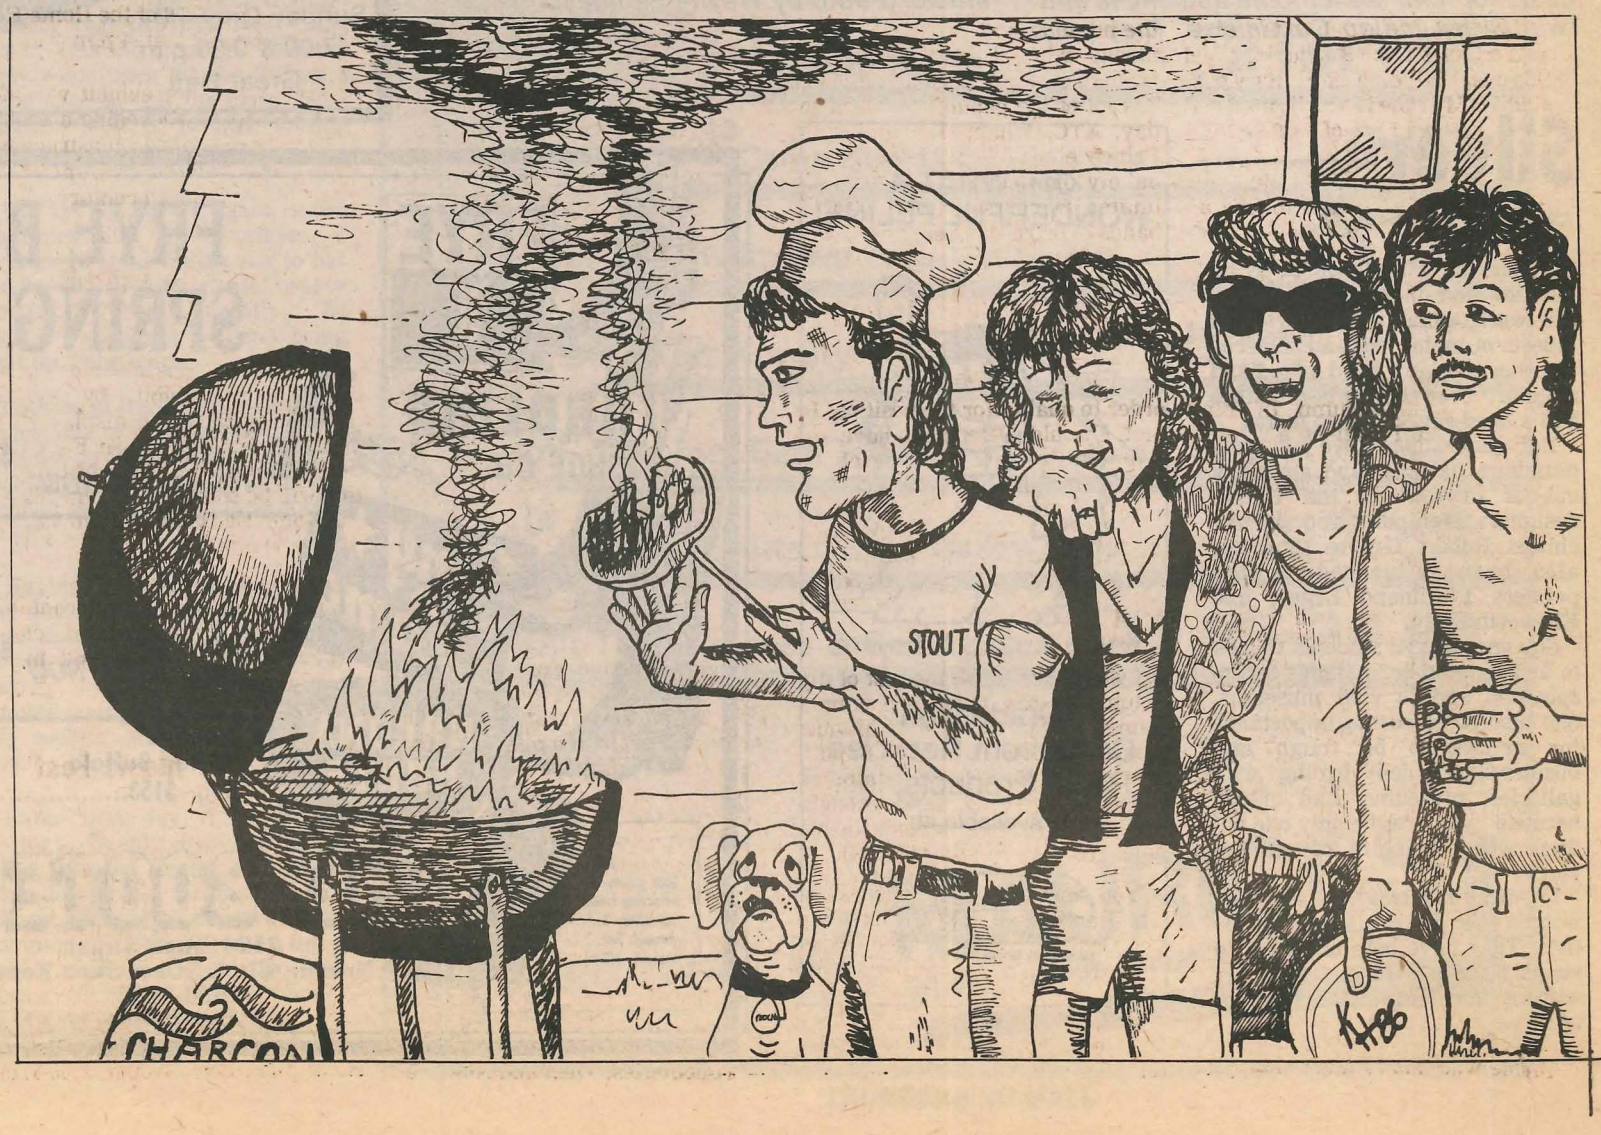
Program director, Dr. Annette Fraser was pleased with this, "whopping show". She was highly impressed with the group of students she had been working with she commented during the award ceremony, "this was not a tireless group, it was a tiring group,"she joked.

She was especially impressed with her coordinators, Nancy Engen, Noelle Hannay and Laura Kay Reek, she announced that they had been doing a lot of last minute hard work. In Laura's case so much as to fill in for one of the models. Fraser described the efforts, "these girls have been doing a lot of pinch-hitting."

The actual judging was based on a system of points. Each garment had the possibility of getting as much as 70 points. Ten points out of each of seven categories.

The categories were, design quality, detail compatible with design, detail compatible with the fabric, quality of construction, aesthetic appeal, creativity and innovativeness and marketability. This year a new category, surface design relating to the fabric chosen was added to the competition.

Many talented designers left the fashion show with prizes, but all could certainly leave with a sense of pride and accomplishment. The future in fashion looks bright for these young designers.



Brothers from India share notes

Noreen Spraner
News Reporter

Thanks to Stout there is some ethnic diversity here in Menomonie. One example is the Ramsamooj family. The brothers, of Indian descent, from Trinidad, haveraditional Indian music, and are also very active in the Stout Yoga Assembly. Ramahdeen Ramsamooj, the eldest brother, teaches the class.

They are here at Stout studying in the fields of science and technology, and found their music, as Ramahdeen puts it, "....helped us appreciate the artistic side of life."

They come from a musical family. Both parents performed music in one form or another for the family. They saw to it that all nine boys learned traditional Indian music formally. One brother, Ravideen, is currently studying music in India.

They play Indian classical, religious, and popular music on traditional and some not so traditional instruments. Delip plays the synthesizer, Ramahdeen plays tabla, Ojar plays the sitar, and Venai, the all-around musician, plays the violin and mandolin. Their instruments include the harmonium, manjeer (small bells), swarmandel (harp), and tambourine.

At home in Trinidad, they never performed for the public, but restricted their music to the family's religious occasions. Since coming here to study, they have found that their music was appreciated not only by people in Menomonie, but also, the Indian community of the Twin Cities metro area.

It was the Indian community of the Twin Cities area that really got them out playing for the public. They are the only Indian musicians in the area and are in demand for weddings, parties religious and cultural occasions.

Engagements in this area have included the Pawn, the Fine Arts Fest, Friends of International Students occasions and they have entertained at the International Dinner for the past three years. They have also performed for UW-Eau Claires Pop Festival.

In the Twin Cities area they have performed at the Festival of Nations, in the Landmark Center, and the Coffeehouse Extempore, in Minneapolis. This performance was aired on KFAI, a local Minneapolis public radio station.

This month their engagements include an imported rug exhibition at International Market Square, a program honoring the Nobel Prize winning author from India, Ravindrenath Tagore, at the Jefferson Highschool auditorium, and a program for graduating seniors at Macalaster College.

They have found and agent now, Cliff Sloane, to handle their engagements. What money they make usually helps pay their travelling expenses and to buy more instruments.

When asked how they feel about living here in such a small town like Menomonie, Ramahdeen replied, "We feel comfortable here, very, very comfortable. I have found genuine love from the Menomonie community."

LaRoche is mainly inspired by industrial and mechanical design. Her work, which is all fabricated (sheets of metal, cut and soldered together), is very hard edged and angular, even her arced shapes had a hard-edged look to them.

Her inspirations have run from plumbing fixtures, and stacks of cut-out drywall to the Italian designers Memphis, and the architect Robert Graves. She has also been influenced by the painters Ferdinand Leger, and Ellsworth Kelly.

She encouraged students to look to artists in other mediums for inspiration and to visit museums. She also stressed the importance for artists to be tough and businesslike when dealing with galleries, museums, and clients because "you are the only one out there who is going to look out for you."

It was inspiring to see two women who have made it as artists. They have both managed to support themselves and their art without sacrificing their artistic integrity.

Ventriloquist or Dummy

Jef Maynard

I imagined that one half of the people I saw were ventriloquists and most of the other half were dummies. No aspersions on anyone intended, neither based on wooden looks nor budget-sized intelligence quotients. I just had that premise in my head for a while. All the world's a vaudeville stage. (Ever wonder who's in the audience?)

Walking around and talking to people it seemed that, if in groups, some of the people were throwing their voices, and ideas, into the bodies of the other people.

According to somebody named George Schindler, ventriloquism has proven roots all the way to downtown Egypt, 2000 B.C. Maybe the phophetic oracles were ventriloquists. Some Greek comedians stood in front of seekers of future truth and jerked them around royally. "You will be suffering terrible heartbreak and poverty, then you'll have a nasty little accident...(you poor fool.)" There's a seeker born every minute.

You're not smart enough to talk to a dummy.

I was having lunch in the Terrace Cafe, (or the Tear-Ass Cafe as my friend calls it. He's always in a hurry, like 'I've got to wolf down this burger then tear ass off to class.') As I watched some "co-eds" chattering, behind them was a guy by himself who seemed to be listening to their conversation.

It occurred to me that he was not only listening, he was part of the it, using one of the co-eds as a dummy. The guy, whose name I'll change to Mortimer Snerd, was "ventriloquistically" in control of the girl in the black and white checked skirt, red paisley housecoat, and black lace high-tops.

Mortimer has the girl say, "Look at that tramp. She's the one that jumped Mortimer in the bathroom on my floor. I saw her pee in the sink at the Marion. What a lizard." Only some of which is true.

The other women freak at what she said. Plus the fact that Mortimer had the dummy stuff her mouth too full of cooked peas, which tumble out in a disgusting little green avalanche while she talks. Since Morty is really the one doing the talking, the girl's elocution is still just right. This gets the other girls upset. How he gets her to move and blink and spin her head all the way around is beyond me.

I realize that there are lots of ventriloquists around. Ronald Reagun is really just an antique dummy and, you guessed it, Nancy is pulling his levers. That explains a lot of things, doesn't it

I saw two friends outside the bank uptown and I ask how's business? The dummy says, "My stocks went from 4 1/4 to up to 6, back to 5 then to 7, and in case of emergency, 911."

As I walk past the courthouse a policewoman and her husband are walking out, hand in hand, in cuffs. She has him say, "Law is funny. They lock up the jury and let the prisoner out on bail." He should know.

As I stop off for a pineapple juice cocktail at a quiet little gin-mill, I sit next to a tall blond dummy and her partner, a short girl with her hand up the back of the tall one's sweatshirt.

The dummy says to me, "I was hunting and I shot a moose in the yours..." "What yours?" I ask. The dummy says, "Rum and coke, what yours?"

Some dummies say the funniest things.

The ventiloquist has the tall one light up a cigar and pronounce in grandiose gestures, "We travelled for ages, weary, lost, until we came to the secret shores..." "What shores?" I ask. "Rum and coke, what's yours?"

I realized that one of my professors was a dummy. Staring through the dense haze of my 8 o'clock class, wow, shock-o-matic, this guy really is a dummy. Somebody else is at the wheel here, I'm going to sleep.

How did I know he was a dummy? There was a crippled camel in the corner. Vaudeville gags are the schtick that broke the camel's back. I lit a cigarette, a Camel, and stretched back to watch the show.

"Man comes from monkeys," the professor professes. "Not Welshmen," the ventriloquist retorts from the front row. "Why not?" asks the dummy. "Because they come from Whales." I got a drop card to quit the class, but I couldn't tell if it was anthro, geography, or zoology.

Out on the street again, more dummies and more talkers. I overheard some floozie say to her boyfriend, "I just made twenty dollars." "Wow, honestly," he says. "I wish you wouldn't bring that up," she quips.

Looking at the floozie, two young dudes, one of whom is probably a dummy, do their routine. "Look at that lady's wig." "That's not a wig, her hair is set." "What time does it go off?"

Having breakfast one day, these two guys, both of whom may have been dummies are talking. "What do you want for breakfast?" "Pancakes," "Really? I thought you wanted waffles," "I do, but I can't say waffles without moving your lips."

Later that day, I go to the doctor's. Deeply absorbed in the three year old Reader's Digest in the waiting room the doctor tells a patient, "We've got the cure for the common cold. You get into a tub of cold gasoline and light two matches." "Great, what's the trick?" "Lighting the second match."

I asked the doctor how he learned to be a ventriloquist. After he told me about med school, I asked if I could try it with a cute dummy nurse. He said, "You're not smart enough to talk to a dummy." "Well fine," I said, "I'll write you a letter."

Oertel, Vogler contribute to Stout's tennis tradition

Paul Wehking
Sports Reporter

It was four years ago when they set foot on the UW-Stout campus as incoming freshman. In those four years, they helped and eventually led Stout to four District 14 championships and now pending, four WSUC conference titles.

"They" are Rob Oertel and Joel Vogler and their athletic efforts for the past four years have been channeled into Stout's men's tennis dynasty, which by the way, has been Stout's winningest team for quite a few years now.

Both players are seniors and have contributed to Stout's tennis team for four years. Now, they find themselves in this, their final season as Blue Devil netters.

Oertel hails from West Allis, Wis. where he attended West Allis Central High School. In high school, tennis did not attract Oertel's abilities as much as it does now. Tennis may be at the top of his list now but in high school it just wasn't his racket. Oertel admits, "I blew it (tennis) off in high school. I played a lot of basketball in high school. I wish I would have played more tennis but I just wasn't into it as much as I am now."

Oertel played for his high school during his sophomore and junior years but says that he "blew it off for golf," in his senior year. "I regret it now because I could have possibly gotten a scholarship to play tennis somewhere if I had played my senior year," Oertel said.

As a freshman, Oertel found himself on a rising Stout tennis team which he said at that time, "had a lot of new blood." That new blood turned into a hot stream which swept Oertel along and according to him, is the reason that he has stayed at Stout. "After my first two years, I was going to go to UW-Milwaukee for architecture but the tennis program is what has kept me here," Oertel said.

Over his years here at Stout, Oertel has attained such feats as being voted team MVP (last year), two individual conference championships, and one district championship apart from the team's accomplishments. This year, Oertel is currently ranked 17th in singles and he and Mike Friedman are ranked 14th in NCAA Division III polls.

Oertel's future plans include traveling to Europe to play professional tennis. "I'd be playing on the Satellite Circuit which is a circuit that finds out what a player is made of. I have to try or I wouldn't be able to live with myself. I have to find out if I can make it or not," Oertel said.

In the case of Joel Vogler, the story starts a little differently. Vogler's locale was that of Wisconsin Rapids, where he attended Lincoln High School.

Vogler, who's father was a state doubles champion in 1949, said that his family is very tennis oriented. Including his father's accomplishments, his sister is currently a high school tennis coach and his brother played tennis in high school.

As a sophomore at Lincoln, Vogler played number four singles. During his junior year he played number one singles and was voted the team's MVP. In his senior year, he captained his team and was a state tournament entrant.

It was for the Hotel and Restaurant Management major that Vogler came to Stout. Playing

Netters dominate championships; win 4th straight District 14 crown

Paul Wehking
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout men's tennis team rolled through their competition last weekend en route to their fourth consecutive District 14 championship crown.

The competition came from all the WSUC schools except the team that gave the Stout netters their toughest conference match — UW-Whitewater. Whitewater did not compete because they are playing in the NCAA this year rather than in the NAIA. The worthy Whitewater squad will be on hand for the playing of the conference tournament this weekend however.

Stout's 32 team points proved to be more than enough for the win since the second place finishers, UW-La Crosse and UW-Eau Claire, were tied at 13 points each.

In singles play, Junior Tony Pheifer was the only casualty in the first round. Pheifer lost to Bert Krawczyk of La Crosse in three sets, 6-3, 1-6, 7-5. Krawczyk plays in the number three slot for La Crosse and Pheifer plays in the sixth position for Stout. Pheifer credited some of his mistakes (points lost) in the match to his lack of experience and others to his opponent's ability and luck. All the other Stout players received byes in the first round of play.

The second round signaled the beginning of competition for the rest of the Stout squad. Number one seed Rob Oertel got rolling with an easy 6-1, 6-1 victory over his UW-Milwaukee opponent. Joel Vogler blanked Jeff Stanich of UW-Parkside 6-0, 6-0 to advance into the third round. Mike Friedman sat down yet another UW-Milwaukee player beating him 6-2, 6-3. Mark Paine slashed Parkside's Dan Hayatt 6-1, 6-1 and Junior John Leehy goose-egged his Eau Claire opponent 6-0, 6-0.

Oertel began the third round with a 6-3, 6-2 win over Laurent Derichard of Eau Claire to advance him to the quarter-finals. Vogler continued to embarrass his opponents, this time by pounding Al Nelson of La Crosse 6-1, 6-1.

Friedman, who was not seeded, had a gutsy match in which he ousted third-seeded Brent Hoag of Eau Claire with a score of 6-4, 6-1. Hoag is Eau Claire's number one singles player. "I was nervous just because he was their first man but Coach (Bob Smith) encouraged me," Friedman said.

The next match had two Stout players pitted against each other. Mark Paine and John Leehy met in their third round bout and Leehy managed to come out on top winning 6-3, 6-2 over his teammate. The loss put Paine out of the tournament leaving four Stout netters still alive.

> I was nervous just because he was their first man but Coach Smith encouraged me.
> —Mike Friedman Tennis player

Again, Oertel advanced smoothly, this time by smoking his Oshkosh opponent 6-0, 6-0, moving him into semi-final play. Vogler beat Brad Emmert of La Crosse 6-4, 6-2, only to find himself matched against Oertel in the semi's.

Friedman knocked off another La Crosse player beating him 6-3, 6-2, carrying him into the semi-finals with Oertel and Vogler. Leehy scored Stout's second upset of the tournament by defeating second-seeded Javier Avila of Oshkosh 6-4, 6-0, enabling him to join his other three teammates in the semi-finals.

Oertel and Leehy made it through the semi's beating their fellow Blue Devils with 6-4, 4-6, 6-3 and 6-3, 6-3 match scores respectively. Oertel admitted that, "It's tough to concentrate as much when you're playing your teammate but you just have to ignore that fact."

The final match between Oertel and Leehy was not played and ended in a draw because the Stout netters had the first four places sewed up and as Oertel said, "We get to play each other enough in practice."

In doubles play the results were almost identical. Stout's first and second doubles teams of Oertel-Friedman and Leehy-Paine met in the finals and again the Blue Devils declined to play, leaving the match at a draw.

The number three doubles duo of Vogler-Pheifer was edged 6-4, 6-7,and 6-0, in the third round by their Oshkosh foes, putting them out of tournament action.

During the tournament the Stout netters had been matched up against each other a total of five times in singles and doubles combined. Three matches were played and the other two ended in draws.

The tournament win enables Stout to compete in the NAIA national tournament which is to be held in Kansas City, Mo. When asked if he had expected such enormous success Coach Smith replied, "I felt we would win the tournament but I never expected to have four in the semi-finals in singles."

Stout had a tough match this week against Gustavus Aldolphus, who is currently ranked eighth in the NCAA Division III polls. A win over Gustavus could send Stout to the NCAA national tournament which is visited by the top eight teams in the nation in Division III. Results of that crucial match were not available when this was put to press.

This weekend Stout will try to extend their conference championship tear to four in row. "Whitewater will be ready to play along with the other tough players in the conference," Smith said.

Sluggers snap Gophers' winning streak

Louie Filkins
Sports Reporter

The UW-Stout men's baseball team snapped the University of Minnesota's 18-game winning streak last Wednesday. The Devils split a double-header with the Gophers 5-2, 2-9. The 18-game streak was the second longest in Minnesota history.

In the first game, John Schmitt held the Gophers to just six hits and two runs as he pitched five and two-thirds innings. Sophomore Brad Resch earned the save when he came in with two out in the bottom of the sixth. Resch threw for four outs allowing only one hit.

The Blue Devils' offense shaped up as they scored five runs against Division I Minnesota. Jeff Kloes led off the scoring in the second inning by smacking a 1-0 count single. After a sacrifice by Bob Effinger, Carl Drezek drove Kloes in for the first run of the game. Both Effinger and Kloes were one for two.

The remaining four Stout runs in the first meeting came mainly from Minnesota errors. Four consecutive walks by Odegard and one by Prust gave the Blue Devils two runs. Tim Buswell was beaned by a pitch to add another run and John Davenport was credited with an RBI as he hit into a fielder's choice to give Stout their last run of the game.

The second meeting was almost offensively uneventful for the Stout. They scored only two runs in the top of the sixth as they were overpowered by the Gophers, 9-2. Drezek went two for three and Ghelfi went two for four during the second meeting. Senior pitcher Chris Fasnacht had a disappointing four innings giving up seven runs, six in the first inning.

The Blue Devils also split their J.V. double-header with Normandale College on Friday, 1-5, 8-1. They swept both Alumni games on Saturday and Sunday's meeting against UW-River Falls was rained out.

Stout got their chance against River Falls on Tuesday and they came through winning both games 9-4 and 8-6. The Devils went into the game knowing that any one conference loss would blow their chances of winning the championship.

The first game saw Stout hit four home runs and dominate the Falcons 9-4. Ed Space, Drezek, Davenport and Kloes all earned round-trippers to boost the Blue Devils to their victory. Space, who was three for three in the game said, "Their pitcher threw groovers right down the middle. I was fired up to be in the game. He threw a fastball over the plate and I rode it out."

Davenport was three for four and Kloes went three for four with two doubles. River Falls scored three runs in the sixth and one in the seventh as Stout pitcher Mike Charboneau threw a strong game. The sophomore right-hander allowed only six hits during the distance.

The second meeting witnessed much more even play by the two ball clubs. The Falcons jumped on the scoreboard first with a sacrifice RBI to second in the first inning. Stout came back in the bottom of the first as Davenport singled, Ghelfi hit into a fielder's choice, and Greg Osowski walked. Space followed later with a base hit to drive in Ghelfi. The two teams battled on exchanging the lead.

Some of the highlights in the game included a throw from center fielder Tim Buswell to home plate that thwarted a possible Falcon run. "I knew the play that had to be made was at the plate. There were two outs and I went for the third" said Buswell. Jim Miller achieved his 33rd stolen base of his career which ties him with Stout's all-time record.

The game ended dramatically as River Falls had runners on second and third with only one out. A soft Texas-league line drive was hit down the first base line. Junior Scott Aschenbrenner made a miraculous over-the-shoulder catch. "The ball bounced out of my glove, off my chest, off my bare hand and back into my mit," Aschenbrenner said. He then turned and fired a seed directly to home to stop the Falcon runner which was then gunned down at third by Kloes.

It all turned out to be an exciting finish and victory for Blue Devil fans. Stout plays UW-Eau Claire tomorrow and UW-La Crosse on Saturday at home in must-win situations for the final games of the season.

tennis was not his main intent. But, main intent or not, Vogler found his way to Coach Bob Smith and Smith directed him toward the courts.

Vogler's college tennis accomplishments include being the team's captain and winning the singles championship in the number four slot last year.

Vogler plans to graduate next December with his H&R degree. The future may find him working as a club tennis pro or working at something related to his major.

On the courts is where these two stories start to coincide. As freshmen, Vogler and Oertel became close friends while playing on Stout's first-ever solo conference championship team. Now, three years later, with four District 14 championships and very possibly a fourth WSUC conference championship under their belts, the two are still friends.

Judging from what this reporter saw, their friendship seems to thrive on giving each other a hard time. Smith describes them as, "good fiends who like to goof around." When asked to describe Oertel, Vogler said smiling, "cocky," while Oertel maintains that Vogler is, "too laid back."

Over the years the two have demonstrated immense dedication to their sport, which is evident in their accomplishments. Along with their dedication, both players credit Smith for the role he played in their Stout experiences. "If it wasn't for Coach pushing me, I may have quit after my freshman year," Vogler said. Oertel shared a similar sentiment saying, "Smitty isn't just a coach, he's a friend to all of us."

Both players, regardless of being either cocky or laid back, will, as Smith says, "come dressed to play," when they defend their conference title for the fourth time this coming weekend in Madison.

Bucks get No Respect

Paul Wydeven

This week my investigation looked for the answer of my second question: who are the Milwaukee Bucks? One of my old roommates says,"They are the Rodney Dangerfields of the NBA." They never get any respect.

The Bucks have won six consecutive central division championships under Don Nelson. This has got the Bucks into the NBA playoffs the last six years, but they have not won the NBA championship. Is this why they never get any respect?

The Bucks have always lost to the Boston Celtics or the Philadelphia 76ers. Is this the reason CBS fails to carry the Milwaukee Bucks games or why Sports Illustrated doesn't feature any of the Milwaukee Bucks?

Monday I received my copy of "The Sporting News" and I figured there would be lots of information on the Bucks, since there are in the playoffs. The only thing mentioned was there stats along with the all the other NBA teams stats, but nothing else.

Fortunately, there is the Milwaukee Sentinel and Journal, who have great coverage for the hometown team. Before the game Tuesday night against the 76ers, Don Nelson said, "When people asked me who I preferred to play, I said Philly because we've never beaten them and I'd like to get another chance."

Don then added a personal note, where he said, "It's a competitive thing with me. I'm glad we're playing them. It's a great challenge for me and the Bucks." The Bucks have lost to Philly the last four out of five years.

Unfortunately, both the 76ers and the Bucks have a lot of players injured. The Bucks have Sidney Moncrief out, with an injured left foot. Commenting on his condition before the game, Moncrief said, " I tried to run yesterday, and it didn't respond very well. I'd say the odds are a little less than 50-50."

The 76ers have guard Andrew Tony is out with a bad foot of his own. Center Moses Malone has been out since his eye injury suffered against the Bucks March 28th. The 76ers are also wondering about the playing statues of veteran forward Bob McAdoo and point forward Maurice Cheeks.

The Bucks will have to face the sixers new look with 6'8" forward Terry Catledge and 6'10" forward Greg Stokes. The Sixers will want help from second-year Charles Barkley or veteran Bobby Jones.

The teams began their fifth playoff series in the past sixth years Tuesday night, the 76ers beat the Bucks 118 - 112. This will make the Bucks uphill battle to win respect in sports.

Until the Bucks do get past the 76ers and the Celtics, chances are they still will have a lack of Media coverage and a lack of respect. Don Nelson is going to search hard for a center, so the Bucks can compete against the Celtics and the 76ers. Then maybe CBS will cover the Bucks games and give them the respect they deserve.

Aerobics class provides fun and fitness

Jenna Sue Martin
Sports Reporter

It's 8 a.m. and people are crowded around the Union Service Center, eager to sign up for one of the hottest minicourses at Stout. Two to three hours pass and all sessions are closed.

What is it these people are so interested in joining? Haven't you heard? Kathy Hartung and Bonnie White's instructed aerobic and calisthenics classes. What is so great about these minicourses? I decided to investigate.

Last Thursday I threw on some shorts and a T-shirt and jogged over to the Commons Glass Lounge to attend the 5:30 session.

Bonnie, the instructor, wasn't there but Ann Wittig, who will be teaching next year, was testing her routines out on the class.

We started out with a warm-up, then proceeded with various routines choreographed to popular, fun songs. We were to remain jogging throughout the exercises. I was determined to keep up, sticking with it the full hour.

Besides dance moves we also did some squats and exercises to tone the stomach, legs and gluteus maximus. It came time for the cool down. I was still breathing, yea! At times I wasn't so sure I would be.

After class I asked Ann, "What made you decide to become an aerobics instructor?" "I really like physical fitness and I enjoy helping others," she replied.

You can join either an aerobics class, calisthenics, or both, which many do. Ann informed me that the calisthenics are for those who want to tone their body. Aerobics is also for toning and for people who want to lose those extra pounds. "You meet more people too," she says.

Gretchen Liebzeit has been in both the aerobics and calisthenics classes since January. Asked what she thought about them, Gretchen enthusiastically responded, "If you're wound up about something it's great! You burn up major calories too. It's fun."

This year Bonnie White and Kathy Hartung have been teaching the Monday-Thursday afternoon classes. Bonnie has been teaching since last summer and will be returning next fall. She will also be leading a session this summer — 6:30 is the tentative time. Kathy started instructing this past fall. She will be graduating in May.

Of the three people who tried out April 11, Ann Wittig and Tami Derbique were chosen as new instructors for next year. To try out you must present a warm-up, an aerobic, and a calisthenics routine. You are also judged on your verbal ability.

As Bonnie White puts it, "It's not enough to get up there and go through the motions. You have to give verbal instructions."

Bonnie thought it was disappointing that more people didn't try out. She says it's everyone's dream to lead a class, be looked up to, be paid to exercise, and keep in shape. "Everybody wants to be an aerobics instructor but nobody likes to put in all the work that has to go into it."

Bonnie said the hardest part is keeping up the image. "Everybody expects you to eat right and keep in shape. I'm only human."

Bonnie doesn't have a stereo or tape deck so the most difficult part for her has been putting together music, which is all done on the instructor's own time.

They are tossing around the idea of a membership club but it probably won't happen for awhile. With this idea people are able to choose from a schedule of classes running morning, day and night, Monday-Saturday.

This would accommodate everyone's schedule. The problem is finding a place to hold all the classes.

Where and when can you sign up for these classes? Sign-up is at the Service Center in the Union. It takes place two weeks before class starts for each quarter.

How much does it cost? The fee is $5.00 for twice a week, $.50 per session. Classes run five weeks.

Bonnie summed it up, "It's a craze right now and it's not just for girls either. A lot of guys are interested in getting into aerobic shape too."

She said, "Guys can feel comfortable about doing it because it's not like a complicated pom-pon routine. It's basic movements to get your heart rate elevated."

I found the class to be really enjoyable. Afterwards I felt like I had done something for myself. The more I sweated, the better it felt.

I'm going to join Bonnie's summer session because it's a workout that is fun, beneficial to your health and burns up a lot of calories. I loved it!

Question—
What made you decide to become an aerobics instructor?
Answer—
I really like physical fitness and I enjoy helping others. You meet more people too.

'Hackers' compete in rec center tourney

Wendy Johnson
Sports Reporter

With a big crowd cheering the ten participants on at the hacky sack tournament last Friday, John Langsdorf became the big winner.

Even if you're not sure what hacky sack is, you've probably seen the newest trend in the sports scene. Hacky sack is where a footbag, which is a small leather bean bag, is kicked around using only the feet and knees. Hacky sackers cannot use the upper part of their body for a tool.

Langsdorf won the three different categories, with help from John Hunt in the group category. The categories include the individual, group and freestyle.

Participants in the individual category were judged by Ann Buttke, who is the supervisor at the recreational center, on how many times they could "hack" the footbag. To win the group category, which was also judged by Buttke, two people as a team had to be able to pass to each other the most times.

The audience was really involved with the freestyle because the winner was decided by who received the loudest cheers. The participant was to show off their fanciest kicks with the footbag at this time. Langsdorf commented, "Everyone seemed to have a lot of fun."

Langsdorf also won a competition last February in Chicago, Ill.

Langsdorf started hacky sack two and half years ago, and, according to him, "It has developed as a habit for me. For me it's a physical and mental high, like for example running is for some people."

Langsdorf, who was the organizer of the competition last weekend, is hoping to start a hacky sack club at Stout. If a student joined the club he would be on a list with the other club members. The list would be used when a club member wants to "hack" and wants to know some people to call. Also there would be times set up for the club members on Fridays and Saturdays to go and "hack" every week.

> Everyone seemed to have a lot of fun
> —John Langsdorf

One reason Langsdorf decided to start a club is that Stout doesn't have one and also because hacky sack is a growing sport with people at Stout. Next year Langsdorf has big plans if the club goes over well. One idea is getting a hacky sack invitational at Stout with other universities in this area. They do have a hacky sack tournament set for next year for September 12.

If anyone is interested in joining a hacky sack club call John Langsdorf at 232-2763.

Badger Coach McClain Remembered

Paul Wydeven
Sports Editor

In sports there are very few people who could be called excellent. Dave McClain was one of these people.

This past Monday in Madison, University of Wisconsin Football Coach Dave McClain collapsed and died from a heart attack. McClain, 48, worked out daily and was reportedly going through his normal exercise routine when he collapsed.

McClain had finished working out on a stationary bicycle and entered the sauna. Stephen Zimmerman, an associate professor of medicine, found McClain in the sauna and went to get the UW trainers.

UW trainers Joe Baer and Jan Tappon performed cardiopulmonary resuscitation until paramedics arrived. McClain was taken to St. Mary's Hospital at 2:55 p.m. and pronounced dead at 3:12 p.m.

UW-Madison Chancellor Irving Shain said he was "deeply saddened" by McClain's "sudden and untimely death," adding that McClain's thoughts were always with his student athletes.

Green Bay Packer Coach Forrest Gregg said he was grieved to learn of McClain's death. "He was a fine gentleman, an outstanding coach and a good friend."

Chairman of the UW-Madison Athletic Board, David Tarr, said, "I speak for the entire Athletic Board in expressing my shock and deep sense of grief at his sudden and untimely passing."

UW-System President Kenneth Shaw said, "He was honestly concerned for the welfare of his student athletes. That was his first priority. And in his regard he set an example we do well to follow."

Two Packer players who played for McClain at Wisconsin said they talked with him last weekend in Madison, at an event held in connection with the UW spring football game. Gary Ellerson said, "He called Kenny Stills and me to his side and told us to go back to school and get our degrees."

"He cared about his players," Kenny Stills said, adding, "Black or white, it didn't matter. We had dinner at his house. He had us over to his house for different things."

Earlier that morning McClain was on the phone talking to Ohio State Coach Earle Bruce, bragging about some weight he lost. Six hours later, Bruce couldn't believe McClain was dead. "I'm shocked. I'm just devastated." The Buckeye football coach mentioned what McClain had said on the phone. "He was going to stay in Madison for the summer because his daughter was graduating, and then he was planning to go to a camp in Colorado."

Woody Hayes, who was McClain's boss for two years at Ohio State, said he had been concerned about McClain's health because McClain had confided in him about possible health problems. "He told me he had two older brothers who died in their early 50's of heart attacks. The last thing I said to him when he visited me two weeks ago was to take care of himself. This is a terrible shock."

Hayes remembered Dave McClain as one of the nicest people he has ever known. "He was extremely popular here." Hayes added a personal note, saying, "We never had a word as long as he was with me. Not one harsh word."

Michigan State Coach George Perles said, "It is shocking news and so tragic. We all knew Dave well and admired him. Our deepest sympathy goes to his family." McClain is survived by his wife, Judy, and three children.

Dave McClain was an inspiration to the Badger football team as well as sports fans in Madison and all over Wisconsin. When I heard Coach McClain died, I just couldn't write anything about sports without thinking what a great person the sports world lost.

'Stop 21' supporters rally behind cause

Cosmas Whitten
News Reporter

Last Tuesday, April 29th, a rally aimed at preventing the raising of the legal drinking age to 21 years of age was held outside at the UW-Eau Claire Davies Center. Representatives of UW—Stout student government were invited to speak by rally organizer, Todd Rongstad. Rongstad is the legislative affairs executive from Ear Claire student government.

The rally featured speakers, live music and free non-alcoholic punch. A table was set up with preprinted letters for students to sign which would then be mailed to elected officials.

The rally got under way at 11 a.m. The first to speak was Mark Nickels, SSA Vice President of Legislative Affairs. "Let's kill ten more people by raising the drinking age to 21," Nickels started off.

Nickels cited statistical evidence that proved states that went to a 21-year-old drinking age had more traffic fatalities for their 18- and 19-year-olds. For Wisconsin, similar statistics would mean ten more deaths per year. Nickels said that a 21-year-old drinking age would not stop people from drinking. They would get alcoholic beverages anyway and drive out to the country.

> We are passing the ball to you...its in your court.
> —Michael Wagner

Nickels pointed out that this would effect those over 21 years of age, as well. "You may be over the legal drinking age but that oncoming car could be a 19 or 20 year old driving back from the country," Nickels said.

The second speaker to address the Eau Claire rally was Allen Jenkins, a local merchant and a veteran of the Vietnam War. Saying he agrees that the use of alcohol has gotten out of hand, Jenkins expressed his personal feeling on the matter. "Twenty-one is a discriminatory, abusive law. It gives the right to die but not the right to drink."

Jenkins recalled for the crowd the days when he returned from the Vietnam War. He said that he came home at the age of 20 and couldn't walk into a bar for a glass of brandy after dinner.

Jenkins said there are two steps that need to be taken to stop alcohol abuse. First, we need to stop the raising of the drinking age and secondly, he said, "Let peers know it is no longer socially acceptable to get blind drunk and drive."

The third speaker was Mike Wagner of the Wisconsin Tavern League. "Do students still care?" Wagner asked. He recalled that while he was a student in 1970, his peers were dying in the Vietnam War.

Until protesting students were killed by police at Kent State in Ohio, students did not believe they

Preferences in newspaper reading revealed by Stout student survey

Pat Miles
News Reporter

State and local current events is the most popular topic in newspapers for reading among UW-Stout students. This was revealed through a study conducted by Dave Dinger, a sophomore majoring in psychology, and Cindy Knutson, who is a freshman majoring in vocational rehabilitation. The study was done to determine the newspaper reading habits of UW-Stout students.

Over a span of 3 days, April 28-30, 90 students were asked to voluntarily complete a survey asking such questions as how often they read a newspaper, which sections they read most often, and what topics they enjoyed reading most.

Surveys were distributed at 3 locations on campus in an attempt to get as much of a variety of students as possible. Students completed surveys in South Hall, the library, and the Pawn at various hours of each day.

The greatest percentage of women were found to read a newspaper only 2 times a week, whereas the greatest percentage of men read a newspaper 4 or more times a week. According to the results, 33 percent of the females surveyed read 2 times a week and 22 percent of the males read 4 or more times. There were an equal number of males and females surveyed.

Results showed that the most popular section of the newspaper, to students, was the front page. Of the people surveyed, 87 percent chose the front page as the section they most often read. The comic section is normally read by 67 percent and 50 percent read human interest stories.

According to the study, out of the 90 students surveyed, 80 agreed that they read a newspaper most often for news on state and local current events. Results also showed national and current events attracted as many readers as the listing of available jobs.

Thirty-two students agreed strongly that they read newspapers for news of national and international events, whereas 37 students just agreed. Nineteen agreed strongly and 50 just agreed that job listings is the reason they read newspapers.

The third most popular topic attracting students to read newspapers is the topic of "entertainment and what's happening." This subject attracted 66 of the students surveyed.

The conclusion of the study states that the results can be generalized to the entire population of UW-Stout. Each category of students was not equally represented in the study. Generalized to the total population of UW-Stout, 23 percent of the students surveyed were freshmen, 20.5 percent were sophomores, 20.8 percent were juniors, 28.4 percent were seniors, and 6.3 percent were graduate students.

Summit makes united front

Tokyo, Japan - President Reagan won agreement from several US allies Sunday that "a united front" is needed to combat terrorism, hours after missiles fired by summit sabateurs missed their mark. The summit unanimously passed a resolution to ban arm sales to countries that support terrorism. Reagan failed to persuade other heads of state to condemn Libya, both diplomatically and economically.

Chernobyl fallout high

Hamburg, West Germany - A top Soviet official said Sunday that 49,000 people were evacuated from areas around the burned Chernobyl nuclear reactor, and radioactive fallout forced the slaughter of livestock within 12 miles of the plant. Boris Yeltsin, the Moscow Communist Party chief, said that radiation emissions at the site 80 miles north of Kiev were 150 roentgens an hour. Scientists say that this level of radiation can can cause death in less than three weeks.

NASA is grounded

Cape Canaveral, Florida - One of America's most reliable rockets, the Delta, lost power Saturday and had to be destroyed by remote control. The rocket carried a $57 million weather satellite. This is the third straight NASA space launch failure. "For all practical purposes the US is grounded," said Brad Meslin, executive vice president of the Center for Space Policy.

House considers budget

Washington, D.C. - The Senate has handed the budget baton to the House, where Democratic leaders must decide this week whether to carry forward the Senate's decision to endorse a politically sensitive tax increase. The Senate early last Friday approved a $1 trillion budget that cuts Reagan's defense spending requests by $19 billion, saving domestic programs from deep cuts while meeting the $144 billion deficit limit of the Gramm-Rudman law.

CAPTAIN'S LOG: STARDATE 5-5-86. We the members of the Starship Capitalize descended on the small northwestern Wisconsin town of Menomonie after receiving a series of distress calls from pre-professionals purported to be UW-Stout students.

UW-Stout, the final frontier. To boldly go where no man has ever gone before. We quickly learned that in America acting so boldly could land you in jail for contributing to the delinquency of minors.

As we beamed down on the location known as the corner of Broadway and Main Street we happened upon a Menomonie Policeman citing a student for jay walking. Relations between the townspeople and Stout students were strained and we began to understand why.

The rumor was that in an effort to reverse the affect of the April 1 referendum, City Council members were planning to vote to hold the mayoral election this summer, after the students, who had voted for the return to the mayoral government, would be long gone on summer vacation.

We set our phasers on stun as we headed to a special Sunday night session of the University Student Senate of the Stout Student Association (SSA) to review the students' planned opposition to the summer election. In a brief discussion with the SSA President we could picture the problems on the horizon as he reiterated his concern over the lack of intelligent life in the community.

His fears were confirmed as the City Council met the next night. The majority of Council members appeared to favor a November election but state law prohibits scheduling such an election that far in advance.

In an extraordinary move, Councilman Jay Schroeder, pictured by some as a potential mayoral candidate, raised a motion designed to establish four year terms for the mayor. The motion died a sudden death as Schroeder, experiencing an immediate change of heart, joined in as Council members unanimously voted down the measure.

The decision this Monday was to make no decision, so it appears that the first mayoral election in Menomonie in over a decade will occur no sooner than next November.

We were all set to relax having survived the absolute confusion of the City Council meeting when a young and obviously distraught Stoutonian accosted us. The student was suffering from severe depression. He had learned that although his tuition payments are increasing next year, the number of hours the Library Learning Center (LLC) will be open probably would decrease due to budget cutbacks.

We stopped to investigate. The LLC is an imposing five story presence in the middle of the campus. Many students we talked to hardly found the building a popular studying place.

One student, expressing his anguish at the rules preventing the use of beverages of any kind at the LLC, asked why they had such rules when they knew that students had the freedom to do whatever they wanted with the books once they were checked out. That seems to be a logical query.

Would it wreak havoc on Stout's Tranquility Base, the LLC, if students were allowed to drink infinite amounts of hot java and eat munchies at their own discretion?

We found that the LLC closed at 11 p.m. six nights a week. Meanwhile, the average Stoutonian rarely went to bed prior to 1 a.m.

UC changes leadership; presents '85-86 awards

Tracy Lea Landis
Co-News Editor

In spring, student governments on campuses throughout Wisconsin change leadership. Most mark the change by giving out awards and making speeches.

The United Council (UC), student government organization of the University of Wisconsin System, held a banquet and business meeting in Green Bay on April 26, during which its leadership changed hands. They also gave out the traditional awards and Stout had one recipient. Tracy Lea Landis, Women's Affairs Senator to the Stout Student Association, received an award for being the United Council's Women's Affairs Delegate of the Year.

UW-Stout voted to remain a UC member in the biennial UC membership referenda during the April SSA elections.

The UW System President's Award went to Green Bay this year. The presenter of the award was Ms. Buff Wright, Executive Assistant to the Executive Vice-President of UW System. She recalled that in the 1976-77 academic year, UW-Stout received the first UW System President's Award. Wright was President of United Council at the time.

Wright praised the UC assembly for their year's work, saying that it was characterized by a healthiness of debate and a willingness to discuss differences.

Ms. Joanna Richards, past President of UC, made some parting remarks as she prepared to chair her last UC meeting. She told the delegates to "reach out to the students. You can not just sit in your office."

Pointing out that diversity, by giving us a better debate, gives us our strength, Richards said, "The only way that we can be effective is to be united."

> You can not just sit in your office.
> —Joanna Richards
> UC President

Brian Schimming, of the Stop 21 Committee, was one of the first to report during the business meeting. Schimming pointed out that the people who would be most effected by raising the drinking age are the ones that are not being heard from. He told the student government leaders that organizing amongst the most effected groups would be crucial. Encouraging the gathered student leaders to mobilize, Schimming said that the "legislative hotline telephone number should get memorized in the next two weeks."

An objection was made to moving unanimous consent on a motion to reaffirm UC opposition to the raising of the legal drinking age to 21 in Wisconsin. Unanimous consent was objected to by delegates from UW-Steven's point on behalf of UW-Superior. Delegates from Superior could not pass unanimous on the motion because non-traditional students on their campus are in favor of raising the drinking age.

A major project was passed by the members of UC to allow the Women's Affairs Committee to continue in its pursuit of federal crime victim assistance funds. The Women's Affairs Committee presented a program designed to give assistance to victims of sexual assault, titled "Students Taking Action Against Rape" (STAAR).

The STAAR program would provide paid peer- counseling positions to students on each UW campus. The program would require an application for federal grants to be combined with $1000 in matching funds that will be provided by each UC member campus, principally by fundraising projects.

The UC delegates approved the appropriation of $347 for the second annual United Council Minority Pre-College Conference on May 16. The conference will be held at UW-Milwaukee to introduce minority high school students to the college experience.

Joanna Richards, 1985-86 President of United Council, received a dozen roses from her successor, Bryce Tolefree. Tolefree will begin chairing meetings of the state-wide student governance body in June of this year. (Photo by Tracy Lea Landis)

Newly-elected Minority Affairs Senator Ahref Khatib expects to participate.

A definition of what constitutes a minority represented by UC Minority Affairs delegates was passed by UC without much discussion. The definition excluded non-traditional students, a group that has been considered to be represented by Stout's Minority Affairs Senator.

The UC Summary Budget for 1986-87 was at first tabled by the UC delegates. It was later taken from the table and passed, despite opposition from a majority of the Stout delegation.

Chamber of Commerce honors high academic achievers

Troy M. Franke
News Reporter

"Usually you hear so much about the bad kids, it is rare to hear about the good ones," commented Jim Kivlin, a member of the Greater Menomonie Area Chamber of Commerce.

On Wednesday, April 30, the top 28 UW-Stout graduating seniors, along with area high school students at the top of their classes, were honored for their academic achievement at the Student Recognition Banquet hosted by the Greater Menomonie Area Chamber of Commerce.

This year the banquet included a dinner sponsored by area businesses for the students, pre-dinner music presented by the Menomonie Senior High School Jazz Combo, and guest speaker, Dr. James Johnson, a consultant for the 3M Company and for the UW-Stout School of Technology. Each student whose accomplishments were honored at the banquet was recognized by a certificate of merit.

> I feel it was worth the effort involved to receive the merit...
> —Randy Okan

Randy Okan, a senior in Hotel-Restaurant said, "I feel it was worth the effort involved to receive the merit, yet education by itself is not worth anything today."

Vernon Daniel, a vocational technology and adult education senior from Trinidad and Tabago, chose UW-Stout because Stout has a very good reputation in Trinidad. Vernon was pleased with what he had learned and said of his experience as a member of forensics, "I enjoyed that a lot!"

Not going out for many teas, and highlighting the book was the key to academic success for Jana Straus, a senior in psychology. When asked how she was able to graduate with a 4.0 she said, "I guess it got easier to get by with the bare minimum to receive an 'A'. I knew what to study."

Karl Kuehn, senior in industrial technology said his years at Stout were enjoyable and the instructors here are more than willing to help you when you need it.

In the words of guest speaker, Dr. James Johnson, the area graduates were advised to, "Value your personal value, your character. YOU are the one doing the shaping!"

Opinions

Editorial

The cutting edge of city politics

The confusion that has dominated City Council meetings concerning the next steps to take in Menomonie's change to the mayoral form of government has been discomforting.

Unable to set a date for the mayoral election, the Council chose to wait until their July 7 meeting to wrestle with the question once again.

Although by law, all Wisconsin mayors are elected to their positions full-time, Council members argued for half an hour about whether or not Menomonie's next mayor ought to be given full-time or part-time remuneration.

Salary proposals ranged from the paltry sum of $6,000 up to $25,000 annually. Proposals for the mayoral term ranged from two to four years.

In the confusion at last Monday's's council meeting, Alderman Emmert made a motion for an election date which he had voted down earlier at the meeting. Alderman Schroeder made a motion for the city attorney's office to draft a charter ordinance establishing the mayor's term at four years. The motion failed as all seven alderman, including Schroeder, voted it down.

The City Council is going about the process as if they are re-inventing the wheel. What is causing the problems? Neighboring communities effectively using mayoral government should provide a valuable reference for the City Council as it manages the change in government.

The image provided at Monday's meeting was that the aldermen had not done their homework. With this change in government which will affect Menomonie for years to come, the aldermen owe it to their constituents to be familiar with the basic facts involved. The aldermanic post requires responsible participation in planning and managing Menomonie's future course.

What is sad about this confusion is it limits the Council's ability to take effective action. Wisconsin has set aside a two-year term for mayors which the council ought to adopt.

A mayoral salary ought to be adopted which reflects the work demanded. A $6,000 salary reflects a $37,000 savings for Menomonie tax payers over the city manager's salary. At $6,000, Menomonie could only expect to receive a hearty laugh from the most qualified candidates for mayor.

Crash and Burn

Pack it up, vacate the area

Matt Kalina

This time of year, nearly all students fit one of three categories: pre-Yuppies who are ready to cut the ties with school by graduating and searching for the so-called "real" job, squids who forced themselves to enroll for summer school or moilers who are lining up summer jobs.

I fit the description of a moiler. But next year I'm heading out of Stout and moving on to J-School. Opportunity is calling at Madison, so, yes, this is my final column for The Stoutonia. It's terminal Crash and Burn.

Stout has been quite decent. It certainly does not have a place in the collegiate tradition hall of fame, and that's probably good. Stout has few customs, except for the usual action that involves alcohol and an open mouth.

As I begin the transition to Madison, the concept of the college experience comes to mind. After three years of attending a university, it is hard to define college. I could agonize forever, well okay, for a few minutes, over what exactly college is. It's not easy to put it in a nutshell (unless, maybe it was a coconut).

Anyone with an IQ above room temperature can make the grade at most universities. College has been overrated.

What really is this place we call college?

College. Is it a fantasy-adventure set among large buildings with those that teach and those that learn? Perhaps.

Is it an over-blown version of high school?

Or is it just something to do after high school?

Is it the motions of wandering from class to class observing instructors chalk and talk?

Could it be a place where you become more refined, more cultured? What's culture you may ask? Forget it.

Is it an academic field of brain cultivation? Oh yea, that's a good one.

Could it be a storehouse of rational thought? Rational? Only joking.

Is it just a test to determine who can stay awake during grim, sophoric lectures? Possibly.

Is college a land of orphaned group projects, term papers, shade-in-the-dot exams and busy-work assignments? Likely.

Is it a place where professors demonstrate an inspiring level of commitment to their students and to teaching? You can answer that one.

Is it an intellectual free-for-all? Get a brain.

Is it just a giant version of "Twister?" What?

Is it a hideaway, an escape form reality, or solely an escape in your nest of books? I suppose.

Maybe it's a time to make mistakes and learn by experience, trial and error-type? Maybe not.

Another place to party? Could be.

Is it a shelter from the "real world?" Yea, I guess that fits.

Could it be an exuse to sidestep responsibility for four, five, six or more years? Aye.

Perhaps it's a tortuous financial struggle? Aye again.

A ticket to a big bucks job? Isn't that what it is supposed to be?

Is it a carefree bliss factory? Give me a a break the size of Rhode Island.

Is it a secure footing for a solid education where the academic program is rigorous and the program is demanding? I think that's the engineering student's definition.

Is it an experiment to determine if you can scrounge on a limited budget by playing "fallout shelter," surviving in a rat-hole with beer, tuna fish and white bread as your staples and grimy roommates as your companions? That sounds reasonably accurate.

In plain terms, is it an institution of higher education that gives out degrees? Oh, that's heavy.

I suppose the only sure definition of college is it's a place where you practice scrambling your mind.

Whatever it is, I'm not going to worry about it. Forget the rambling, the reminiscing, the lapses into the mysterious collegiate strangeness; I got a vacation to encounter.

SPOTLIGHT/ Kaleene Kenning

Subject: University Dance Club finishes a successful first season

Kaleene Kenning

Text by David Chase

At three years of age, Kaleene Kenning began taking her first tap dancing lessons. Now, several years later, Kenning is the President and founding member of the University Dance Club at Stout.

Being the President of the Dance Club is only one of the many activities Kenning has been involved in. She was also the Vice President of programs for the Apparel, Textile and Design Association, Student Manager at the Student Center, and choreographed the music for the Stout play production of "Oklahoma."

STOUTONIA: WHAT DOES THE UNIVERSITY DANCE CLUB INVOLVE?
KENNING: We offer a large variety of things for our members; we offer classes, seminars, workshops and performing in all areas of dance; tap dancing, jazz dancing, ballet, and even ballroom dancing.

STOUTONIA: WHAT TYPE OF ACTIVITIES DOES THE CLUB PARTICIPATE IN?
KENNING: Our big performance this semester was Parents Weekend, we performed four times. Twice in the Pawn and twice on the Pawn Patio. We had as many as 600 people, we were real happy about it. We perform tap, jazz and ballet, mostly jazz.

STOUTONIA: WILL THERE BE ACTIVITIES DURING THE SUMMER?
KENNING: No, we're a new club, we just started in January this year. I'm going to be overseas this summer, I'll be in London going to school. When I come back in the fall I'm going to start it up right away again. But this summer there will be nothing going on, over the past year and a half I've kept dancing going but it was never a recognized club. Now that we are a club I'm taking off for the summer so there won't be anything going on, otherwise there would be.

STOUTONIA: HOW DOES ONE GO ABOUT JOINING THE DANCE CLUB?

KENNING: Any of our executive board members have membership cards and you pay the membership fee, any of us can sign you up for the club. We have about seven new members right now, those are active members who have paid. We also allow people to come to our meetings, and most of our seminars, and usually it only cost a dollar. So you can become kind of a non-member but still be involved in some of our activities.

> Next fall, our biggest goal will be to have a dance convention.
> —Kaleene Kenning Dance Club President

STOUTONIA: WHO IS ON THE EXECUTIVE BOARD?
KENNING: Right now Michelle Schmitz is my Vice President, Brenda Fangmeier is my Secretary, and Kathy Noziska is my treasurer. In the fall, Brend Fangmeier will be my Vice President, Monica Bradford will be my Secretary and Kathy Noziska will be my Treasurer. My executive board puts in so much time and work.

Next fall, our biggest goal will be to have a dance convention. This is for not only the University of Wisconsin schools, but also other dance studios in Wisconsin and Minnesota. Anyone is welcomed to come, but we're only sending invitations to those in Minnesota and Wisconsin. We'll bring in big name dancers to teach classes and plan on having a big convention.

STOUTONIA: DO YOU RECEIVE SCHOOL FUNDING?

KENNING: We receive some funding through the rec commission, but otherwise it's mostly membership fees. We're broke, basically we have no money, everything we do we have to have a fund raiser. We sold pizza slices and Pepsi, then we sold king size bags of M&Ms. These were good money makers, but our expenses add up.

Spruce-Up a Success

The 1986 Spruce-Up Committee of the Menomonie Area Chamber of Commerce would like to acknowledge the enthusiastic participation of the following campus organizations in this year's Spruce-Up Campaign:

1. JTC HALL
2. ENVIRONMENTAL ISSUES COMMITTEE
3. CIRCLE K
4. SIGMA SIGMA SIGMA SORORITY
5. LSO FOR SIGMA TAU GAMMA

In addition all others who participated, but did not register with the Chamber.

The SSA representative on the Spruce-Up Committee is Mark Nickels. His efforts generated unprecedented campus cooperation. Our community is now better because of all your assistance.

CAMPUS SLANT/ Should Stout students be allowed to vote in Menomonie elections?

Text by Brian Kraimer

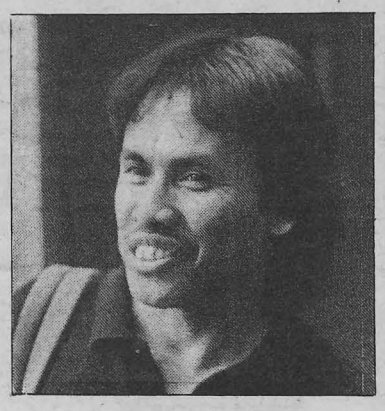
Colleen Byrne,
Fashion Merchandising,
Sophomore,

I think so. I think we are a part of the community. If we are going to live here for the summer or during the school year we should have the opportunity to vote for who is going to run the community, it could affect us.

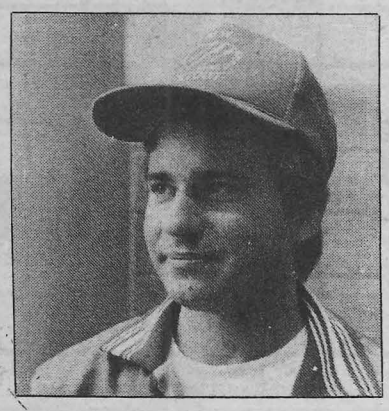


Abdullah Ibrahim,
Vocational Education,
Senior,

I think because this area is populated by the students so, it is important for us to be involved in the voting. What happens in Menomonie should be affected by the students.

Paula Dyer,
Counseling,
Freshman,

Yeah, because we are citizens of this town when we are here, which is most of the year.



Paul Schramkowski,
Hotel Restaurant,
Senior,

Oh yeah, well we live in this town too and we might as well have a decision in what goes on.

Frank Lohrer,
Industrial Technology,
Senior,

Yes, because we are part of the community for most of the year and we're residents for nine months, so we should be able to vote.

The Bottom Line

The Final Cut

Rich Brueckner

Wake the kids. Call the neighbors. Its time for Lenny to wheel in the NBC Bookmobile.

Our first book is a locally written capsule on the past year at United Council. Follow various delegates as they maggot their way into various promiscuous episodes of debauchery. Not a whole lot is accomplished i.e. stable tuition and drinking age, but the most important people manage to get their rocks off. It's Harry Reems' long awaited epic - The UC Legacy: Flesh Queens From Hell.

Next we have an exciting new book based on the recent faculty morale survey. Get an exclusive glimpse at the names of which Deans are "vindictive, inhumane, intimidating and inept." Find out if someone destroyed hundreds of questionnaires in an effort to cover his ass. Discover the R-factor of the Vice-Chancellor's insulation from the workforce. Experience the humility of trying to teach while being treated "like a disposable commodity." It's the ghost-written Retribution for a Badger State.

Some lighter reading material comprises our next book. Professional athletes are always getting harassed for their autographs. It seems that a baseball player can't even enjoy a quiet meal in a bar anymore. Now comes Reggie Jackson's true story that will leave you in stitches too. It's How 'Bout I Autograph Your Face, Asshole?

Decisions as difficult as the one the Chancellor is to make May 8 on the second Positive Action Committee/Sabatino II hearing take a lot of deliberation. The main consideration is that all the parents will be here for Commencement this weekend. You wouldn't want them to read about this kind of stuff, would you? Well, your prayers have been answered since this is the last issue of the Stoutonia this semester. Robert Swanson tells it all in Verdict Logistics: Censorship Through Procrastination.

Find out if someone destroyed hundreds of questionnaires in an effort to cover his ass.

Personal defense is a hot issue these days. Here's an amazing essay on what to do if someone pisses you off that comes to us from our own faculty. Should irate faculty members be allowed to duke it out in Harvey Hall? The answer to this and other violent inquiries can be found in Dr. John Clark's Wrestlemania: Choke Holds for the Mens Room.

David Stockman's new book has caused quite a stir in the White House. Reagan doesn't take kindly to disclosures that his economic policies are screwed. He immediately went to the publishers with his own book, David, You Insufferable Bastard!

The most recent City Council Meeting was such a joke that I decided not to do a story on it. No decisions were made except to postpone all the decisions. It seemed that only half the alderman had read their briefs on what they were to vote on. Despite a petition signed by 975 people, Jay Schroeder showed remarkable leadership by voting against his own motion to give the mayor a four- year term. Hey, if this guy runs for Mayor, we should all vote for him; then he could veto all of his other ideas. This is all made clear in Rich Emmert's I Move We Decide on the Day I Voted Down.

Voracious readers will thoroughly enjoy our next book. They can now satisfy their curiosity as to why the Library Learning Center isn't open when they need it or why it has such a embarrassingly meager selection of fiction. Imagine the tactical advantage of removing the coke machines during the summer when no one is around to bitch. Justify the ergonomics of placing noisy typewriters in a hallway by the smoking lounge. It's Joe Jax's administrative guide entitled Blaming Years of Insufficient Service on Gramm-Rudman.

Evaluation is a tough job when you teach something as abstract as Labor Economics. You can drown students in a sea of transparencies and handouts and bore them silly with monotone forensics but you still have to give them a grade. This dilemma has been addressed in Richard Tyson's book Return Tests and Use Them Year After Year.

These columns have reportedly desensitized some people to the offensively absurd, but I wasn't sure if I should write this one. What the Hell, I've learned from the words of Roger Waters: "I held the blade with trembling hands, prepared to make it - but, just then the phone rang, I never had the nerve to make the final cut."

We tried to complete a study of what Stoutonians chose to do from 11 p.m. to 1 a.m., but we failed to have the proper IDs in many cases. Several students were hostile in response to our attempts at observing their extracurricular activities. INTERESTING.

It seems the library director has anticipated this unwanted reduction in library hours and acted to ease the enforced separation between the students and the library by making students not want to use the LLC to begin with.

Crock, our alien in residence and literary expert, was surprised at the students' desire to gain access to a library having a book list possessing the imagination of a block of concrete. Odds are, if you have spent any time reading the literary classics, you'll have a better index of great literature in your mind than you could ever hope to find at the LLC.

We decided to visit the Student Center where we could relax and enjoy a cup of coffee while discussing methods for humanizing the atmosphere at the LLC.

While Crock said it was totally illogical to cut back on library hours that were already considered too limited to begin with, we pointed out that logic needn't play an important role here.

After all, we were visiting a nation that reportedly wants to balance the federal budget and yet continues to spend beyond its means in an unprecedented military build up.

If you're all hot and bothered about the imminent reduction in LLC hours consider this, you could always cool off in the pool that's included in the mall proposed just south of the Student Center.

Hidden Dimension

Beyond Menomonie

Ali Vazirabadi

Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, without distinction of any kind, such as race, color, sex, language, religion, political, or other opinion, national, or social origin. Article 2 of Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

The world is becoming full of hypocritical leaders and political organizations who don't give a damn about the basic rights of its own people or the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. This Declaration is signed by all the members of the United Nations, but nobody pays any attention to its intent, to live and be free. Almost no one contested these as the natural rights of all people.

Unfortunately, while you read this version of The Hidden Dimension there are people who have been imprisoned in the worst living (dying) conditions because of their beliefs, color, and religion.

There are more than 100,000 political prisoners in Iran, who are tortured for just asking for basic freedom and justice. While you are drinking your Diet Coke or decaffeinated coffee and reading these lines, there are people in Chile, Korea, Afghanistan, Iran, waiting for torture and/or death.

At this moment that we are waiting for our summer break, there are people in Iran and Indonesia waiting for their death sentence, and their families and friends are getting ready for their funeral. As we worry about our final exams in Physics and Chemistry, there are kids who are waiting for their fathers to come home for supper, but the fathers are in prisons in South Africa.

Since the revolution in Iran, the Islamic Republic executed more than 50,000 young, old, and pregnant women under the name of God and Islam. This war with Iraq is the greatest war since World War II in which more than half a million people have lost their lives.

At the same, time there is another shameful phenomena, which is called South Africa. I wonder in the next 50 years when our grandchildren read the history of the world, how they will judge us and the leaders of this decade for their ignorance. And I also wonder how God will punish these leaders for their deeds.

Beside these dictators, there are people like Jerry Falwell, who take advantage of the word of God to preach the superiority of Whites over Blacks. With my basic knowledge of God's word, I think a room is reserved for Jerry Falwell in Hell for his ignorance concerning the black people in South Africa.

Russia, with its great hypocritical ideology, doesn't give a damn about the Afghan people, and permits itself to invade another country under the name of friendship and protection from the outside. It seems Russia forgot the experience of America in Vietnam.

The other irritating fact is that all these dictators from the extreme left to the extreme right think they have the best ideology and policy in the entire world. So they permit themselves to go and cut off everybody's head or torture them to become one of their puppets blindly following their ideology.

Now it is obvious to us, to be more concerned with and sympathetic to the situation around the world and ask for change and support for positive solutions to these horrible events of our time.

Stop 21

could do anything about their concerns, said Wagner. As they changed things then, he said, students can effect things now and do something to stop 21.

"Who recently killed three Eau Claire students while driving drunk?" Wagner asked the crowd. It wasn't a 19- or 20-year-old. It was a 25-year-old with two previous convictions for operating while under the influence."

Wagner read an editorial written by a 20-year-old who is a crew chief in the army. This crew chief is in charge of a $33 million aircraft which is licensed to drop bombs. If the law raising the drinking age passes, the letter said, it will mean that he can't be trusted with a 12 ounce can of beer.

Wagner challenged those who would be directly effected by the law change to make their voice heard. "We are passing the ball to you," he said. "It is in your court."

By the end of the rally, 750 of the preprinted letters had been signed.

What's being done in Menomonie to stop 21? The Stout Student Association (SSA) had a booth on the Cobblestone Court last week where they provided preprinted letters to be signed. Petitions have been signed in the residence halls and a legislative hotline number was publicized for students to use. The number is 1-800-362-9696 and the SSA urges all students to call and voice their opinions before it is to late.

The Marion Bar is where students go to enjoy their weekend and meet new people, but what will happen if they can no longer serve those under 21 years of age?

According to Marion bartender, Chris Copeland, "If there is a grandfather clause, we won't be hurt next year. The following year we will, however. We have petitions being passed around the bar to Stop 21 petitions are being signed at the front door all the time."

Marion bouncer Rob Topps said, "The Marion is strictly a college bar and if it goes to 21 the underclassmen will not be allowed in. The students will be going home on the weekend and the whole community of Menomonie will lose valuable business."

Bill Josephson is the Vice President of the Tavern League, the Alderman-at-Large in Menomonie and owner of the Flame Lounge.

Josephson warned the crowd against the passage of a law raising the drinking age. "We are creating a monster. It will be a drug dealer's paradise. There will be more house parties which will be unsupervised, no capacity regulation will be followed and the parties will be a combination of drugs and alcohol."

If this law raising the legal drinking age passes, a 19- or 20-year-old will be considered an "underage" drinker in the state of Wisconsin. The penalty for getting caught drinking while underage is: First offense $72.50, second offense $130.00, third or more offenses $187.50.

Being caught with a fake I.D., which carries the charge of misrepresentation of age, is punishable by a fine of $72.50. Loaning an I.D. to an underaged individual or purchasing alcoholic beverages for an underage person of 20 years or younger is contributing to the deliquency of a minor. The fine for this offense is $130.

According to Menomonie Police records for the month of April, 14 people were arrested for operating while under the influence. Of those 14, eight of them were 21 or older.

YOU CAN FIGHT CANCER BEFORE YOU GET IT.

OR AFTER YOU GET IT.

It's a lot easier to fight cancer before you get it.

Scientists estimate that up to 60% of all cancer could be prevented.

By simply making a few changes in your lifestyle.

By not getting too much sun. By not smoking cigarettes. By not overeating. And by following a diet high in fiber and low in fat.

By simply doing these few things, you could drastically reduce your risk of getting cancer.

Sure, you could still get cancer.

But why not give yourself the odds against it?

'Ugly Dumplings' highlight child care day

Tracy Lea Landis
Co-News Editor

Chancellor Robert Swanson was introduced to the delightful taste of "ugly dumplings" during his visit to the UW-Stout Child and Family Study Center during afternoon snack-time last Friday.

The children enrolled in the child care facility made the dumplings for their visitor, whom they had invited for Stout's Child Care Awareness Day. Chancellor Swanson was identified by Daniel Williams, age four, as "the boss of this whole place."

Child Care Awareness Day was organized state-wide by Sara Schwartz, Women's Affairs Committee Director for United Council (UC). UC is the student government of the University of Wisconsin system. Child Care Awareness Day was observed by all UC member campuses, although Stout's observance was delayed a week behind that of other campuses.

Dr. Judith Herr, Director of the Child and Family Study Center and President of the Midwest Association for the Education of Young Children, pointed out that good child care facilities attract women to the institutions which provide them.

Dr. Herr and Dr. Karen Zimmerman are co-advising two studies of child care services being researched by Stout students. Kathy Rucker will be compiling information from the University of Wisconsin campus child care providers and Peg Saienga, head teacher at the facility, has been working on a national sample. The state and national samples collected can then provide a comparison between the services available to the UW community and that available at other campuses in the nation.

Two students were working as teachers at the center during the chancellor's visit. Ann Bublitz is an early childhood education (ECE) major. She is student teaching at the center, which provides credit similar to an internship, "but we don't get paid," said Bublitz. She said that many ECE students are placed in jobs at schools around Menomonie in order to meet this program requirement.

Bublitz, who will be graduating this May, has been at Stout for five years. She first enrolled here as a fashion merchandising major. She took a year off from school while she worked as a lounge waitress in a dinner theatre, then returned to pursue the ECE program.

"There is a lot of planning involved," Bublitz said of her work. "It's very exhausting. You're so keyed into the children all day."

> When you see me on the street I hope you say hello.
> —Chancellor Robert Swanson

Graduate student Anne-Marie Feveck taught home economics for two and one-half years in her native Trinidad before coming to Stout. She is now pursuing a master's degree in home economics with a concentration in child development.

Feveck teaches at the center twice a week. She does it, Feveck says, "just to have the experience." At the same time, she carries a full 16-credit course load.

When taking his leave after sharing "ugly dumplings" with the children, Chancellor Swanson told the youngsters, "When you see me on the street I hope you say hello. Tell your grammas and grampas hello for me because I know quite a few of them too."

Dr. Herr, Director of the Child and Family Study Center, said that their waiting list of 65 indicates the quality of their service. Many of the names on that list are names of children whose places are being held until they are old enough to attend.

Some parents, said Herr, put their children in the center "just for the educational component. We're always full to capacity," Herr said.

The Child and Family Study Center provides a bulletin board in its lobby for the advertisement of child care, provided mostly by early childhood education majors from Stout. Herr said that these students advertise their services because "it is helpful to them to gain experience and it also helps students who are parents and in need of the service."

Snack time was made special for children at the Child and Family Study Center by a visit from Chancellor Swanson Friday May 2. They shared a special recipe for "ugly dumplings," apples rapped in bisquit dough. (Photo by Dan Banach)

Stout instructor discovers gender biases hidden in sociology books

Bridget Record
News Reporter

Sharon Nero, a UW-Stout Sociology lecturer discovered that there is a considerable amount of gender bias in sociology textbooks.

Nero evaluated two college sociology textbooks based on their gender bias, and presented her critique at an annual session of the Midwest Sociological Society held in Des Moines, Iowa at the end of March.

Nero said that women are not included throughout the study of sociology but are treated as a separate chapter. Nero added that she got the idea of the textbook critique from a class she took entitled Curriculum, Theory, and Practice.

Nero pointed out that much of the gender bias is hidden within the curriculum. Hidden biases include: illustrations of all men, quotes from only men, and reviewers and acknowledgements that are slanted toward the male bias. Nero also said that many of the pictographs in sociology textbooks use the male form. This portrays the male as the norm.

Nero also says that signs of gender bias are revealed in the first several chapters. "These chapters introduce students to the sociology discipline, and do not mention the work women have done in this field," Nero said.

Sharon Nero

Nero said that the chapters on family in the sociology textbooks tend to neglect the role of the wife and mother. She said that neither of the books she critiqued discussed the experience of pregnancy and chidbirth. "This happens to be one of the most crucial experiences in a women's life," Nero said. "There is a lot of research done on this subject but it rarely ends up in the textxbooks."

The chapters on population and health are other areas Nero says display types of gender bias. She says that the issue of birth control is rarely brought up in the textbooks. "This is a very pertinent health issue facing women and textbook readers should be made aware of this," Nero said.

Nero said that the gender bias in textbooks results from those who process and distribute the knowledge. "Most of these people are men," Nero said. "I guess they believe that what women contributed to society is not important."

Nero said that the session at the Midwest Sociological Society was interesting. She believes that many people were aware of the bias on a certain level but never took the time to go through the books page by page and document the information.

UW-Stout employees will be effected by the new pay classification and job-titling plan proposed by the Hayes-Hill Consulting Firm. (Stoutonia by Dan Banach)

Job titling reviewed

Eugene Soroko
Contributing Writer

The University of Wisconsin system is in the process of devising and implimenting a structured job classification and pay system for all its employees.

Two identical information meetings were held in the Crystal Ballroom last week to inform employees of UW-Stout on the Hayes-Hill proposal. This proposed job titling and pay structure plan was generated by the Hayes-Hill Consulting firm. Hayes-Hill was hired to set up the job title and pay structure by UW system administration.

The objectives given the consultant firm to draw up this proposal, according to Dr. Janet Roehl, Chair of the UW-Stout Academic Staff Committee are:

- To make jobs and pay levels consistent with the rest of the UW system.
- To provide a means of evaluating and judging jobs in comparison with those in the outside market.
- To institute a system that will be flexible in its administration.
- To retain the inherent characteristics of the institutions within the system.

The only UW employees not effected by the Hayes-Hill plan are full-time professors. All other academic staff, librarians, even the Deans, will be fitted into one of 300 notches described by the job classification plan.

Job titles would be divided into three categories, under the Hayes-Hill plan. Deans and Program Directors, the smallest group classified, have no restrictions on salary level. Academic staff and researchers have a minimum salary base. The rest of the employees are paid according to their position title. These titles have minimum and maximum limits. Maximum pay is one and a half times the minimum.

The University holds 4.7 million dollars in a trust fund reserved for the catch-up pay plan. Catch-up pay is an attempt to bring salary levels of University jobs up to match the pay levels of similar positions at other institutions.

Release of the catch-up pay trust fund is contingent upon acceptance of the Hayes-Hill job classification plan by a June 30th deadline.

Hall government says good-bye at banquet

Valerie Clark
Contributing Writer

Thursday evening marked the culmination of a year of hard work, achievements and friendships for about 230 residence hall government members. It was the annual Inter-Residence Hall Association (IRHA) Leadership Banquet, sponsored by the IRHA Leadership Committee. Tears were shed and plans were made, as the 1985-86 IRHA Executive Board said their good-byes and introduced the new board.

Former IRHA President Holly Peuse reflected on the past year. "There was no way we could have known what this year had in store for us when we came back on that hot August day last fall. The friendships made are invaluable and unforgettable — this has been the best year.

Peuse also stressed that the banquet was for everyone who had been involved in the halls during the year. "You people have all worked so hard. You are the ones who have made the dorms into residence halls."

New IRHA President Jeff Campeau was introduced and stated some goals of the new Board for the upcoming year. "We'll be working to see that IRHA is recognized on this campus as a serious and important organization, improve our relations with the other major governmental bodies on campus and expand the channels of communication between the IRHA and the university administration."

The other members of the new IRHA Executive Board include: Vice-President/Treasurer Agnes Duda, Secretary Juanita Mack, National Communications Coordinator Valerie Clark and Stout Student Association (SSA) Senator Jill Shlimovitz.

The IRHA Executive Board is looking forward to next year with anticipation. Says Agnes Duda, "I'm very anxious to meet all the new hall executive boards and to begin working with them."

Other events for the evening included awarding Hall of the Year to Fleming Hall, viewing a slide presentation and announcing the recipients of membership into the National Residence Hall Honorary, an honor society for residence hall leaders. The new members of the Hall Honorary include: Glen Hills, Julie Boehme, Jeff Campeau, Anne Charneski, Valerie Clark, Michelle Keep, Brad Kunst, Mike Mundy, Suzanne Palmer, John Yatso and Peggy Coughlin. Finally, Jeff Campeau was awarded a $200 scholarship, given annually by the Honorary.

The evening ended with a dance to the band "The Visions."

Everyone who attended had an enjoyable and memorable time. Once again the Leadership Committee showed their capability and dedication by pulling off a successful event for the IRHA.

Ethnic Services honor minority students at recognition banquet

Dale Bohnert
News Reporter

UW-Stout's Ethnic Services Center sponsored its "Third Annual Spring Recognition Banquet" on Friday, May 2. This special multi-nationality occasion is held each year to honor Stout's minority students, supportive services personnel and faculty members who have been helpful to these students.

Following the dinner period, Senator Gary George of the 6th District near Milwaukee gave a speech dealing with minority student recruitment and retention programs. "There are two major challenges to programs aimed at aiding minority students," George stated. "They are getting students enrolled in universities and colleges and keeping them there through graduation."

Senator George also stated that an uncertain job market has caused minorities to question the value of a college education. He cited a current unemployment rate of 14.9 percent for blacks and 5.9 percent for whites.

During the awards presentation, those chosen outstanding in their classes were recognized. They were: Sharita Brazil, Freshman; Christina Peterson, Sophomore; Lao Xiong, Junior; Manuel Ramirez, Senior; Chia Vang, Outstanding Graduate.

Outstanding Senior Ramirez said that he was grateful to his advisor and Ethnic Services for all of their assistance.

> You people have all worked so hard. You are the ones who have made the dorms into residence halls.
> —Holly Peuse

Lao Xiong, chosen as this year's Outstanding Junior, is Laotian. He came to America when he was 13 years old. Knowing little English, he began looking up words in dictionaries and was placed in the seventh grade six months later.

Xiong is now the President of Stout's Hmong Club.

Xiong said that he has found Stout faculty to be "helpful, understandable and patient." He also encourages minority students to get involved in minority clubs in order to "learn more about themselves."

Recipients of alumni awards stressed the importance of supportive programs and the value of a degree from Stout.

Fredrico Zaragoza, awarded Outstanding Young Alumni, said that these programs "are not luxuries. They are necessities." He also said that a degree from Stout "will open doors" and "is worth its weight in gold."

Outstanding campus involvement awards were presented to Joe Torres and Kim Reddant. Both of these students are involved in "Students Helping Students," a program which aids new and transfer minority students, and "Guided Work Experience Program," which allows minorities to work on jobs related to their major.

Students nominated Jill Stanton and Stennet Pierce to receive the Outstanding Faculty award for their contributions and assistance. Stanton is an education instructor and Pierce is a physical education and athletics assistant professor.

Thirty-two students received academic excellence awards. This is awarded to those with a GPA of 3.0 or better at the end of the first semester.

Ales Dickerson, a 1981 Stout graduate, and his gospel family closed the evening in song with "The Gift of Love."

Caucus Leader debated in open meeting

Kelly Cohorst
News Reporter

President Paul Nelson opened the last Stout Student Association (SSA) meeting for the year with a discussion of plans for a block party next year. Under his report, Nelson said that the plan has the support of administrators.

The nominations for Caucus Leader of next year were Brenda Morehart and Damon Smith. The main job of the Caucus Leader is to establish the agenda for Senator's Caucus and to promote discussion on relevant subjects.

An attempt was made by Kelly Baker to go into executive session. Executive session is a privileged session where individuals from the press and others are barred from the meeting room.

According to Administrative Assistant Wes Stead, this motion was made in order to promote free discussion about the candidates before the final vote. The motion to go into executive session failed.

At the main open meeting it was argued that Smith is too busy with different activities and that since he is UPB Senator, he would be biased as Caucus Leader towards UPB. Morehart won the final written ballot vote.

Gary Harder, Vice President of Financial Affairs, asked for a motion to revise the Rules and Regulations for Segegated Fee Funded Organizations. The motion read that organizations that do not have weekly or monthly reports are required to submit quarterly reports to the SSA office.

Last week there were two people that were appointed to the Co-operatvie Programming Board: Jo-Ellen Janssen and Lewis Clark. Both of these appointees have had past programming experence. Janssen worked as the Chair of Performing Arts Commission in 1983-84. Clark was chair of the Special Events Commission last year.

UPB Senator Smith moved that two UPB members should have access to the SSA office door combination. The argument that he made for his motion was that the UPB needed access to the SSA office during non-office hours.

Aref Khatib, Minority Affairs Senator, argued, "Where do you draw the line? If UPB gets the combination, then why not everyone?" The motion failed by a 10 to 5 vote with 5 abstentions.

Appointments to the Finance Committee were made last week: Andy Previn, Katherine McCarthy, Cathy Reszka, and Aref Khatib.

Central DECA rep

UW-Stout student, Dena Ebner, was elected Central Region Representative for the National Collegiate Distributive Education Clubs of America (DECA) at the DECA National Conference. The conference was held in Atlanta, Georgia on April 23-27. Ebner also won a competitive teaching event by preparing an educational presentation, more effectively than other competitors, in a brief fifteen minutes. Ebner will be Head Cashier for the Memorial Student Center next year.

Whisper on tuition

A Tuition Public Hearing, organized by United Council (UC), was held at UW-Green Bay April 25. The open hearing was intended to improve public awareness of issues surrounding the recent tuition hike in the UW system.

Of the 21 people in attendance, eight were members of the press and nine had expected to speak to a crowd. A television reporter from Channel 11 (NBC) in Green Bay said of the event, "If there is power in numbers, then the student voice tonight is little more than a whisper."

Seven of our own Stout student government representatives were in Green Bay for the UC meeting that weekend. When asked why no representatives of Stout students were at the hearing, SSA President Paul D. Nelson said, "The outgoing coordinators...decided it wasn't important."

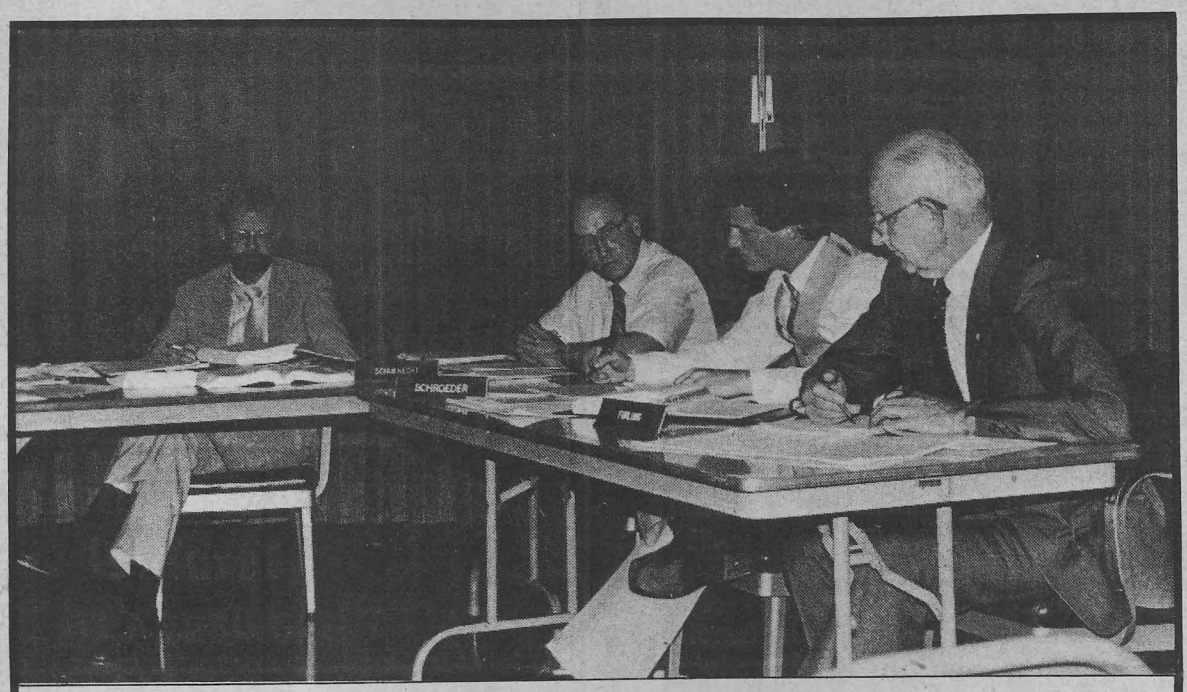
Third AIDD award

On April 28, the UW-Stout chapter of the American Institute of Design and Drafting (AIDD) was presented with the AIDD Student Chapter of the Year Award. This marks the third consecutive year the Stout's AIDD chapter has received this award from the national organization.

Awareness award for Gilliland

Philip S. Gilliland, a lecturer in UW-Stout's biology department, is the recipient of the University's annual "Disability Awareness Award." Gilliland was nominated for the award by students with disabilities at Stout. It recognizes him for "awareness and sensitivity to the needs of students with disabilities." according to Ann Yurcisin, director of Services for Students with Disabilities.

There are currently 300 students with disabilities attending Stout, Yurcisin said.



The Menomonie City Council stumbled through its meeting Monday night. It appears the election will be held for Mayor in November with a primary in September. The council voted to postpone the election date decision until July 7. This after SSA President Paul Nelson asked them to have the election during the academic year. The council also postponed a decision on the mayor's compensation. The only thing they seemed to agree on was petitioning the state to approve traffic signals at Broadway and 13th Avenue and Broadway and Walnut Avenue. (Stoutonia photo by Brad Kautzer)

WVSS format changes due to survey results

Jef Maynard
Arts Reporter

Changes are in the air for campus radio. A new survey and a recent wave of controversial issues have moved the station management to create a new format for next year.

WVSS station manager Ace Matthews sees next year as a transition to a totally different approach. The two prime motivators are the low popularity with campus females and the Federal Communications Commission restrictions.

The ultimate goal is the same. WVSS management wants to be a strong radio force in the area. To achieve this goal, Matthews and student managers Brad Knigge and Scott Smith are turning WVSS toward air time as a commercial cable station.

The survey showed that 94 percent of on-campus and 73 percent of off-campus are set up for cable and WVSS wants to take advantage of this. To their benefit, FCC regulations do not presently extend to cable radio services.

Recently, the FCC fined WVSS for several violations. The original fine was reduced for the minor offenses because of the stations limited operating budget. The freedom of the cable format will provide WVSS with much more latitude in programming and allow them to implement more convenient automated programs. This is particularly beneficial during periods when disc jockeys are less available. Finals, late night shifts and vacations are such periods.

The cable format, "will help us get out from under the burden of the FCC and all that that brings with it," Matthews said. The only restrictions on the cable stations, "are the seven dirty words which the FCC recognizes," Matthews continued. "We would still be responsible for libel and obscenity," he said.

The second prime motivator in the expected changes in WVSS programming is the low ratings of the campus female population. This low popularity among women is attributed to the harder rock and heavy metal music played by the predominately male dj staff. During the final week of school, there is one female dj listed on the shift chart.

The survey showed that women rate heavy music as their highest "dislike" and "strongly dislike" categories, while men rate rock and heavy as their strongest preferences. Since male dj's were previously allowed to select their own albums, the air play music reflected their heavier tastes.

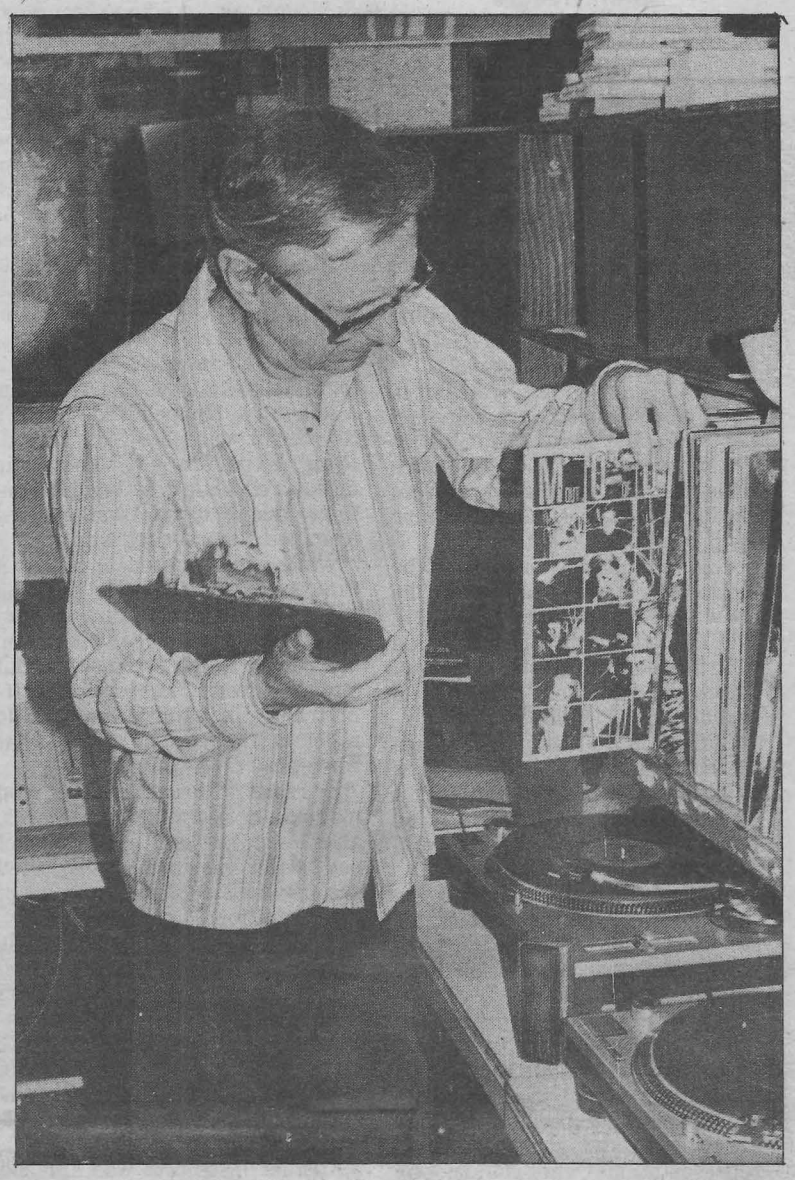
Overall among ten stations, WVSS rated sixth. The station was last on the female list and fifth on the male list. WBIZ was first with women and KQRS was tops with the men. Since fewer women than men listen to WVSS, this lead KQRS to first place, and WBIZ second overall.

Another factor is the emergence of KJJO. Among the men surveyed, KJJO was second. It was seventh among women, so it rated highly overall and caused lower ratings among the stations below the leaders.

Women rated rock as first choice, pop music second and jazz third. By WVSS dj standards, this is a much lighter sound than current campus radio. Station management has designed a format that programs music by certain categories.

Daily music will feature a category for top albums, new releases, jazz-dance-easy listening, oldies and a compact disc of the day. Dj's will not be selecting

Please see WVSS, page 16



Due to low female listening audience, WVSS will change its format of music to a softer rock. Ace Mattews, WVSS station manager, believes the change will benefit the station. (Stoutonia photo by Brad Kautzer)

May Day Music Fest relies on variety of artists

Kazoos, Contemporary, and Mo-Town, what do they have in common? On the surface, not much, but Pawn Live Productions brought these three music types together for a fun-in-the-sun Saturday afternoon.

On Saturday, May 3, from 1 p.m. to 6 p.m., The Bermuda Triangle Band, Dave Wopat, and Rick Kelley came to Stout to "do their things" on the Pawn Patio.

Starting out the afternoon's "Mayday Music Fest" was The Bermuda Triangle Band. Two of Bermuda Triangle Band's corners are made up of Wendy Beckett and Roger Beckett, musical partners from New York City. The third corner, remarked Roger Beckett, "is the audience."

Bermuda Triangle gets their audience involved with their show through kazoo games, T.V. trivia, and kazoo hum-alongs. Noted Kurt Siebert, audience member and kazoo enthusiast, on the Beckett's way to involve the audience, "Kazoo mania, it's wonderful."

Playing a range of musical hits, such as the Moody Blues classic, "Nights in White Satin," and the recent Cars hit, "Drive." Bermuda Triangle also played their own music.

Wendy Beckett has a powerful, almost eerie voice, described by audience member, Paul Hed, as "everlastingly distant." Beckett, who never had formal music lessons, commented on her singing voice, "When I sing and let it come out how I feel- sing from the heart- it makes me happy. I speak through my singing."

Roger Beckett is very innovative, even electrifying on the autoharp. Remember when, in gradeschool, we used to press a button and strum on the autoharp? Beckett plucks, strums and picks, like a guitar on his and can turn out a modified drum solo on the autoharp.

Roger Beckett's schooling includes majors in psychology, philosophy, acting and electrical engineering. Like Wendy, he has had no formal music training. Beckett remarked that he didn't plan on becoming a musician, rather the "whole music thing kept evolving" from his other areas of work.

Wendy and Roger Beckett have toured much of the United States and even into Canada and Newfoundland.

Student diversity impresses art judges

Karen Heagle
Arts Reporter

Twenty-one of Stout's art majors are currently presenting an exhibition of works jurored by two art professionals from outside of this campus. In a statement by these judges they commented,"In looking over the work we were impressed by the diversity in content and media." The show is the annual Student Exhibition, now being presented at J. Furlong Gallery and running through May 15th.

Publicity for the show began in April when entries were being accepted for the show. The entrance criteria was quite open. Although many of the entries were from studio art majors, there was no limit to who could enter work.

The two judges who selected the works which would appear in the show were Rosemary Bloedorn, and Paul Clifford. Bloedorn has a B.S. degree from the University of Wisconsin Madison. She has a teaching certification.

Clifford is a visiting artist from Nelson and Colne College of Art in England, who is on the Fulbright Teacher Exchange Program at the Minneapolis College of Art and Design.

In the juror's statement the judges described the criteria for selection,"The works selected were those that worked on their own merit and not merely chosen to reflect a proportionate balance."

The judges continued to say,"It was appreciated that students were pursuing experimental work but we felt the strength of the representational work could not be overlooked."

I had the opportunity to speak with some of the artists who are displaying work in the show. One of these artists is senior, Sue Schlough, an art education major. Sue has two pieces in the show titled, "Condemnation of an Idea" and "From the Palette of Monet." Schlough explained her works.

She had wanted to do a painting of a duck and her instructors warned against it claiming that duck paintings were too overdone. She went ahead with it anyway. To her instructor's surprise the painting was quite a pleasing creation. This is how the title occurred, "Condemnation of an Idea."

Schlough admits she has found a lot of helpful suggestions from her instructor's. She believes, "It pays to listen to your instructors with all their experience." This she discovered while creating the paintings unique to her that evolved from instructors' suggestions.

While she was student teaching first semester she was bursting with ideas but had no time to commit these ideas to canvas. Upon her return to the studios at Stout she started creating "self-portraits" She said,"I wanted to do a self-portrait but in a way that wasn't my face."

The result of these ideas was wild mixures of glass, mirror pieces, aluminum foil and explosions of color. Her instructors suggested she use unusual forms instead of the traditional square canvas, since these designs appeared to be exploding.

The idea was well received. Then upon the suggestion of another instructor that she should make many canvases to one work, like pieces of debris exploding from the initial piece, the idea was appealing to Schoulgh.

Another instructor was amazed to discover that all the works seemed to have the flavor of a famous artist's palette, thus the title, "From the Palette of Monet." She also has works named for the palettes of Van Gogh and Cezanne. Schlough recently had a show in which some of her innovative pieces were displayed.

Schlough said, in regard to the student exhibition at Furlong,"I think its nice to get a lot of work together to see what everyone has done. The show is a lot like a critique." Schlough has always enjoyed painting critiques for her classes. The only draw back she sees from the show is the slight crowdedness. She blames this on the size of Furlong Gallery.

Another artist who is displaying work in the student art show is painter, Craig Johnson, a transfer student from the Minneapolis Colthe largest part of the musical types, although they will be allowed to pick their own choices during last part of their shift if time permits.

When asked why there are so few women dj's Matthews had no answer. "Stout is still a male oriented society," he said. Since women pay one-half the station's costs through SSA funding, the station management determined that they should be more responsive to the whole audience. Matthews did mention lone female dj Stephanie Wondak as especially good on the air.

The survey shows that 74 percent of the listeners wanted the dj's to not select their own records. Also, the survey showed that less talking by the dj's was preferred. About once every 15 minutes seemed preferable to the listeners surveyed.

A further change is expected the following year, fall 1987, when WVSS intends to go to a commercial advertising format. There are two reasons for this change.

The first is increased revenue to be generated to provide pay incentives for salesmen, writers, producers and other staff. The second reason is to help subsidize possible SSA funding cutbacks. Chancellor Robert Swanson has already agreed to allow commercials on the station, based on the precedent set by paid advertising in The Stoutonia.

The survey was conducted by 80 radio production class members, each surveying ten listeners.

Music programming is a difficult business. There is no longer the mass audience appeal. "I believe it is the last bastion of prejudice," Matthews said. By that he means that while it is no longer safe or legal to harass women, minorities and so on, it is still possible to say, "oh, you don't like [certain music]..."

Specialty programming is fast becoming the wave. WVSS has a black music show and Christian rock program. It also devotes Saturdays to Menomonie High School programming. It is a form of community bridge between the campus and the city population.

The planned changes are an attempt to make WVSS a viable commercial station in the area while providing the strongest audience base among the campus listeners and is particularly designed to bring back women listeners during the transitional year ahead.

lege of Art and Design. He has been at Stout for two years. Johnson has one piece in the show, "Rockin'Roy at Dachau,"done in oil paint.

The painting is of a friend he met while in Germany. The piece is one which he did last semester in a painting course. He entered the piece "on the spur of the moment." He believes,"You can't really go wrong by entering, the worst that could happen is you'd be rejected." Johnson was quite pleased to have his only entry selected.

He commented on the show,"I think it's a lot nicer than last years show, it's well balanced with a lot of different works." He added, "I encourage people to see it." Johnson entered work in last year's exhibition.

Of the forty-eight pieces displayed in the show, ten received purchase awards from the Fine Arts Association. F.A.A. is purchasing the pieces selected by the jurors for the award, to become part of a permanent collection.

One artist who received a purchase award for her whiteware bowl was Mary Bresette, a senior in studio art. In addition to her whiteware bowl she also displayed a pitcher, a print and a pastel drawing. Bresette is quite proud of the fact she is displaying work in this show, although she doesn't consider any of the works in the show to be directly related to her metals, ceramics concentration.

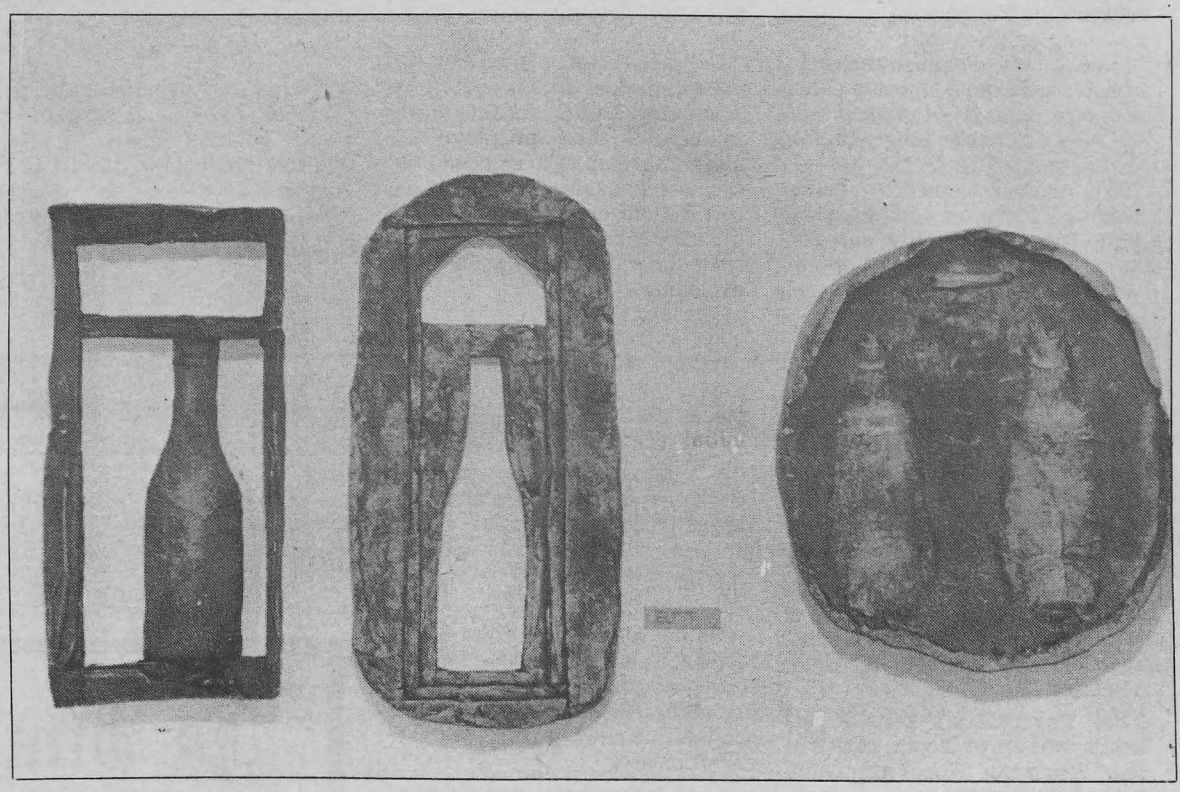
Bresette attributes this to the fact that she will be setting up her senior show this week and would like to see her best works in it. She enthusiastically invites anyone to come to see it as it opens May 13th.

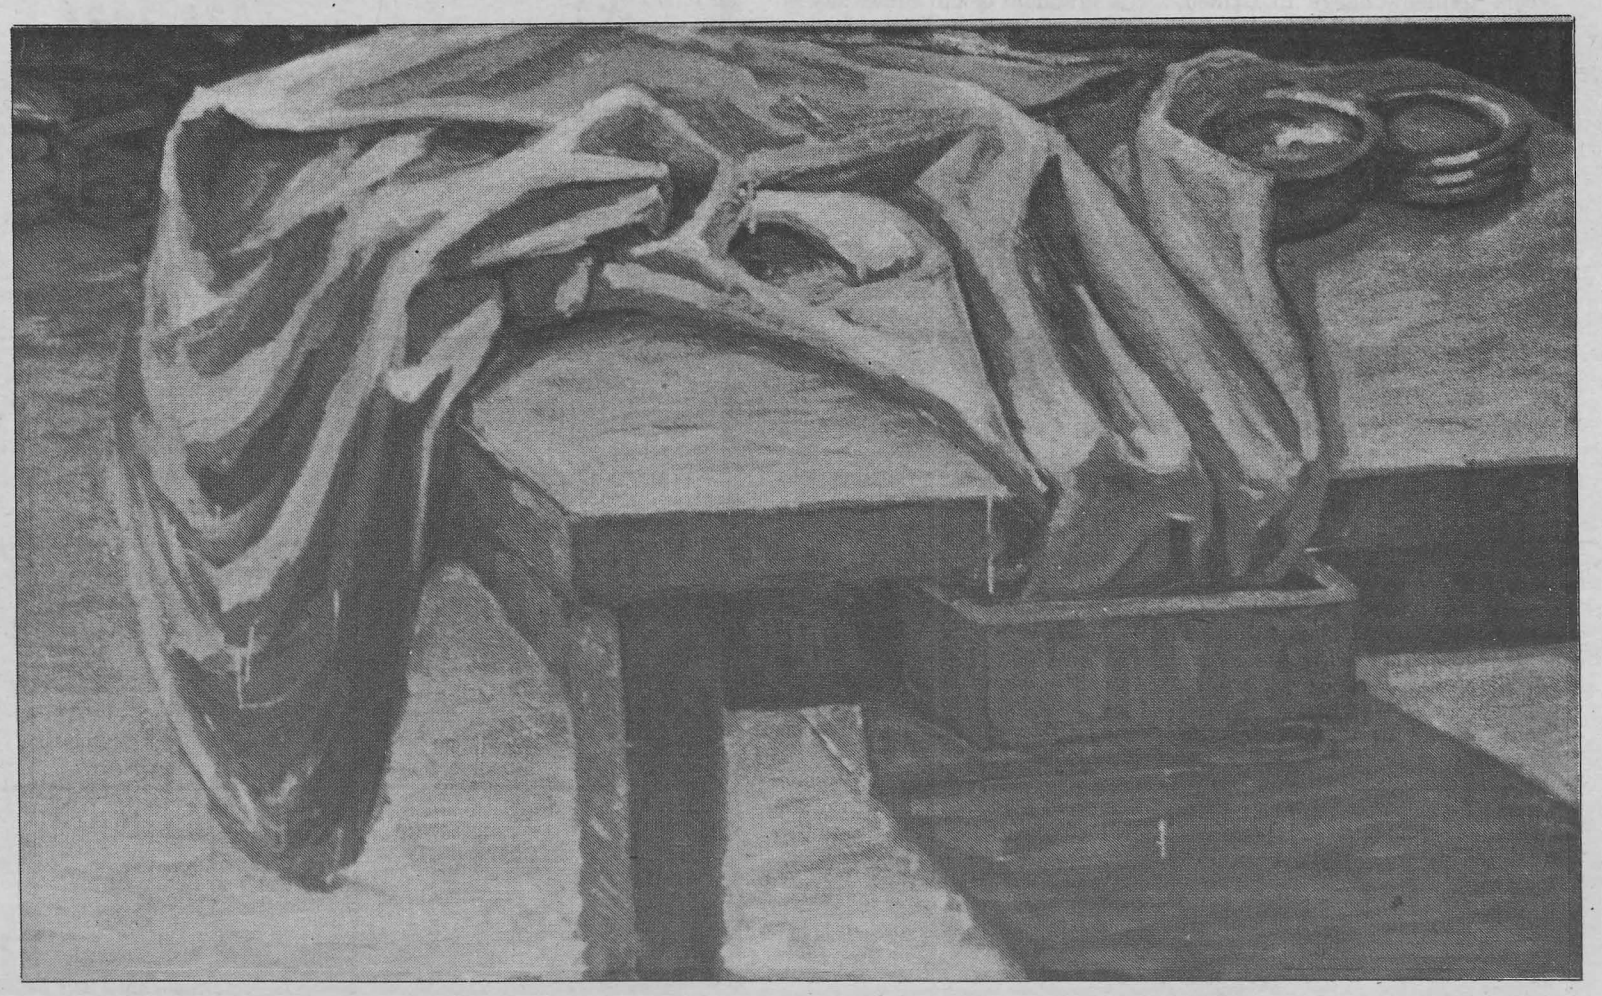
In regards to the student show she feels "it's conservative." She believes that this factor will be appealing to students outside of the art program. She also said,"I don't even know how many people attempt to view it. The art people do and I wish that more people on campus would." She found that this year's show contained fewer artists and more blocks of works from a particular artist."Its a strong body of work."

In her own personal opinion toward the show she said,"I guess I feel pretty positive about a lot of people's work, after going to school with them for several years, I feel kind of close to them. It was real exciting to see their work up."

She was especially excited to see senior, Cyril Harripaul's, tremedous amount of work displayed in the show. Seven of his paintings, prints and sculptures were displayed and two of these received purchase awards.

The gallery hours are Monday through Friday from 10-5, with a break from 1 until 2. Many students are proud to be displaying their work and are excited about having students, faculty and members of the community come in and view these works. Bresette said,"I hope that the people on this campus will take advantage of this show."





Audience response reflects effort in production of On Golden Pond

Noreen Spraner
Arts Reporter

The Menomonie theater Guild just finished their production of On Golden Pond. All in all it was a pretty fair amateur production, that kept the audience involved and laughing at the eccentricities of Norman, the main character.

The play took place on a set, which stayed the same throughout the play, of the interior of a vacation cabin on a lake in Maine. (Lakes are referred to as ponds out east). It was well constructed with real log walls and wooden door frames. The furniture and household odds and ends were a very believable mixture of basement/porch finds, some early colonial mixed in with grandma's relics.

"I found that people were so interested in helping with the cabin, they offered to give things to us. " the play's director, Lucy Wagner, said.

The action seemed to center around Norman's relationships with his family, his problems coping with aging and the idea of his own death. He is totally self absorbed and constantly ruminating over his impending demise, which is not all that impending.

Tall, gray, lean and slightly rumpled, Dave Cook was a good choice physically for the part. His acting, like most of the other actors in the play, sounded a little bit too much like expressive reading. The audience, however, really appreciated his performance, laughing at all of Norman's sarcastic remarks and gave him a very hearty round of applause at the end of the play.

His wife, Ethel, was given a sprightly and warm performance by Nora Koch. She too, seemed to be reading her lines, but would get lost in conversation at times with Norman so that the dialogue would flow more smoothly.

The play did not center as much on his relationship with his daughter, Chelsea, as the movie version did. She was played by Susan Churchill, who seemed to be a little uneasy on stage, but managed to evoke some warmth into her character.

The role of Billy, the teenage brat that finally brings Norman out of his morbidity, was well done by young Tim Snyder. He seemed to be pretty at ease with his role and appeared to be having fun on stage.

My favorite actor was Chris Leubner, who played Charlie, the loud, clumsy, warmhearted neighbor with the infectious laugh. Leubner was Charlie, to me, and seemed to be a natural actor. He stole every scene he was in.

When asked about how she felt about the play Wagner said, "It gradually progressed from the time we started. It was really incredible the way it all seemed to suddenly come together. There were some things I saw that I would do differently. But if I had done fifty plays I would still find things to do differently."

I found On Golden Pond to be a pleasant experience. They obviously put a lot of care and effort into this production, and as Lucy Wagner said, " I was very pleased with the audience response and the cast response to the audience."

Music

Future plans for Wendy and Roger Beckett include patenting a new, fully electronic instrument of Roger's. This instrument will have the potential to "make any kind of sound; orchestra, piano, or percussion," Beckett commented, "there is nothing like it."

The Pawn Live's second performer was Dave Wopat, native of Lodi, Wisconsin. Wopat graduated from Grinell College in Grinell, Iowa with a degree in chemistry because, "They had a pretty good chemistry program and a pretty poor music program."

After graduation, Wopat entertained thoughts of going on to become a doctor, but was talked out of it by an older brother in medicine. Wopat then decided to go the route of music. "Music," Wopat commented, "offered the route of least resistance for me."

Wopat utilized many special musical effects in his one man show, such as faders and preprogrammed, synthesized percussion. Wopat uses these electronics because, for the single performer, "they allow room to grow musically."

Performing "coast-to-coast, a hundred colleges a year," Wopat enjoys the college circuit because "There is a lot of freedom in college, the students are more open minded." This open mindedness allows Wopat's show to be "less constrained" in the material he does.

Lawrence University student, Ann Graul, who was visiting for the weekend, commented, "When I saw the ad for Wopat, I made a point of coming. I saw him at Lawrence and had a blast, he is fun, funny, and original."

Wopat has learned to be conservative with his money because "the record business is very iffy.'" Wopat's savings will allow him to explore other areas of the music business, including future plans to record an album and continue performing on the college circuit.

Coming all the way from Santa Monica, California was the Pawn's third performer, Rick Kelley. Singing many Mo-Town smashes and originals, Kelley proved to be a crowd pleaser.

A graduate of the University of Michigan with a Bachelor's in Musical Education. Kelley "knew after two weeks of teaching that it wasn't my bag." Kelley's musical career began in Los Angeles as a night club and bar performer. About a year ago, he began to tour the college circuit.

Audience participation plays a large part in Kelley's show. "I'd like to emphasize audience participation because I like to get the audience involved, rather than having them just sit there," Kelley remarked.

Kelley accomplishes this through audience chorus singalongs, having the audience join him upfront in a dance line and by having other members join in with choreographed hand motions. "This audience participation stuff is no fun without an audience," Kelley laughed.

Shiela McNamara, part of the audience dance line, commented that, "Rick Kelley is a lot of fun. I feel bad for anyone who missed him."

Kelley has already produced one album, Top Priority, featuring all his own music. Kelley hopes in the future to sign with a recording company, but will still do the college circuit.

All four performers at the "Mayday Music Fest" believe they have much left to offer the college circuit and music world. Although their goals may vary, they all agree on one thing- they are in the music business because they enjoy it and like to see others enjoy what they have to offer.

Way to go Moe at Stout!

Congratulations!

Grand Ole Opry teams up in local benefit

Stephanie Weiss
Arts Reporter

Menomonie's Grand Ole Opry teamed together with the Donna Kado Liver Transplant Benefit Fund on Saturday, May 3, at 8 p.m. for a knee slapping, foot stomping, good time.

Featuring 16 acts from the surrounding area and organized by Jim and Pat Freer, with the help of Earl Mahnke, The Grand Ole Opry was the fourth of five scheduled events for the Kado Fund. The fund was set up to raise money for Kado's liver transplant surgery.

Five events have been scheduled for the Kado Fund including a pancake feed, a hair cut-a-thon, a bake sale and an upcoming auction.

Working with the Kado Fund is the Aid Association for Lutherans (A.A.L.), a Fraternal Insurance Agency. A.A.L. will match, dollar for dollar, up to $8500 raised by the benefit events. The Kado Fund's goal is to raise between $25,000 and $30,000 of the estimated $150,000 needed for the surgery.

Many people have been working together for the Kado Fund. Jim and Pat Freer, organizers of the Opry and friends of Kado's, were very pleased with Saturday's turnout. Jim Freer commented that it is "refreshing to see how many people have come together" for such a worthy cause.

Earl Mahnke, who deserves much credit for the Opry's success, was involved in two other benefit Opries. Mahnke organized the Grand Ole Opries for the Elk Mound High School Band Benefit and for the Jerry Peterson Heart Transplant Benefit Fund in Colfax.

"For the little bit of time we had to put this together," Mahnke commented, "we got a wide variety of music, including gospel, bluegrass and country." Mahnke went on to say that the people he was involved with are, "a good bunch."

Some of the evening's 16 acts included square dancers, gospel music, a couple tunes on the accordion and even a guest appearance by Hee Haw's Minnie Pearl (played by Judy Vincent).

Derek and Danielle Milward, gradeschool cowpokes from Menomonie, sang "Elvira" and "Let the Sunshine In." The Milward's act better illustrates how "a lot of people have pulled together" on behalf of Kado, as sister Kim Sabby stated.

Everyone in attendance appeared to be enjoying themselves. Pat Johnson, an impressed audience member, said, "It's surprising to find so much local talent." Boyceville citizens, Arnold and Anna Anderson, commented that, "The show is great, it is our kind of fun."

Mike Kolsted said, as he was leading into his act, "A lot of people think heroes are cowboys and ride horses," going on to add, "everyone has a hero." Kolsted was right, everyone has a hero. Donna Kado's heroes are probably her friends and family, who set up the Benefit Fund, and all those who are donating time and money on her behalf.

The next fund raiser for Kado will be an auction. It will be held on Saturday, June 7 at the Rec Park in the Fairgrounds. All items in the auction will be donated and all funds will go to the Kado Fund. Anyone wishing to make a donation may do so at the Valley Bank where an account for the Donna Kado Liver Transplant Benefit Fund has been set up. For more information on the auction, or Kado Fund, call Jim Wildner at 235-7550.

Spring Fair Week a relaxing alternative

Karen Smith
News Reporter

As the end of the school year approaches and the stress and pressures of finals are weighing students down, the Special Events Commission puts on Spring Fair Week to give students an alternative time to relax.

Spring Fair Week, April 28-May 4, was organized by the Special Events Commission (SEC). The SEC planned and organized Homecoming and Winterfest. They also helped fund Parents Weekend, and sponsored occasional novelty acts throughout the year.

Dan Duhin, Chairman of SEC, is one of only six commission members. "A lot of work is involved in the planning of these events, Duhin said. "What people don't realize is that it takes a lot of time and effort in preparation." SEC has already started making plans for next year's Homecoming activities.

Duhin did mention that they were taking a chance on some of the events that they planned. The hot air balloon rides, for example, had to be cancelled due to uncooperative weather. Tese Steller, SEC advisor, was disappointed in the turnout at the garage sale. "A lot of people just weren't aware of all that was going on," Steller said.

On Monday Hawaiian leis and brochures were given out. "Although 500 leis were given out, many students still were unaware of what Spring Fair really was about," Steller said.

The biggest event of the week was on Tuesday, when Scott Jones, comedian and musician, performed. The show was attended by about 250 people, and most seemed to really enjoy it. "Everyone thought it was really great, but it was a little long," Duhin said. It lasted two hours.

Heather Reikkoff, Secretary of SEC, also was impressed with Scott Jones. "When you have an audience like we did for him, it makes all the hard work worthwhile," she said.

Lisa Brekken, who attended the show, felt it was one of the better performances she had seen on campus. "I would love to see him again," she said.

Beauty and the Beat, a rock band, performed in front of the Home Economics building on Wednesday. The show was free for anyone who happened to be in the area at the time, with food stands to occupy them as well. The crowd seemed to be fairly good-sized, especially in between classes. Most everyone seemed to enjoy the music, although not many stayed for the entire performance. The show was sponsored by Home Economics.

A lot of people weren't aware of all that was going on.
—Tese Stellick

Although the numbers of people attending the Semi-formal/Formal Spring Fair Dance was small, many thought it went very well. Dan Duhin felt that the attendance was lower because it was the first time offered, and so few knew about it. Between 30-50 students attended, with some that were coming and going throughout the night.

Brenda LaMalfa, who attended the dance really enjoyed it. "Everyone had a lot of fun," LaMalfa said. "It was nice fun to get all dressed up and go dancing."

Besides dancing, there was food, a beer garden, and a live band. Duhin was so impressed with the idea, that he feels it will definitely be held again next year. The Dance Club helped sponsor the dance.

The rest of the week involved a sidewalk art contest with four entries, the May Day Music Fest that was put on by Pawn Live in the Pawn Patio that involved live singers, and a movie on Sunday night, held in the Great Hall.

Overall, despite the cancellations, most thought that the week went well. Tese Steller mentioned that the students need to become more aware of Spring Fair. One major problem, she speculates, may have been that it came so close to finals. Since many students start taking things home, Steller feels that they will move Spring Fair Week up one week so that more students will be here to attend.

Summer Salads

Denise Cain

I don't know where or when it happened, but I think it was during the winter, somewhere between Common's P.M. and the Pawn's cookie tray: I gained weight.

Now, I'm not feeling too happy with myself as I'm trying to wear last year's summer clothes and they're just not fitting like last year. So I've decided it's time to get things into perspective and start eating a little more sensibly.

How does one go about this? I asked two fine gentlemen both residents of 2nd Fleming, Jim R. Larson and Jim A. Larson. Jim R. Larson said that, to get back in shape, he eats more "tomatoes, apples and strawberries" while Jim A. Larson replied, "I drink light beer."

Expanding on Jim R. Larson's idea, I realized that May is a great time to get in shape because it is the beginning of another fresh fruit and vegetable season. Fruits and vegetables, as we all know, are relatively low in calories and high in nutrition.

Another exciting factor is that fresh fruits and vegetables when eaten raw have a higher concentration of vitamins and minerals than if they were cooked, and also do not contain added sugar or salt.

There are many different types of fruits and vegetables offering a unique variety of tastes, textures and colors. When selecting fresh fruits and vegetables you should choose products that are neither too young nor too old, but just at the peak of development.

Older vegetables are often less flavorful because the sugar has changed to starch during the maturation process. Some immature fruits may be tough and have a bitter flavor because the starch has not yet changed to sugar.

When selecting fresh fruits and vegetables, choose items with intense color because a close correlation usually exists between the retention of vitamins and the retention of color, texture and flavor. You also want to choose products that do not have blemishes or bruises on their outer skin.

To correctly store your fresh produce, keep it in a cool, dry area. Never wash fresh fruits or vegetables prior to storing because the excess water will be absorbed by the produce, resulting in a wilty or soggy product.

Sometimes when preparing or serving different types of fruit such as apples or bananas, they turn a brown pigment. To prevent the browning, immerse them in cold water with an added acid such as vinegar, lemon juice or pineapple juice.

The following recipe is full of flavor, color and texture and best yet, is low in calories. The dressing adds flavor and body, and the acid that's present prevents the bananas from browning, however (as luck would have it) it is high in calories.

Berry Fruit Salad

2 parts strawberries
2 parts grapes
3 parts watermelon
3 parts muskmelon balls banana slices
lettuce

Combine first four ingredients, place on a crisp lettuce leaves and encircle with slices of banana. Serve with Fruit Salad Dressing.

Fruit Salad Dressing

3 oz unpasteurized cream cheese
1/4 cup pineapple juice
1 tsp honey
1/2 cup whipped cream
1 tsp lemon juice

Blend cheese with pineapple juice. Add honey. Fold in the whipped cream and lemon juice.

Spinach, Bacon and Mushroom Salad

1 lb fresh young spinach leaves
1/4 lb button mushrooms
8 sprigs watercress
4 slices bacon, fried and broken into small pieces
6 tbsp olive oil
2 tbsp lemon juice
1/4 tsp dry mustard
salt and pepper
1 hard boiled egg, thinly sliced (optional)

Clean the spinach carefully, drain, and dry thoroughly. If the leaves are large, break them into smaller pieces. Wipe the mushrooms clean with a damp paper towel, trim the bottoms and slice.

Place the spinach, mushrooms, and watercress in a large salad bowl and add half the crumbled bacon.

In a separate small dish, mix the oil, lemon juice, mustard and salt and pepper to taste. Blend thoroughly and pour over the salad. Toss gently, but well. Sprinkle the remaining bacon on top and garnish, if desired, with the hard-boiled egg.

Music Department sings to enthusiastic audience

Denise Cain
Arts Reporter

"You get to do what you love to do... sing."

Mary Dickrell/Vocalist

As the evening light shown in, a full range of voices sounded throughout the mystic Mable Tainter Theater. Every ear was tuned to every voice. The formally dressed UW-Stout Symphonic Singers, University Choir and Chamber Singers preformed in front of an attentive, enthusiastic crowd.

The Spring Concert began with the Symphonic Singers bringing forth their best music, ranging from How Excellent is Thy Name to the spirited Camptown Races. Camptown races was an upbeat tune that sounded like "You take the high road,and I'll take the low road; and we'll be together in the melody."

The University Choir is an all-female chior that sets their theme in a spiritual mode, the Choir's music is more serious than that of the Symphonic Singers. The particular arrangement of Sunrise/Sunset, with flute accompaniment, was done with the utmost of style.

The Chamber Singers are twelve talented performers with a solid upbeat. Toe tapping, hip swinging and thumb snapping are all a part of their glossy act. Performing only vocal and jazz, they do not simply sing, they entertain the crowd.

Acting like true gentlemen and ladies, they brought romance back into music with their inspiring tunes of, among others, Tuxedo Junction and New York Afternoon.

The challenge of singing in a big group and making it sound like one voice...It is a lot of work, but enjoyable work.

—Beth Proeber

What also makes the Chamber Singers so entertaining is to listen to them bring out their full vocal ranges with such phrases as "Bobbie, Doobie, Doo Op" and "Zoppidy Bop Bop Boobie Doop"into the microphones.

The accompanists for Chambers add class and character to the group. Dennis Siebenaler, playing the piano, is an assistant professor in the music department. Their drummer, Eric Stassen is a 16 year old multi-talented drummer from Menomonie high school. Paul Kniez gets down and up again playing on the bass guitar.

Singer/performer Beth Proeber, commented on what she found most enjoyable in being part of both the Symphonic Singers and the Chamber Singers.

"The challenge of singing in a big group and making it sound like one voice," she said. "It is alot of work, but enjoyable work."

To be a part in any one of Patrick Liebergen's groups, you must be willing to dedicate many hours to practice. The work also brings about fun, the Symphonic Singers and the Chamber Singers just got back from their Green Bay tour Sunday.

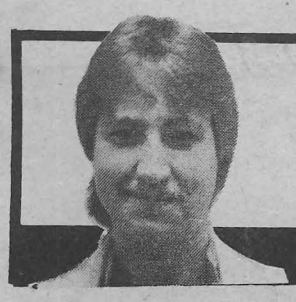
On this tour, the singing groups performed at four high schools, the Port Plaza Mall and the St. Francis Xavier Cathedral. The money to fund this trip came from their budget supported by the SSA and the money they raised in their brat stand this past fall and spring.

The University Choir does not tour like the other two groups, and anyone can be in it. The Symphonic Singers must interview with the director and give a brief audition. The Chamber Singers, who will be known next year as the Vocal/Jazz Ensemble, have a regular audition. All of the groups are a one credit class that is repetitive, and one may also belong to more that one group at a time.

Besides having their big Spring tour, the choir groups perform at many various events. During fall semester, they have a smaller tour to high schools around the area, and in December, they peform at graduation as well as their ever-popular Christmas Concert.

This spring they entertained parents and students during Parent's Weekend, and will perform at the Medalion Awards and once again at graduation.

Watching the Symphony Singers, University Choir, and Chamber Singers, I came to realize by the expressions on their faces that singing is more than a hobby to these people; it is an inspiration.



For Those About To Rock

Southern Fried Rock

David Chase

"Live fast / work hard / die young"

Joe Patoski/Reporter
Rolling Stone

What do you think of when someone mentions the South? Now I would likely guess a great majority of you think of the warmth of the southern sun. There may also be a few of you that recall the southern "twang," (often associated with the cotton picking, moonshining, tobacco chewing, redneck fiddling man.) And of course there are a few relics out there that associate the South with, Gone With The Wind and the Civil War.

This column is dedicated to the South for one reason, and one reason only — southern rock. With the inspiration of country and western, along with rhythm and blues, rock and roll crossed over the Mason-Dixon line in the form of Southern fried rock and roll.

Phil Walden, founder of Capricorn records in Macon Georgia, is attributed with the bringing of southern rock to the public's eye. The first band signed on to Capricorn was the Allman Brothers, a six man band that was working out of Florida for several years.

The leader of the Allman Brothers, Duane Allman, was considered a reputable guitarist due to his work in studio sessions. So after two albums, and two years of steady touring, the band found massive success with At Fillmore East, a two record set containing one of the greatest concert performances ever recorded.

But the Allman Brothers success was short, and not so sweet, due to the untimely death of Duane Allman. And as if that wasn't tragic enough, bassist Berry Oakley died just thirteen months later. The death of these two pioneers, would eventually lead to the break up of the remaining members.

But the decline of the Allman Brothers did not slow down the popularity of southern rock. Bands like Charlie Daniels and Marshall Tucker were finding great success on the road as well as on the charts.

Charlie Daniels Lp Fire On The Mountain went gold, while the song The South's Gonna Do It Again became an anthem for southern rock music all over the country. Daniels also found success in later albums such as Million Mile Reflection and Full Moon, as well as the Volunteer Jam concerts.

Marshall Tucker's western swing music brought about a large following with the song Can't You See. They also perform in the Voluntary Jam concerts with CDB.

A large number of bands followed into the southern rock scene: Grinderswitch, Wet Willie, Elvin Bishop, The Outlaws, The Winter Brothers, 38 Special and Molly Hatchet. Many of these bands found huge success, and a few crossed back over the Mason Dixon Line taking the southern out of their rock.

But of all the bands, only one was able to truly master the sounds that made southern rock a true art form, only one band was able to revive the sounds that were thought to be dead with the ending of the Allman Brothers, of course I'm referring to Lynyrd Skynyrd.

Lynyrd Skynyrd was a true southern band that became a symbol of southern pride. Their albums went gold and platinum due to songs like Gimme Three Steps, Saturday Night Special, and Sweet Home Alabama.

Sweet Home Alabama was a rebuttel to the song Southern Man, where Neil Young puts down the men of the South. The song gained nationwide status for the band and started them on the road to success.

But the song Lynyrd Skynyrd is best know for is Free Bird, a song that represents hope and inspiration. It also happens to be one of the most jamming tunes in rock and roll. But unfortunately, the "Free Bird" fell to the ground when a plane crash claimed the lives of singer Van Zant, guitarist Steve Gains and singer Cassy Gains. A tragic ending, a terrible waste.

Southern rock is not as popular as it once was, but it is a brand of music the world will never forget. It gave a blend to rock music that was as pure as rockabilly itself. And the Free Bird flies on...

Sluggers' year ends despite strong finish

Louie Filkins
Sports Reporter

Even though the UW-Stout Blue Devils swept UW-La Crosse 2-1, 5-3 last Saturday, their hopes of being conference champions were ended the day before when they split a double-header with UW-Eau Claire 2-3, 6-5.

Eau Claire(12-4), who are now conference champs, hosted the Devils last Friday. Stout put one run on the board right away in the first inning. Number three batter Greg Osowski started the Devils out with a base hit, Jeff Kloes followed with another single to move "Ozzie" to third. Ed Space, who was responsible for both of Stout's RBI's in the first game, drove Ozzie in to give the Devils a one run lead.

The trio of Ozzie, Kloes and Space produced the same results in the top of the third to add another run to their lead. The lead was ended in the bottom of the fourth when the Blugolds smacked a triple and then a home run off of Stout starter John Schmitt to tie the game at two a piece. Eau Claire won the game with a one out single in the bottom of the seventh.

Schmitt pitched six and one-third innings giving up three runs off seven hits, five strike-outs and no walks. Stout was thought to have weak pitching and strong hitting early in the season. It turned out that this was just the opposite, the Devils inability to score runs kept them out of the championship. Meanwhile, their pitching performances were well above par. "I lost one of my senior pitchers to injury and the other couldn't seem to find the plate. Charbonneau, Lindberg and Resch filled in the gap nicely, I'm looking forward to having them on the squad next season,"Head Coach Terry Petrie said.

Petrie also commented on the teams lack of offense, "We didn't hit the ball well as a team, there were some poor batting averages in our lineup. We also lost eight one-run games out of sixteen, it just didn't come together this season."

The second game saw the Blue Devils score four runs in the top of the seventh to give them the victory. Junior Greg Osowski hit the ball well against Eau Claire, he went one for two with three RBI's and a game-winning home run. "Their pitcher walked Ghelfi which gave me a little added incentive, he threw an up and inside slider, I nailed it over the left-field fence." Osowski said about his three-run blast. John Davenport, Carl Drezek and Eric Nystrom all went one for three. Junior Denny Polinski started and pitched a fine game allowing only six hits and one earned run. Rich Resch came in with one out in the sixth, he threw the rest of the game giving up two hits and no earned runs.

The Devils swept La Crosse on Saturday 2-1, 5-3. An excellent pitching performance by Mike Charbonneau in the first game left the Indians with just one run. The Sophomore right-hander barely missed a no-hitter, he lost it to a sixth inning single to the number two batter. "I had those guys in the palm of my hand," the modest Charbonneau said.

In the second game Stout scored three runs in the the top of the third to take a 3-0 lead. Lead-off batter Ed Space walked and Carl Drezek followed with a single. This brought the "big kid" Aschenbrenner up who crushed a two run dou-

The Blue Devils end season second in conference one game behind UW-Eau Claire. They went out winning the double-header against UW-LaCrosse last Saturday.

Summer Sports

Paul Wydeven

This being this semesters last issue of the Stoutonia, I was wondering what I was going to do this summer. The best part is that I am lucky enough to stay right here in Menomonie. This will be my second exciting summer, but definitely my last summer here.

Then suddenly, I was panic-stricken, what are my faithful readers going to do without my column everyweek? I had nightmares of massive withdrawals by sports addicts.

Then answer came to me, a coaches worst and favorite comrade at the end of most games - The substitution. Substitute the many sporting activities offered here in Menomonie this summer, for my column. I know this will be tough for all of you sports addics, but it sould prevent the massive withdrawals.

If you have experinced a Menomomie summer or think, for some reason, you may get bored; the following information will help for the spectator to the serious athlete.

The Recreation Center will be open with the same facilities available during the regular school year. People interested in walking, running, or biking may want use the Red Ceder State Park Trail, which begins at Riverside Park and ends 14.5 miles later a little past Dunnvilles.

Turning to more serious sporting events, I received a letter from the cross country track Coach Lou Klitzke. Coach Klitzke scheduled a short informative meeting at his home (1706 12th St.) for Monday, May 12th at 5:00pm. The meeting will be less than an hour, followed by a pot-luck dinner and volleyball. Coach Klitzke is looking for male and female students with beginners welcome. For more information call the coach at 232-2478 or 235-2139 evenings.

The Menomonie Recreation Department offers aquatics, athletes, games/sports, nature/outing, and other department services. The aquatics area includes sailing, swimming, and scuba instuction. The athletics are mostly league sports in tennis, volleyball, and basketball. Games and sports sponsored by the recreation department, gives instuction in golf, gymnastics, indoor soccer, tennis, and others. The nature/outing are safety program for bicycles and D.N.R. safety programs for boat and hunter safety. The department services reserve city ball diamonds, check in-out picnic kits, and inner tube rental; just call 232-1664.

Finally for the hardcore spectator or athlete, this summer is the seventh annual Menomonie Tinman Triathlon. This year the Tinman is running two races the traditional coarse and a short coarse, which is about a half the traditional coarse. It will be held Sunday, August 31, 1986 at 9:00am in Wakanda Park. Both coarses have a $30.00 registation fee and will award first place prizes in 14 catagories depending on age and sex.

The Tinman traditional coarse consists of a one mile swim, a 55 mile bike ride, and a 12.4 mile run for the contestants. The new short coarse is almost half the traditional coarse with a half mile swim, a 30 mile bike, and a 6.2 mile run. Registation information is available from the Cedarwood Fitness Center.

Now, this summer if you get bored this summer in Menomonie or need that sports fix, join or attend the many sporting activities mentioned above.

Remember if you are interested in cross counrty track, Coach Lou Klitzke is having an informative meeting Monday the 12th at his house, 1706 12th St. at 5:00 p.m..

Netters undisputed WSUC champions

Paul Wehking
Sports Reporter

With three championships in singles and two in doubles the UW-Stout men's tennis team claimed their fourth consecutive WSUC conference championship. The winning of this conference tourney, coupled with their dual meet championship, makes Stout the undisputed 1986 WSUC conference champions.

Final team standings for the tournament had Stout out in front with 55 points and conference rival, UW-Whitewater, coming in a close second with 47 total points. Oshkosh won the third place slot with their 28 points. Whitewater has come in second behind the Blue Devils in all of the last four conference tourneys.

Friday's action encompassed the first two rounds of both singles and doubles play. Stout was in prime shape after these two rounds having players in all nine of the final matches.

First man Rob Oertel, who was seeded second in the tourney, blew through his first two opponents with scores of 6-0, 6-0 in his first round bout and 6-3, 6-0 against his second round foe. This put Oertel into the finals against Whitewater's Eric Arvold, who beat Oertel earlier in the season in dual meet play 6-2, 4-6, 7-5. Again, the match was very close and again, Oertel was out played by Arvold. Consequently, Arvold claimed the championship with set scores of 6-3, 7-6, 7-3 (tie breaker). "It's hard to adjust to his playing style. He's a lefty and the spin he puts on the ball is different than right-handed players, which I am used to," Oertel said of Arvold.

John Leehy, who was seeded first in number two singles, also found himself in the finals on Saturday. He was pitted against fourth seeded Bret Smith of Whitewater. Smith proceeded to dispatch Leehy in two sets, the scores of which were 6-4, 6-3. Smith had been beaten earlier by Stout's Joel Vogler in dual meet competition.

First seeded Vogler, had to fight off Whitewater's Jim Winkler in the second round in order to advance to the finals. Vogler bounced back after losing the second set 2-6 to eventually win the match 7-5, 2-6, 6-1. In his final match, Vogler put Eau Claire's Tim Rolfing down in the first set with a score of 6-2 but Rolfing regained his composure enough to come back and beat Vogler 6-4, 6-4 in the remaining two sets to give him championship honors in the third singles flight.

In number four singles, Mark Paine kept pace with his first seed position handling a surprising Doug Greenberg of Superior. Greenberg, who was not seeded in the tournament, played very well on his way to the finals beating both his opponents in two sets. Like Vogler, Paine also had to out last a Whitewater player in the second round. Mike White beat Paine in the first set 6-4, but then Paine rebelled with scores of 6-3, 6-4 in the final two sets of the match to win. In the finals, Paine had no trouble with Greenberg pounding him 6-2, 6-1 to claim Stout's first singles championship of the tournament.

Sophomore Mike Friedman captured Stout's second singles title with his fifth flight championship over Whitewater's John Norfolk 6-3, 6-3. Friedman had a relatively easy time with his singles play beating all his opponents in two sets and allowing none of them to win more than three games in any set.

Tony Pheifer rounded off the singles competition with his first place finish at number six singles. Pheifer, who Coach Bob Smith says, "had an excellent tournament," beat Eau Claire's Chris Washburn 6-3, 6-3 in the championship match.

Stout's first doubles team of Oertel and Friedman brought home Stout's first number one doubles championship. Oertel and Friedman had to fight tooth and nail in every match to win the first place honor.

In the first round, the Stout pair went three sets with their opponents from Eau Claire before finally emerging victorious with set scores of 2-6, 6-3, 6-0. The second round match against Stevens Point also lasted three sets with Stout dropping the second set 3-6 but winning the first and third 6-1, 6-2 respectively to give them the win and advance them into the finals.

It was only fitting in that final match that Oertel and Friedman would be playing their arch rivals from Whitewater, Eric Arvold and Jim Winkler. Stout's first pair, as in the conference dual, fought through some tight spots before claiming the landmark victory for Stout. The final match score rested at 6-7, 7-6 (tie breaker), 6-3. "It was a great win because they thought they had us beat," Oertel said.

> It was a great win because they thought they had beat us.
> —Rob Oertel

Whitewater cameback in the second doubles flight beating Stout's Leehy-Paine duo 6-3, 6-3 in the finals. "I was disappointed in doubles because I wanted to win both singles and doubles," Paine said.

The third doubles team of Vogler-Pheifer put the final icing on the cake for Stout with their championship win. Vogler and Pheifer had the most trouble in their first round match against Eau Claire's third doubles team. Vogler and Pheifer battled back after losing their first set to win the match 5-7, 7-5, 6-3. They then aced Oshkosh 6-2, 6-0 in the second round giving them their championship bid. The Stevens Point doubles team fell victim to the Vogler-Pheifer pair in the finals, losing 6-3, 7-5 to end the 1986 tourney.

Post season action will have Stout competing in the NAIA nationals as a team. Stout lost to Gustavus Aldolphus 6-3 last Tuesday ending their hopes of being selected to compete as a team in the NCAA national tournament. Despite the loss, Rob Oertel will compete in singles play and also get a chance to play doubles with teammate Friedman at the NCAA nationals which will take place from March 12-18 in Claremont, California.

We go home for the summer, become workaholics, and the car is our best friend.

What about exercise? Not enough time or money for health spas? Need a break from your aerobic routine? Cycling can keep your heart and lungs just as fit as running. It is also easier on your knees.

Whether you are staying here or going home for the summer, bicycling is a good way to keep fit. Planning on being here for the summer? Explore the bike trails of Menomonie. One scenic route can be taken through the woods along the Red Cedar River beginning at Riverside Park.

To obtain fitness from bicycling you must keep your heart beating at a constant pace. To find your "target range", subtract your age from 220. Between 65 to 80 percent of this number is the rate your heart should remain at during cycling.

According to the April 1986 issue of "Bicycling", it's best to pedal between 80 to 100 rotations per minute to maintain a training level. Riding casually will not accomplish this. Low gears should be used, this reduces stress on knees and muscle fatigue, enabling you to ride longer.

Biking burns off calories. Riding bike for one half hour burns 135 calories going 5.5 miles per hour, 210 calories at 9.5 mph, and 333 at 13.1 mph. These figures are for a person weighing 150 lbs. For a person weighing more, the expenditure is greater. For those weighing less, you burn fewer.

There are several clubs and biking events you can involve yourself in. A new event is the Grape - Nuts Bike Festival. Minneapolis was the first city to host the festival last year. It was also held in Boston, Los Angeles, and Tampa.

The fest begins with a Grape Nuts breakfast to kick off the 25 mile course. Prizes and activities are sponsored before and after the ride. Participants receive T - shirts and refreshments following the trip.

This summer will bring even more cyclists and additional sponsor cities including Seattle, New York, and Washington D.C.. Returning celebrities to the festival will be former National Football League coach George Allen and Olympic cycling medalist Mark Gorski.

You don't need to be experienced to participate. These sponsored events can be a lot of fun. Many enter without having ever cycled for more then 5 miles at a time.

For further biking information, read "Bicycling - America's Leading Cycling Magazine" and "Bicycle USA", which can be found at the Stout library or your local bookstore.

Most of us own bikes but a lot of us barely ride them. I am also guilty of this. It is so much quicker to hop in the car and go. This summer before you hop in your car, take a minute to stop and think. Can I ride my bike this distance? Is it really necessary to take the car?

This summer is my opportunity to become more involved in bicycling. Staying in Menomonie without a car will help me use my bike a lot more. Maybe I can even make it to Minneapolis for the Grape - Nuts Festival.

Whether for serious training or fun, biking is a good fitness alternative. So drag out that forgotten bike from the depths of the garage. After you wipe off the inches of dust, pump up those tires, and oil the chain, hop on and burn those calories away.

A consistently popular sport, bicycling is inexpensive and convenient for short trips. On campus bikes are the most convenient when you want to park them. Bicycling offers excellent health benefits with less risk of injuring knees. (Stoutonia staff photo by Wayne Purmley)

Two Stout powerlifters excell at State meet

Suzanne Schroeter
Sports Reporter

Mike Henning and Todd Schuh competed in their first college power lifting meet and came out winners. They competed in the Collegiate State meet in River Falls on April 19 along with 25 other college students. Both Henning and Schuh placed first in their weight classes and Henning also broke four power lifting records.

At a power lifting meet they have to do three different types of lifts, a squat, a bench, and a dead lift. They get three attempts for each type of lift and then their best lift in each type is taken. The final score is figured by adding the three best scores together.

In training for a meet they usually train in eight week blocks so they are peaking for the meet. They start with eight repetitions of a lift and work down to the meet where they do the single lift. They also have to watch their diet. For this meet Schuh was being careful about what he was eating to stay in his weight class while Henning was eating more to get his weight up.

Schuh competed in the 220 lb. weight class with four other guys. Schuh had competed in high school but this was his first college meet. It was a real close meet for Schuh. He went into the final lift, the dead lift, 15 lbs. behind and was able to place first in his division.

In the squat lift Schuh started with 475 lbs. for his first lift and 510 for the second. He then lifted 540 lbs. on the third attempt. In the bench lift, Schuh lifted 280 to start then missed his next two attempts at 315. Schuh dead lifted 505 lbs. His second attempt of 535 was not accepted by two of the three judges but on his third attempt he lifted 540 successfully. Schuh's final score was 1360 which put him in first place for his division.

Henning also did extremely well in his first meet placing first in his division and breaking four records. Henning competed in the super heavy weight division which is 275 lbs. and over. He broke the records in each type of lift and in the final score.

In the squat lift Henning started out with 500 lbs. He then lifted 540 and finally on his third attempt lifted 575 to beat the old record of 425 lbs. Henning lifted 430 on his first bench lift. On his next two attempts he missed 450 lbs. His first lift of 430 still gained him a new record 30 lbs. over the old one. In the dead lift Henning started out with 560 lbs. He then lifted 620 on his second attempt. On his final lift Henning attempted 660 lbs. and almost got it. Henning's dead lift of 620 beat the old record of 400 lbs. His final score was 1625 which won him first place in his division and another record which was 400 lbs. over the old one.

"Both did really well in their first meet," Rob Ciaciura commented. Ciaciura is also a power lifter for Stout. The power lifters got accepted as a club a few weeks ago and are now setting their sights for next fall.

ble. The Devils scored two more in the sixth, Kloes had a roundtripper, then Space and Drezek slapped back to back singles. "Snackenbrenner" followed with an RBI sacrifice.

Starter Bob Lindberg threw six and one-third innings giving up just three runs on three hits. Reliever Brad Resch was credited with the save, "I felt quite confident with my control, I was placing the ball were I wanted to," Resch said.

The Blue Devils ended their season 9-5 in conference and 23-16 overall. Season hitting leaders included: Osowski-.398; Kloes-.394; Ghelfi-.356; Space-.342. Jim Miller had 16 stolen bases and broke the career school record with 34, Tim Buswell had 15 and Ghelfi had 11. Kloes had 34 RBI's, Ozzie followed with 26 and Ghelfi had 21.

Charbonneau(5-2) led the Devils in strike-outs with 36 and a 1.83 ERA. Lindberg(6-1) threw 24 K's and had a 1.98 ERA, while Resch(3-0) had the lowest ERA at 1.33 and striking 22 batters out. Resch also earned three saves while big Joe Schopp had two.

Stout will lose only three seniors this year, so they're looking towards another winning season and that the conference championship won't escape them next year. Good luck in 87' Devils!
